Mr. Samuel Burch was also one of the first men in the service and had charge of the bridge department. Another old employe was E. C. Olin. In 1853, Mr. Olin, a carpenter, came west from New York, and for some time worked for the Chicago Northwestern railroad. In 1885, he began work for the Burlington, at Aurora. He moved to Galesburg, in 1873, where he was in charge of the bridge department for many years, until he retired to his farm in Iowa, where he died at an advanced age. His daughter, Mrs. George W. Bridge, still resides here.

There is now in the service of the company, Mr. John Sullivan, a thorough going track man, none better in that line of work. He is another of the old stock.

When Mr. Sullivan came west upon his arrival upon these shores from Ireland, the land of the green and beauty, he began to work on the track of the Burlington at Somonauk, in 1857. In May, 1860, he came to Galesburg, when, after three years he was appointed track foreman at Kewanee, and five years later at Hinsdale, Illinois, where he remained until 1868, where he was foreman of an extra gang at Sandwich. This position he held until 1871, when he was promoted to the position of division road master with headquarters at Aurora, from whence he was transferred to Galesburg. He had charge of all the main line from Mendota to Burlington, including the Galesburg yard, also the Galva and Gladstone branch. Mr. Sullivan's home has been in Galesburg from the time he became road master on this division and he and his family are well known and respected.

There were two other men in the track department associated with Mr. Clarke. Succeeding Mr. Shanklin was Archer Bracey from New York, and Mr. C. H. Cuyler, who commenced work on the track on the Quincy branch in 1857. Later he became section foreman, then in charge of an extra gang and for years he was also assistant road master.

Mr. C. P. Stringham was also road master and was a good track man. His daughters are still living in Galesburg. When Mr. Shanklin went to the Union Pacific he was followed, in 1871, by Mr. Stringham, Isaac Kennedy and Michael Carey, and others.

The water department was in charge of James V. Pangburn until 1891, when he was succeeded by William Harrison, who is now in charge.

The building department had charge of the erection of all the stations and other buildings on all the new branches which were opened from time to time. Mr. Abe H. Huntington was at the head of this department. In 1874, he went to Denver, where he died some years later. With Mr. Huntington, from 1865 to 1873, was Albert J. Perry, who as chief clerk had charge of the office.

Mr. Perry resigned January 1, 1873, and in July of that year entered the circuit clerk's office, where he remained for nine years, when he was elected county clerk for two terms. He is well known to all people of Knox county and will further be known as the editor of this history. He was elected treasurer of Knox college in 1891, and still holds that office. He was also president of the Second National bank from January, 1891, to February, 1903, when he entered into the loan and investment business, which he has followed to the present time, and is still conducting a nice business in that line.

Mr. W. A. Boydstun succeeded Mr. Huntington and was foreman of the building department and continued in charge until he retired. Mr. Boydstun's son, J. F. Boydstun, was for a time assistant train master and has been for many years one of the best engineers in the road's service. Mr. Boydstun's wife, family and brother, C. O. Boydstun, formerly a "Q" man, still reside in Galesburg.

Mr. Fred H. Tubbs was superintendent of the telegraph of the Galesburg division for a time, but left to be general superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph office in Chicago.

Another employe most closely connected with the Galesburg division was Fletcher C. Rice, who commenced his railroad career as an operator at Monmouth, Kirkwood, and other stations, when he came to Galesburg as train dispatcher, in 1867. He was made chief dispatcher and chief operator in 1878, and train master in 1881. He was appointed superintendent of the Galesburg division in 1888, superintendent of Illinois lines in 1902, general superintendent in 1904. Later he became general inspector of transportation on the vice-president's staff. Mr. Rice always had the confidence and respect of the men who were under his supervision while on the Galesburg and Illinois divisions.

Mr. C. F. Jaureiet, a Canadian Frenchman, was for a long time in the early operation of the road master mechanic of the C., B. & Q. lines at Aurora, with Mr. Cheney, in charge of the locomotive department at Galesburg.

Mr. Cheney was killed at Canton in a train accident. Mr. William Wilson succeeded Mr. Cheney and after several years he was called by the general manager, Chappell, of the Chicago & Alton road to be head of the locomotive department of that road. Mr. Chappell, who was Mr. Hitchcock's assistant, while on the Burlington, recognized Mr. Wilson's ability. Mr. Wilson was succeeded by Mr. Geo. Hackney, who afterwards became superintendent of motive power of the A. T. & S. F. road.

There were others connected with the locomotive and car departments, one for many years, Mr. John Bassler, whose family still reside in Galesburg. Mr. Bassler had charge of the car department and was a competent man, who later went to Burlington to take charge of the shops there and afterwards resigned and was in business in Galesburg for many years.

Mr. James Lamb, Mr. H. J. Small and others may be remembered in connection with the locomotive and car departments.

Robert W. Colville, one of the old employes, a Galesburg boy, for many years was in charge of the locomotive and car departments at Galesburg. He was well known to all the men as "Bob." Under his jurisdiction the departments were well handled. Mr. Colville and the men worked as a unit in good service. But unfortunately the life of Mr. Colville was instantly terminated December 28, 1909, by an accident which spread a gloom over the whole C. B. & Q. road. Men from all parts of the road attended the funeral services. Mr. Colville's family are residing in Galesburg.

Mr. J. T. Bassett was also in the old car department and still is in the service of the company. He had charge of this department for many years, was known and respected by all. He and his family make their home in Galesburg.

In connection with the C. B. & Q. and Knox county, more particularly Galesburg, it may be interesting to know of the number of young men who have practically had their start in the offices or departments of the C. B. & Q. at Galesburg.

Another Galesburg boy, W. G. Besler, entered the assistant superintendent's office in April, 1880. From there he was called to the office of superintendent of Illinois lines. He went to Chicago in 1886 with his father, Mr. J. D. Besler, where he entered the general manager's office. He took a course in the Boston School of Technology. Returning to Chicago, he was appointed train master at Fulton, then became division superintendent of the St. Louis division and from there he went to the Reading railroad as general manager and is now vice-president and general manager of the Central railroad of New Jersey.

Mr. H. M. Tompkins, clerk of the superintendent of chief dispatcher, is now superintendent of the Michigan Central railroad.

C. J. Balch, former clerk, is now on western railroads.

A. T. Lindgren, clerk of division superintendent, was promoted to chief clerk, then to general superintendent's office in Chicago with Mr. Besler and later left the service and is and has been for many years secretary of the large Scandinavian Loan association.

C. S. Belden, clerk to assistant contractor of construction work, is now in Minneapolis connected with the wholesale exportation of flour and flour expert.

Will Van Schaak, general agent of the St. M. & Pere Marquette railroad, W. A. Armstrong, cashier P. T. & S. bank; C. K. Armstrong, assistant passenger agent of Central railroad of New Jersey; P. N. Granville, Cashier of the Bank of Galesburg; C. M. Hunt, court stenographer; Fay Scudder of the C. B. & Q. railroad office and Geo. L. Price, now of Galesburg Furnishing Co., have all been efficient and active employes.

The following are familiar names upon the books of the Burlington at Galesburg: Fred Barndt, J. P. McDermott, W. E. Fuller, chief dispatcher; Frank Hart, clerk, now general agent at Clinton, Iowa; W. H. Wallace, O. F. Price general solicitor at Galesburg; Wilkins Seacord, superintendent stock yards; Asbury Cochrun, Mr. Seacord's assistant and now superintendent; Chas. F. Cothren, assistant to his father, J. W. Cothren, the first freight agent, until he retired from the road, then succeeded him as freight agent and is still in the employ of the company; W. L. Barnes, Fred Seacord, assistant train master and later assistant ticket agent; Hamilton R. Kearney, clerk; A. S. Crawford, deceased, division passenger and ticket agent at Galesburg; E. S. Gunnell, claim agent, now of the O. T. Johnson store; W. E. Kee, claim agent, now in Chicago law department; C. M. Snyder, H. D. Skidmore and A. L. West, division freight agents; J. P. Van Clute, J. M. Root, James Hopcraft, deceased; A. T. Chittenden, Gus Halline, C. H. Stead, deceased, dispatchers; James Dickson, now in charge of Quincy shops; C. S. Belden, A. C. Noteware, Michael Franey, deceased, in charge of track, Galesburg yard; Patrick McQuillan, also of track department; C. G. Hurd, deceased, E. S. Moulton, C. S. Twyman, W. F. Bloomquist, George Tobin, Patrick Tobin, all of the ticket office; J. R. Weeks, formerly superintendent's chief clerk; H. E. Husted, Chas. F. Lass, E. M. Bristol, E. J. Dickson, Grover F. Ekins, now in charge of a church in Cleveland; W. H. Spinner, operator, chief clerk with Mr. Rice, later the well known ticket agent at Galesburg, now with the New York Life Insurance Co.; F. W. Churchill, C. P. Matingly, Fred Finch, now of the Great Northern; W. C. Blaich, chief clerk division superintendent, now with the Big Creek Colliery Co., and and the People's Fuel Co.; Mr. Wesley Woods, now with the relief department; Ed. F. Toben, for many years in the superintendent's office and track department and now chief clerk in division superintendent's office; Loren M. Peterson, now assistant chief clerk; E. E. Watson, clerk superintendent's office; John B. McAuley, formerly city engineer now contractor, and C. H. Simcaskey, chief clerk, Aurora.

In the year 1900 there was a gigantic struggle for the possession of the C. B. & Q. between the Great Northern Railroad Co., represented by J. H. Hill and the Union Pacific, represented by E. H. Harriman, terminating as all know in the control of the C. B. & Q. passing out of the hands of the men of Boston and the east and into the hands of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific and finally terminating with the Great Northern practically in full control. This struggle was so fierce that stocks went soaring to unheard of heights and for a time railroad managers generally feared a most disastrous result. Nevertheless, things settled down and no one outside of the parties interested realized that anything had happened. All that is known or felt today is that James J. Hill became one of the greatest of railroad kings and if anything happens to interfere with the great property concentrated by him, it will probably some day become the greatest factor in existence in the transportation problem of the United States and the world. Northwestern Canada is nowhere near developed, no one can make accurate prediction of the importance of Alaska, there is a constant growth in the products and productive power of the great west as well as the east and there is yet to be a greater interchange of the products of the two sections of this country than one can imagine and this enormous system of railways must perform the bulk of this work. The great growth in the population of the United States was the first cause that called this system into being. Millions of men and women have made up the constructive force and it is now proper to group a few of the commanding figures that have guided the great mass in its constructive work, all of whom at some time have been prominent in C. B. & Q. matters and many of them residents of Knox county.

A. M. Towne, president Southern Pacific; E. P. Ripley, president A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co.; F. A. Delano, president Erie railway; H. B. Stone, general manager C. B. & Q.; W. C. Brown, president New York Central & H. R. R.; G. H. Ross, vice-president Alton; J. D. Besler, C. B. & Q., of Chicago; W. G. Besler, vice-president and general manager Central of New Jersey; Chas. Chappell, president Chicago & Alton; J. T. Clarke, general superintendent Union Pacific and later C. M. & St. P.; S. T. Shanklin, division superintendent Northern Pacific; Daniel Willard, president Erie railroad; Robert Mather, president Rock Island system; C. H. Hudson, Chicago and C. & O. L.; C. H. Smith, traffic manager C. & O.

So intimate has been the relation between the Michigan Central railroad and the C. B. & Q. railroad that a history of the latter does not seem complete without a brief account of the former. Three men, whom we have already mentioned, deserve a little further notice before taking up this part of our subject, viz.: John W. Brooks, James F. Joy, and John Murray Forbes, who may be credited with the organization, consolidation and building of the Michigan Central and all of whom have been prominent in one way and another with the Burlington system.

John M. Forbes from 1846 to 1881 was a great power in the financial world, who provided funds for the completion and successful operation of the Michigan Central and who did very much the same thing for the C. B. & Q. He was a man of strict and unswerving financial integrity and thereby established a credit for these roads upon a firm basis with moneyed interests of the east. Well known in London and the orient, his word became good for any needed amount of money.

John W. Brooks at the age of twenty-six came west and saw the condition of the Michigan Central road. He returned to Boston and New York in the hope of interesting financial men in his scheme. He met John M. Forbes, who had already some experience in matters of this kind, and presented the subject to him. The Michigan Central had been built westward from Detroit one hundred and forty miles to Kalamazoo. It had been backed by the state of Michigan and had cost $3,500,000. State aid, however, failed at this period and the road was put up for market. Mr. Forbes had faith in the scheme and undertook to furnish money for the purchase of the road. He employed the great lawyer, Daniel Webster, to draft a charter of the Michigan Central railroad embodying the best features of what had been learned from eastern railroad experience and sent Mr. Brooks back to Michigan to secure the passage of the charter by the legislature. In 1846 after much discussion and predictions of dire results, the charter was granted and by the act of incorporation the Michigan Central was granted the property of the road forever with the proviso that after twenty years the state might repurchase and after thirty years might alter, amend or repeal the charter. The purchase was made for $2,000,000.

Mr. James F. Joy was a graduate of Dartmouth college and the Harvard Law school. He came to Detroit and while waiting for his practice to grow, he was called into this scheme. It was Brooks and Joy who presented this matter to Forbes and they naturally became active in the work of bringing order out of the chaos into which the road had fallen. Forbes was made president of the road, Brooks of Detroit was to have charge of the operating. The Michigan Central company took possession of the property on the 23rd of September, 1846, and when the directors held the first annual meeting in Detroit, June, 1847, the road had already prospered enough to justify immediate preparations for a forward march toward Lake Michigan. Funds were easily found to complete this work and soon these men began to look for opportunities west of Chicago and by a series of negotiations heretofore mentioned in this work, they became interested in the Burlington road.

At the time these men took hold of the Michigan Central road, it ran through a section of country which was practically a wilderness, but the moment that efficient management was substituted for the previous bad management, traffic increased to such a degree that the road was shortly built to Chicago and transportation from Buffalo to Chicago was reduced from four days to a few hours.

Towns have sprung up along its line, it has a magnificent road bed, its depot buildings are of the finest in the country and it is one of the first class roads of the United States.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY

By J. F. Jarrell

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway company, which has a valuable plant in Galesburg, operates in thirteen states. These Santa Fe states are Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and California. This territory generally is known as the Great Southwest. If the thirteen states named were isolated from the rest of the world, the inhabitants would lack neither necessities nor luxuries in all the time to come, for in this section everything that mankind desires is produced in abundance.

The Santa Fe has been a pioneer in the development of the territory described. Starting in Kansas when the buffalo ran wild and Indians were on the war path, it pushed its way steadily westward and southward, across plains and through mountains, toward the Pacific ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. Having obtained an outlet to tide waters on the west and south, to obtain a definite eastern terminus at once became a problem for the Santa Fe management to solve.

Southern California was, in the late eighties, beginning to boom its products eastward; the mines of New Mexico and Colorado were contributing a heavy traffic; the plains of western Kansas, Indian Territory and Texas were shipping vast and increasing numbers of cattle to eastern markets, and the grain fields of Kansas were developing at a remarkable rate. The enormous volume of traffic which the then 5,300 miles of the Santa Fe system was creating and handling demanded an eastern outlet beyond the Missouri river.

Chicago, the traffic center of the great lakes and the Mississippi valley, was then, as today, the central market. It was, furthermore, the center of westward traffic operations, and the great homeseeker movement, occasioned by cheap lands and booming conditions in the west focused in that city. Chicago was, in short, the logical eastern terminus for the Santa Fe system.

To do full justice to its traffic requirements and to fulfill its ambition for a line from the lakes to the gulf and Pacific coast points, the Santa Fe must, then, strike directly from Kansas City to Chicago, and, under the indomitable leadership of President William B. Strong, the dream of building into Chicago became a splendid reality in the year 1887.

To carry out this project, the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway company was incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois on December 3, 1886.

In the month of January, 1887, according to information furnished by G. D. Bradley of the Santa Fe's accounting department at Topeka, the stock markets of Boston, New York and London announced the sale of $15,000,000 gold bonds of the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway company. These bonds, which were payable semi-annually in each of the above mentioned cities, were guaranteed by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad company and were secured by a first mortgage on the entire new road as projected subject only to $1,500,000 of prior lien bonds. In consideration of this guarantee, the Santa Fe was to receive the entire $30,000,000 stock issue of the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway company, thereby gaining control through a direct ownership of two-thirds of its $45,000,000 capital.

Several plans were proposed for getting into Chicago, but the one adopted was to construct as much of a direct line as necessary, and to purchase such minor lines as could be used to advantage in covering the distance. By this plan it was found possible to reduce the amount of main line construction about one hundred miles through the purchase of a small road leading into Chicago from Pekin, Illinois. Shortly after its incorporation, in December, 1886, the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway company acquired the road and other properties of the Chicago & St. Louis Railway company, which extended from Chicago to Pekin, about 158 miles, including a short spur from Streator to Coalville. By the terms of its charter the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway Company was authorized to build an extension from Streator, Illinois, to Fort Madison, Iowa, connecting at the latter point with an extension of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe from Kansas City. It was authorized, further, to construct a line from Pekin to Springfield, Illinois.

The Chicago & St. Louis Railway company, which the Santa Fe absorbed, was known originally in railroad circles as the "Hinckley road." About the year 1869, a Chicago promoter, named Francis C. Hinckley, associated with Philip B. Shumway and Colonel Ralph Plumb, and backed largely by Moses Taylor, president of the National City Bank of New York, had built a line from Streator to Pekin, a distance of about sixty-four miles. This was called the Chicago, Pekin & Southwestern railroad. In 1876 this road was extended northward about thirty miles to Maxon creek, near Coal City, the enterprise having been conducted under the name of the Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company. In 1881 these roads became involved in financial difficulties and, on May 10, 1882, both properties were reorganized under the name of the Chicago, St. Louis & Western Railroad company. On January 1, 1884, this line was completed from Mazon bridge to Chicago, nearly seventy miles. More financial troubles ensued, and another reorganization took place, this time under the name of the Chicago & St. Louis Railway company, on January 1, 1885. The property of the Chicago, St. Louis & Western was transferred to the Chicago & St. Louis Railway company on May 1, 1885, and the latter named road was formally opened for traffic on December 21, 1885, only to pass to the Chicago, Santa Fe & California Railway company a year later.

In February, 1887, A. A. Robinson, chief engineer of the Santa Fe system, received orders from President Strong to push the line through and have it ready for operation by January 1, 1888. This order was literally carried into effect, work being started all along the line with tremendous energy.

The grading and bridge building were let to private contractors, and approximately five thousand men were employed along the entire route, this force being increased later by about two thousand railroad employes engaged in track and structural work. The organization of the engineering staff and this body of workmen was not unlike that of an army in the field. Over the entire enterprise, with headquarters in Topeka, but everywhere present, was A. A. Robinson, chief engineer. At one time five hundred men were employed on Santa Fe work in Knox county.

Mr. Robinson, who now resides in Topeka, having retired from active railroad work, told the writer that he negotiated the arrangement for building the Santa Fe through Galesburg with a committee of which Mr. W. Selden Gale was chairman. Mr. Gale was the son of George W. Gale, founder of Galesburg. When news was received in Galesburg that the Santa Fe would build east of the Missouri river, the people of Galesburg promptly organized to capture the new line. Galesburg's proposition was to furnish a right of way through the city without expense to the Santa Fe. A guaranty, signed by many leading citizens, was telegraphed by Colonel Clark E. Carr to the directors of the Santa Fe, in session in Boston, and they accepted it. The money to pay for the right of way was afterwards raised by subscription. The road was built through Knox county late in the summer of 1887. When the work was started in Galesburg, Mr. Robinson submitted all matters pertaining to grades, crossings, depot site, etc., to Chairman Gale and the other committeemen, who put them through the council.

An important feature of the line from Chicago to Kansas City is that, while the Santa Fe crosses thirty-four railroads in the total distance of 458 miles, there are only four grade crossings. The Santa Fe goes over or under these railroads at all the other points. This feature prevents danger and saves time.

After the completion of the Chicago-Kansas City line, Mr. Robinson became vice-president and general manager of the Santa Fe, and later went to the Mexican Central railroad as its president.

Reaching Chicago, in 1888, the Santa Fe began spreading its network of rails into a system now aggregating approximately 11,000 miles of lines which serve this vast empire of the southwest, its wealth-yielding farms and ranches, its extensive mines, and its growing cities teeming with factories and the marts of trade.

The manufacturing industries in the thirteen states served by the Santa Fe have increased in number and output more than 100 per cent in ten years. All of the states produce lumber for the market, except two. Ten of the states are coal producers. Petroleum and natural gas are found in nine. The wool industry is important in twelve. Stone for the market is produced in four, salt in four, lead and zinc in seven, gypsum in eight, lime in three, cement in nine, sand and gravel in ten, clay in eight, precious metals in six, copper in five, iron in six, the fishing industry is extensive in six, and every state is rich in products from the farm, orchard, ranch and garden.

The rapid development of the southwest has made it necessary for the Santa Fe to have a two-track railroad from Chicago to the Pacific. It now has two tracks from Chicago to Belen, New Mexico, a distance of 1,400 miles, and by the end of 1912 additional double tracking for 400 miles will have been finished west of Belen. From Chicago to Kansas City the tracks are side by side. From Kansas City the main line runs through central Kansas, southeastern Colorado and New Mexico, another line through southern Kansas, northwestern Oklahoma, the panhandle of Texas and central New Mexico, the two lines meeting at Belen, making a two-track way. In addition the Santa Fe has double tracked its main line in Kansas City to Newton, a distance of 201 miles. It also has two tracks through the Arkansas valley, from Holly to La Junta, in Colorado. The tracks west of Belen are side by side. The double tracking from Chicago to Kansas City was completed in 1911. The double tracking in Knox county was done in the summer of that year.

The Santa Fe of to-day, under the guidance of President E. P. Ripley, is recognized as one of the great railway systems of the world, at once conservative and progressive. The Ripley policy for team work in all branches of the service and for maintaining a cordial relationship between officials and the company's patrons has been a strong factor in the success of the Santa Fe.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

By Rev. Stuart M. Campbell

The Presbyterian church in Knox county is represented by five churches—Altona, Galesburg, Knoxville, Oneida and Yates City. Formerly there was a church in Copley township, known as Knox church, which is now closed. These churches form an integral part of the religious body known officially as "the Presbyterian church in the United States of America." This body is for the most part limited to the northern part of the United States, the similar body in the south being separately incorporated under the name of "The Presbyterian Church in the United States." To these two branches of the Presbyterian family must be added all the groups following the Presbyterial form of government—such as the Dutch Reformed, the Reformed Church in America, the United Presbyterian, the Cumberland Presbyterian and others. In all it is estimated that 23,000,000 people confess allegiance to the Presbyterian system, and they are found scattered throughout the world.

HISTORICAL

The Presbyterian church in America dates from 1705, when the first presbytery was formed in Philadelphia. In 1788 the general assembly was first organized. There have been a number of breaks in the development of the church, owing to divergent views on matters of government and discipline. In 1870 there was a union consummated between the "old school" and "new school" branches, and more recently there has been consummated a union with the Cumberland branch. The membership of the national church is now 1,354,000, with 1,200,000 scholars in Bible schools. The name Presbyterian is the adaptation of the Greek word for "elder" or "bishop." It signifies government by elders, who are chosen to represent the people. It has always been a purely democratic church, and its form of government has been so highly satisfactory that many other institutions have been planned upon the same representative idea. Each local church in the Presbyterian system is governed by a board of elders, who are chosen by the congregation; the churches within a certain area constitute a "presbytery"; all the churches in a state form a "synod"; and delegates from the presbyteries (equal clergy and laity) form the "general assembly," which meets annually, and which is the highest court of the church.

The Presbyterian church carries on an immense amount of work in this and other lands. She has been the friend of the common people, the nurse of liberty, the mother of democracy, the builder of schools and colleges. Such colleges as Princeton and Knox have been planted by her sons, and she continues her great work, planting schools and extending her influence in all lands. Her missionary labors are extensive and permanent. She has now over 1,000 missionaries in the foreign field and has distributed this past year about $1,700,000 in these lands. In all that makes for the uplift of the world the church has been a great contributor; and the dignity of her worship, with the freedom of her government, have combined to make her service far-reaching and significant.

DOCTRINAL

In matters of doctrine the Presbyterian church follows what is known as the Augustinian or Calvinistic system. These doctrines were formulated more elaborately by John Calvin (1509-1564). Briefly the Calvinistic churches emphasize the sovereignty of God, especially in matters of grace. The sovereign recognition of God has given to Presbyterianism a peculiar strength, and the history of the denomination is full of tragedy. While following what seems like a rigid system, no church surpasses the Presbyterian in the simplicity of her methods, and members are welcomed into her communion on the simplest terms. Her conceptions of the Bible, and of the revelation of God in Christ, have given to her a solidity and steadfastness that remains unchanged throughout the centuries, and her people are planting the work with the certainty of future achievements and progress. Combining thus the rootage necessary to growth and the fruitage which is the sign of health, the church has become the true liberal church, and she is filled with happiness.

ALTONA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, APRIL 25TH, 1857

A committee from Schuyler presbytery, composed of Isaac H. Candee, D. D., of Galesburg, Rev. Thomas S. Vail of Knoxville and Rev. Jas. T. Bliss of Walnut Grove, met a portion of the citizens of this place at their schoolhouse to organize a Presbyterian church, as had been before publicly announced. Rev. Thomas S. Vail preached a sermon from Luke 11, 34:35. The committee having been duly organized for the transaction of business, twenty-one names were given: Richard S. Stuckey and Joseph Finley, first elders; Joseph Stuckey, first deacon. Attest: I. H. Candee, D. D., Rev. T. S. Vail, Rev. J. T. Bliss, committee of presbytery.

April 10, 1858, R. S. Stuckey was first delegate chosen to attend Schuyler presbytery.

October 10, 1859, Samuel Russell was appointed delegate to attend the synod at Chicago, October 20th of the same year.

First examination and approving of minutes at Galesburg, April 11, 1860. C. Levenworth, moderator. The following pastors have served since the church building was erected: Rev. C. Levenworth, who resided in Galesburg; Rev. Giffin and Rev. Jimison, who resided in Monmouth; I. G. Scott lived in Galesburg; Rev. Moore, Rev. Harvey, Rev. Ayers, who resided in Galesburg; Rev. Thos. Watson, Rev. Wm. Parker, Rev. John Rugh, now of White Hall; Rev. C. W. Crofts of Morrison, Rev. J. N. Strain of Afton, Iowa; Rev. W. B. Smith, St. Louis, Mo. Revs. Bliss and Vance were itinerant ministers before house was built. Rev. S. A. League, formerly of Yates City, was elected pastor and took charge of work March 1, 1912.

Elders: Thos. Andrews, Chas. Austin and J. W. McQueen, clerk. Trustees: A. A. Scott, James McGaan, F. H. Olson, Ed Main and Harry McGaan. Membership about 100; Sunday school, 45. House, eight roomed modern building.

J. W. McQueen, Clerk.

GALESBURG PRESBYTERIANISM

The Presbyterian church in Galesburg has a history parallel with that of the town and of Knox college, all of which were founded together. The group that came from Whitesboro, N. Y., to establish the town and college were a group of church-going people, and soon after arriving here they met to organize as a church. On February 26, 1837, the first Sunday service was held, with the Rev. Geo. W. Gale as preacher. Sixty-four persons united by letter and eighteen by confession of faith—eighty-two in all. On April 5th it was agreed that the church should be organized fully as Presbyterian, and very soon thereafter it was received into the presbytery of Schuyler, the corporate name being "The Presbyterian Church of Galesburg." The first elders chosen were Nehemiah West, Nehemiah H. Losey and John Kendall. The deacons chosen were Thomas Simmons and Abel Goodell. The church continued its service until 1845, when a change occurred in its policy. The Congregational element had been growing strong in the young church, and this group wished some compromise that they might have recognition. The compromise was arranged in 1843 and continued until 1851, when a group of Presbyterians withdrew and organized a church of their own faith, known as the Second Presbyterian church. In the service of the First church were Rev. Geo. W. Gale, 1836; Rev. John Thomas Avery, 1836-7; Rev. John Waters, 1837-39; Rev. Horatio Foote, 1839-40; Rev. Geo. W. Gale, 1840-41; Rev. Hiram Huntington Kellogg, 1841-43; Rev. J. Waters, Rev. Edward Hollester or Rev. Hiram Marsh, 1843-44; Rev. Lucius H. Parker, 1844-45; Rev. H. H. Kellogg, 1845-47; Rev. Jonothan Blanchard, 1847-49; Rev. Flavel Bascom, 1849-50.

The first service of the new Presbyterian congregation was held in Knox academy June 29, 1851. After worshipping in a small building on South street the congregation in 1856 moved into a new building at the corner of Kellogg and Main streets. In a short time there was a movement for a more suitable building, and after some delays, incident in part to the war, the new edifice on South Cherry street was proceeded with and occupied May 7, 1864. This building was destroyed by fire Nov. 31, 1891. The ministers serving this church were: Rev. Geo. W. Gale to 1852, Rev. John W. Bailey to 1858, Rev. Harvey Curtis, D. D., and Rev. Charles E. Stebbins to 1862. After a group of supplies, the Rev. George Duffield became pastor in 1865, continuing until 1869. Dr. Duf-

GALESBURG PRESBYTERIANISM

The Presbyterian church in Galesburg has a history parallel with that of the town and of Knox college, all of which were founded together. The group that came from Whitesboro, N. Y., to establish the town and college were a group of church-going people, and soon after arriving here they met to organize as a church. On February 26, 1837, the first Sunday service was held, with the Rev. Geo. W. Gale as preacher. Sixty-four persons united by letter and eighteen by confession of faith—eighty-two in all. On April 5th it was agreed that the church should be organized fully as Presbyterian, and very soon thereafter it was received into the presbytery of Schuyler, the corporate name being "The Presbyterian Church of Galesburg." Jonothan Blanchard, 1847-49; Rev. Flavel Bascom, 1849-50.

field's pastorate has been memorized by a window in the present church, recalling his authorship of the stately hymn, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus." In 1869 Prof. Llewellyn Pratt became stated supply.

In 1854 there was organized in Galesburg an "old school" Presbyterian church. This was a national movement and was based upon questions of discipline. This body worshipped in a building on North Cedar street, which was occupied in 1857. This building was removed to Simmons street in 1865, where the work continued until 1870. The pastors were Rev. T. S. Vail to 1855, Rev. I. N. Candee to 1866, Rev. George Norcross to 1868, Rev. S. T. Wilson to 1870.

In 1869 and 1870 the question of the union of Presbyterian interests was taken up and on March 1, 1870, the presbytery of Knox and Warren gave official sanction to the union. Prof. Pratt was stated supply for a short time of the united church, and in the fall of 1872 the Rev. Matthew B. Lourie became pastor. He was succeeded in the fall of 1885 by Rev. John B. Worrall, who remained until 1889. Rev. John Hood, D. D., was pastor until the congregation called the Rev. Hamilton W. Spence, Lit. D., who retired in 1906. In the summer of 1907 the Rev. Stuart M. Campbell, D. D., a graduate of Knox College, class of 1888, became pastor, and remains in that office at the date of this writing.

In the pastorate of Rev. Dr. John Hood the present splendid stone edifice was erected on the corner of North Prairie and East Ferris streets, at a total cost of about $70,000.

The church to-day reports about 550 members. The Bible school has a total enrollment of 350. There are flourishing societies of women and young people and a brotherhood of the men. In its board of trustees are Mr. Geo. C. Lescher, chairman; Mr. W. L. Steele, secretary, and Messrs. L. F. Wertman, Geo. E. Sipherd, C. W. Hoyt, Geo. W. Kirby, Fred A. Dean, W. S. McClanahan, W. J. Hayward, R. O. Housh, R. G. Sinclair and J. H. Waterman. The church session is made up as follows: The pastor, moderator; Mr. G. T. Sellew, clerk, and Messrs. J. H. Losey, J. C. Fahnestock, J. N. Irwin, A. F. McCornack, A. W. Snyder, A. A. Sigsbee and R. N. Shaw.

In 1910 the congregation bought for a manse the property at the corner of Losey and Prairie streets. It is a beautiful and permanent minister's home and a valuable property.

The congregation has had in its ranks many of the leading educators, merchants and business men of Galesburg, and it has contributed very largely to the building of a lovely and substantial city.

JOHN KNOX CHURCH

A very large interest attaches to the history of a church in Copley township which was known by the name of John Knox church. By referring to the article on "The Scotch in Knox County" some facts concerning this church will be found, and to those who cherish its memory these words will have the deepest interest. It was indeed a "Scotch" church, as will be realized in the list of names of the founders given in the article just referred to. This church was organized under the direction of a committee of Schuyler presbytery, on April 28, 1855, and for the church immortality was fondly predicted. Along with many other country churches, it was abandoned some years ago, the official close of its history occurring in 1900. The church was organized with twenty-five members from the church at Knoxville. The ruling elders chosen at the time were: Mr. Samuel McCornack, Mr. Lockhart Leighton, and Mr. Richard S. Stuckey. The trusteees were: Mr. Peter McClymont, Mr. Peter Gordon, Mr. William McCornack, Mr. James McCornack. From the records it seems that Rev. I. T. Bliss was first pastor, serving about four years from January, 1857. Rev. S. E. Vance was chosen pastor in 1863, and served about five years, and Rev. W. S. Dool from 1873. In 1886, Rev. John Rugh was chosen pastor, and continued in the field eleven years. There is much affection shown by the descendants of the original families for this church, which is now history rapidly becoming forgotten.

THE KNOXVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Presbyterian church at Knoxville was organized on the fourth of July, 1835, by a committee of Schuyler presbytery, consisting of Rev. Romulus Barnes and Rev. Robert Stewart. The organization comprised only seven members at this meeting, but others soon united. David Huggins and Parnach Owen were elected to the office of ruling elders. The church, after a varied experience of two generations, is now housed in a very neat and commodious building. It is well adapted to the needs of the congregation in all its departments. It is valued at $16,000. A modern manse has just been completed, in which the pastor and family are happily domiciled. The value of this home is about $6,000.

The list of ministers who have served this people for 77 years is as follows: E. P. Noel, J. J. Miter, Thomas Cole, L. K. Hawley, W. F. Fraser, G. W. Gale, T. S. Vail, W. Y. Miller, C. Waterbury, James Bassett, N. Barrett, Samuel Wyckoff, G. N. Johnson, D. G. Bradford, J. D. Fitzgerald, John M. Waddle, W. H. Mason. The present pastor is Alvin R. Mathes, who is doing a strong work, and is greatly appreciated by his people and the community. The session of the church is now composed of Horace L. Bailey, Thomas C. Love, Dr. Lewis Becker, Charles T. Chase, Frank Y. Harmony, T. B. Park, Nathan Anderson and Ira J. Lewis. The board of trustees is: Ira J. Lewis, Nathan Anderson, F. G. Shermeyer, Enos R. Lacy and William W. McBride. The Sunday-school officers are: Nathan Anderson, superintendent; Ira J. Lewis, assistant; William W. McBride, treasurer; John Sanders, assistant secretary; Harry A. Parmenter, secretary; Miss Amanda C. Lightner, superintendent of the home department. Six missionary organizations—for men, women and young people, together with a Christian endeavor society, also help make a most efficient church.

ONEIDA FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

May 4, 1863, a committee appointed by Schuyler presbytery, consisting of schoolhouse No. 3, in Ontario, Knox county, to organize a Presbyterian church Rev. I. N. Candee, Rev. C. B. Bristol and Elder Alexander Milroy, met in in answer to a petition signed by many of the citizens of that town.

Rev. C. B. Bristol preached a sermon after which the committee proceeded to organize the church, receiving from the Presbyterian church of Altona some 14 members and from Heathland, 4 more. The congregation then elected as elders the following men, Joseph Findley and James B. Ralston, who were formally installed. The name of the church was to be the First Presbyterian Church of Ontario, Illinois.

The first pastor was Rev. S. C. Vance, who continued with this church four years. At a meeting of Warren presbytery, which was held at the John Knox church, September, 1865, the name of the church was changed to the First Presbyterian Church of Oneida.

The first church building was probably built in the year 1865, as the congregational expense of that year is given as $3,627, and no other account is given of building, until December, 1869, a note in the minutes of the session gives thanks that the church destroyed by a storm on May 5, 1868, had been replaced by a better and larger one. The names of many stated supplies are given in the records, but no name seems to be retained longer than that of Rev. J. Reed Stuart, who seems to have been pastor about five years. In 1871, there is an account of a memorial bell being put in place at a cost of $290.

Rev. S. L. Allison was pastor for four years, October, 1880, to 1884.

Rev. J. Rugh, pastor for four years, 1886 to 1890.

Rev. E. M. Clingan, pastor from 1897 to 1900.

Rev. O. C. Dale, 1901 to 1902.

Rev. R. S. Strain, from 1905 to 1908. During this last pastorate the church building was remodeled at a cost of over $2,000.

The pastorate of Rev. C. F. Wilson began in July, 1909, and continues at this writing. The congregation is a substantial one. The church officers are as follows:

Trustees—John Mitchell, John Milroy, Douglas McCullouch, J. Frank Epperson, William McKie.

Session—Martin Gehring, I. P. Mitchell, W. G. Glenn, Peter McKissick, William McCornack.

Superintendent of Bible School—W. Y. Glenn.

Ladies' Aid Society—Executive Committee—Mrs. I. P. Mitchell, Mrs. James Taggart, Mrs. Charles Dugan.

Endeavor Society—Miss Ethel McKie, president; Miss Lulu Mitchell, secretary.

Brotherhood—S. P. Mitchell, president; Frank Epperson, secretary.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF YATES CITY

Was organized by a committee appointed by the presbytery of Peoria, at Henry, Illinois, on October 20, 1866. The committee consisted of Rev. J. H. Smith, Rev. Thos. Stevenson and Elder John Marshall of Farmington, Illinois. This committee was to visit Yates City and if the way be clear was to organize a church, and said committee was authorized to make application to the board of "domestic missions" through the standing committee for the sum of $200 to support, for one year, such missionary as the committee may send to the field. The following is the committee's report:

The committee appointed to organize a church at Yates City, Illinois, would respectfully submit the following report:

At a meeting duly called and held in Y. C. November 16, 1866, a church was organized with 18 members. Mr. Joseph Cunningham and W. B. Mathews were elected and ordained elders.

The session records recite that the committee met in the schoolhouse on the evening of November 16, 1866, in Yates City and after a sermon by Rev. Thomas Stevenson, of the committee, an enrollment was made of those desiring a church organization and the following named persons were enrolled as charter members: Mr. Robert Mathews (he is now 96 years old and comes to church occasionally), Mrs. Clarinda Mathews, Mr. Joseph Cunningham, Mrs. Sarah Cunningham, Mrs. C. A. McKissick, Mrs. Sarah E. Bryson, Mr. W. B. Mathews, Mrs. Esther Mathews, John Mathews, W. W. Mathews, Joseph Mooney, Mrs. Susan Mooney, John Graver, Mrs. Mary Graver.

All these were from the Presbyterian church at Elmwood.

Nelson Cunningham and Mrs. Lizzie Cunningham and Theodore Cunningham were from the Presbyterian church at French Grove, Illinois. All were admitted by letter.

Joseph Cunningham and W. B. Mathews were elected, ordained and installed as elders. And John C. Bryson, John D. Huey and Elder W. B. Mathews were elected trustees. The meeting closed with prayer.

THOMAS STEVENSON,
J. H. SMITH,
JOHN MARSHALL,
Committee of Presbytery.

The church, which cost something more than $3,000, was dedicated December 6, 1867. Rev. J. H. Smith was the first pastor and entered upon his labor with the organization November 16, 1866, and continued with the church till May, 1870. Other ministers have served the church as follows:

Rev. J. E. Carothers, October 16, 1870, to September 26, 1874.
Rev. L. D. Wells, December 25, 1874, to October 6, 1877.
Rev. L. C. Little, August 24, 1878, to June 20, 1880.
Rev. C. F. Carson, June 2, 1881, to March 10, 1883.
Rev. J. L. Heming, April 12, 1884, to March 9, 1887.
Rev. C. C. B. Duncan, June 4, 1887, to September 27, 1890.
Rev. J. L. Clark, September 27, 1891, to April 6, 1895.
Rev. Wm. Parsons, June 25, 1895, to April 10, 1897.
Rev. D. M. Ross, November 28, 1897, to April 30, 1899.
Rev. W. H. Clatworthy, Jr., June 12, 1899, to May 1, 1901.
Rev. Geo. E. Young, July, 1901, to April, 1903.
Rev. M. M. Cooper, September 7, 1903, to 1904.
Rev. W. J. Manifold, August 6, 1904, to August 10, 1908.
Rev. S. A. Teague, January 20, 1909, to February 27, 1912, when he resigned.

The Sabbath school was organized in 1867, by G. N. Pierce and was by him superintended for one year, when W. B. Mathews was chosen and continued in this office till his death, December, 1890. Leslie McKeighan is the present (January, 1912) superintendent, having served in this capacity for three years. In December, 1910, the church session assumed full control of the Sunday school. The result is a well organized school, there being nine working organized classes.

The Ladies' Missionary society was organized in May, 1875. The first officers were: President, Mrs. Ella B. Smith; vice president, Miss Nannie Smith; secretary, Mrs. Mary Broadfield; treasurer, Mrs. W. B. Mathews.

The Y. P. S. C. E. was organized May 5, 1886, and during these 26 years has been a strong and active society of Christian workers. Will Allen, the present president, has held this position for nearly three years. The society has 44 members.

The Bethany chapter of the Westminster guild was organized in May, 1909, with eight charter members. Miss Ethel Mathews was elected president and Mrs. Teague, leader. A course of study was adopted and has been pursued during these three years with much interest and profit. The society now has 36 members and has met regularly since its organization. This was the third like society to be organized in Peoria presbytery.

The Westminster circle was organized in August, 1911, with 9 charter members. Mrs. Teague was elected leader and Mrs. Leslie McKeighan and Miss Ethel Mathews, patronesses. A course of study was adopted and they met bi-weekly. There are now 14 members.

GIFTS TO THE CHURCH

James McKeighan, just before his death in 1885, made the church a present of a manse valued at $1,000. In 1890, this property was sold and a new manse built on a lot adjoining the church. The building cost $1,865.

In February, 1900, Mrs. Elizabeth McKeighan, the wife of James McKeighan, bequeathed to the church $1,500, to be appropriated to the building of a new church, which was completed in 1903, at a cost of $8,500 in cash and about $1,200 in work of laborers.

On February 27, Mr. S. A. Teague resigned to accept the pastorate at Altona, Illinois, leaving the church at this writing without a pastor. The elders are, L. A. Lawrence, John S. Mathews, George Montgomery, Will Allen, Leslie McKeighan and Dwight F. Lawrence. Trustees: John S. Mathews, George Mathews, James Hensley, Miss Dora Thurman and Mrs. Olive Mathews.

CHERRY GROVE SEMINARY.

By M. C. Bates.

The country along the Cumberland river, just to the north and east of Nashville, Tennessee, was in an early day called Cumberland. This region lay in both Tennessee and Kentucky, and was in extent equal to several large counties. Some of the earliest settlements of middle Tennessee were in this part of the state. The people were largely of Scotch-Irish descent and were also largely of the Presbyterian faith. The churches of this Cumberland country were in what was called the Cumberland presbytery of the Presbyterian church. About the beginning of the nineteenth century, when a great revival of religion was prevailing in that country, this presbytery ordanied to preach several men who were allowed to make exception to certain parts of the Westminster confession of faith, so called Hyper Calvinistic, which they thought taught the doctrine of Fatalism. They accepted the book, however, for "substance" of doctrine. The higher church courts in reviewing the action of the presbytery refused to concur in what the presbytery had done. After all efforts to harmonize the differences between the parties had failed, the general assembly dissolved Cumberland presbytery. The men who had been ordained with the reservation as above given, organized themselves into what they again called Cumberland presbytery. This was done on the 4th of February, 1810. The new presbytery grew rapidly. Other presbyteries were soon organized, and they together took the name "Cumberland Presbyterian church." In a few years, the new church spread into nearly all the adjoining states. These men were stanchly evangelical and strong, forceful preachers. In the earlier days especially, they lived close to the people, sharing with them the self-denials and hardship, incident to pioneer life. This helped to give them great influence with the people. The church buildings of the time would not hold the people that came together to hear them preach. It was during this period and under these conditions that the practice of holding camp meetings was first started.

These preachers followed with the tide of emigration into the newer states and aided, not only in establishing churches, but also in starting common schools. And as soon as it was at all practicable, schools also were established where young men and young women who were growing up in such vast numbers might have the advantages of a better education than could be had at the common schools. Later they founded colleges in many of the states.

In the year 1905, almost exactly a century after the separation, these two Presbyterian churches were reunited into one body, not, however, until in the year 1902, the mother church had modified or qualified her declaration of belief on the points that had been the cause of the separation.

In the year 1831, Joseph Latimer, Sr., with some of his family came to Knox county, settling on section 29, Cedar township. In 1832, his son, Jonathan Latimer, and family came, settling on section 28. In 1834, Alexander Latimer, another son, and family came to the same township and settled on section 21. Mrs. Sarah Boren, a widowed daughter of Joseph Latimer, came with him and settled on section 29, near her father. George G. Latimer, who also came with his father, was married in 1832, and settled on section 29. Urbin D. Coy married, in 1833, Susan Latimer, Joseph Latimer's youngest daughter. They settled a little later on section 21. These people came here from the "Cumberland country," in Tennessee and Kentucky, and were most of them members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. In 1835, nearly all of them, together with others of like faith, were organized into the Cherry Grove Cumberland Presbyterian church in the house of Joseph Latimer, by the Rev. James Stockton. They worshipped for a time in a log schoolhouse situated near where is located the Cherry Grove cemetery. In 1836, a frame church was built about eighty rods to the northeast of this first schoolhouse, in a beautiful walnut and sugar maple grove just at the edge of the prairie. The following are the names of the charter members of the Cherry Grove Cumberland Presbyterian church, organized June 20, 1835: Mrs. Susan Coy, John Crawford, Mrs. Elizabeth Crawford, Joseph Latimer, Mrs. Ann Latimer, George G. Latimer, Mrs. Rebecca Latimer, Alexander Latimer, Mrs. Eunice Latimer, John Howard, Mrs. Ellen Howard, Miss Ellen Howard, Mrs. Nancy Lomax.

It has been difficult to fix definitely the date when Cherry Grove seminary was started. The early records have been lost. But fortunately there are still living those who have aided greatly in determining the date. J. W. Stephens is clear in his memory that "there was a boarding school" at Cherry Grove when he came to the neighborhood in 1838 and that it was called "Cherry Grove seminary." Others recall the names of a Mr. Seymoure and Elias Byram, who taught the school at about this time. This agrees also with the judgment and traditions of the older people who have had the best opportunity to know, that the school was started in this newly erected church building in 1837.

A charter was obtained from the state legislature in 1840. In 1841, November 1st, Rev. Cyrus Haynes, a college graduate and an experienced and capable teacher, took charge as principal of Cherry Grove seminary. For eight years under Mr. Haynes' management the school prospered. In his time a considerable addition was built adjoining the church to afford more room for the school. In 1849 another advance step was taken. A large substantial two-story frame building, 40x56 feet, was erected, the lower story for a chapel and church purposes, the upper story arranged for recitation and other school purposes. Mr. Haynes was followed by a succession of strong, wide-awake teachers, among them Rev. J. M. B. Roach, O. H. Baker, Rev. J. C. Wagamon and others, all of whom did good work and under whose management the school continued to prosper. There came to the school a fine class of young people, earnest and enthusiastic, and always loyal to the school. There was a successful literary society—the Upsilon—and a semi-monthly paper, the Cherry Leaf, edited by the students. Also in later years music was taught.

The school was in a sense under the advice and patronage of the Rushville presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. Many young men studying for the ministry were encouraged to come here. There were students from a large part of Western Illinois, and they came also from Iowa, Missouri and Kentucky. Some fitted themselves here for college, entering the best colleges of the time in the sophomore and sometimes the junior classes. A larger number prepared for teaching, others for entering upon the study of law or medicine, and all were inspired with the hope of a successful and useful life. A very large per cent of those who were students here made a good record in after life. Some indeed remarkably so.

There were grouped about Cherry Grove seminary grounds and within a half mile ten or twelve houses where these students were boarded, or, as was sometimes the case, boarded themselves. Besides these, homes from a mile to a mile and a half away took students to board when it was necessary.

In the year 1866 there was located at Lincoln, Illinois, a college by the Cumberland Presbyterian churches of the state. This school was intended to take the place of two or three schools then in existence similar to the one at Cherry Grove and make of all one strong college. This action, together with the fact that there were at that time two colleges in Galesburg and two in Abingdon and one or two in Knoxville, made it apparent that there was no longer a demand for Cherry Grove seminary, and accordingly in 1866 the school was closed. The library that had been collected was sent to the Lincoln college. Thus after a career of marked usefulness for a period of nearly thirty years was this action taken.

The same year the church erected a house of worship in Abingdon, which was dedicated in February of 1867. This is still their church home.

In 1881, by a vote of the congregation, they changed their fellowship in a body from the Cumberland Presbyterian church to that of the Congregational church. This action was taken without any change in belief, they retaining the same articles of faith. It was done for the sake of closer fellowship with the churches in the nearer vicinity.

In maintaining Cherry Grove seminary all the community joined heartily. Many sacrifices were necessary and were made cheerfully. In some respects the burdens fell heaviest on the women who, with meager facilities for doing so, and very small pay, had to care for the students and see that they had as comfortable homes as possible while at school. Some of the students were poor and some of the young men were studying for the ministry and were to be encouraged in every way possible. Among the many unselfish and devoted women who helped in this one is worthy of especial mention because of her long service and her helpful influence. Mrs. George G. Latimer, whose maiden name was Rebecca Drennan, was a native of Kentucky. Her father, William Drennan, who was a native of Pennsylvania, had moved to Sangamon county, Illinois, from Kentucky in 1818 and had settled a few miles south of Springfield, where he was living, a man of prominence, in the fall of 1831, when Mr. Latimer chanced to stop over night with Mr. Drennan, when on a business trip to Vandalia, then the capital of the state. The next spring, in June, the soldiers of the Black Hawk war were discharged. Mr. Latimer, who had been serving in this war as lieutenant of the "Knox county rangers," was now free, and in the following fall again visited William Drennan's home, this time to bring away with him Mr. Drennan's daughter, Rebecca, as his wife. The wedding trip was a journey from Sangamon county to Knox county on horseback. Mrs. Latimer was but eighteen years old at this time. She was of the same religious faith as her husband. She entered heartily into his plans for the home building that was already started on section 29, Cedar township, and also for the new church and school that was soon to follow. When Cherry Grove seminary was started George Latimer, with his father and brothers, Jonathan and Alexander, were among the active leaders in the move and gave much of their time and liberally of their means in forwarding the enterprise. George Latimer's home was but about sixty rods from the seminary and church building, and every interest that pertained to either always received a cheerful and hearty support from Mrs. Latimer. She was with the foremost in entertaining comers and goers and always of course without thought of pay. When the school was started and from that time on her home was always full of students and at almost a nominal price for board. Her sympathy for and helpfulness to young men were a marked feature of her life. When Dennis Clark, who for eighteen years served so acceptably as judge of the Knox county court, was sixteen years old, an orphan, and living where he had but little chance for advancement, left Sangamon county he came directly to George Latimer's, having known Mrs. Latimer before her marriage. Here for twelve years, or until his marriage in 1845, he found encouragement and a congenial home. Judge Clark always held Mrs. Latimer in grateful esteem and affection.

In 1848 Mrs. Latimer's first great sorrow came. In the space of two weeks her husband and three children were taken by death, two of the children being buried in one grave. With this crushing bereavement came the exhibition of her strong character. Left with the entire care of a young family, in addition to her household duties, she now took the management of the farm. Her only son was but ten years old. Beside her watchful care and training of her five children her management of the farm and stock upon it was equal to that of the best farmers in the neighborhood. Meanwhile she in no degree relaxed her interest in the school. In 1858 Louis Hanback, an orphan boy sixteen or seventeen years old, from Camp Point, Illinois, came to the seminary. He was without money, but he was a wide-awake, ambitious youth. At first he tried self-boarding, but soon Mrs. Latimer learned of his ambition to get an education and took him to her home, where he remained until the beginning of the Civil war, when he enlisted and served until it was over. He then studied law and went west. Later, in 1880, he was elected to congress from a Kansas district. On his way to Washington he stopped to visit with his friend and benefactress and to tell her of his success. She appeared to be as pleased and happy as if he were her own son.

These cases, here given, show the characteristics which were dominant through Mrs. Latimer's whole life.

It is fitting to mention here one other life. Mrs. Latimer had but one son, William Drennan Latimer. After attending Cherry Grove seminary he was graduated from Knox College and Albany, New York, Law School. Without coming home from Albany he went directly into his country's service. In the fall of 1864 while on shipboard off Fortress Monroe he died of yellow fever and was buried at sea.

CONGREGATIONALISM AND THE HISTORY OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES IN KNOX COUNTY

By Rev. David Fales, Jr.

Congregationalism is a term which may be applied either to a method of church government or to a particular group of Protestant churches. In its first and broader significance it describes one of the three main types of the ecclesiastical polity, the others being Episcopal and Presbyterian. In Congregational polity authority is vested in the congregation—whence the name—rather than in bishops or elders; and is thus fundamentally democratic in principle. This usage of the word Congregationalism appropriately describes the polity of various religious bodies, such as the Baptists, the Plymouth Brethren, the Christians, the Disciples of Christ, the Unitarians, the Universalists and the Hebrew synagogue as well as of the "Congregationalists."

The second and more limited significance of the word is found in its application to this last group of churches. These churches, Congregational in their government and "Evangelical" in doctrine, have persisted through a common history, dating from the very origins of Congregational theory during the reign of Elizabeth, down through many generations of common hardships, co-operative undertakings, and mutual understanding; and have established a recognized relationship with one another in their various lands, and to some extent in international fraternal union. These are by historical descent and common acceptance the Congregational churches proper.

POLITY

Congregational polity contains three fundamental principles, embodied in the three words, covenant, autonomy, and fellowship.

The covenant is that agreement by which any group of individual Christians may form themselves into a congregation, for worship, sacrament and Christian activity. By this covenant the rights of individuals are acknowledged and each individual at the same time admits his responsibility for the common welfare.

Autonomy is the principle of independent self-government by which any congregation so formed makes itself a complete church, not subject to other ecclesiastical authority outside itself. Such a congregation chooses its own minister, admits its own members and defines its own doctrines.

Fellowship is the bond of obligation which any autonomous congregation or church acknowledges as a basis of co-operation with other churches similarly minded. Examples of such fellowships in the United States today are, local associations, state associations, and, since 1871, the national council, besides more informal congregational clubs, ordaining councils, and congresses. Such fellowships have no authority save that of persuasion, no power save that of advice, and no restraint over the conduct of any church except in freedom at any time to withdraw fellowship.

DOCTRINE

The doctrinal position of present day Congregationalism is that common Protestantism known as "Evangelical." This position has been reached, however, by means of a process of many successive modifications of the pure Calvinism of the English reformation from which Anglicanism, Presbyterianism and Congregationalism had their birth. In spite of the liberty given their individual opinions, Congregationalists as a body, have been, on the whole, in general agreement, as they have progressed through these various modifications.

HISTORY

It is in its history that Congregationalism finds its distinctive feature. It shares its government and its doctrine with many bodies, but it has developed out of a rich past experience peculiar to itself. Common hardships, common enterprises, and common hopes, have served to hold together scattered churches to which common ancestry and traditions have given considerable solidarity. Differences in history are gradually coming to be the only important differences between the Protestant denominations. Such traditions may be more or less valuable in different bodies; but to each, its own past is the most valuable, because it is its own. So long as mutual understanding in doctrine and co-operation in Christian work increases, each has the more right to the inspiration of its own peculiar heritage. Congregationalism may rightly take pride in its history.

ENGLISH ORIGINS

Puritanism, out of which Congregationalism grew, was the indirect product of the reformation in England, and the direct product of the translation of the Bible into English. The reading of the Bible developed during the last half of the sixteenth century a group of spiritually-minded Christians of independent thought who intensely hated the abuses of the Anglican church of the period. The result was Puritanism, a definite, sincere and powerful effort to reform—"purify"—the church from within. At first a reaction against "Romanist" ritual and worldly clergy, etc., it became a systematized opposition to the whole theory of priesthood and to the state control of the church; in the end it became an arraignment of the English monarchical theory of state. The Puritans had the courage of their convictions. As king-baiters they had good biblical examples in Elijah and Amos; as church makers they found a simple and democratic model in the early Apostolic church, and right sturdily did they attempt to follow both models. The opposition such men aroused was naturally bitter. Such opposition was primarily political in its animus, but to these Bible-reading, independence-loving, hard-fighting individualists, the whole movement was the cause of God. It was destined to cost Charles the First his head, George the Third his colonies, and was to impose on both English and American constitutions the principle of individual rights; it must perforce, therefore, have had its birth in intense religious zeal.

Separatism went even farther. It developed early as the radical wing of Puritanism, urging the futility of reform from within, the complete withdrawal of true Christians from the church, and the setting up of autonomous congregations subservient neither to clergy nor state. This group was from the first fiercely persecuted. Those of its adherents who escaped hanging were forced either to meet secretly or to flee to the more tolerant atmosphere of Holland. It was one of these separatist groups, meeting privately in William Brewster's manor at Scrooby, where it had organized as a church about 1608, that had to flee to Amsterdam, in 1609, later removing to Leyden. There was concocted the plan for establishing a new home for themselves in the new world, and after twelve years as sojourners with the Dutch, the congregation of Scrooby, now "Pilgrims," landed on Plymouth Rock from the Mayflower.

EARLY AMERICAN HISTORY

The Separatist Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth, in 1620, were confronted with a new problem, namely, that of creating a civil government for themselves. Their solution was simple; they made their church their government, and in so doing, they unconsciously created a much more rigid theory of a church state than that which they had so bitterly hated in England and one which was to prove hospitable to all the evils of such a system—intolerance, bigotry and injustice. Nevertheless, we must not forget that the compact signed in the Mayflower's cabin outlined practically the first pure democracy in the world and that it contained within itself the germs of the coming American republic. For a hundred years the history of Congregationalism is the history of New England.

What was an efficient type of self-government for 102 Pilgrims proved an adequate system as well to the thousands of English colonists who came in during the seventeenth century. The Puritan emigrants who came to Salem, Boston and elsewhere in great numbers, driven out by the persecutions of Archbishop Laud under James the First and Charles the First, did not originally intend to separate from the Church of England. But in a new land, away from all ecclesiastical establishments, and under the influence of the Plymouth settlers, they became independent congregations—first of necessity, then of conviction and choice—and established fellowship with the Plymouth church. Thus after nearly a generation Puritans and Separatists (the Pilgrims) became reunited in New England, and the result is the beginning of Congregationalism proper in America.

Beside its system of government, certain other important features characterized early New England Congregationalism. One was the educational ideal, another the missionary spirit, a third the reforming temperament.

Churches depending on careful interpretation of the Bible demanded carefully trained Bible students as leaders, and colleges for this purpose were essential features of the Congregational plan. Harvard was founded in 1636, Yale in 1701. This ideal has ever since marked all Congregational work and progress. Congregationalists have founded altogether in the United States forty-five colleges, eight theological seminaries and innumerable lesser schools. This principle was applied in the vigorous work prosecuted for the negroes before and after the Civil war by the American Missionary Association. It was the main purpose of the New West Education Commission organized to help pioneer towns in the far west. It has been recognized so thoroughly in the work of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions that this organization alone is responsible for one hundred and thirteen colleges and high schools, thirteen theological seminaries and over twelve hundred lesser schools in all parts of the world. Further, the New England ideal of self-government depended for its best success upon developing intelligent individuals, so school education for everyone was provided. Out of this grew later the American common-school system.

The missionary spirit of the New England churches found its most notable embodiment in the work of John Eliot for the Indians. He translated the Bible for them in 1671 and by 1675 there were six Indian churches with four thousand converts. During the next century the missionary spirit was dampened by the controversial and doctrinal questions growing out of the great awakening under Jonathan Edwards and Whitfield, 1734 to 1750, but by the end of the century, when the excitement caused by the Revolution had subsided, Congregationalism entered upon a new period of expansion. After 1791 revival work again became prominent with results that far surpassed the Edwardian period. Meanwhile new settlements were growing up in Vermont, New York and across the Alleghanies. These called forth a new exercise of missionary spirit. Societies were formed for this purpose in 1798, 1800 and 1809. The year 1810 saw also the organization of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. As time went on new needs were always provided for by new organizations, whether for work among negroes, Indians and Eskimos or for building churches and schools in frontier towns.

The reform temperament found ample opportunity for its expression during colonial times. In the war of Revolution and the events leading thereto it established itself forever as one of the powerful influences of American life. It is in the years following, however, that we find it appearing vigorously in Congregational churches, now as anti-slavery or even abolition movements, and now as temperance propaganda. Later on, in Knox county, we shall find the Congregational churches of Knox county worthily living up to their traditions, in temperance agitation, in the underground railway and, in recent times, as public spirited law enforcement and thoroughgoing opposition to the low and corrupt ideals of citizenship all too influential in political life and city government.

THE PLAN OF UNION

During the early years of the nineteenth century the rapid growth of population and prosperity drew out a corresponding missionary zeal from some of the older established religious bodies. The relations of Congregationalists and Presbyterians during this period are especially interesting for the light they throw on the early church history of Galesburg and Knox county. In all the home missionary enterprises in the newly settled regions of New York, Ohio and the middle states after 1800, the Congregationalists found themselves working hand in hand with the Presbyterians in friendly and mutual understanding. As a result the "plan of union" of 1801 was drawn up to promote the mutual forbearance and co-operation of the two denominations in all new communities. It was a wholly honorable arrangement, designed to be fair to both parties. Each sacrificed important features of their polities in order that the individual churches affected might freely associate with the nearest Presbyterian or Congregational ecclesiastical body, as their local circumstances might make desirable.

In its actual workings, however, the plan operated in favor of the Presbyterians. Their organization was better adapted to progressive work. New presbyteries were soon formed in all the missionary districts, but the new Congregational churches, left to themselves, instead of fellowshipping together, allied themselves with these presbyteries under the plan of union and in due time were absorbed into the Presbyterian body. In this way, according to an estimate of one Presbyterian historian, over two thousand churches originally Congregational became Presbyterian between 1815 and 1850. The plan of union was abandoned by the "old style" wing of the Presbyterian church in 1837, and in 1852 by the Congregationalists.

We shall see how the history of the First church of Galesburg is affected by this plan of union.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES IN KNOX COUNTY

Nothing in the history of Knox county better illustrates the great forces at work in American history than the founding of Galesburg by the famous band of colonists in 1836, fully described elsewhere in this volume. The history of Congregationalism in Knox county begins, paradoxically enough, with a Presbyterian church. The gradual transformation of this Presbyterian church into a Congregational church will appear as the story of the church unfolds itself.

Those who settled Galesburg came from Oneida county, New York, from a presbytery composed partly of Congregational churches, under the plan of union. The new Galesburg church had 81 original members, of whom 63 came by letter. Of these 35 brought letters from Presbyterian and 25 from Congregational churches. The church established relations under the plan of union with the nearest ecclesiastical body, which was the Schuyler presbytery. Upon its organization, February 25, 1837, it adopted as its name the First Presbyterian church of Galesburg. As a church it was an integral part of the plan of the original founders, which was to establish a Christian community, a Christian church and a Christian college. While there was a strong Congregational element in its membership, the Presbyterians predominated. Certain it is that at that time there was no denominational feeling or ambition, for all such possibilities were swallowed up in the intense and earnest common purpose. The Rev. George W. Gale, the leading spirit in the whole project and a Presbyterian, was its first pastor. It is evident from all the testimony that the church at its origin cared less for denominational forms and names than for religion and morals and for the work of education and reform. It can easily be understood that the Congregationalists would feel themselves thoroughly at home both by training and disposition in any pioneer work, in helping to found a college or in planning the prosecution of any reform. The best ideals of both Presbyterianism and Congregationalism went into the first years of this community. Nevertheless it was inevitable that the denominational consciousness, which was rapidly developing in the outside world, should naturally find reflection after a time in the life of the Galesburg church. In all parts of the country the plan of union was becoming unworkable. After 1837 the old school wing of the Presbyterian church, in America, had little sympathy with any rights claimed under the plan. Meanwhile the Congregational element in the Galesburg church increased in numbers and influence. In 1845, to meet their preferences, a compromise was adopted after amicable discussion, giving the church a double ecclesiastical connection both with the Congregational association and with the presbytery. In May, 1849, members of both persuasions were given equal rights according to the usage of their own denominations. This compromise did not prove satisfactory, so on May 29, 1851, thirty-seven of the Presbyterian members withdrew and formed the "Second Presbyterian church," followed later by eleven others. More Congregationalists came in. In the meantime the slavery question was assuming greater importance, and many Presbyterians became Congregationalists on this account, for the Presbyterian connection, because of its large southern relationship, was tolerant to slavery. The Galesburg Congregationalists, as elsewhere, were vigorously anti-slavery, and the unwillingness of the Peoria presbytery to modify its attitude toward the slavery question after several requests caused the church on October 6, 1855, formally to dissolve its connection with the presbytery. A year later, October 8, 1856, the name Presbyterian was dropped and the title "First Church of Christ in Galesburg" adopted. The fellowship established with the Congregational association in 1845 was maintained, and thus the church, though still independent, became practically Congregational. As an autonomous, self-governing congregation, bound together by covenant and acknowledging the obligations of fellowship with other similar churches, it faithfully perpetuated the Separatist principles of two hundred and fifty years before.

With this preliminary explanation, the spiritual history of the church is now given from the beginning.

The history of the "First Church of Christ" differs from that of most pioneer churches in several particulars. It passed through no period of infantile growth, but sprang into existence at once, strong and well disciplined, with efficient men and women to labor and pray for its success, and experienced officers to guide its affairs. Instead of receiving aid, it has always ministered to others, now and again sending forth of its strength to build upon other foundations, thus becoming the "mother of churches." Its relations with Knox College have been intimate, and it has received permanent benefit from the labors of presidents and professors and the youthful zeal of students.

The founding of this church was embraced in the same plan which gave origin to Galesburg and Knox College, and a detailed account of the whole movement will be found in its appropriate place in this volume.

In the fall of 1836 more than thirty families were located in cabins on the south side of Henderson grove, awaiting the approach of spring, when they were to begin in earnest the erection of buildings and the opening of farms. These families were homogeneous in their character, partaking of the spirit, as they sprang from the blood, of the Pilgrim fathers of New England. They loved the Bible, the Sabbath and the sanctuary. They cherished, with slight or no variation, the same views of gospel truth and felt, as their fathers felt, the importance of transmitting the institutions of religion to those who should come after them as the richest inheritance they could leave.

Nor were they, the first winter, without the manifest presence of the holy spirit. Rev. John T. Avery, visiting his friends in their new home, spent several weeks aiding the officiating pastor. The way for the organization of a church being thus prepared, the professors of religion met at the schoolhouse in Henderson grove February 15, 1837. The ministers present were Rev. John Waters, who presided, and Rev. Geo. W. Gale. It was resolved: First, "That it is expedient, as soon as practicable, to form a church in this place"; and, second, "to hear each give an account of his or her hope." February 15th, 17th, 21st and 25th were spent in this way, and, when completed, a confession of faith and covenant were unanimously approved. Rev. Mr. Noel of Knoxville was also present, he having been appointed by the presbytery of Schuyler to assist in its formation. Sunday, February 26th, the confession of faith and covenant were adopted, and the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper were administered. April 5th it was unanimously resolved "that it is expedient to organize the church fully as Presbyterian and to choose three elders and two deacons." Nehemiah West, Nehemiah H. Losey and John Kendall were chosen elders and Thomas Simmons and Abel Goodell deacons. April 9th these were all installed in office, and the church was declared organized by the name of the Presbyterian church of Galesburg. Rev. Geo. W. Gale reported to the church, April 25th, that it had been received under the care of the presbytery of Schuyler. Thus the church began with eighty-one members, sixty-three having presented letters and eighteen uniting on profession of faith.

During the summer of 1837 meetings in the village were held in the schoolhouse, which stood on the north side of Ferris street, between Broad and Cherry, till December, 1838, when the academy building was used till the erection of the church, in which the first service was held June 21st, 1846. This building was in constant use until 1894, when it was torn down to make way for the present building, which was begun in 1895 and dedicated in 1898.

In all this time, from 1837 to 1898, there were various withdrawals of groups of members to form other churches. Besides the separation of the Presbyterians in 1851 there was an amicable understanding in 1855 by which another Congregational church was formed. Thirty-five members withdrew and established the "First Congregational church in Galesburg;" during the next few years eighty-two other members from the mother church followed them. The principal motive seems to have been the feeling that the parent church was too large and that two churches could accomplish more than one. The new organization soon acquired an individuality of its own, and, for the forty years of its independent existence, the personality of its pastors and the public spirit and influence of its members gave it a large part in the religious life of the city.

In 1856 the "Brick church" on Broad street, between Simmons and Tompkins, was built. The first pastor was the Rev. Edward Beecher, D. D., after whom the building has since been named. The great storm of May, 1858, blew over the tall spire, which practically destroyed the building. To aid in the reconstruction, Henry Ward Beecher, brother of the pastor, lectured in Galesburg, donating the proceeds to the church. The parsonage on the corner of Broad and North streets was given the church by Mrs. Henry Hitchcock. For nearly forty years these two churches, the "Brick church" and the "Old First" worked side by side, but by 1894 the time seemed ripe for reunion. The Reverend H. A. Bushnell, the last pastor of the "Brick church," resigned, and the two churches reunited on January 1, 1895, as "the Central Congregational church of Galesburg." To the united membership the "Brick church" gave 350 members, the "Old" church 476, a total of 826. Rev. A. F. Sherrill, D. D., who had been pastor of the "Old First" church, continued as pastor of the new reunited Central church. The large and impressive building which had been planned as a part of the reunion was dedicated December 4, 1898, and still stands as an appropriate symbol of the history of the church it shelters. Of the various buildings acquired during these sixty years the parsonage of the "Brick church" was taken over by the Central church and is still in active use. Beecher chapel passed into the hands of Knox College, where it receives constant use in term time, both as a chapel for the college students and to accommodate a part of the work of the Knox Conservatory of Music. A large wooden chapel which had been built just west of the original great wooden church in 1851 was not torn down in 1894, but was moved out to the east part of the city, where it became the home of the newly organized East Main Street church until December, 1910. In 1911, having outlived its usefulness, it was torn down.

The original church building on the square, that was destroyed in 1894, played many roles in the life of the city during its existence, but none more interesting than that as protector and guardian spirit of the "underground railroad." The steeple was often used as a hiding place for negroes and the great auditorium often rang with the denunciations of the fugitive slave law, the Missouri compromise, the Dred Scott decision, and of everything connected with the slave system.

The temporary bitterness accompanying the separation of these two branches

Of the various buildings acquired during these sixty years the parsonage of the "Brick church" was taken over by the Central church and is still in active use. Beecher chapel passed into the hands of Knox College, where it receives constant use in term time, both as a chapel for the college students and to accommodate a part of the work of the Knox Conservatory of Music. A large wooden chapel which had been built just west of the original great wooden church in 1851 was not torn down in 1894, but was moved out to the east part of the city, where it became the home of the newly organized East Main Street church until December, 1910. In 1911, having outlived its usefulness, it was torn down.

The original church building on the square, that was destroyed in 1894, played many roles in the life of the city during its existence, but none more interesting than that as protector and guardian spirit of the "underground railroad." The steeple was often used as a hiding place for negroes and the great auditorium often rang with the denunciations of the fugitive slave law, the Missouri compromise, the Dred Scott decision, and of everything connected with the slave system.

The temporary bitterness accompanying the separation of these two branches

CENTRAL CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Located on Central Park Square, corner of South Broad Street. Erected in 1898. Value, $100,000. Society organized in 1895 by union of First Church, which was organized in 1837, and First Congregational Church, organized in 1855.

of Congregationalists was far exceeded by the acrimony that soon after developed in the great controversy between the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists concerning their respective rights in Knox College. From the calm atmosphere of fifty years later, this trouble reminds one of the apostolic discussion between James and John as to which should sit on the right hand and which on the left. The original liberal and broad-minded intention of the founders came safely through the strife; the college was originally intended to be non-sectarian, and is non-sectarian today. Today Presbyterians and Congregationalists alike are interested to preserve the intention of the founders with the liberal spirit of the founders. Nevertheless while the controversy lasted, it was very real and very important to those concerned; it could not well be otherwise when such powerful personalities as Jonathan Blanchard, Edward Beecher and George W. Gale, not to speak of others, were involved.

In 1898, Rev. C. A. Vincent, D. D., was called to become the pastor of Central church. Under his aggressive leadership the church developed in strength and the balance of the debt upon its great new building was cleared off. During the year 1907, as a result of the Gipsy Smith and the W. A. Sunday revival campaigns, 410 were added to the church. He was followed by the Rev. J. Percival Huget, D. D., who came in 1907, and remained three years adding by his strong and eloquent preaching and organizing activities much strength to the church. The membership, January 1, 1912, was 1,293, and there were 850 enrolled in the Sunday school. The present pastor is the Rev. C. E. McKinley, who took up the work in September, 1911.

OTHER GALESBURG CHURCHES

In 1858, a mission Sunday school was established in the southeast part of the town by an organization, which in time came to represent all the Protestant churches of Galesburg. In 1894, there grew out of this mission revival services in the eastern part of the city in charge of the Rev. W. H. Wannamaker, an evangelist. The result of this movement was the organization of two new Congregational churches, the Knox Street church, on the corner of Day and Knox streets, organized in August, 1894, with 22 members; and the Union Congregational church, organized August 8, 1894, with 36 members. A new building was planned for the Knox Street church and dedicated June 24, 1895. To the Union Congregational church was given the old chapel of the "Old First" which was moved to a lot near the corner of East Main and Phillips streets. The church, upon entering this building took the name of "The East Main Street Congregational church." The project of establishing at the same time two new churches proved to be a little too ambitious. The Knox Street church worked along for thirteen years with gradually declining fortunes and in 1907, the building was sold to the United Brethren, who have since conducted a church there. The East Main Street church had a fairly prosperous history only for a few years. Its fortune also seemed to be declining, but in 1903, it took a new grip on its field, and has since grown strong enough, not only to become self-supporting, but to build an adequate and permanent new building on the corner of Whitesboro and East Main streets at a cost of about $25,000. This building was dedicated December 11, 1910.

CHURCHES OUTSIDE OF GALESBURG

The growth of Congregationalism outside of Galesburg was determined at first by the development of new settlements. When the railroad came through, settlements grew up along its line at Wataga, Oneida and Altona, and Congregational churches soon after appeared in each of these places. In two cases churches, established under other auspices, became Congregational, because they found the simple Congregational procedure involving autonomy, covenant and fellowship more satisfactory. Thus the Victoria church, originally Presbyterian, became Congregational, as well as the old and influential Cumberland Presbyterian church near Abingdon.

In later years, Congregationalism in Knox county has been affected by the process of change taking place throughout the Congregational denomination by which attempts have been made to make more efficient the machinery for gaining their common object. The "fellowship" that was sufficient for pioneer days has discovered in the complications of modern life the need of dependence upon something more systematic than voluntary co-operation. The churches of Knox county are affiliated by fellowship with the Central West association of Congregational churches including the churches of Knox, Fulton, Peoria, Marshall, Stark and Mercer counties and also to the general state conference of Illinois. Both these organizations have within two years adopted new forms of government, which, while they preserve carefully the original Congregational ideas, provide a new and improved centralization of power designed to be of better help to the weaker churches, and a more successful means for prosecuting the great common missionary enterprises.

BRIEF HISTORIES OF INDIVIDUAL CHURCHES

ONTARIO AND ONEIDA

The settlers of Ontario township began to come in soon after the arrival of the settlers in Knox county. They came from the same region—Oneida county, New York—and brought with them the same ideals concerning religion, education, temperance and slavery. Among these settlers were the Williamses, Nelsons, Wetmores, Cranes, Chapmans, Camps, Hollisters, Savages, Moshers and Powells. Congregational churches were founded by them in two places, Ontario and Oneida.

The earliest center of common activity was in the southwest corner of the township where the Camp schoolhouse was built in 1839, in which religious services were held from the first. Here was organized the Ontario church, on August 12, 1848, with seventeen members and the Rev. D. Todd as first pastor. A building was erected in 1851, on the northeast corner of section 31, near the school. In more recent years a parsonage was added. This church has the distinction of being the first strictly Congregational church in Knox county, for the Galesburg church was still nominally Presbyterian. On January 1, 1912, the membership of this church was 83 and there were 54 in the Sunday school. The Ontario settlement also has the honor of having been an active station on the line of the "underground railway," two of the Congregational members, C. F. Camp and Howard Powell being active in this work.

The other center in Ontario township was developed by the coming of the railroad in 1854 in the southeast corner of the township, at Oneida, and there a church was organized December 22, 1855, with twenty-one members. Prominent among them were Deacon and Mrs. Ferris, Mr. and Mrs. William Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. Cornish, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Child, Lewis and Mary Burt, and A. R. and E. C. St. John. Not until February, 1858, after three years of self-sacrificing toil, did the Congregationalists dedicate their own building. Congregational fellowship was well illustrated on that occasion by the presence of many from the Ontario church and of Dr. Edward Beecher and President Blanchard from the Galesburg churches. The first regular pastor was Rev. C. H. Abernethy. This church was very active in anti-slavery work and has always been a strong influence in temperance reform. Its membership on January 1, 1912, was 127 and there were 100 in the Sunday school.

WATAGA

Wataga was another settlement that grew up rapidly as the result of the railroad coming, and here also a church was organized the following year, on June 10, 1855. The first meeting was appropriately held in the new station, and the church thereafter worshipped in the school house till 1860, when a building was erected. To this a parsonage was added in 1876. The ten original members were A. P. Babcock, Wm. S. Farnham, Mrs. Maria Farnham, Mrs. C. F. Farnsworth, Benjamin Gardner, Mrs. Abigail Gardner, Sarah Gardner, Mrs. Minerva Holyoke, Chas. W. Rhodes, Mrs. Jane Rhodes. Of these A. P. Babcock in later years as missionary for the Knox county Sunday school association and agent for the American Bible society did a remarkable and influential work of personal visitation throughout the county. The present membership of the church is 51, and it has a Sunday school of 52.

VICTORIA

The Victoria church was originally organized as a Presbyterian church in May, 1841, the village having had an early growth by reason of its situation on the main post route to Chicago; but in April, 1849, the church became identified with the Congregational fellowship and for over fifty years had a flourishing history. A good building was erected in 1852 and later a parsonage. At the present time, however, although these buildings remain, the activity of the church has ceased.

ALTONA

The coming of the railroad is also responsible indirectly for the church at Altona, which was organized February 21, 1857, with nine members, under the leadership of the Rev. A. Root. A building was erected in 1866 and sometime later a parsonage. Of the whole organization the parsonage alone remains. The church has not been active for some time.

RIO

The Rio Congregational church was organized in 1871 and its building was dedicated in 1873. At the present time it has a co-operative arrangement with the Methodist church, interesting as an illustration of practical harmony in Christian work, under which a union Sunday school and a common pastor are maintained. January 1, 1912, the church had 105 members and there were 140 in the union Sunday school.

ABINGDON

The Abingdon church has a continuous history longer than that of any existing Congregational church in Knox county. That history has not been continuously Congregational, however, for only since 1881 has it been affiliated with the Congregational fellowship. It originated as a Cumberland Presbyterian church in 1834 or 1835 with fifteen members. Not long after a house of worship was erected about one and one-half miles northwest of Abingdon, said to be the first church building in the county. In 1866 the congregation moved to Abingdon and built a new church there. In 1881 the members voluntarily decided to transfer their connection to the Congregational body, since which time the church has well perpetuated the high ideals and influential plans of its founders. On January 1, 1912, there were 248 members and 127 in the Sunday school.

DELONG

The present Delong church came into existence in 1894 as the result of services held by the Rev. A. W. Depew, then pastor of the Abingdon church. An attractive building was erected in 1903. There was on January 1, 1912, a membership of 103 and a Sunday school of 60.

Altogether in the whole county there was, on January 1, 1912, a Congregational church membership of 2,218 and a Sunday school membership of 1,648.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

By S. A. Wagoner

I. Historical. 1. Methodism began in the second quarter of the eighteenth century (1739) in England, as a revival within the Established church (Episcopal), under John Wesley, preacher, founder, statesman; Chas. Wesley, hymn writer; John Fletcher, theological and controversial writer, and George Whitefield, brilliant pulpit orator. These were university men. And though ordained ministers of the English church they were soon denied the pulpits of the church. Hence followed the famous field-preaching, when as many as 20,000 people often heard Wesley and Whitefield. There early developed a new and remarkable agency of "lay-preachers" and workers, whose example has been followed in latter evangelism by such illustrious laymen as Mr. Moody and Mr. Sunday and great numbers of Young Men's Christian association workers. The groups resulting from this movement were not called churches, but "societies," for they were still in the English church, and their houses were called chapels. The first Methodist chapel in the world was built in Bristol, England, in 1739.

The first Wesleyan "conference" held in the world was in Foundry chapel, London, in 1744, with ten ministers present, four of whom were lay-preachers.

2. Agencies started by Methodism in England.
   1. The Naval and Military Bible society. (First British Bible society.)
   2. First Tract society.
   3. First dispensary in the world (at the old Foundry).
   4. Strangers' Friend society.
   5. A Sunday school in High Wycombe, fourteen years before Robert Raikes.
   6. London Missionary society.
   7. The class meeting.
   8. The itinerancy.
   9. Publishing business.
   10. Schools.
   11. Lay preaching.
   12. Open air preaching.

Mr. Wesley did not organize a new church in England, but remained in the Established church. He aided in founding the Methodist Episcopal church in America.

3. In America. The first Wesleyan preaching in America was in Georgia in 1735, by Mr. Wesley.

The first church was built in 1768 in New York.

The first "annual conference" was held in 1773 in Philadelphia.

The church as a separate body was organized at the Christmas conference in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1784.

The first delegated general conference was held in 1812 in New York city, with 88 delegates. There were then 688 preachers and 184,567 members.

Methodism has now spread to all continents and chief divisions of the world, being firmly planted in the United States, England, Canada, Australia, India, China, Japan, etc.

II. Doctrinal. Mr. Wesley said, "Life is more than dogma." Methodism was a revival of both life and doctrine. It preached no new doctrine, but emphasized cardinal doctrines long neglected. It correlated these and came to be, as it still is, the chief representative of the school of the theology and Christian philosophy which has come to be the general ground of Christendom.

Mr. Wesley said, "Our main doctrines, which include all the rest, are repentance, faith and holiness."

The doctrinal controversy of the eighteenth century was between two schools —one standing for the "five points"—total depravity, particular election, partial redemption, effectual calling, infallible perseverance. Methodism presented her five points: 1. All men are sinners. 2. All men are redeemed. 3. All men are called. 4. As many as obey the call are chosen. 5. Of those chosen as many as endure to the end shall be saved.

Emphasis was laid upon the universality of the atonement and the witness of the spirit.

III. Government. It is representative, under a constitution. Its highest authority is in a delegated "general conference" composed of an equal number of ministerial and lay delegates elected respectively by ministers and laymen.

This conference meets every four years, is the law-making body and combines in itself legislative, judicial and executive functions; and while it establishes certain church courts and is an appellate court it is not a court of original jurisdiction.

The governing body of the local church is the "quarterly conference." It consists of trustees, stewards, class leaders, Sunday school superintendents and presidents of brotherhood, aid society and Epworth league. All these are elected by the laymen. Stewards and class leaders are nominated by the pastor. Women are electors and are eligible to all these offices and to the general conference.

Its Ministers. All ministers get their first authorization from the quarterly conference (laymen) and their nomination to the annual conference (ministers), by whom they are examined as to doctrines, etc., and by whom they are ordained and authorized. Bishops are general superintendents elected by the general conference and may be retired by that body. They do not give to the church any laws or rules; they administer certain affairs under the constitution and laws. District superintendents administer under the laws within a "district" embracing 20 to 60 pastoral charges.

Usages. The itinerancy is the plan by which ministerial appointments are made and ministerial exchanges effected in a regular and timely manner, so that no effective minister shall be without a parish and no church without a pastor.

Estimates by non-Methodists.

Green, historian: "The Methodists themselves were the least result of the Methodist revival."

Lecky, historian: "Wesley has had a wider constructive influence in the sphere of religion than any man since the 16th century; and has exercised a powerful influence on the political history of England."

Goldwin Smith: "Against the disintegrating tendencies of the 18th century the religious crusade of John Wesley was among the strongest defensive forces."

Dean Stanley: "The Methodist movement has moulded the spiritual character of the English-speaking protestantism of the world."

Dr. Chalmers: "Methodism is Christianity in earnest."

IV. Genius of Methodism. The outstanding facts are these:

1. The uprising and development of lay influence. Hitherto in the English churches laymen had not exercised spiritual functions. The Wesleyan movement called laymen into service—class leaders, stewards, exhorters, local preachers. The talents of Christian women also were brought into use. In both England and America the foundations were laid largely by lay-preachers. Its genius is not an aristocracy but a democracy.

2. The simplicity of its doctrinal requirements for membership. Wesley said: "Is a man a believer in Jesus Christ, and is his life suitable to his profession, are the sole inquiries I make." The general rules declare, "There is only one condition previously required of those seeking admission to our societies—A desire to flee from the wrath to come and be saved from their sins."

3. Confident testimony to present salvation. Few, even among the clergy, had claimed such experience or declared the doctrine of Christian assurance.

4. Catholicity. This is evidenced by the simplicity and inclusiveness of its doctrine; its generous spirit toward all communions that honor Christ; the readiness with which its members pass into all other evangelical churches; and the fact that the trend of religious thought and philosophy of the modern world is toward Arminian theology and Wesleyan interpretation.

The first that is known of Methodism in Knox county seems to have been in 1834, when Peter Cartwright held a camp meeting within the boundaries of the county. In his autobiography, Cartwright himself relates the following incident:

"In the course of this year, 1834, we had a camp meeting in Knox county, Henderson river mission. There was a goodly number tented, and a fine turn out of people, for the number of settlers in this new and rising country. Our encampment was pitched in a beautiful little grove on an eminence, surrounded by prairie on every hand.

"There was in this settlement an interesting and intelligent family from one of the eastern states. The younger members of the family consisted of several young men and young ladies. The young people liked the Methodists, and were deeply convicted; the old people particularly the old lady, were very much opposed to them. Living, as they did close to the camp ground, they put their Yankee ingenuity to work to keep their children away from the meeting; but finding they could not accomplish it, they at once determined to pitch their tent on the camp ground, and they thought they would have a better opportunity to watch the children, and counteract any influence we might exert upon them. They pretended to be very friendly, to save appearances. The old lady, for the purpose of disarming me, treated me very kindly, and invited me to eat with them, which I did. In the meantime one of the daughters, who was deeply convicted, told me all about her mother's opposition to the Methodists, and her schemes to prevent her children from being influenced to become religious.

"One Saturday evening I invited the seekers of religion to come forward to the altar for the prayers of the church. Two of her daughters came forward and knelt in prayer. A young sister, almost as much opposed to the Methodists as her mother, went into the altar with a phial of hartshorn, and while her two sisters were trying to pray she slipped the hartshorn to their nose, in order to drive them up and prevent their seeking religion. I very soon detected her in her operations, and took hold of her hand, wrenched the phial from her, led her out of the altar, and told her if I caught her in there any more on such business, I would pitch her out and publicly expose her.

"While I was talking to and praying with these two young ladies and others, I saw the old lady, their mother, come and take her seat outside of the altar, immediately opposite her daughters, and if at any time she thought I was not watching her, she would kick them in their sides to drive them up. I watched her very closely, and when in the act of kicking them, I took hold of her foot and gave her a strong push backward, and over she tumbled among the benches. Being a large corpulent woman, she had some considerable tussel to right herself again. So in this way I defeated the scheme of the devil once more. The girls became very much engaged, but while there were many still pressing to the altar, and my attention for the moment was called off, the old lady contrived to get them out of the altar into the tent. As soon as I discovered what was done, I gathered two or three good singers and praying persons, and followed them into the tent, and commenced singing; I then gave them an exhortation; then said 'Let us pray,' and called on the father of the girls to pray for his children, but he refused; I then called on their mother to kneel down and pray for her children, and she refused. In the meantime two of the boys, as well as the two girls, became very much affected, and cried for mercy; and presently the third daughter, that had used the hartshorn in the altar, got awfully convicted, and begged all present to pray for her, or she would be lost and damned forever. This was too much for the old people; they became awfully alarmed, and wept bitterly; and you may be sure the whole tent was in a mighty uproar. The singing, praying, and exhortations were kept up nearly all night. Four of the family were powerfully converted, and the sectarian devil in the old father and mother was affectfully disarmed, and from that blessed night they became a religious family; all joined the Methodist church, and, as far as I know, walked worthy of their high vocation. May they all prove faithful till death, and then receive a crown of life."

was appointed presiding elder for four years of the Quincy district, which consisted of the following appointments: Pittsfield, Quincy circuit, Quincy mission, Rushville station, Rushville circuit, Canton, Ft. Edwards mission, Henderson River mission and Knoxville mission included the counties of Knox and Warren and part of Fulton. In 1867 permanent camp grounds were located at Gilson, and for forty-three years annual camp meetings were held there, many of the great preachers of the denomination taking part from time to time. When in 1910 the meetings were discontinued and the property given to Hedding College.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ABINGDON, ILL.

The first white settler in Cherry Grove was Hiram Palmer, Methodist local preacher, who came here in 1828 and lived alone until A. D. Swartz and Asel W. Dorsey came in the following year. The first Methodist preaching was done by this Hiram Palmer at the home of A. D. Swartz, in the winter of 1829-1830. He formed a small class composed of A. D. Swartz and wife and Hiram Palmer and wife. The first traveling preacher sent here was Thomas Mills, sent out by the Illinois conference. He had a large circuit, in which Abingdon was included. The preaching service was maintained for eight years at the home of A. D. Swartz, after which the first church was built, in 1846. In 1867 the first church building was torn down and another built. The pastor at that time was Rev. D. H. Gray. The members of the quarterly conference at that time were Revs. M. E. Springer, D. T. Wilson, Wm. Harvey. Local preachers—Henry King, I. B. Howards, John Dickinson. Stewards—Geo. Bassett, P. M. Shoop, S. M. Lewis, M. Mowrey, Henry Sullivan, Wm. Latimer. Class leaders—C. W. C. Duffield, O. P. Swartz, John Wood, Mr. Earlel, Rev. M. E. Springer, S. Johnson. Trustees—James Best, president; Rev. M. E. Springer, treasurer; M. L. Brown, secretary; John E. Chesney, Jason Moore and Wm. Pratt. James Sebree was Sunday school superintendent. The present edifice was erected on the site of the Second church, corner of Latimer and Washington streets, in 1898; Rev. R. E. Buckey, pastor. The cornerstone was laid Thursday, June 16th.

ALTONA

The Methodist Episcopal church in Altona (original name Walnut grove) was organized August 14th, 1853, by Rev. J. B. Quincy, who was then traveling Henderson circuit. There were thirteen members received and organized, as follows: James Howey and wife, E. B. Main, wife and son, Delos S. Main, Jacob Terwilliger and wife, Benjamin Logan and wife, S. L. Butler and wife, Mrs. Cochran and Mary Leter.

James Howey was appointed class leader and E. B. Main and Benjamin Logan elected stewards. In 1853 Altona was connected with the Victoria circuit and served in turn by Revs. A. D. McCool, D. A. Falkenberg, Wm. J. Smith, C. A. Stine, W. P. Graves, U. J. Giddings, J. Kerns, J. Matthews and J. D. Smith.

In 1867 Altona was made a separate pastorate and Rev. E. Ransom appointed pastor. The first place of public worship used by the Altona Methodists was a schoolhouse which was only 16x20 feet in size standing on what is now the northeast corner of Main and Depot streets. The present church building was erected in 1857 at a cost of $3,500, being the first building erected for public worship in the village. In 1867 on becoming a distinct pastoral charge the parsonage was built at a cost of $2,300

The Sunday school was organized in the spring of 1855, E. B. Main as superintendent. Recent pastors of the church have been Revs. W. S. Welsh, A. P. Robson, A. M. Bowlin, J. W. Ferris, C. A. Wright, G. H. McCrea, A. E. Rowson. The present pastor is Rev. G. H. Smith. During Rev. J. W. Ferris' ministry the church was remodeled and is now a very beautiful and commodious building. Attached to this circuit is the Nekoma Methodist Episcopal church, where services are held each Sunday afternoon.

The work continues to prosper, and good is being accomplished by Methodism in the town.

DAHINDA

The Dahinda Methodist church came into being under the leadership of Miss Hattie Sargent (now deceased), who agitated the matter and made a beginning of a subscription list, which others carried to a successful issue. This was in December, 1903. The church was built and dedicated November, 1904. Franklin Rist was its first pastor and had much to do with getting the society organized.

HENDERSON

The Methodist church of Henderson was erected in 1874. The date of the formation of the society is not known, but it must have been some time in the sixties. It is a significant fact that the ground on which the building stands is the site of the old Buzzard's Nest, a notorious tavern and saloon of early days. How appropriate that the house of God should be erected where once stood the house of sin. The coming of the church has indeed caused the decline of the saloon rule, until the latter had to go.

The most far-reaching movement in Henderson of recent years was the great revival conducted by the Reverend George Hinds in the year of 1906. The entire religious and moral sentiment of the community was changed and the churches gained many staunch supporters.

Henderson was originally part of the Wataga charge, but has for several years past been connected with Rio. Among its former pastors are some of the leading men of the conference—W. H. Witter, N. T. Allen, S. P. James, A. M. Stocking, S. P. Archer, C. F. W. Smith, H. B. Gough and many others. Of recent years the pastors have been Charles Van Dettum, Evens Worthley, George Hinds, H. B. Green, J. D. Payne, I. E. Moats.

LOUISVILLE

Mr. J. W. Stephens furnishes the following statement in regard to the Louisville Methodist church, which formerly stood upon the Abingdon road about half way from Galesburg to Abingdon.

The building was 30x40 feet, with walls 14 feet high. The roof was quite flat, probably not more than one-eighth pitch. It had four windows on each side, but none at the ends. It was built by Reuben Castle in 1842, and he received for his labor and the material which he put into it $150. Every piece of dimension stuff that was in the building was hewn out of oak. It stood on blocks that raised the building quite high from the ground. The frame was covered with oak siding and it stood two years without being plastered. It is not known what was paid for the plastering.

In 1878 the little church known as Warren chapel was built, at which time the Louisville church was abandoned as a house of worship. It was given to Rev. R. Kinney, and he occupied it about five years as a residence. Then Mr. J. W. Stephens purchased the ground and the church which stood upon it. It was sold to Mr. McConchie in 1889. He demolished the building and put the material into a barn in Warren county in the neighborhood of what is known as the Reynolds district.

Mr. Stephens saw the building as it was being torn down and speaks of the structure as exceedingly well built and thoroughly pinned together with wooden pins. During the time when it was used as a church Mr. Stephens says that the sheep that were running at large used to go under the building and stay there during their resting time and the hottest parts of the day.

MAQUON

The village of Maquon was forty years old before the Christian influence was strong enough to establish a church. During that time many fruitless efforts had been made by different faiths in that direction. During the first twenty years of the history of the town it was not considered a suitable place for a church, as the church members were few and poor.

The first preaching in the Maquon settlement was in a log cabin just outside the corporate limits, that stood in the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 4. The cabin was built by Mr. Dolph and owned at the time by William McGowen, one of the original proprietors of the town. This was in 1825. The name of the preacher was Parnach Owen, who was a Presbyterian in faith. He came here as a surveyor and laid out the town. The first Methodist preaching was in the same cabin about 1838.

Rev. Rufus Miles was the first minister who held regular preaching services at Maquon. He was a Presbyterian. In 1841 or 1842 Mr. Maddox erected a building for the purpose of putting in machinery for carding wool. It stood on the west side of the public square, a little south of the center. The first special service held by the Methodist was in this building and was conducted by that old pioneer of Methodism, Rev. Stephen Beggs. He was assisted by Henry Summers, William Clark and Rev. Plummer. The first Methodist class was organized at the close of this meeting. The appointment was put on the Knoxville circuit and Maquon had regular preaching for some time. "The old brick schoolhouse" was erected in 1848 and became the place for holding all religious meetings for many years.

In 1859 spiritualism was introduced and soon became the rage. It affected the community to an alarming extent. Seances were held nightly and the whole community was much disturbed. Preaching services were practically broken up. This state of things lasted for a number of years.

Preaching was supplied from Knoxville for a number of years in an irregular way. In the winters of 1861-2 a United Brethren preacher by the name of Wilmette held a series of meetings in the schoolhouse and had about thirty conversions. An effort was made at that time to build a church. A subscription amounting to $1,500 was gotten up, but for some reason they did not succeed in building. The field was not properly cultivated, and most of the converts drifted back. In 1866 the old schoolhouse was for sale. Some of the women who were members of the sewing society made up their minds to purchase it and arrange it for church purposes. It was sold to them for $300 and refitted at some additional expense and made a very comfortable place in which to hold services.

The next effort at church building was by Rev. Stephen Brink, who was on the Gilson work. He succeeded in getting $1,200 subscribed, but the church did not materialize. In 1872 a man by the name of Garretson, a Christian preacher, had a revival and organized a society of about fifty. A subscription of $1,500 followed, but for some reason it proved a failure. A Mr. Grouard, a spiritualist, and a Mr. Carney, a Universalist, next proposed a union building, but nothing came of it. In 1875 Maquon was put on with the Summit work, and Rev. Charles W. Swartz was appointed to take charge. He began talking church as soon as he came and succeeded in getting a subscription of $1,600, with the promise of more. The site for the church was purchased from Mr. Thomas Benson, the building was erected by Burkhalter brothers at a cost of $4,500 and was dedicated by Bishop Jesse T. Peck, Sept. 11, 1877. Rev. Swartz served the church two years and was followed by H. S. Humes, who remained one year.

Rev. L. B. Dennis was appointed in 1878. During his first winter he succeeded in bringing about a revival in which there were one hundred conversions. It was the first revival of importance in Maquon. Important because it succeeded in permanently establishing organized christianity in Maquon. He left the first authentic records of membership that have been continued to the present.

He remained two years and was followed by J. E. Williams, who was appointed in October, 1880, and remained one year.

William Merriam next followed, and at the end of his first year Maquon was put on the Gilson circuit and Merriam was sent to the Gilson work. He died in Gilson, Feb. 12, 1883.

A. P. Beal was sent to fill out the year. In October, 1883, Vincent Aten was sent to Maquon, it being made a separate charge again. He remained one year and was followed by R. B. Seaman. He was returned a second year. It was through his earnest efforts that the present parsonage was built. Rev. Joe Bell was appointed to Maquon Oct. 12, 1886. He was returned the second and third time. These three years were so full of blessed results that Maquon people have every reason to long cherish his memory.

In 1889 R. D. Russell was sent to Maquon and was followed one year later by N. G. Clark, who remained one year.

In 1891 Rev. A. M. Bowlin was appointed to the charge, remaining two years. During Rev. Bowlin's pastorate a debt of $700 on the church was paid off and repairs to the amount of $850 made.

In 1893 J. P. McCormick was appointed to Maquon and was followed by R. Y. Hazzard. His term of service was two years, being succeeded by J. G. Evans, who supplied it for nine months in connection with his work as president of Hedding college. Rev. Frank H. Winter, a Hedding student, next took charge, supplying until the annual conference in 1897.

Maquon was without a regular pastor till Nov. 10, 1897, when W. H. Young was appointed to the work. Maquon and Rapatee were associated this year, Maquon having preaching each alternate Sunday morning. Rev. Young was returned in 1898. Next followed Rev. D. T. Wilson, whose gentle influence caused a greater harmony among the people, both inside and out of the church, than had existed heretofore. Rev. John T. Killip came in 1901 to the pastorate. He remained for two years. During this time the church was repaired and modernized and rededicated free of debt.

Rev. J. G. A. Martin was appointed to the charge in 1903 and was again returned the next year, his deep learning and depth of thought being apparent in the poetic trend of his language. He resigned after serving six months of his second year. Rev. Ira Moats was sent to fill out the year. In September, 1906, Rev. S. L. Clark was sent to Maquon. During his pastorate of two years a very successful revival was held and many were added to the church.

Rev. W. F. Kettlekamp succeeded Mr. Clark and remained for three years. During his administration both the Maquon and Rapatee churches were thoroughly repaired and left in excellent condition at a cost of several hundred dollars. At the conference of 1911 Rev. U. Z. Gilmer was appointed to the charge and is the incumbent at the present time.

ONEIDA

Oneida circuit was formed in the autumn of 1857 from portions of the Knoxville and Henderson circuits, with Rev. W. M. Clark preacher in charge and Rev. R. N. Morse presiding elder.

At the conference of 1858 it was transferred to Monmouth district, with Henry Summers presiding elder and George W. Brown preacher in charge. The following year (1859) Oneida circuit was placed in the Toulon district, John Morey presiding elder, and George W. Brown continued preacher in charge. The conference of 1860 returned Oneida to the Monmouth district with Henry Summers presiding elder and William Watson preacher in charge, Bernard Kelley being employed as assistant preacher. During the two years of Rev. Watson's pastorate the church enjoyed a great revival, the record of those years showing the names of 165 probationers received.

Until 1862 the society held its meetings in the schoolhouse. Now, under the pastorate of Wm. J. Smith, a church was erected at a cost of more than $3,000 and dedicated by Rev. Thomas M. Eddy, D. D.

In 1864 Oneida became a station and N. C. Lewis was appointed pastor. Since 1864 the appointment of pastors has been as follows: 1865, S. L. Hamilton; 1866-67, Wm. Watson; 1868, M. Spurlock; 1869-70, C. B. Couch; 1871, H. I. Brown; 1872, H. C. Foote; 1873, Chas. H. Brace, Wm. Merriam; 1874-75, Chas. H. Brace; 1876, L. B. Dennis; 1877, C. B. Couch; 1878-79, C. B. Couch; 1880, S. L. Falkner; 1881-82, J. W. Otterman; 1883, W. A. Pratt; 1884, N. T. Allen; 1885, ————————; 1886, S. P. James; 1887-8-9, W. H. Witter; 1890-91, Wm. Watson; 1892-93, J. J. Hunter; 1894-5-6, E. C. Anderson; 1897-8-9, O. P. Graves; 1900, A. C. Wood; 1901-02, E. E. Diffenbaugh; 1903-04, W. R. Carr; 1905-6-7, I. J. Letherman; 1908-9-10, Chas. Van Dettum; 1911, R. A. Gordon.

The present beautiful church was erected in 1909, dedicated in June by Dr. Edwin A. Schell, president of Iowa Wesleyan University, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. Rev. Chas. Van Dettum was pastor. The building committee was A. J. Roe, Isaac Henderson and S. V. Hannam. A. H. Youngren was the contractor. The building cost $10,000.

The present trustees of the church are Joseph Masters, president; A. J. Roe, C. J. Talbot, Geo. W. Ide, Isaac Henderson, Jas. Weech, Jr., S. V. Hannam, A. F. Adams, Geo. W. Adams.

RIO

The Methodist church building of Rio was built in the year of 1894 and dedicated in December of that year. The society had, however, existed for many years prior to this date. The exact time is not known, but the class existed as early as 1850. In 1853 a man by the name of Coe was class leader. During these early days the services were held in the schoolhouse and other accessible buildings, often even in barns. When in 1872 the Congregationalist church was erected an arrangement was affected whereby the Methodists had the use of that building each alternate Sunday. Here they continued to worship until their own house was built.

Rio has always been part of a circuit or charge, sharing its pastor with North Henderson, Alpha, New Windsor and Henderson successively. From the beginning the church has had steady, healthful growth. Many of its former pastors are now quite prominent in church circles. Among those that have served the church in recent years are T. A. Beal, M. L. O'Harra, W. C. Crane, E. S. Busby, Earl Ballew, Charles Van Dettum, George Hinds, J. D. Payne, H. B. Green and Ira E. Moats.

VICTORIA

First American M. E. church erected here October 27, 1854. In 1836 Zadok Hall was appointed to the Kickapoo mission, which embraced all the territory between here and Laura. That fall the first Methodist class was organized at Old Salem schoolhouse, four miles southeast of present village of Victoria. Here Methodism first took root. Victoria was a part of the Lafayette circuit in 1843.

In 1844 we were transferred to Rock River conference. On the 11th of May, 1849, the present village of Victoria was laid out.

New church was dedicated June 5, 1910.

WATAGA

The Methodist church was organized in Wataga, January 9, 1858. The present church edifice was erected in 1864.

Great Revival.

The great revival meetings were held in February, 1882. As the result 80 people were taken into the church. Rev. John Rugh was pastor. This was probably the greatest revival in the history of the Wataga Methodist church.

In the early history Wataga was on a circuit with five other charges. At the present time the church has a membership of seventy. Wm. Clark was the first preacher, he being the father of N. G. Clark who is still alive. The church has had a battle to live all these years. At the present it is in a healthy condition.

WILLIAMSFIELD

The Williamsfield Methodist church was organized by Rev. John Gimson in 1890, then pastor at Victoria. The building was erected in the same year and at the next conference the church was placed on the Elba circuit. In 1894, under the pastorate of John Killip, the parsonage was built. In 1906 the church was remodelled under the pastorate of Rev. Franklin Rist.

GALESBURG

The first Methodist Episcopal church of Galesburg was organized in 1847 by the Rev. J. J. Hedstrom, with A. M. and Mrs. Follett, L. H. and Mrs. Mary Haskell, and Mr. and Mrs. Beam as members—six in all. It was then an appointment of the Knoxville circuit, belonged to the Rock River conference, and continued so until 1855, when the Peoria, now Central Illinois conference, was organized. The first building was erected in 1851, by the American and Swedish Methodists jointly. It was a wooden structure 36x50 feet in size, and located at the corner of Kellogg and Tompkins streets, a plat of ground which, for more than sixty years has been the gathering point for Methodism in Galesburg, and around which cluster many sacred memories by the older members of the church. The building was not entirely finished until 1853, when on the third Sunday in November it was dedicated by that noted pioneer preacher, Rev. Peter Cartwright. The building now stands (1912) on the Seacord farm east of town and is doing service as a barn.

Pastors of the church from 1847 to 1855 were H. Hadley, Lewis R. Ellis, Isaac Poole, A. Wolincroft, J. F. Chaffee, B. Applebee, Wm. Haney.

The partnership of the American and Swedish members was dissolved by mutual and friendly agreement in 1853, leaving the American members in possession of the property, and in 1855 the Galesburg church became an independent station. The following have been the pastors to date: 1855-1856, Milton Haney; 1856-1858, John P. Brooks; 1858-1860, J. O. Gilbert; 1860-1862, Wm. H. Hunter; 1862-1864, L. B. Kent; 1864-1867, A. Magee; 1867-1868, M. F. Havermale; 1868-1870, D. H. Gray; 1870-1873, G. W. Arnold; 1873-1876, Selah W. Brown; 1876-1879, Geo. W. Brown; 1879-1882, R. G. Pearce; 1882-1884, W. M. Collins; 1884-1887, H. D. Clark; 1887-1892, G. J. Luckey; 1892-1896, C. W. Blodgett; 1896-1897, N. G. Lyon; 1897-1903, T. W. McVety; 1903-1906, Joe Bell; 1906-1908, J. W. Frizzelle; 1908- , Samuel Van Pelt.

The presiding elders of the district, including Knox county, have been R. Haney, John Morey, Milton Bourne, H. Summers, Francis Smith, W. H. Hunter, B. C. Swarts, A. K. Tullis, W. M. Collins, M. C. Bowlin, J. S. Cummings, G. J. Luckey, M. A. Head, H. D. Clark, J. H. Ryan, R. E. Buckey, Joe Bell.

The second session of the Central Illinois conference (organized in 1856) was held in Abingdon in 1857. A session of the conference was held in Galesburg in 1862, when a memorial was sent to President Lincoln urging the emancipation of the slaves. Rev. Richard Haney, a notable Methodist preacher of this section for many years, has made the claim that said memorial was the first of a large number of such memorials sent to the president, and that it had much to do with the famous emancipation proclamation.

Other sessions of the Central Illinois conference held in the county were in Galesburg in 1873 and 1889, and in Abingdon in 1906.

In 1872 a new brick and stone trimmed church was erected, replacing the old wooden structure on the corner of Kellogg and Tompkins streets. It was Gothic style, 45x90 feet, the most beautiful church of the denomination in the county in its time, and cost $36,000. It was remodeled in 1895, at an additional cost of $27,000 and on July 22, 1909 was destroyed by fire—a singular coincident of the burning of the church is noted that on the same day (July 22) thirty-seven years before, the corner stone laying exercises of the church were held.

An incident worthy of mention in connection with the events here described is that Rev. N. T. Allen, now a member of the official board of the present Galesburg church, was present at the dedication of the original church in 1853; also at the dedication of the new church in 1873; also at the dedication of the remodeled church in 1895; and also present at the laying of the corner stone of the magnificent new church now in the course of construction at the corner of Kellogg and Ferris streets.

During the whole history of the Galesburg church, the Sunday school has been an important factor in the progress of the church. So far as may be determined with certainty, the following have served as superintendents in chief: John A. Marshall, C. C. Merrill, O. B. Folger, Matthew Andrews, H. E. Judson, S. A. Wagoner, W. A. Jordan, R. W. Roadstrum.

The Epworth League, the Ladies' Aid Society, the Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies, the Standard Bearers, the Men's Brotherhood, and other similar societies have all been worthy of mention.

The new building now nearing completion will cost with grounds and equipment over $100,000. The corner stone was laid Sunday, October 1, 1911, by David G. Downey, D. D. The building committee are:

Samuel Van Pelt, D. D., ex-officio chairman.
Wm. A. Jordan, vice chairman (deceased).
Simon A. Wagoner, secretary.
Judson W. Hoover, treasurer.
Arthur R. Anderson, Walter C. Frank, John G. Burnaugh.
Architects—J. Grant Beadle, Norman K. Aldrich.
Builder—Peter T. Olson.

RISE AND PROGRESS OF SWEDISH METHODISM

By Axel Gabrielson

The organization and growth of the Methodist church under John Wesley, in England in 1739, and in America in 1784, with Wesley's approval, under leadership of Philip Embury, Thomas Webb, Richard Boardman, Joseph Pilmoor, Francis Asbury, Richard Wright, Thomas Coke, Richard Whatcoat, Thomas Vasey and others, is authentic history, familiar to many and accessible to any one, but the history of the rise and progress of Swedish Methodism, an integral of the Church of John Wesley, is little known, and nowhere written in the English language, and it is to supply this omission that the writer offers this article to the readers of the History of Knox County, Illinois, the history of this church being so inseparably connected with that of the county, that the history of the county without that of the church must necessarily be incomplete.

"Who hath despised the day of small things?" was asked centuries before the dawn of the christian era, affording reason for the belief that some people then living, made the mistake of despising small things, and in so doing, gave divine offense, subjecting themselves to loss, and the displeasure and censure of prophet and seer.

If simple folk, in primitive times, were prone to discount beginnings, and set small value upon embryo matter, no wonder that in an age like the twentieth century, the shrine of big things only, attracts devotees en mass, and enjoys acclaim, and that matters of any kind, however meritorious, if small unassuming and modest, often fail of recognition and support, because the scale of their beginnings is in the diminutive. However, the fact remains that many, if not all, of the colossal things of the present, are but the result of small and insignificant beginnings of the near or remote past, and therefore youth of this age, tempted especially to want to begin at the zenith, impatient of any suggestion of need of a required period of effort and growth, preceding fruition of hope, do well to study the present in the light of the past and the experiences of the fathers, and learn, that the admired, magnificent, finished superstructure, or finished product, delighting the eye and thrilling the senses, and over which we exclaim, to the one who can read, always tells the mean story of laborious excavation, foundation building course by course, then construction round upon round, through weary days and months and possibly years of tedious toil, and toil of brawn and brain.

Mica of old extolled not the big city, the world center of his day, but the little City of Bethlehem, saying—"And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, are not least of the princes of Juda, for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel," and if it be not deemed a sacrilege, for purposes of this article, the writer desires to paraphrase this prophecy thus: "And thou Victoria, in the land of Illinois, art not least among the cities of Illinois, for out of thee has come a church, that is blessing thousands upon thousands of my people."

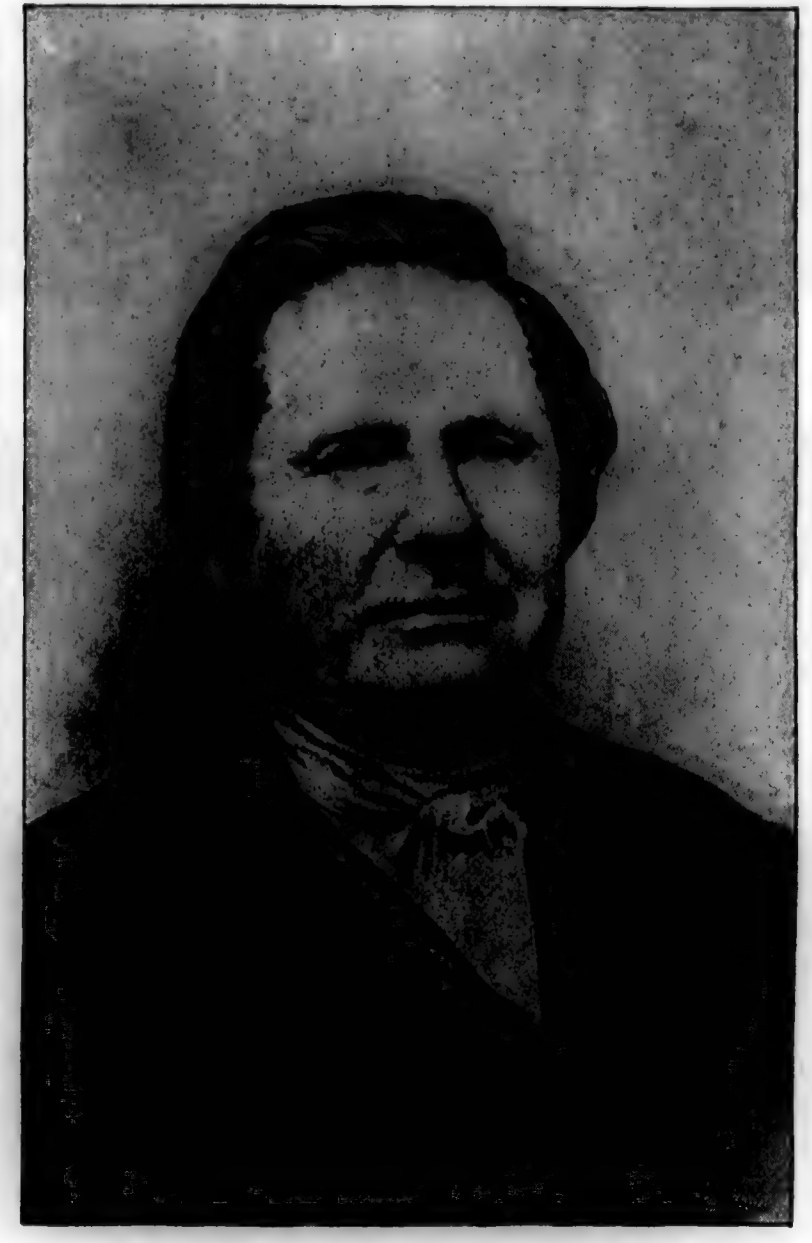
December 15, 1846, Jonas Hedstrom, by occupation a blacksmith, and by the grace of God, a preacher, in Victoria, Illinois, organized the first Swedish Methodist church in America and in the world. The causes that lead to the founding of the Methodist sect among the Swedes, anti-dates this period, however, by many years, and must be related in this connection to afford correct knowledge of facts, and to give due credit where credit belongs. Olof G. Hedstrom, older brother of Jonas Hedstrom, born in Sweden, 1803, emigrated to America in 1825, landing in New York city. This brother's conversion occurred in Dr. Phoebus' church in New York, in 1829, three weeks after his marriage to the godly and piously zealous Caroline Pinckney.

Four years after his conversion, in 1833, O. G. Hedstrom revisited his native land, for the express purpose of testifying to the saving grace of God, to those of his own blood, and so effectual was his testimony, that not only his parents, but also his brother Jonas, ten years his junior, joyfully embraced salvation.



Having seen the object of his visit to the land of his birth accomplished, O. G. Hedstrom returned to America, that same year, bringing his brother Jonas back with his to his adopted country.

Following his return to America, O. G. Hedstrom, up to that time a successful tailor and merchant, abandoned secular pursuits for the ministry entering the New York conference of the Methodist Episcopal church on probation in 1835, laboring successfully in that connection as an English speaking Methodist preacher, in various appointments, until 1845, when, on May 14th of that year, he was appointed by the presiding bishop of the conference convened in the Forsyth Street church, New York, to the North River mission, the first instance of a Swedish Methodist minister being appointed to labor among Scandinavians in America. But while serving English speaking churches, being stationed in New York city and environments for ten years, from 1835 to 1845, Mr. Hedstrom had done much missionary work among Swedish sailors and emigrants on incoming vessels, and among these had won many converts, some of whom, returning to the home land, told of their conversion, and their testimonies, prayers, exhortations and interpretation of scripture, had the effect of arousing an interest in religious and spiritual things, among large numbers of people in all parts of Sweden, who were called "readers," because of their constant searching of the scriptures and earnest effort to conform to its teaching.

Incidentally, out of this movement grew the Jansonist revival under Eric Janson and Olof Olson, men of fine character, and unusual power and ability, who coming in touch with O. G. Hedstrom and his converts in America and Sweden, had experienced conversion. These godly men, and their ardent loyal followers were subjected to persecution, imprisonment and confiscation of property, and when opportunity offered in 1846, many Jansonists emigrated to America, enduring great hardships and privations, but finally, successfully established in Bishop Hill, Henry county, Illinois, a flourishing Swedish communistic colony. To their original numbers were added many thousand more in the years 1847, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55 and later, and to these hardy, virile, honest, godfearing men and women of the frozen northland, Illinois and her happy contented successful citizen, owe no small meed of praise, for their early contribution to the prosperity and development of a great virgin state.

Beginning with his appointment to the North River mission in 1845, O. G. Hedstrom commenced a service for his fellow countrymen, in his mother tongue, that continued uninterruptedly through three full decades till 1875, when he retired from active service, and two years later, on the 5th of May, 1877, was summoned to his reward. The scene of this unwonted long service, was laid in the North river, New York, the gateway to America for countless thousands of Swedish emigrants coming here from 1845 to 1875.

Associated with George T. Cobb, whose gift of fifty dollars was the first contribution for the cause, O. G. Hedstrom, with William G. Rogers and others of the Asbury M. E. church of New York, purchased the good ship Henry Seeds, lying in North river, rechristening it to the John Wesley, often familiarly and lovingly referred to as the Bethel ship, a veritable gospel ship, and here, upon this ship, lying in its slip, tugging at its chains and anchor, seven days in the week for thirty years, the precious gospel truth of full, free and present salvation was sown with unsparing hand by this man of God and his co-laborers—but all the work done on the Bethel ship, John Wesley, was purely missionary through the many years of its long existence, and its founder, resolutely refused to surrender it for a permanent land work, although he lent his aid to cottage work among his countrymen in Brooklyn and New York, which eventually resulted in the organization of the Emanuel Swedish M. E. church in Brooklyn in 1866, and the Lexington Avenue Swedish M. E. church in New York city, in 1874.

Accompanying his brother O. G. Hedstrom to America on his return to the land of his adoption in 1833, after his brief visit to Sweden, Jonas Hedstrom spent the first five years of his life in this country in New York and Pennsylvania, and in 1838 came to Illinois, stopping in Victoria, Knox county, where, soon after his arrival, he married Diantha Sornberg.

The young people lived for a short time two miles east of Victoria, in a neighborhood then called Farmington, but soon returned to Victoria, where Hedstrom continued to live until his death, May 11, 1859.

A year after coming to Victoria, Jonas Hedstrom began to preach, and since there were no people of his nationality there at that time, his services for four or five years were conducted in English, until beginning with 1845, large numbers of incoming Swedes settling in various points in Illinois supplied a constituancy of his own countrymen, to whom he devoted himself thereafter exclusively. Comparatively soon, now, the consequences of the coming of the young Swede, Olof G. Hedstrom, to our friendly shores in 1825, his conversion among English speaking Methodists, and attendent missionary efforts as layman and preacher, with his own family, among his own countrymen, in the fatherland and in New York harbor for a period of thirteen years, ripened in the organization of the Swedish Methodist church, not by himself, in New York, but by a convert—his brother, a thousand miles removed from the scenes of his own activity, in a little, inland, Illinois prairie town.

The Swedish Methodist mother church, founded December 15, 1846, in Victoria, Illinois, by Jonas Hedstrom, the blacksmith lay-preacher, had indeed a small beginning, the place of its birth being a tiny log house, in a little frontier village, with an original, or charter, membership of only five souls, namely: Jonas Hedstrom and wife, Andrew Hjelm and wife and Peter Newberg—but as in this article we follow the story of the progress of the Swedish Methodist church from its beginning till the present time, even when endeavoring to give credit to her men, ministry and laity, as the immediate agents of her advancement, so remarkable appears her accomplishment, we shall be lead to exclaim spontaneously, "What hath God wrought!"

After organization, the growth of the Victoria Swedish Methodist society under Mr. Hedstrom's watchful care and zeal, was steady and constant, and it soon assumed a magnitude and influence in the community of no mean proportion, and now in 1912, after sixty-six years of splendid continuous history, and having sent out scores of her people into Iowa. Nebraska and Kansas who have organized and built up Swedish Methodist societies in those states, she has a remaining membership of 120, and carries on all of the activities of a live aggressive church. The ministers, who have served the mother church as stationed pastors, after the passing of the circuit riders, are: N. O. Westergreen, V. Witting, Peter Newberg, Albert Ericson, N. Peterson, Lott Lindquist, J. H. Ekstrand, H. W. Eklund, John Burstrom, A. Walgren, H. Olson, C. F. Livin, J. B. Anderson, P. M. Johnson, Hugo Alm, J. A. Palmquist, Olof Johnson, J. P. Miller, Otto A. Rabe, John Borgeson, Andrew Hermanson, Theodore N. Peterson, Martin Hess, H. W. Willing, Nels W. Bard and the present encumbent, A. J. Strandell.

In 1847, in Peoria, Illinois, Mr. Hedstrom was admitted on trial in the Central Illinois conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and three years later, July 1, 1850, in Plainfield, Illinois, was ordained an elder by Bishop L. L. Hamline, and with the prestige of the recognition and approval thus given him by the church, Mr. Hedstrom was encouraged to begin an active campaign of conservation and expansion, which resulted in gathering about himself, from among his converts, a group of helpers and co-laborers, with whose assistance, he pushed his activities beyond Victoria and environments, to more remote and distant points. The first preachers sharing with Mr. Hedstrom the honors of the extension of Swedish Methodism, after the founding of the mother church, coming to him and the work in order named, were Andrew Ericson, John Brown, Peter Challman, Peter Newberg, Eric Shogren, Victor Witting and S. B. Newman, and the first circuit these seven men, with Hedstrom, traveled, after the manner of the early Methodist follow up system of visitation, with Victoria as the place of beginning, was Wataga, LaFayette, Knoxville, Galesburg, Andover, Moline, Geneseo and Chicago, all in Illinois, and New Sweden in Iowa, and in 1854, the combined enrolled membership of these several places had reached 480 souls, all gained by conversion, and profession of faith.

In only four other places in Knox county, besides Victoria, namely, Wataga, Knoxville, Altona and Galesburg was any work done by Mr. Hedstrom and co-laborers for the very good reason that here only were found any Swedish settlers.

In Knoxville and Altona small classes were formed, but no church organization was effected or church building enterprise begun and in due time, through removals, and merging into the English speaking Methodist churches, this membership was dissipated and Swedish Methodism at these points became extinct but the work in Wataga and Galesburg proved permanent and together with Victoria, constitute the places in Knox county, where the Swedish Methodist church is actively at work in 1912.

The church in Wataga, although having a good house of worship and in its earlier history especially a fairly strong membership, with rare exceptions has had no resident pastors, being served instead in turn by the early circuit riders, and pastors in charge of other nearby churches in Knox, Henry and Mercer counties.

Until recently it has maintained a fine Sunday school but because of diminishing numbers have now abandoned it. The present church membership is only twenty, and growing less, and ere long this society will have passed, but its influence will remain long thereafter, for out of it into other churches in Wataga and in western churches have gone splendid men and women who gratefully and lovingly remember the Wataga Swedish Methodist church as their alma mater in christian teaching, piety and practice.

The Galesburg Swedish Methodist church, had its origin, primarily, in a little class of Swedish worshipers and converts, gathered about Mr. Hedstrom on his periodical visits, and this class was the nucleus also of the English speaking, or First Methodist church, of Galesburg, for to the small body of Swedes, attracted to Mr. Hedstrom's services, came too, increasing numbers of English speaking sympathizers, who soon by very preponderance of numbers, became the dominant body, and with their Swedish fellow Methodist, organized the First Methodist church of Galesburg in 1847. The original Swedish class continued to fellowship and worship with the English church until 1848, when a large number of Swedish new comers, coming direct to Galesburg from Sweden, via New York and Olof G. Hedstrom's North River Bethel Ship mission, unable to benefit by the English language in public services, required an exclusive Swedish society, and then the Swedes, with the godspeed, blessing and material aid of their English speaking brethren, withdrew from the First Methodist church, and under Jonas Hedstrom, formally organized the Swedish Methodist church, and built a little chapel of their own, on the north side of Ferris street, between Seminary and Kellogg streets, which continued to be their church home and scene of christian work and activity until 1872, when the society built and moved to their present church, at the corner of Waters and Kellogg streets.

The Galesburg church at present numbers a membership of three hundred, owning excellent church and parsonage properties and is vigorous and aggressive in all forms of christian activities, and of her sons and daughters, not a few gifted, godly men and women, have gone out as ministers, missionaries and Sunday school workers, who in life and deed reflect great credit upon this church and ministry, evidencing unmistakably, faithful and unfaltering inculcation of the plain, sound doctrine and teaching of John Wesley, through a period of sixty-five years or more. The ministers who have served the Galesburg church are first the pioneer preachers as circuit riders, namely, Hedstrom, Brown, Challman, Newberg, Shogren, Witting, and Newman, followed beginning with 1857, by the stationed preachers, A. J. Anderson, Peter Newberg, Lott Lindquist, N. O. Westergreen, A. J. Anderson (second term), S. B. Newman, N. O. Westergreen (second term), John Linn, Alfred Anderson, O. Gunderson, H. W. Eklund, Eric Shogren, C. G. Nelson, Nels Eagle, A. G. Johnson, Martin Hess, Olof Johnson, H. L. Lindquist, John W. Swenson, and the present pastor, Theodore N. Peterson, whose service began with his appointment to the charge in September, 1910.

This space has been given to the Victoria, Wataga and Galesburg churches, because they are Knox county institutions, and from them, following the causes leading to their organization, emanate largely the influences developing into a nation wide American Swedish Methodism and extending also into the three Scandinavian countries, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. For thirty-one years after the organization of the first society, the individual Swedish Methodist churches found their conference connection within the boundary of some English speaking conference, and scarcely thought of any other possible arrangement, until at a free conference or gathering held in Chicago in 1866, the desirability of a distinctively Swedish Methodist conference was earnestly discussed, and the advisability of an appeal to the general conference for an enabling act, to organize such conference, seriously considered, but no movement looking to a realization of this advance was made then, nor indeed, until a whole decade later, when the general conference granted the petition of the Swedish churches and preachers, and the North West Swedish Methodist Episcopal conference was organized in Galesburg, Illinois, in September 1877, and the magnitude of the work, and field covered by this conference, may be seen, when it is realized that the boundary of the conference extended from New York on the east, westward, including churches in New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri.

One of the epoch marking events in the advance of the Swedish Methodist church as a body, was the establishment of its church organ Sändebudet (Messenger) in 1860, in Chicago, a publication still existing, still growing, and now as ever a great force in furthering the interests of Swedish Methodism. A divinity school projected in 1870, temporarily operated in Galesburg for two years, and thereafter permanently located in Evanston, Illinois, greatly conducing to the welfare and advancement of all of the societies, is one of the early big things achieved by the Swedish Methodist church and reflects its wisdom and foresight, for out of this school, for forty years, has come her best men, supplying her with able editors, professors, preachers and missionaries.

From the foregoing, the discerning reader can readily trace the hand of providence, in meeting in an emergency, the spiritual needs of a poor, alien, helpless people, and as easily, too, follow the same providential leading in the raising up of men, and effecting means for the extension, expansion and larger growth of a work peculiarly fitted to permanently influence and mould religiously, thousands upon thousands of Swedes, coming to America to make and build homes, for while now, in this favored land, we have large bodies of Swedish Evangelical Christian churches, other than the Methodist, some of which largely overshadow her in numerical strength, and temporal wealth, it remains true, that all of these owe something to her, as the pioneer church, forerunner, pathfinder, and advance agent of success, as seen from the view point of Christian Swedish churches, and in this connection it is especially pleasant to chronicle, that the disposition everywhere, by the informed, among her Swedish sister churches of other denominations, is, to accord to her generous and grateful acknowledgment, which she in turn, gracefully, and with becoming modesty accepts—a situation which, if rare, yet at once is beautiful, and conducive to genuine christian unity.

In America, at the present time, the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church has four conferences, and one mission conference, namely: Central Swedish, Western Swedish, Northern Swedish, Eastern Swedish, and Pacific Swedish mission, outgrowths of the original North West Swedish conference, with an ordained and local ministry numbering three hundred and ten, and a total laity membership of seventeen thousand six hundred and fifty four, and in addition to churches and members shepherded by pastors within these conferences, also has churches and pastors in the English Austin and Gulf conferences of Texas and Louisiana, which added easily raises the total Swedish Methodist constituency in America beyond 18,000, and to this figure, to get the grand total of the numerical strength of Swedish Methodism, is to be added also, three hundred and four clerical, and seventeen thousand four hundred and four laity members of the church in Sweden, a direct result of O. G. Hedstrom's work in the Bethel ship in New York harbor and of Jonas Hedstrom's work in Victoria, making a combined Swedish Methodist membership in Sweden and America, of seven hundred and four preachers, and approximately thirty-six thousand laymen. Nor is the harvest reaped through the agency of the Swedish Methodist church, with the Hedstrom brothers as its founders, limited to the confines of America and Sweden, for out of it too has grown the separate Norwegian and Danish Methodist work in America, Norway and Denmark, and Methodist Episcopal work in Finland, and Saint Petersburg, Russia.

Of the denominational enterprises and interests projected by the Swedish Methodist church, are to be enumerated the Theological seminary at Evanston, Illinois, with buildings valued at sixty-five thousand dollars, and an endowment of forty thousand dollars. The Theological school of Sweden at Upsala having a building worth four thousand dollars and an endowment of twenty-two thousand dollars in American money—a Swedish general college and educational institution at Austin, Texas—Bethany Home at Ravenswood, Illinois, for aged indigent people, with property valued at forty-five thousand dollars, and an endowment of thirty-seven thousand, a similar home, recently launched at Clay Center, Kansas, and yet another more lately projected in the Eastern Swedish conference. A flourishing paying book-publishing concern in Chicago, and one in Sweden. Susanna Wesley home for homeless Swedish girls in Chicago, Sändebudet, organ of the Swedish Methodist church in America; Epworth Klockan, the young people's paper; Söndags-Skol Baneret, the Sunday school publication, and Lilla Sändebudet, the organ of the church in Sweden, and additional to these are a church fire insurance company, a ministerial life assurance company, and the Swedish Methodist Aid association now in its thirty-fourth year, solvent, sound and secure as the Rock of Gibraltar, meriting and enjoying universal confidence.

That the indomitable spirit of conquest characteristic of John Wesley, founder of Methodism, has been bequeathed in rich measure to the Swedish Methodist church, is self evident, for, like him, it too deems the world to be its parish—and therefore, the harbor of New York with its hundreds of thousands of oncoming Scandinavians, or the fertile plains of Illinois, the great pioneer west, northwest, southwest, and Pacific states, the teeming cities of New England, nor Sweden, Finland or St. Petersburg, though generously yielding to the appeal of her noble ambassadors of the cross, have been able to contain her, and so today, in the sunrise or hermit kingdom, Doctor Garfield Anderson and Sister Naomi, worthy son and daughter of a worthy sire, the Reverend Alfred Anderson, first student and graduate of the Swedish Methodist Theological seminary while located in Galesburg, now permanently established in Evanston, are preaching the gospel of Christ and of Methodism, in Wonju, Korea, and projecting and establishing a Swedish Methodist memorial hospital in that city, making Swedish Methodism synonymous with world wide Methodism, for, from the rising to the setting of the sun, in a circle of ten thousand miles, her preachers and missionaries may now be found and the proofs of her beneficent ministry seen.

Concerning the polity and teaching of the Swedish Methodist church but little, perhaps, if anything, need be said in this article, for these are identical with that of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which the Swedish Methodist church is an integral part, and are well known. In government it is Episcopal, in form of worship ritualistic, in belief Armenian, and in method and manner of work Evangelistic. Its law-making body is the general conference, which meets once in a quadrennium, and is composed of the bishops, as presiding officers, and of an equal number of clerical and lay delegates, representative of the whole church.

The annual conference, a body corporate of the ministers within a given conference boundary, of which, at the time of the last general conference, in 1908, there were 132, has the temporal and spiritual supervision of the churches within its boundary. The quarterly conference is the authorized business body of the local church, confirming acts of pastors, officials and committees, approving and directing expenditures, and apportioning benevolences.

So faithful to the belief and teaching of the founder of the Methodist church are the pastors and churches of the Swedish Methodist church of today that everywhere, in all of their societies, now as in the days of the Hedstroms, or of the Wesleys and their co-workers, one may hear in sermon and exhortation the doctrine of the fall of man, conditional election, atonement and possible universal redemption, salvation by grace, the danger of resisting grace, and possibility of falling from grace, while justification, the new birth and holiness or sanctification, are proclaimed as the necessity and privilege of all men in Christ Jesus.

BAPTIST CHURCH IN KNOX COUNTY

By E. R. Drake

I am asked to tell, in a few words, what the Baptist denomination stands for, what it has contributed to the cause of religion, and to human welfare, and to give a short history of the Baptists of Knox county.

Prior to the German reformation, the expression of Christianity in denominationalism was very limited, but with the right of private judgment and freedom from ecclesiastical superiors, there arose a great variety of opinion in the interpretation of the New Testament and so modern denominationalism was the outgrowth, consequently, as a religious sect, the Baptists cannot claim a direct succession from apostolic times, but they do claim a spiritual succession, for the truths they have fostered and taught have always been held and practiced by followers of the Christ, though under various names.

While these truths have, in part, been upheld by other sects, it remains an historical fact that the Baptists throughout their entire history, have consistently stood for practically the same doctrines that they hold today. From the earliest times, the Baptists have stood for the principle that religion is a personal matter between soul and God and so from this fundamental truth there has been evolved the statement which, probably more clearly and completely than any other expression, states the Baptist position, which they have always upheld, the doctrine of the soul's competency in religious matters under God, and this doctrine was a distinctive Baptist contribution to the world's thought.

The Biblical significance of the soul's competency is the right of the individual to the interpretation of and obedience to the scriptures, which alone are accepted as the rule of faith and life. This doctrine in relation to the individual means soul freedom, or the liberty of conscience.

Bancroft, the historian, says, regarding Roger Williams, the founder of the First Baptist church in America, and also founder of the first commonwealth (Rhode Island colony), in all history that exemplified the entire and absolute separation of religious and civil affairs that "He (Williams), the the first person in modern Christendom to assert in its plenitude the doctrine of the liberty of conscience and the equality of opinion before the law. Williams would permit persecutions of no opinion of religion, leaving heresy unharmed by law and orthodoxy unprotected by the terrors of penal laws. Freedom of conscience, unlimited freedom of mind was, from the first, the trophy of the Baptists."

The ecclesiastical significance of this great doctrine of the competency of the soul is, the equality of believers and a regenerate membership, or a membership where each individual for himself, having received an experience of divine truth, has surrendered himself to Jesus Christ as savior and Lord.

Perhaps more than all other doctrines, this has been the cause of controversy, strife, persecution and martyrdom of thousands in many lands, under many names through centuries of intolerance and oppression.

The Pedo-Baptists, as the established church under various names was generally called, standing for the efficacy of infant baptism and sharing in the administration of civil governments; while the Ana-Baptists, or Re-Baptizers, stood for the baptism of believers only, using the scriptural mode of immersion, and always contending for the entire separation of the church from all civil matters.

A Baptist church is a simple democracy where each member has a voice and the majority rule. Each church is a unit recognizing no higher ecclesiastical authority than itself, and these churches are banded together solely for the purpose of unifying and strengthening denominational interests and promoting its great missionary undertakings, which have been signally blessed throughout the world.

And lastly, the significance of this paramount doctrine of the soul's competency, politically, is the entire separation of church and state; while other denominations have shared with the Baptists in the promulgation of many phases of religious truth, to them belong the credit of holding the unique position of always and everywhere advocating this great principle of the total separation of all religious from civil affairs, which they claim as the very foundation of a pure church and a stable government.

Very significant, indeed, in all Baptist history has been their love of liberty. In the dark centuries preceding the reformation and afterwards; in Germany, in Switzerland, in France, in Sweden and in England; in Cromwell's army on land and on sea are found the liberty loving baptists. How very significant also was the part they had in the great struggle for religious and civil liberty on this side of the Atlantic, which resulted in the formation of this union of states, the first government among men where all are guaranteed freedom of worship and equality before the law.

Of deep interest in that early struggle for independence was the convention called by the Baptist churches of the colony of Virginia, more than sixty in number who met in Dover May, 1775, and adopted a petition asking for full religious liberty, which petition was presented to that memorable convention called in 1775 by the colonies, "to consider the state of the county." A committee composed of Jeremiah Waller, John Williams and George Roberts presented this petition to the convention of delegates representing the colonies and enlisted as champions of the measure such leaders as Thos. Jefferson, James Madison and Patrick Henry.

The constitution of the United States adopted in September, 1787, provides: "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust in the United States." The Baptists were not satisfied with this declaration and again called a meeting of the churches of Virginia in March, 1788. This movement, in which the Presbyterians joined, resulted in the first amendment to the constitution, which reads: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people to assemble and to petition the government for redress of grievances."

And thus was incorporated into the organic law of the land the old Baptist doctrine of soul liberty, and the world for the first time in all its history saw a great nation where men were free to worship God in their own way, with no one to molest or make afraid.

The earliest Baptist preacher in Knox county was probably Elder John Logan, who organized the church in Knoxville and in other nearby settlements in Stark, Fulton, Warren and other counties in the early '30s. Elder Stickney was another pioneer preacher in this county and was the first resident pastor of the Galesburg church, as will be shown later in this paper.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, GALESBURG

In 1837 the first colony came to this place from the east to establish a college. It was at the time when our great state was just emerging from a wilderness of prairies. Springfield had just been made the capital. It was the year when the murder of Elijah Lovejoy, the state's first martyr to the cause of slavery, so agitated the people. The first railroad was in process of construction, but it was the prairie schooner that brought the ever-increasing immigration into the state.

These good people of the first colony founded the college, the third in the state, and around it grew up the village, later the city, of Galesburg. Even among the very earliest settlers there was here and there a Baptist.

But it was ten years later that a few Baptists commenced holding meetings alternately between Knoxville and Galesburg. One of the first meetings was held at the home of Geo. W. Crandall, which was located on West Main street. This house is still standing and is now known as the Roberts' homestead.

Among the items of interest recorded we note this: After renewing the covenant they appointed "Deacon March a committee to see Brother Barker for not coming to meeting." (Good old days, when the deacons looked after the derelict members.) They adjourned after voting to meet in Knoxville in four weeks to consider about building a meetinghouse.

At the Knoxville meeting it was voted to change the name and location of the church and call it the First Baptist church of Galesburg, and so this meeting, held January 15, 1848, marks our beginning as an organization, and on the 15th day of January, 1912, the church passed its sixty-fourth milestone. At this same meeting it was decided that the time had come to build a meetinghouse at Galesburg. Trustees were elected and a building committee appointed. The first pastor of the church was the pioneer worker and missionary, Elder Stickney, who received the munificent salary of $200 per year and was paid in part by the church and in part of the Home Missionary society. In the spring of 1848 we find that delegates were appointed to the "Ottawa association," and we are reminded that it was the beginning and early days for the Baptist cause in the state. The associations were fewer and covered a greater extent of territory. We get a glimpse into the spiritual life of the little church from this record: "July 1, 1848, covenant meeting. Prayer by Elder Stickney. After reading the covenant all the brothers and sisters spoke, eighteen in all, and the blessed Jesus was in our midst."

Elder Gross was the second pastor. He also received a salary of $200 per year, payable quarterly, the church having the right to furnish such things as he might need for his family at market price in Galesburg in payment thereof.

The meetings during this time were held in a district schoolhouse, situated on Ferris street, east of Broad. Another meeting place was in the upper part of the old brick wagon shop on West Main street, between West and Academy streets. Cedar Fork (of local fame) furnished a baptistry, and many baptisms took place about where the Santa Fe passenger depot now stands. By May 4, 1850, the membership had grown to 80. A site was finally secured on the corner of Broad and Tompkins streets and the first meetinghouse begun July 1, 1850. It was not completed and dedicated until June 8, 1852. It was the first Baptist meetinghouse in Knox county and was a well-built structure 32 feet by 45 feet, with 18-foot posts, and cost about $2,500.

With the new meetinghouse came a time of rapid growth, and the church received large accessions. At the first meeting in the new house it was resolved, "That we do something to start a Sunday school."

In October, 1855, Rev. Silas Tucker became pastor of the church. His was a marked pastorate. He was a capable, bright preacher, and the house was soon filled to overflowing. An effort was made to enlarge the house, and a committee appointed to carry out this plan. At no time had so many accessions been made to the church. There seemed to be a spirit of constant revival. The Sunday school also prospered. In the financial reports for 1856 we find the receipts to have been $1,362.95 and the expenditures $1,342.06; no deficit there. A resolution of gratitude follows, and the pastor's salary was raised from $800 to $1,000.

An interesting bit of history in the late fifties was the coming of a Swedish Baptist minister telling of the persecution and imprisonment of his brethren in his native land. The story so impressed C. M. Carr that he insisted on taking this man to the meeting of the Illinois River association, which was held that year at Tremont, Tazewell county. A resolution was adopted by the association and sent to Stephen A. Douglas, then United States senator from Illinois (whose wife was a Baptist) and who gave the land for the first university of Chicago, requesting him to use his influence with President Buchanan to intercede for this people. This was done through our ambassador at Stockholm and resulted in a great step forward in the progress of religious liberty in that country.

In the spring of 1858 clouds gathered and the sky was darkened. Paul found it necessary in writing to the church at Corinth to say: "I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that there be no divisions among you." And from that day on nearly every church has need at some time of that same appeal. We are told that one of the first points of difference was whether it were wise to accept the gift of a library from an eastern Sunday school, a contribution of children. Some thought it ought to be received, while others felt that we were well able to provide for our own needs and it should be sent where they were really poor. It was a trifling matter, but the principle at stake was an important one. Then they were divided on the question of enlarging. Some thought the church was large enough and did not want to go in debt. Others wanted to go ahead, to keep abreast of the spirit of the times and of the town, and enlarge the house. Pastor Tucker thought the small room was injuring his voice and a large room would be easier to speak in. Mole hills grew into mountains, until finally there was a division. May 1, 1859, forty-one were dismissed by letter to form a new church. At the same meeting ten were received for baptism, and at the communion service next day it is recorded that a larger number were present than ever before.

The work of enlarging the church was undertaken and completed in September, 1858. By this addition the seating capacity of the church was nearly doubled.

We find the first meeting of a choir in a resolution passed on February 13, 1859, to the effect "that the church have choir singing and employ someone to play the melodeon." The first leader of the choir was Jos. Bristol. On the first Sunday in April, 1859, Elder Tucker closed his pastorate and for some time the church was pastorless. Then we have in rapid succession the names of Eastes, Daniels, Johnson, Green and Northorp. These pastorates were short, but we cannot tell as to the degree of sweetness. September 1, 1864, Rev. W. W. Moore was settled upon a salary of $550 and a donation. (Oh the bliss of those donations. What joy the preachers' children are deprived of in this day. Santa Claus and Christmas are nowhere!)

In regard to the forty-one who were dismissed, they held a number of meetings at the residence of Timothy Walker, in the northeast corner of the square, and a few days after their dismissal some fifteen of them effected an organization. Many names among the fifteen are familiar to many of us: Kingsberry, Leach, Moulton, Horton, Bates, Ferris, Drake, Clark. S. A. Kingsberry, brother of our late Deacon Kingsberry, became pastor of the new church. During the summer of 1859 the Cherry street church building was erected at a cost of $2,500.

This building still stands on the southeast corner of Cherry and South streets and is now occupied by our colored Baptist brethren. Mr. Kingsberry was greatly beloved and his preaching thoroughly enjoyed; but when the rebellion broke out in 1861 he resigned and went into the army as chaplain.

Rev. Isaac Fargo was next called to the pastorate and remained with the church until through his wise efforts the two churches were reunited in November, 1864. So the Cherry Street church had but these two pastors, Kingsberry and Fargo. While both have passed to the great beyond, yet their lives still live, for they were ideal men and have left to us a blessed memory.

From the very start of his pastorate, which began June, 1862, Mr. Fargo felt that it was a mistake to have two churches and so directed his efforts toward a union. The winter following his settlement the church enjoyed a gracious revival, some fifty uniting. The time was opportune for carrying out his earnest desire, for all hearts were united in their great anxiety for the nation's safety. There came a time in the early part of 1863, which was the darkest time in our civil war, that congress set apart a day of fasting and prayer for the success of our armies. At Mr. Fargo's suggestion the Cherry Street church invited the First church to unite with them in this solemn observance. The meeting, which took place in the old First church and was led by Mr. Fargo, lasted three hours. And as they prayed together in the great common cause their hearts were drawn closer and the very next day steps toward a union were taken. In his unselfish interest Mr. Fargo resigned, not wishing in any way to stand in the way of a union that should be genuine and equal. I cannot go into full details, but only say that through this good pastor's efforts the union was consummated. There was only one hitch in the progress of affairs, and that nearly proved fatal. Before the first steps toward a union had been taken Rev. Moore had been called to the First church, and when he came advocated the maintenance of the two churches, and for several weeks the union was postponed. But he saw his mistake and negotiations were reopened and brought to a harmonious close November 6, 1864. On the first Sabbath in November the union was celebrated in the First Baptist church. Mr. Moore officiated. The next evening Mr. Fargo presided at the business meeting. As Brother Fargo had accepted a call elsewhere, Brother Moore was settled as pastor over the church. J. P. Bates was chosen clerk. The deacons were C. Leach, Jr., and E. Ray from the Cherry Street church; Jno. Purdy and C. A. Hinckley from the First church.

The building and lot on Broad street were sold to the city and passed into the hands of the board of education, and to-day upon that site stands our beautiful high school building. In the transaction the church received the present lot. In May, 1865, W. D. Clark was called as pastor and began his labors in June. Now all the energies of both pastor and people were turned toward the erection of a new church. The Cherry Street church soon became too small to hold the congregation and it was decided to use Caledonia hall, the leading public hall of the city at that time. In the winter of 1866 a great revival swept over the city; the churches united and the pastors, shoulder to shoulder, carried forward the work without help, preaching in turn every night. There was Dr. Beecher, Dr. Perkins, Dr. Duffield and others, including the pastor. And the Christian people went by twos into all the homes and carried the message. It was the greatest revival up to that time in the history of the church, and at one time the hand of fellowship was given to 75.

The great revival did not detract, but rather added zest to the plans for building a new house, and in 1866 plans were agreed upon by the church and the new house of worship begun. When completed it was a beautiful structure and stood for many years at the head of church architecture in this city. It cost $30,000, a sum very much larger than was expected, and entailed upon the church a debt which was not lifted for some years.

Pastor Clark closed his labors here January 12, 1868, and left the church larger and stronger than ever. Many of the most influential members the church has had came in during his pastorate. The congregations were the largest thus far in the history of the church.

In February, 1868, J. H. Griffith accepted the pastorate of the church, and on April 9, 1868, the edifice was dedicated, the pastor preaching the sermon. It was a very impressive sermon and is still remembered by many. Rev. I. Fargo preached in the evening. It was a great day for the church and marked a great advancement of the Baptist interest in this city. A new house of worship, a strong pastor and a strong church membership all foretold the progress which was made during the pastorate of this really eminent preacher and pastor.

The amount subscribed on the day of dedication was sufficient to pay all claims, had the pledges all been paid, but they were not. With arrearages on current expenses each year and 10 per cent interest paid on borrowed money, the church found itself greatly burdened. When Dr. Wm. M. Haigh was settled as pastor, October, 1873, the church was in a financial strait. But by a most heroic effort of pastor and people the burden of indebtedness was lifted. Too much praise cannot be given Wm. M. Haigh for his wise leadership and business administration of affairs during those years. At the close of his pastorate, August, 1877, the debt with accumulated interest was all paid but about $2,000, and it had taken nearly $14,000 to accomplish this. At that time the church had 340 members.

W. H. H. Templeton was the next pastor, and following him Rev. J. W. T. Booth, who served the church from March, 1878, until September, 1880. He was a preacher of much ability and has filled a number of important pulpits in the east since his removal from Galesburg.

There are those whom we love to honor, and as I come to name the next pastor, I am sure that a thrill of gratitude and love will fill many hearts. O.

A. Williams came to the church April, 1881, and remained its pastor till November 1, 1886. We would write over this pastorate in large letters: "Spiritual enlargement." Dr. Williams won for himself by his kind, friendly, Christian spirit the confidence and affection of the whole community.

During his pastorate 180 were baptized, and the membership reached the highest point in its history, 437.

After Mr. Williams left, the church was without a pastor about one and a half years, but work did not stop, "the Baptists go right on just the same, whether they have a pastor or not."

J. B. Woodland came to the pastorate in May, 1888, from Nova Scotia. This was his first pastorate in the United States. He was a man of deep sympathy and an eloquent preacher. Thirty were baptized during his pastorate, which closed November 1, 1889.

Our next pastor, O. W. Van Osdel, came to us in January, 1890. His pastorate was the longest in the history of the church, extending over nearly six years. The most of you know how much of success and adversity, heartache and rejoicing were crowded into those six years. During the first year came the purchase of our pipe organ. It was made possible by an offer made by our late sister, Mary C. Ferris, to give a generous sum toward its purchase. It was a fine instrument, and was dedicated in November, 1891. Our present instrument was purchased to take its place, and stands as a memorial of one who for more than fifty years was a faithful member and worker in this church. During the year of 1892, the church building was thoroughly repaired, outside and in, and preparations were about completed for a great missionary conference, which was to be held in the church, when, without a moment's warning, the flames burst forth and soon our beautiful church, doubly dear to us because of its memories, lay in ashes at our feet. Will we ever forget the sight, as the fire crept higher and higher until that tall spire was enveloped in flames that seemed to scorch our very heart strings. The fire occurred on Monday at 5:45, December 19, 1892. That same evening a meeting was held at the home of S. H. McOmber, and it was fine to see the undaunted spirit of courage and pluck that was shown by the pastor and those men, the officers of the church.

Before the embers had died out they were planning for this new church, which was to rise from the ashes of the old. Nothing stopped. The Sunday services were held in the circuit court room, and prayer meeting in Miss Strong's kindergarten school building. The cornerstone of the new house was laid June 15th, and the first service, a prayer meeting, held December 6th, and the formal opening January 21, 1894.

The total cost of the building and furniture was $33,834, of which amount $9,209 remained unpaid at the time of opening. What joy it was again to have a church home. Following the opening came a series of meetings in which many were brought to Christ. At the close of the meetings 115 members were received at one communion service.

September 29, 1895, Pastor Van Osdel resigned, after these six years of earnest, faithful work. For five months after Dr. Van Osdel left, the church was without a pastor, but we were simply waiting, quietly and patiently, for the man we wanted, keeping in mind the adage, "all things come to him that waits." And our patience was amply rewarded, for on March 20, 1896, Dr. W. H. Geistweit accepted a call to the pastorate of this church. Soon our house was filled to overflowing. The Sabbath evening congregations taxed the seating capacity of our large house to its utmost. Our mid-week meetings were large and filled with a lively, blessed enthusiasm. Never was a pastor better loved, and never did a pastor more earnestly strive to lead his people to higher ideals of Christian living. But I am dealing with very recent history. During this pastorate we celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the church. But we were to keep our pastor only three years; during which time about 100 were received into the church, seventy by Baptism. Then Chicago, ever ready to take the best, reached out her hand and he was gone. We accepted his resignation because he told us to.

We did not wait long for our next pastor. On March 8, 1899, by a unanimous vote, Dr. T. G. Soares was called to the pastorate. He came to us on the first Sunday in April, as did his predecessor. He found the church laboring over the debt question, and soon after his coming the debt was bonded, thus reducing the interest considerably. The mission school, now called Cameron chapel, was some of the fruitage resulting from this pastor's earnest labors. But we were not to enjoy in peace for long our scholarly preacher, of whom the church had become very fond and proud. Once more that rapacious city stretched forth her hand, and our pastor was no more, for he had been called up to Chicago. He had been with us three years, and during that time, one hundred were added to the church.

July 12, 1902, Rev. J. Y. Aitchison was called to be our pastor. The $9,000 debt on the church building hung heavy over our heads, and the pastor's Scotch blood rebelled. He made up his mind it must be lifted. One morning we awakened to the fact that the thing was done; it seemed to us almost in a night, but in reality it had taken twelve weeks of steady, untiring work, performed by one man, and he preached to us two sermons every Sunday and kept up his many other pastoral duties. Will we ever cease to wonder how it was accomplished? Pledges to the amount of $11,283.36 were secured, $9,450 for bonds and accrued interest, $1,833.36 for repairs and floating debt. And the pledges were paid without one cent shrinkage. Now we were ready to dedicate our church. Jubilee services were held January 17-21, 1904, in recognition of the tenth anniversary of the opening of the church edifice, and the liquidation of the debt. And all along through these years souls have been saved and added to the church, 532 have been received into the membership of the church, 349 by baptism; 244 of this number have united with us (176 of these by baptism) since October 1, 1907, as the fruitage of the great Sunday meetings.

Within the last fifteen years the church has lost many of its old and tried members. Deacons Lewis and Kingsberry, Wyrum, Wiswell, Deacon Benner and wife, Charles Waste and C. G. Selleck.

Pastor Aitchison resigned in December, 1909, to become the joint secretary of American Baptist Foreign and Home Missionary societies. His pastorate of over seven years will always be remembered as one of the memorable epochs in our history. It was a period of growth materially, as well as spiritually, the membership rising to the 900 mark.

He is a preacher of unusual ability, showing in every sermon, in every prayer meeting and in all other services, that painstaking care in preparation which characterizes the trained and skilled workman. He is, moreover, a gospel preacher and has already had the privilege of welcoming into the church membership a large number of confessors.

THE ONTARIO BAPTIST CHURCH

By Mrs. B. F. Colwell

October, 1836, Isaac M. Wetmore came from Whitesboro, Oneida county, New York, and settled on a farm in Ontario, Knox county, Illinois. He brought his church letter and put it in the nearest Baptist church, which was at Knoxville, Illinois.

Soon after Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Robbins came from the east and they united with the church at Knoxville.

March 9th, 1844, a Baptist church was organized in Henderson, Knox county, and as it was much nearer Ontario Isaac M. Wetmore, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Robbins and Abram S. Clearwater united with it. Rev. A. Gross was the pastor.

April 29, 1854, a Baptist church was organized at Ontario, Knox county, Illinois, with the following members: Isaac M. Wetmore, Abram S. Clearwater, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Robbins, Asher H. Wetmore, Miss Cornelia Wetmore (Crane), Miss Olive T. Wetmore (Cone), Miss Cynthia Robbins (Shaw), Mr. T. Scott Cone, Mr. Newton Robbins, Mr. Jackson Rodgers, Mr. George E. Boostrom, Mr. Oliver Ide, R. S. Johnson, pastor. I. S. Wetmore elected deacon, and remained during his life.

This church has always been self-supporting. After their organization in 1854 they bought out those who had assisted them in building a union house in 1852, at a great sacrifice to some of the members. In 1874 they erected a good eight-room parsonage. They always gave very liberally to missions. They had many good pastors—John Wilder, Silas Tucker, D. D., C. C. Moore, J. B. Conyers, B. F. Colwell, Isaac Fargo, A. R. Godwin, Wm. H. Dickman, C. L. Flanders and others. Their influence has circled the globe, and eternity alone can reveal the good that little church accomplished.

February 20, 1858, a number were dismissed from the Ontario Baptist church to help organize a Baptist church in Oneida, with John Wilder as pastor, who supplied both churches for several years. He was followed by Silas Tucker, D. D., J. B. Conyers, B. F. Colwell and others. They built a good house of worship, had a large congregation and flourishing Sunday school. The building was destroyed by a cyclone. The people were discouraged and never rebuilt. Pitt H. and Penn E. Moore were baptized into this church. Pitt has spent thirty-two years in Nowgong, Assam, India. He has translated the New Testament, Psalms, hymns, schoolbooks and many other helpful books into the Assamese language and has a large school connected with the mission. Penn E. Moore has been laboring in India twenty years. He is at Kampar, India. He has been greatly afflicted, but his whole heart is in the work. He has one son in this country. His mother's last message to him was, to "always make known the Lord Jesus." Mathew Samuelson organized a church at Stromsburg, Nebraska, which was a flourishing church according to last accounts. Peter Gipson organized and practically supported a church in Altona. Many have gone west and are carrying on the good work—one as a Sunday school missionary in California.

After many deaths and removals the few left did not feel able to sustain a pastor. The parsonage was sold and moved to Wataga June 22, 1911. Mrs. Margaret Clearwater bought the church building and land. One thousand dollars ($1,000) was deposited with the Peoria Baptist association, to be held in trust for Ontario should they be able to build again, the rest of the money going to Galesburg to help in Baptist mission work. Thus those historic buildings have passed away, but the sweet memory of that church will live in the hearts of many while life lasts.

The first Sunday school in Ontario was organized in 1836 in the log cabin of Isaac M. Wetmore and removed to the schoolhouse, when one was built, and afterward to the church, where Mr. Wetmore was superintendent for many years.

Many very amusing anecdotes could be related in regard to the class of people who attended this school. They could not understand why anyone would teach without remuneration, so when the Whitesboro church sent a Sunday school library they were very much frightened and were sure they would have to pay.

April 4th, 1873, the ladies of the Baptist church in Ontario organized a home and foreign missionary society and appointed Mrs. Emily Moore president, C. A. Wetmore secretary. At their twenty-fifth anniversary they reported having sent two thousand seven hundred and seventy-five dollars to the missionaries, besides clothing, etc. At the present time three members are supporting three native teachers in India.

Isaac M. Wetmore circulated the first temperance pledge in Ontario and met more opposition on election day than we do now, for the candidates furnished "free whiskey in barrels and drank from dippers," threatening to burn out all who would not drink. Isaac M. Wetmore also kept an underground station, where the Galesburg people brought fugitives during the night and he took them to Andover in the morning.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN KNOX COUNTY

By Rev. Bernard Roe, O. C.

The Catholic church is a union of all those who believe in Christ and are bound together under one head, who is called the Pope. The very word "catholic" implies universality, and, therefore, the Catholic church must extend throughout all ages and her aim is to reach every portion of the world, according to the command of Christ to His apostles, "Go ye and teach all nations." The bond of union in the Catholic church is very close and strong. Each separate congregation is united under its pastor, the various pastors are united under the bishop of the diocese, and all of the bishops of the whole Catholic world are united under their common head, the bishop of Rome. The bishop of Rome, who is the successor of St. Peter, and who is regarded as the vicar of Christ on earth, is the supreme authority, and from him descends authority to the individual bishop and through them to the priests.

There are two great divisions in the Catholic church that are called the "church teaching" and the "church taught." The "church teaching" means those who have authority, from Christ, to teach, and these are the bishops, with the pope at their head. The "church taught" means the whole congregation of the faithful, including the priests and lower clergy. While the priests are often regarded as teachers, they are not really the authority for teaching, but their office is to learn and study better the teaching of the church and then to make it known and explain it to the people and urge them to the belief and practice.

The main principle of government, in the Catholic church, is authority. This is based on the Holy Scriptures, for Christ said to his Apostles, and, consequently, to the teaching authorities of the church, "He that heareth you, heareth me—He that despiseth you, despiseth me." Again, in another passage of the Holy Scriptures, "If he will not hear the church, let him be to you as a heathen and a publican." Once more Christ said to his Apostles, and therefore to the church, "All authority given me in heaven and on earth,"—"as the Father hath sent me, I also send you." He said to them again, "Go ye and teach all nations." The authority then, for the teaching power in the church of God, is derived from Christ. Therefore, all Catholics know that in obeying her teaching, that is the bishop's and their head, the bishop of Rome, they are obeying Christ, who gave them power and authority.

THE TEACHING OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

The teachings of the Catholic church are contained in the Apostles' creed and the ten commandments. All other, is only a development, or an explanation of these fundamentals. The Catholic church teaches the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, namely, that God is one in nature (that is, in His essence), and three in person. She teaches us that, to God the Father, the first person of the blessed trinity, is attributed the work of creation and the preserving and maintaining of the universe, and, therefore, that our own existence, as human creatures, is specially dependent on the Eternal Father. She teaches again, that God the Son, the second person of the blessed trinity, is the Redeemer and Savior of the human race. In other words, that it is only by the merits of Christ's passion and death that men can be saved. Again, she tells us that it is the work of the Holy Ghost, the third person of the Holy Trinity, to apply, to the souls of men, these same merits of Christ; and we call this action of the Holy Ghost by the name of grace, which means the help that God gives men to do good or to avoid evil.

The work of the Holy Ghost is carried on, in the Catholic church, chiefly by what is called the sacramental system. The very word "sacrament" means the making holy of something which before was neither good nor bad. A sacrament is an outward or visible sign, which is instituted by Christ and conveys grace to the soul. There are seven of these sacraments and each has its own peculiar effect, and they correspond to the chief events in the natural life.

As we come into this world by birth, so we are born to the spiritual life, by baptism. Christ's words are, "Unless a man be born again of water and of the Holy Ghost, he can not enter into the Kingdom of God." Later on, the child needs strengthening and in the church, the soul is strengthened and receives courage to fight the battles of life, by the sacrament of confirmation. The child too, as well as the grown man, needs food and drink, and for the soul we have the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist, which is the body and blood of Christ, given us as our spiritual food and drink, to nourish, to strengthen, and to give vigor and health to the soul. In the course of time, the body often falls ill and medicine is necessary, and often the presence of the doctor. The soul too falls ill, by sin, and we need spiritual remedies to restore God's favor, which means health to the soul, and we have the spiritual medicine in the sacrament of penance. The time comes when one must die, and here again the Catholic church helps us, with the sacrament of extreme unction, where the priest anoints with oil and prays over the sick one. The other two sacraments are what we call social matrimony to make holy the bond of union between man and woman, for the propagation of the human race, and the sacrament of holy order, for the continuance of the ministry in the church.

THE WORSHIP OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

The word "worship" has a very broad meaning. It signifies, in its origin, the worthship, or rather recognizing or acknowledging the worthship of a thing. Consequently, in old English usage, the word "worship" is applied to the old London guilds and to the office of the mayor, but when applied in religion, it means essentially acknowledging the worth of God, that is, that God is the supreme, absolute, personal being to whom we belong and owe all that we have. We can apply the word, also, to God's chosen creatures, who are already in heaven, the angels and saints, and acknowledge their worth as creatures of God, yet specially honored by Him.

The essential act of Catholic worship is the holy mass. The mass means a renewal of the offering which Christ made of Himself, when He died upon the cross. It is by Christ's command that the mass is offered, for on the night before he suffered, he took bread into his hands and said, "This is my body." He took wine in the chalice and said, "This is my blood," and after that He said, to his Apostles, "Do this for a memory of me." And St. Paul tells us, speaking of this same thing, "As often as ye do these things, ye shall show forth the death of the Lord until He come." The Catholic teaching, then, is that the instant the words of consecration are pronounced, by a bishop or priest who has received his authority from the Apostles, in that same moment, the bread and wine are changed into the body and blood of Christ, and Christ, our Lord, our God, is truly and substantially present on the altar, and verily there is an infinite sacrifice. For in this action, our Lord puts aside his Godhead, or hides his Godhead, and takes the form, not simply of man, but of man's food and drink. God humbles Himself,—"makes Himself a nothing," in the Pauline expression. Now, the Catholic church offers this sacrifice to God as an act of worship, and because it is the act of Christ, therefore, it is infinite, consequently,

As we come into this world by birth, so we are born to the spiritual life, by baptism. Christ's words are, "Unless a man be born again of water and of the Holy Ghost, he can not enter into the Kingdom of God." Later on, the child needs strengthening and in the church, the soul is strengthened and receives courage to fight the battles of life, by the sacrament of confirmation. The child too, as well as the grown man, needs food and drink, and for the soul we have the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist, which is the body and blood of Christ, given us as our spiritual food and drink, to nourish, to strengthen, and to give vigor and health to the soul. In the course of time, the body often falls ill and medicine is necessary, and often the presence of the doctor. The soul too falls ill, by sin, and we need spiritual remedies to restore God's favor, which means health to the soul, and we have the spiritual medicine in the sacrament of penance. The time comes when one must die, and here again the Catholic church helps us, with the sacrament of extreme unction, where the priest anoints with oil and prays over the sick one. The other two sacraments are what we call social matrimony to make holy the bond of union between man and woman, for the propagation of the human race, and the sacrament of holy order, for the continuance of the ministry in the church.

THE WORSHIP OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

The word "worship" has a very broad meaning. It signifies, in its origin, the worthship, or rather recognizing or acknowledging the worthship of a thing. Consequently, in old English usage, the word "worship" is applied to the old London guilds and to the office of the mayor, but when applied in religion, it means essentially acknowledging the worth of God, that is, that God is the supreme, absolute, personal being to whom we belong and owe all that we have. We can apply the word, also, to God's chosen creatures, who are already in heaven, the angels and saints, and acknowledge their worth as creatures of God, yet specially honored by Him.

The essential act of Catholic worship is the holy mass. The mass means a renewal of the offering which Christ made of Himself, when He died upon the cross. It is by Christ's command that the mass is offered, for on the night before he suffered, he took bread into his hands and said, "This is my body." He took wine in the chalice and said, "This is my blood," and after that He said, to his Apostles, "Do this for a memory of me." And St. Paul tells us, speaking of this same thing, "As often as ye do these things, ye shall show forth the death of the Lord until He come." The Catholic teaching, then, is that the instant the words of consecration are pronounced, by a bishop or priest who has received his authority from the Apostles, in that same moment, the bread and wine are changed into the body and blood of Christ, and Christ, our Lord, our God, is truly and substantially present on the altar, and verily there is an infinite sacrifice. For in this action, our Lord puts aside his Godhead, or hides his Godhead, and takes the form, not simply of man, but of man's food and drink. God humbles Himself,—"makes Himself a nothing," in the Pauline expression. Now, the Catholic church offers this sacrifice to God as an act of worship, and because it is the act of Christ, therefore, it is infinite, consequently, it is an infinite act of worship. All Catholics, who possibly can, are commanded to assist at this sacrifice of the mass on all Sundays and holy days. There are other acts of worship of God in the Catholic church, such as "the divine office" —specially Vespers, "Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament," and other services, but the benefit that is to be derived from them depends principally on the devotion of those who assist, whereas, the mass is God's own act and, therefore, necessarily holy and good.

As to the so-called worship of the angels and saints, it means an acknowledgment of their worth as the special friends of God in heaven, who, consequently, can plead with Him for us, and who know what we are doing, since Christ has told us "The angels in heaven rejoice over a sinner doing penance." We then honor the angels and saints, and pray to them. But there is an infinite difference between the worship of the saints and the worship of the all holy God. He is the Creator, they are creatures.

As regards practical life. All Catholics are bound to be observers of the Ten Commandments, excepting, that by authority of the Catholic church, probably by the direction of Christ, Himself, the Sabbath day was changed to the Sunday, as the day set aside for the worship of God. The commandments of the church are little more than an amplification of some of the commandments. As regards the Ten Commandments, some concern the natural law and others are a positive law. As to the natural law, there can be no excuse and no exemption. As regards the positive law, it requires a very grave reason to justify exemption. For instance, the keeping holy the Sabbath day,—a justification for the non-observance of the Sabbath day would be necessary work.

The aim of the Catholic church is to show men the way to heaven and help them to enter in; this is the work that her divine Master came down upon the earth to do. God, Himself, will not force anyone—what He does is to help. Such being the aim of the Catholic church, she makes use of all the means that she can. She takes the human race for what it is, with its strong inclination for good and its perverse turns to evil, and she endeavors to strengthen the good and root out the evil. Man has three great powers, free will, understanding and feeling. With the last of these, the church has little, or nothing directly in command. Her chief object is to train the soul, that is, the intellectual powers and the will. She trains the intellectual, by giving knowledge, the knowledge of the truth. She influences the will power, by endeavoring to show the beauty and the charm of the things of good, to manifest, as much as she can, the infinite, boundless love of God. The means that the Catholic church makes use of are physical, intellectual and moral. Under the heading of physical would come our church buildings, schools, hospitals, public institutions for charitable works. The intellectual means would be instruction and education. The moral means would be the worship of God, the sacramental system, sermons, exhortations and, not least, good example.

HOW HAVE THESE WORKS BEEN CARRIED ON IN KNOX COUNTY?

At the present day there are four principal centers of Catholicism. Of these, of course, the chief is Galesburg; St. Augustine comes next, then Wataga and Williamsfield. The origin of Catholicity, in Galesburg, is a strong contrast with that of St. Augustine. The original agreement of the founders of Galesburg township forbids the selling of ground for the building of any church or institution other than Presbyterian. We Catholics cannot complain of this, because the original founders were an essentially Presbyterian fellowship, and they wished to keep away all religious strife. Yet in the course of a few years the Catholic church made its way, even into this Protestant center. St. Augustine, on the other hand, was quite a Catholic foundation. The Mattinglys and several other Catholic families, from Kentucky, came in 1837 and joined other Catholic families, chiefly farmers from Ohio. They formed an agricultural colony and built the Church of St. Augustine, taking the name from Austin, or Augustine, Mattingly. The town grew up around and took its name from the church.

To return to Galesburg, in the '40s, various Irish families, among them the Grimes and the O'Connors, settled in the Spoon River valley. A decade later many of them moved to Galesburg and joined forty or fifty Catholic families, who came here from New Lebanon, Columbus county, New York, and from Pittsfield, Massachusetts. This was in the years '55, '56 and '57. They found grievous difficulties to contend with in the exercise of their religion, for there was no church and at first not even a pastor. They were compelled to go as far as St. Augustine for all religious worship and even to carry hither their dead. Father John Fitnam was the first pastor, from 1856 to 1857, and was succeeded by Father O'Neil. Father O'Neil made the first attempt at building a Catholic church outside the then city limits. For a while previous to this mass had been celebrated over Mooney's blacksmith shop, on the site of the present kindergarten school. Father O'Neil laid plans for the building of a frame church on a site on the south side of East Second street, between South Kellogg and Seminary streets. The building was already well advanced, when the cyclone of 1858 struck and utterly destroyed it.

In those days prejudice was so strong against Catholicism that a public thanksgiving was celebrated in some of the churches for this so-called act of God.

But, nothing daunted, the Catholic body set to work once more and purchased a site on South Academy street, near the Burlington railway crossing, and they built the present St. Patrick's church in the year 1863. Most of the credit for this is due to Father O'Neil, who, however, was sent elsewhere before he could complete the work. Father James Powers succeeded him on July 5, 1863, but staid only a short while, and he was replaced by Father Maurice Howard in 1864. Father Howard added the church tower and the bell.

During the pastorate of Father Howard, Michael O'Neil started a subscription and bought a Catholic burial ground on the south side of Lake George, now known as Old St. Mary's cemetery. Father Howard labored for the Catholic people of the district for about thirteen years, and it must, at times, have taxed even his utmost powers, for the district of Galesburg then extended from Oneida on the north to Maquon and Table Grove on the south. On August 16, 1877, Father Howard resigned the pastorate of Galesburg, as he was unwilling to assume the responsibility of building schools.

Father Joseph Costa, O. C., succeeded Father Howard, and to him, aided by a hearty co-operation of the Catholic body, is due, in a great part, all the credit for the present fine buildings and the good social standing of Catholics in this city. Immediately on his arrival Father Costa grasped the urgency of building a Catholic school that should be on an equal footing with any educational institution in the city. (A sketch of the life of Father Costa may be read elsewhere in the biographical volume of this history.) During his first year he built St. Joseph's academy and the following year the adjoining convent, which was opened in 1879, at a total cost of nearly $30,000, the money being raised by very generous donations, chiefly from the workingmen. A few years later he purchased a house on the site of the present St. Mary's school and opened it as a primary school for smaller children, who could not safely cross the C., B. & Q. tracks. St. Joseph's academy and St. Mary's school were both placed under the care of the Sisters of Providence from St. Mary in the Woods, Indiana, and one can hardly say enough to praise their indefatigible zeal and labor for the advancement in secular and religious education of their pupils. Self-sacrifice and constant vigilance have been the keynotes of their work. At the present day there are about 250 pupils at the academy and between seventy and eighty at St. Mary's school.

Father Joseph Costa, O. C., succeeded Father Howard, and to him, aided by a hearty co-operation of the Catholic body, is due, in a great part, all the credit for the present fine buildings and the good social standing of Catholics in this

Father Costa's greatest work was undertaken a few years later, when, on account of the developments of the railway, many Irish and other Catholic workmen came to the town and so filled up the little church at St. Patrick's that it became imperative to build another church, and Father Costa determined on something that should be a credit to the Catholic body. Through the agency of Mr. Michael English he purchased a site on the corner of South Prairie and West South streets, and there he built the present church of Corpus Christi, at a cost of between $45,000 and $50,000. This was in the year 1883, when the church was solemnly opened and blessed by Rev. Bishop Spalding. Three years later he built the present rectory on the adjoining property. There is little need to say that the raising of these great sums of money involved much labor, but the people were generous, and all threw themselves into the work with heart and soul and there was thorough co-operation between congregation and pastor.

But Father Costa's labors were not yet over. Looking around, he saw the need of an educational institution for the Catholic boys and young men of the neighborhood, but now he found that the congregation could scarcely support the burden of a new edifice, and he applied to his own superiors for aid. He bought a site on Tompkins and Prairie and plans were drawn in the hope of fulfilling a long cherished desire—a college for Catholic boys. In the years '93 and '94 the building was put up at a cost of between $40,000 and $50,000, most of which was paid by Father Costa and the superiors of the Order of Charity. The institution has this year been incorporated under charter as Corpus Christi college. The first president of Corpus Christi college was Father Ernest Hawley, who had but recently come from Europe. At first the pupils were very few, numbering only 25 at the end of the first academic year. Since then the college has steadily gone on, increasing in numbers and efficiency. Father Costa himself later took the presidency of the college, but in 1902 he handed it over to Father George Doubleday, the present much respected incumbent. During the past few years the average number of pupils (all over twelve years) has been about one hundred. Many of the past students are now in the front rank of the clerical, medical and legal professions or the great railroads, on the farms and in the main walks of national public life.

But even now Father Costa was not fully satisfied with the educational resources of the parish. There was a growing need in the seventh ward of more stable school accommodation for the children, and he soon set about planning for the building of the present St. Mary's school, which was erected in the year 1905 at a cost of about $20,000.

In the year 1887 Bishop Spalding divided the parishes of Corpus Christi and St. Patrick's. Father Costa was left parish priest of Corpus Christi and dean of the district, and Father Louis Selva, his nephew, was appointed pastor of St. Patrick's. He was succeeded a few years later by Father Doubleday, who later became president of Corpus Christi college and in 1898 resigned St. Patrick's in favor of Father F. Baines, who has since then held the pastorate.

The next work done by the Catholic body in the city, was the purchase of St. Mary's hospital. In 1908, the sisters of St. Francis, from Peoria, came and took possession and since then they have exercised one of the excellent works of charity, nursing and tending, with indefatigable care, the sick and the poor. The praise and thanks of many in Galesburg will go out to these sisters for the attendance and loving care of those whom misfortune, accident and sickness have brought nigh unto death.

But Father Costa, though in the "sere and yellow leaf," is still full of energy and many plans. He sees the need, and all are with him, of a Catholic hall where the different Catholic organizations may home; and, at the present moment, a vigorous attempt is being made to raise the necessary funds.

It was one of the glories of Father Costa, and of his congregation, that no debts are left on these splendid buildings, save a comparatively small one on St. Mary's school. The Catholics are still a small body in the town, numbering at most some 3,000, but a great work has been begun and, with the blessing of God, will go on and increase. The Catholic church is ever striving to attain her ends and, consequently, she can never rest satisfied. Priests and people must be ever on the onward march and ready for all dangers in the battle of life.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ST. AUGUSTINE

The parish of St. Augustine is one of the most interesting, and possibly the oldest, in the diocese of Peoria. It was founded within the boundary of what was then Fulton county. Later on, church and town passed on wheels into Knox county. As the very name itself applies, St. Augustine is a Catholic foundation. As far back as 1836, and '37, a Catholic colony was formed and John Gallett and G. McElroy came from Ohio, and the Mattinglys and many other Canadian-Irish, who had long settled near the home of Bishop Spalding, came from Kentucky. They built a little church for themselves, in 1844, dedicating it to St. Augustine, and the township sprang up around and took its name from the church. Father St. Cyr was the first priest to serve the district. from 1837 to '39, but he and Fathers Conway and Doyle, who succeeded him, had no residence there. Various priests came, with more or less regularity, now from LaSalle, like Father Raho, or Father Brady from Kickapoo. The first resident priest was Father James Halpin, who took charge in 1873.

In the meantime, the present church was built, in 1863, under the supervision of Father Allbrecht. A few years afterwards, Father Larmer removed it from Fulton county, across the border to its present site in Knox county. This was on account of the C., B. & Q. railway being compelled, by the circumstances of the ground, to place their depot so far north of the old town. When the town came to the depot, the church was bound to follow.

Since the time of Father Halpin, many priests have held the pastorate. Father Maurice Howard, on leaving Galesburg, was at St. Augustine from 1876 to 1878. Father P. J. O'Reilly, now Bishop O'Reilly, succeeded him and remained until 1881. From 1881 to 1884, Father Fallihee was pastor. Father Dunn, from 1884 to 1887, and Father Scheuren from 1887 to 1893. Father Kniery was there from 1894 to 1897, and he was followed by Father Kelly, who, in his turn, was succeeded by Father Markey, the present parish priest. The original priest's house was built by Father Halpin about 1874 or '75, but a very unfortunate accident happened in 1911, when a fire broke out and the house was utterly destroyed. This year, 1912, by the self-sacrificing generosity of the people, Father Markey has been enabled to build up a substantial and handsome brick residence.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN WATAGA

The increase in the Catholic population of Knox county is due, chiefly, to the railway development. When the railways were built, in the sixties, great numbers of American-Irish laborers came to the district and settled, for the most part, in the neighborhood of Galesburg. After a while, many of these took to farming. They either rented, or by dint of great economy, were enabled to purchase their lands. Little by little, they and their families spread over the county, but for the most part, they formed little colonies, such as at Wataga, Williamsfield, Maquon, Abingdon, Soperville, Rio and Saluda. Wataga and Williamsfield were the most notable of these centers. At first, all came within the limits of the Galesburg parish, as well as a large district extending into adjoining counties. When the increase of numbers came, Bishop Spalding cut off some portions of the district and among them, Wataga, which was assigned to Galva and Williamsfield, which now belongs to the parish of Elmwood. Also Abingdon, which is within the limits of St. Augustine parish.

About seven or eight years ago, the Catholic body around Wataga built a little church for themselves and this church was solemnly blessed by Father Costa, rural dean of the district. This chapel is served from Galva, every two weeks.

Williamsfield and Abingdon are other small centers of Catholic activity within the county limits, but, as yet, they have no chapel of their own, but have mass regularly every month, celebrated in a private dwelling, or a rented building.

During recent years, there has been a considerable increase in the number of Catholics, due, no doubt, to natural increase, but also to a very considerable extent, to the political persecutions and, consequent insecurity of life and property of southeastern Europe. Many Slavs have come from southern Austria and, at the time of writing, there is a considerable immigration of Albanians, who, suffering under Turkish misrule, have abandoned their country and, with wives and children, are seeking a home under the flag of liberty. The advent of these foreigners presents a new problem for the Catholic church. These men, for the most part well educated and accustomed to ease and comforts of life, find themselves here in a new home land, without knowing the language, without experience, and many of them in poverty, robbed, as they were, by the Turkish soldiery. They are all Catholics and the church must do her best to provide for them. The greatest difficulty is the language, but they need also help and advice as to their employment and the forming of their homes.

THE JEWS AND THEIR RELIGION

By Max J. Mack

The ancient Hebrews, during the many years they lived in peace under the rule of their own kings, were shepherds and agriculturists. They were a peaceful, God-fearing people, brave in the defense of their country and martyrs to their religious belief. Finally, defeated and driven from their own country into other lands, they were always subjected to persecution, and due from centuries long expulsion from the soil and from their original agricultural pursuits, they have become, more than others, city-dwelling folks. They were forced into other occupations; they became the merchants and money lenders of the world, and their descendants of the present century are still largely engaged in business undertakings. They entered into the professions; they drifted into literature, science and music, becoming proficient and then prominent in whatever field they entered. Today, in Europe and America, Jews are amongst the leading men in the professional and business world, in art, science, literature and music, and thousands are garment makers and mechanics—and there are many Jewish artisans.

It is the hope of the American philanthropist that the Jews will again become tillers of the soil to a larger degree, and every effort is being made to turn some of the thousands of Jewish emigrants that yearly come to America away from the large cities on to the farm of the west and the northwest.

It is perhaps not generally known, but is a fact just the same, that in length of residence and participation in every struggle for the welfare of the country, the Jews of America equal that of any other religious denomination. The Jew in the United States is American to the core. In 1654, thirty-four years after the Mayflower landed the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth, Massachusetts, the St. Caterina arrived at New Amsterdam (the present New York) with twenty-three Jews on board. In 1682 the Jews of New Amsterdam rented a house for religious service, although undoubtedly they met for worship before that.

In all the wars of the country Jews have taken prominent and honorable part. Beginning with the revolutionary struggle, Jews have fought on all the battlefields where patriots gave their lives that their country might live. There were nine Jews amongst the signers to the now important resolutions of 1765, the first step which eventually led to the war of the revolution.

In the records of the revolutionary army, incomplete as they are, are the names of twenty-seven Jewish officers. One Jew, Haym Solomon, rendered invaluable financial services to the government during the darkest days of the revolutionary war, he being the chief individual reliance of Robert Morris, superintendent of finance; Solomon loaned the government $200,000, an immense sum of money in those days.

Forty-three Jews are recorded in the war of 1812; fifty-seven are recorded in the Mexican war. In the civil war 7,500 Jews fought in the northern and southern armies, a larger number in proportion to the number of Jews who were then in the United States, about 150,000, than was furnished by any other religious denomination. For the Spanish-American war 2,451 Jews enlisted in the army and forty-two in the navy; thirty-two were officers.

I wish that I had the space to write in detail concerning the settlement, history and services of the Jews in all states of the Union. In the cabinet, in the United States senate, our house of representatives, in the diplomatic service, in state legislature, on the bench, in federal, state and municipal offices, hundreds of Jews have served and are serving the federal government, its states and cities. They are prepared to make all sacrifices for their country either in war or peace and constantly strive for the perpetuation of good government, whilst being loyal to the faith and race tradition.

The term "Jewish nationality" is a misnomer. They are racial, but not national. There is no Jewish nation on the face of the earth, and therefore no person of Jewish nationality. The word "Jewish" applies purely to a religious belief. The principles and doctrines upon which the whole system of the Jewish religion is founded may be reduced to the following articles:

1st. That there exists one God, the undivided and indivisible Creator and ruler of the universe, in whom is centered the essence of all power and wisdom and goodness.

2nd. That the omnipotent creator rules the universe exclusively by His own dominion, and that no mediator intervenes between Him and His creatures.

3rd. That the writings of Moses and the prophets who succeeded him were written by divine authority and inspiration, and that these only constitute the holy testament, and these only are the rule and guide for our religious conduct.

4th. That the human soul—the essence of our being—is spiritual and immortal like the Almighty God who gave it.

5th. That our soul, after being by death separated from our body, will receive its reward or punishment at the hands of the Creator in accordance with our acts and conduct in the present life. The doctrine we hold in regard to future reward and punishment is that the recompense of the soul will be of a purely spiritual nature; that it will have its reward in enjoying eternal life and bliss in the immediate presence of God, who is the source of life and happiness, and its punishment in the opposite.

The chief duties required of its disciples by the Jewish religion are:

1st. To reverence and worship God, to obey His will and to be thankful for His goodness.

2nd. To be just and charitable toward our fellow-beings; to promote their morals and welfare and to do to them as we wish them to do to us.

3rd. To improve our mind and understanding; to acquire knowledge and so conduct our lives and actions as to promote our own perfection and happiness and at the same time that of our fellow-creatures.

Two thousand years of trials, tribulations and humiliations for the sake of his religion has taught the Jew tolerance and respect for all other religions, therefore you never hear of his trying to proselyte anyone. The prejudice against Jews in this country, in our city and county, if there be any, is caused by wrong impressions and gross misrepresentations of their characteristics. Instead of taking the thousands of Jews famous in the world of finance, letters, business, music, diplomacy and statesmanship as the standard, the Jew is usually judged and wrongfully judged by the lowest of his race.

The Jewish people who have resided in Galesburg during the past sixty years were mostly engaged in business enterprises. There is one who is at present and has been for a number of years a locomotive engineer in the employ of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co. It is Harry Glickson, well liked by all his fellow-employes; and there have been a few others who were railroad employes and mechanics, but as a rule they are and have been merchants, and for that reason a history of the Jews of Galesburg will be a mere sketch of business men, lacking in interesting or exciting details.

The Jewish people of Galesburg, like those of other communities, are public-spirited, patriotic and law-abiding. They always favor public improvements; are liberal contributors to public enterprise, never turn down a worthy charity and never refuse help to the deserving poor, especially the poor of their own people. Indeed, a Jew in need of help never goes to any but a co-religionist for assistance, and he is never refused help.

Although always few in number, the Jewish people of Galesburg have a church organization of their own wherever possible. Forty years ago they had a congregation with their own rabbi, but this was given up after a few years. Five years ago the present congregation "Sons of Judah" was organized, Louis Nirdlinger being its first president, and he held the office up to the time of his death. The congregation holds its services in the Universalist church on Sunday evenings (but not regularly), and they are conducted by Rabbi Chas. S. Levi of Peoria, assisted by a splendid choir.

The Jews have a cemetery of their own, it being a beautiful place only a few rods south of Linwood cemetery.

The Jewish women have an organization known as the "Ladies' Aid society," partly social, but mostly charitable, its principal aim and object being to aid destitute Jewish people, either living here or transient.

The first Jewish citizen of Knox county was Abraham Jacobi, who came to Knoxville from Peoria in 1850 and moved from there to Galesburg in 1855, engaging in the clothing business on the north side of the square. He retired from business in 1890, his son Albert taking over his interest in the firm of Jacobi and Mack. Mr. A. Jacobi died November 24th, 1909. Mr. Jacobi has four sons living, members of the firm of Jacobi Bros. and Mack—Harry A., Fred D. and Albert G. Jacobi, residing in Galesburg, while one son, Nathan, lives in Tracy, Minn. Solomon Spear came to Galesburg at an early day and first started in the dry goods business, but afterward conducted a hat and fur business, retail, but later became a jobber of hats, caps and gloves in Galesburg, Illinois. Mr. Spear secured a half interest in the management of the Illinois hotel, retaining the same until a year ago.

The Mayer brothers, Henry and Abraham, engaged in Galesburg first in the clothing business. Henry Mayer afterwards became a manufacturer and retailer of cigars, until the time of his death. His three sons are now in the hotel business in Chicago.

Max J. Mack came to Galesburg from Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1875, was in business for himself one year, and in 1876 formed a partnership with his father-in-law, A. Jacobi. In 1895 the present firm of Jacobi Bros. and Mack was organized.

Solomon Frolich came to Galesburg in 1879 and engaged in the wholesale and retail liquor business with Henry Gardt. In 1883 Louis Nirdlinger moved to Galesburg from Winchester, Illinois, and became a partner in the firm. Mr. Nirdlinger died November 28, 1910, and his son, Sidney, took his interest in the firm of Frolich & Nirdlinger.

Harry A. Jacobi came from Tracy, Minnesota, in 1895. Henry Herman, in 1899; I. Bondi and H. G. Bondi of Bondi Bros. Co., and I. H. Hexter in 1897. Mr. Hexter died June 22, 1911. L. Bernstein came in 1895; J. J. Winkler, the optician, in 1897; Jos. Gross of the Gross Mfg. Co., in 1898.

Charles Gumbiner originally came to Galesburg in 1876, but left after remaining a few years. He returned in 1893. The three Bowman brothers came in 1906. D. C. Halper, in 1897; M. Stamm, in 1902; B. Michaelson, in 1900; Charles Schimmel and Mr. Freedman, in 1910, and Block and Sax, in 1912.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN KNOX COUNTY

By the Rev. Charles W. Leffingwell, D.D.

The Episcopal church was not largely represented among the pioneers of Illinois, and very few churchmen settled in Knox county. Some of them, as in other parts of the state, were Church of England people, who remained steadfast in their traditional faith and worship, though for a long time they were without pastors and churches. Bishop Philander Chase, the first bishop of Illinois (1835 to 1852), passed through Knox county in 1836, holding services and looking up members of his scattered flock. His long journeys over the great diocese of Illinois were made by boat on the rivers and in his old family carriage (which he called "the ark") across the prairies. He met with many accidents in his travels, and being a very heavy man, his ribs were frequently broken. It is said that nearly every rib in his body suffered in that way, and that some were broken twice. The story is told that on one of his visitations (it might have been in Knox county), when the tavern keeper's son was about to go out with notices that the bishop would preach, the landlord inquired: "What denomination shall I tell the people you belong to?" "Tell them," said the bishop, "that I belong to the church which translated the Bible." The lad rushed out, ringing a bell and shouting, "The man who translated the Bible will preach at the schoolhouse tonight!"

Bishop Whitehouse succeeded Bishop Chase, and after him Bishop McLaren had the oversight of all Illinois, for a time. In 1877, the great diocese was divided into three, named Chicago, Quincy and Springfield, Knox county being in the Quincy diocese. Bishop Alexander Burgess was the first bishop of Quincy (1878-1901); Bishop Taylor succeeded, his episcopate being very short; Bishop Fawcett became bishop of Quincy, in 1904. These were all good and strong men, and their helpful influence was felt throughout the community.

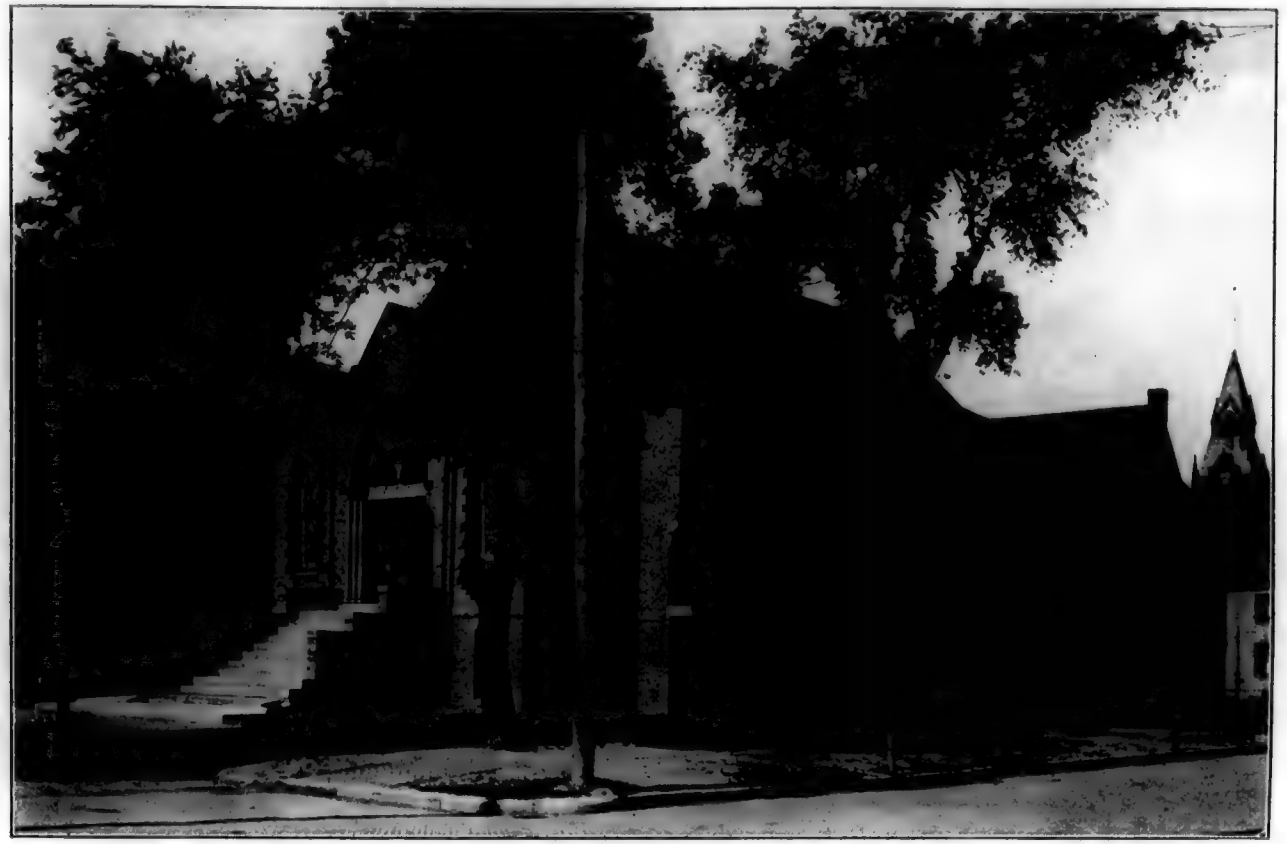
The first parish organized in the county was St. John's, Knoxville, 1843. The first vestry, elected September 9th, at the house of Wm. Lighton, was John G. Sanborn and Elisha Hummastun, wardens, and John Johnston, Darius A. Beckwith and James Knox. Names of others appear in the records of the parish as active in the work of the early days, Wm. Hester, H. N. Keightley, Wm. N. Phillips, P. H. Sanford, John Babbington.

The Rev. Dudley Chase, son of Bishop Chase, was the first minister in charge of St. John's parish, Knoxville, coming from Jubilee college in Peoria county, to officiate on Sundays. His first baptism is recorded under date of September 7, 1844; Hester Francis, daughter of John and Ann Johnston, born October 20, 1843.

Upon the organization of Grace church, Galesburg (1859), its rector, the Rev. Wm. T. Smithett, took charge of the parish in Knoxville. The Rev. J. S. Chamberlain, followed Mr. Smithett as missionary in charge. Under his administration St. John's church was built, though unfortunately with a large debt for the small parish to carry.



Upon the establishment of St. Mary's school in Knoxville the rector of the school became rector of the parish, and the school attended Sunday services in the parish church. The Rev. E. H. Rudd was for some years rector of St. John's, and for many years was chaplain and instructor in St. Mary's school.

Grace church, Galesburg, was organized as a parish in 1859, having for some years been served as a mission. At a meeting held in the office of Sidney Myers, September 28th, articles of association were signed by the following: J. R. Gordon, S. Gordon, H. D. Brackett, Josias Grant, G. Bement, A. McDowell, Wm. L. Ransom, G. C. Lamphere, Lin P. Gowdey, Wm. N. Phillips, O. J. Flagg, G. Tee, Thomas B. Martin, B. Nettleton, Wm. Merwin Ransom, D. C. Brown, W. J. DeLancey, L. R. Brown, Sydney Myers, Elisha Field.

It was under Bishop Whitehouse that the parish was admitted into union with the diocese of Illinois. The Rev. Wm. T. Smithett presided at the meeting of organization and afterwards became rector of the parish. Under his energetic leadership a church was soon built and opened for worship, Christmas, 1860. The first vestry was elected October 24, 1859, consisting of: Sydney Myers and Wm. N. Phillips, wardens; Wm. M. Ransom, Harry T. Smith, Josias Grant, Geo. W. Woods, D. C. Brown, D. Bronson, Lucius Chapman, Timothy Nash.

In June, 1862, a resolution of thanks was adopted by the vestry, to the rector "for his untiring efforts to place the parish free from debt, as well as for his uniform devotion to all the duties of his office."

The Rev. L. N. Freeman succeeded Mr. Smithett, early in 1863, remaining only a year, to be followed by the Rev. J. W. Cracraft, in April, 1864. Mr. Cracraft's course was somewhat eccentric (to say the least), from an Episcopal point of view, and he soon got the parish divided and himself into trouble with the bishop of the diocese. Some who disapproved of his "preaching politics" and shutting up his own church to preach elsewhere, withdrew from the parish, while others became violent partisans in his support. The excitement of controversy found expression in the Chicago papers and in sundry pamphlets which were widely circulated. The bishop ordered the church closed, and the senior warden, Thomas B. Martin, who at this writing is still senior warden, put a padlock and a notice on the door. These were removed by order of the vestry, and Mr. Martin was threatened with prosecution in the civil courts. Mr. Cracraft was inhibited by the bishop and the parish was suspended by the convention of the diocese.

Though the contumacious rector and his friends made a brave struggle, they soon "began to feel the halter draw." In a year the pew rents had fallen off so much that, on November 18, 1865, Mr. Cracraft was constrained to make a proposition to remain in charge for what he could get after paying all expenses of the church, including the elements for the holy communion. In July, 1866, he withdrew, and all parties seem to have become convinced that an Episcopal church, at war with the bishop and diocese, could not prosper. Respectful overtures were made for reinstatement, "and they lived together happy ever after."

The Rev. C. A. Bruce was the next pastor, his rectorship lasting about a year. The Rev. F. W. Boyd followed, with another brief rectorship. In 1868, Mr. C. W. Leffingwell, who had opened St. Mary's school, Knoxville, was supplying Sunday services. The Rev. W. Thompson was pastor, 1869-1871, and the Rev. Stephen T. Allen from 1871 to 1877. His successors were: The Rev. G. H. Higgins, 1877-1880; the Rev. C. J. Shrimpton, 1881-1887; the Rev. John Wilkinson, 1888-1890; the Rev. C. R. Hodge, 1891-1893; the Rev. W. B. Guion, 1894-1895; the Rev. W. H. Benham, 1896-1898; the Rev. E. F. Gee, 1899-1902; the Rev. B. E. Diggs, 1904-1906; the Rev. J. M. Mason, 1907-1910; the Rev. Arthur S. Peck, 1911.

Among the Galesburg families not heretofore mentioned that have been helpful in sustaining Grace church, should be noted those of David Greenleaf and Col. Clark E. Carr. Thomas B. Martin was first elected vestryman in 1864, and during most of the time since, to the date of this writing, has held the office and performed efficiently the duties of senior warden.

St. John's church, Galesburg, was organized in 1893, and soon after was admitted to union with the Synod of Quincy. It is a Swedish congregation, and by license of the bishop the liturgy and ritual of the old church of Sweden are, for the most part, used. The present pastor (1912), the Rev. John E. Almfeldt, during his brief term, has succeeded in getting a lot and a new church, and has greatly strengthened the work. There is also a Swedish mission at Woodhull.

Perhaps more important and far-reaching than parochial work, in Knox county, has been the influence of the Episcopal church in building and maintaining educational institutions. Some account of St. Mary's, St. Alban's and St. Martha's schools is given elsewhere in this volume.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH IN KNOX COUNTY

By Rev. Carl J. Bengston

The Lutheran church is the oldest Protestant church, being the first to spring from the reformation. It is also the largest of the Protestant churches. It is the principal church in Germany, the state church in Sweden, Norway and Denmark and is comparatively strong in the Baltic provinces of Russia. In America it is divided into four general organizations, the general synod, the general council, the synodical conference and the united synod south and several independent synods, and it ranks third in membership, being outnumbered only by the Methodists and the Baptists.

It is commonly known as the Evangelical Lutheran church. The word "evangelical" had "its origin in the stress laid upon the preaching of the gospel by Luther and his co-laborers over against the errors, the legalism and the fables of Rome," and was not intended to express any marks of distinction from the other Protestant churches as is sometimes erroneously stated and believed. The word "Lutheran" was taken from the founder of the church, the great hero of the reformation, Martin Luther. Both names were first applied to the followers of Luther, in a sneering way, by the Catholic priests of the day and were afterwards adopted by the church as its historic name.

The reformation dates from the 31st of October, 1517, when Luther published his ninety-five theses by nailing them to the door of the old Castle church in Wittenberg. While primarily directed against the sale of indulgences, authorized by the pope, these theses contained the fundamental truths upon which the Lutheran church is based. Luther denied that the church possessed an infinite fund of spiritual treasures in the merits, i. e., the sufferings and sacrifices of Christ, the saints and all the redeemed, that it could at will dispense, if it chose, for cash. He contended that God alone could forgive sins and that man was justified by faith alone through the meritorious work of Christ. The effect of these theses was tremendous. No greater defiance had ever before been hurled against the Church of Rome. All Europe awoke as out of a long and troublous sleep. Men's attention everywhere was directed as never before to the sins that were daily committed under the guise of religion. The result was greater even than Luther could have realized, and he very soon found that he could not retrace his steps, but must go on, under the guidance and in the strength of God, until he had finished his work that unfolded itself to him step by step and the reformation was accomplished.

THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH

Like all orthodox churches, the Lutheran church has three ecumenical creeds, the apostolic, the nicene and the athanasian. Besides these it has its own distinct confession, known as the Augsburg Confession, from the fact that it was submitted by the different Lutheran churches in Germany to the Emperor Charles the Fifth at the diet of Augsburg on June 25, 1530, as a summary of their religious belief. Some of the general bodies constituting the Lutheran church subscribe to the Augsburg confession only. Others subscribe to it with this addition, "being understood in accordance with the further developments of these doctrines as contained in the other symbolical books of the Lutheran church." These "other symbolical books" are the Apology for the Augsburg Confession, the Schmalcald Articles, Luther's Smaller and Larger Catechism and the Formula of Concord. Space will not permit giving a history of these books, nor even of the Augsburg Confession. It is sufficient to say of the latter that it was written by Philip Melanchthon, the scholar of the reformation, and carefully revised by Luther. As to its contents, it was based partly on what is known as the Marburg-Schwalbach articles, written by Luther in the autumn of the previous year, and partly on the Targan articles, written largely by Melanchthon and submitted to the Elector John in March, 1530. The Augsburg Confession contains twenty-eight articles, of which the first twenty-one treat of the doctrines of the church and the other seven of abuses that had crept into the Roman church.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH IN SWEDEN

As we are concerned in this article mainly with the Swedish branch of the Lutheran church, it might be well to mention briefly the introduction and establishment of Lutheranism in Sweden. At the time of the reformation the Church of Rome was supreme in Europe. The Latin and the Germanic races were all Catholic. Sweden had been a Catholic country for more than five centuries. But the dawn of the new era, the revival of learning, had reached the countries of the far north. Young men began, as never before, to flock to the universities of the continent to study. In 1516 we find one of these young men from Sweden, Olavus Petri, at the university of Wittenberg, where Luther was one of the principal teachers. This young man was, no doubt, in Wittenberg in 1517 and must have read the ninety-five theses of Luther. He must also have been a most willing witness to the tremendous results of the publication of these theses, and we are safe in saying that he undoubtedly listened to some of the discussions that followed. This young man possessed some of the characteristics of his great teacher, and, like Luther, though in a less pronounced degree, he had experienced in his own heart the birth of the reformation.

In 1519 Olavus Petri returned to Sweden. The Bible was now his light and he was filled with the blessed assurance that his sins were forgiven. His first field of activity was the city of Strengnoes, where he was first clerk to the bishop, then principal of the cloister school, and then consecrated a deacon. Here he immediately began to give lectures on portions of the holy scriptures to the canons and choristers under his care. Many of the young men were soon won over to the new faith, and one elderly man of great influence, the learned Laurentius Andreae, was so powerfully impressed by the truth of God that he openly defended the young and eloquent Olavus Petri against those who opposed him.

These were stirring days, politically, in Sweden. King Christian of Denmark had invaded the country with a powerful army, intending to bring it under his sway and in order to insure himself of ultimate success in this undertaking he had secured certain commissions from the pope. He was everywhere successful and in a remarkably short time had conquered the whole country. But it was to be only for a short time. Drunk with the glory of his conquest, he wreaked such bloody vengeance on those who had opposed him, especially among the nobility, that the whole country soon arose in revolt. A wave of patriotism arose in the north and rolled on toward the south, increasing in magnitude as it went. It centered around one man, the young and fearless Gustavus Vasa, who at the head of his Dalecarlians pushed south, and did not stop until he had driven King Christian and his army out of the kingdom.

While at Strengnoes, Gustavus Vasa first came in contact with the two men who had openly espoused the reformation. He appears to have been greatly impressed with their ability and also with the truth that they preached, for when he had become established at Stockholm as King of Sweden he immediately called them there and made Andreae his chancellor and Petri at once clerk of the city and preacher of the court church. He apparently was determined, from the first, to make the Lutheran church the church of his kingdom. And by judicious movements, as well as by the great personal power he wielded, he succeeded four years later, at the diet of Vesteraas in 1527, in having all the legal barriers removed for the formal introduction of the reformation everywhere in Sweden. There naturally was some opposition to the change among the people and especially among the Dalecarlians, but the leaders of the new movement understood the Swedish mind and gradually overcame every obstacle. One powerful aid in their work was the translation into Swedish of the New Testament, in 1526, and of the whole Bible, in 1541.

For more than half a century, the Catholic church made persistent but unsuccessful efforts to check the growth of Lutheranism in Sweden. But towards the close of the century, great dangers threatened the church. King John, who had been influenced by Calvinism and had sought to infuse it into the church, had died and the heir to the throne, King Sigismund of Poland, was a bigoted Catholic. For this reason it became necessary for the leaders of the church to take such steps as would safeguard it against any efforts of the king to supplant it. During the interim Duke Charles, temporary head of the realm, called a church council at Upsala, in 1593, to settle once for all whether or not the Lutheran church should be the church of Sweden. At this council, composed largely of the state senators and some 400 clergymen from different parts of the realm, and a few influential business men, and sitting from the 3rd to the 19th of March, the three ecumenical creeds were first adopted. And then, on March 5th, the Augsburg Confession, as subscribed to by the Lutherans in Germany, was unanimously adopted as the common faith of the people of the kingdom. It was also decided that the king should be bound by oath, before he could be crowned, to respect the religious faith of his subjects.

It seems almost incredible that the Lutheran church of Sweden could have been able to establish itself and to exist for 70 years in these strenuous times without setting forth in any confessional document the principles that had brought about the change. But the explanation must be sought mainly in the fact that in Sweden the reformation really began from the throne and gradually worked its way down through the mass of the people. The change from the old to the new had been so gradual that few noticed it, and the champions of the reformation were never required, by the temporal ruler, to give public account of their faith, as had been the case in Germany. And when the estates of the realm did decide to adopt Lutheranism as a common faith, after having been confessed by the people for more than half a century, this was done because of dangers to their faith that they had just passed through and because of still greater dangers that were threatening.

WHAT IS LUTHERANISM?

What are the teachings of the Lutheran church? It will not be possible to give a full answer to this question here. Only in a broad sense can the tenets of our church be stated. Two basic principles underlie the Lutheran church, both being especially emphasized by Luther. The first is called the "formal principle," and is expressed thus, "The sacred scriptures are the word of God and the only infallible rule for man's faith and life." To this view of the scriptures alone having a normative value Luther came, as you might say, by slow stages. He had been too well schooled in the doctrines and the power of his church to reject her authority hastily. But he naturally must come to the position where he could not concede that either pope or church council had any authority over and above the word of God. Neither are infallible. But the word of God is. The second principle is called the "material principle," and is thus expressed, "Man is justified before God by faith alone in Christ Jesus, and not by any works of his own." It was this view of his own salvation that caused Luther to make his first break with the Roman church.

According to the Lutheran view, speaking broadly, "there is an intimate union of the supernatural with the natural, of the inner with the outer, of the divine with the human, in such a way that the former is present and active in, with and by the latter, and that the latter is a God-given organ and form of existence, in the present world, of the former. With regard to the person of the Redeemer the Lutheran church acknowledges with the greatest emphasis and earnestness the divine mystery in the incarnation (John 1, 14) of the Son of God, and maintains in unqualified faith the incarnate as the one in whom the divine and the human are absolutely united in a mutual interpenetration. She emphasizes the objective redemption in Christ as well as the subjective appropriation by faith of the divine grace of salvation. The Lutheran church acknowledges that the church of Christ in this world has both an invisible and a visible form. At the same time, that she gives to God alone the glory for the conversion and salvation of men, she does not deny that through the workings of the grace of God in conversion the human will is set free to voluntarily appropriate and make use of the gifts of the saving grace of God. She refuses to know anything whatever of words without the spirit, or of spirit without the word, but holds that the two are organically united; and in the sacrament of the altar, she neither allows the heavenly gift to supplant the visible elements, nor yet the latter to supplant the former, but possesses and acknowledges the invisible sacramental gift and the visible element in the most beautiful union.

This view is characteristic also of the Lutheran church in her relation to human life in general. She holds that the Christian is placed in the world by God to be his servant, and that all the human relations are to be hallowed by faith and love. This view is also fundamental for the Lutheran order of church service, and determines her relation to art. In the world of nature, that is to say, faith sees everywhere visible types and similes of the invisible glory that shall be revealed for the first time on the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. For this reason, art and poetry receive here their right recognition, not as objects for idolization as in the church of Rome, but in their temporal significance, until further, as typical expressions, in advance of the glory of the coming world, where spirit and corporeality transformed will fuse into one essence. "Ullman."

WHAT INFLUENCES BROUGHT THE LUTHERANS TO KNOX COUNTY?

The earliest exodus of Swedes to America was in the 17th century, when, in 1637, a number of them settled along the Delaware river. This was a crown colony of Sweden, augmented from time to time by new colonists until the Swedes gradually occupied all the lands along the Delaware from the ocean to the neighborhood where Trenton, New Jersey, now stands. The country was wrested from their control by the Dutch, in 1655, but the colonies continued to exist. Being Lutherans, these sturdy people from the north founded their churches wherever they settled. They brought their pastors with them or sent for them after they had arrived. But because they were not properly united into any organic body, or synod, nor received the spiritual care and attention that they needed from the mother church of Sweden, these historic Swedish Lutheran churches on the Delaware were gradually absorbed by the Episcopal church in the first half of the 19th century. That they did not affiliate, as might have been expected, with the German Lutheran churches must have depended upon historic reasons as well as, possibly, on the failure of the Germans to properly approach the Swedes in the matter of church affiliation.

The next more general and much more important exodus of Swedes to America began in the fourth decade of the last century, and has continued more or less steadily to the present day. If the cause of the first exodus had been an effort on the part of the Swedish government to found colonies in the new world in order to extend its power, the cause of the second exodus has been rather a desire and a hope on the part of the individual emigrants to better their physical conditions. Great prospects and possibilities were pictured to them by a few individuals who had come still earlier and found the country rich in resources for the benefit of those who could and would brave the hardships and dangers of frontier life. To this should possibly be added as a second cause, though not so marked, a spirit of unrest, brought on largely by the arrogance and oppression of the privileged classes, the aristocracy that had become also the plutocracy, who had failed to show a proper appreciation of the peasantry, forgetting that the proper development and the actual prosperity of a country depend largely on a contented and happy peasantry. In some instances, religious intolerance enters also as a part cause for the emigration, as was the case with Eric Jansson and his followers who settled in and around what is now Bishop Hill.

These early settlers came in large parties, consisting of relatives and friends, often large enough to charter a whole sailing vessel for the voyage. One such party, the first settled along Pine lake in Wisconsin, in 1841, another, the second, settled along the Skunk river in Jefferson county, Iowa, in 1845. One party, coming mostly from the northern part of Sweden and bringing with them their pastor in the person of the Rev. L. P. Esbjorn, the learned pioneer Swedish Lutheran preacher and educator in America in the nineteenth century, settled in Henry county, Illinois, in 1849. Other parties followed and settled in southwestern New York and northeastern Pennsylvania. And still others pushed north and settled in Minnesota. The Swedish Lutherans who settled in Knox county came mostly from the southern part of Sweden in 1850 and the following years and settled around Galesburg and Knoxville, Wataga and Altona.

For three years Rev. Esbjorn was the only spiritual adviser of the Lutherans in this part of the state. He ministered faithfully to the scattered flocks in Henry, Knox, Bureau and Rock Island counties, organizing churches in Andover and Moline, in 1850, and in Galesburg in 1851. The church in Galesburg was the first Lutheran church to be organized in Knox county. The following year it received its first settled pastor in the Rev. T. N. Hasselquist, who arrived in the fall of the year with his wife and servant and about sixty of his relatives and friends and immediately entered upon his duties as pastor of his people. Rev. Hasselquist proved himself to be an unusually gifted organizer and leader. Both he and his wife were highly educated, Mrs. Hasselquist speaking readily French and German and English in addition to her own language. Both were devout and earnest Christians and understood thoroughly their people. They had come in order to devote their life to the Swedish Lutheran cause in America, and though they had known only comfort and ease at home they were prepared to share joyfully with their people the privations and hardships connected with frontier life. Yet it must also be said to the credit of these early Lutheran settlers that they gladly shared what little they had of this world's goods with their pastors.

The Lutherans scattered over the county, and churches were organized in Knoxville, in 1853; in Wataga, in 1856; in Altona, in 1859, and at Soperville, in 1870. In 1906 Trinity English Lutheran church of Galesburg was organized to meet the needs of an ever increasing number of those Lutherans who more readily understand the English language.

These early Lutheran pioneers in Illinois, with others who settled east and west and north, were the founders of the Swedish Lutheran church of America, known as the Augustana synod, and organized in June, 1860, in Clinton, Wisconsin. This synod numbered, in 1910, 625 ministers, 1,145 congregations with 172,239 communicants and a total membership of 261,713.

TO WHAT EXTENT CAN THE LUTHERANS BE SAID TO HAVE REALIZED THEIR HOPES IN ORGANIZING THEIR CHURCH IN KNOX COUNTY

It has already been made clear that a large majority of the Swedes who first settled in Knox county were Lutherans. But they not only were Lutherans, they desired most earnestly to remain Lutherans. Primarily they had come from their distant homes to America in the hope of here bettering their temporal conditions and not because of any religious reason. But at the same time, as a Christian people, they brought their Bibles and other devotional books with them. They were, as a rule, a pious people with deep religious convictions. It is but natural that they should desire to worship their God in their own language and according to the usages of their Lutheran church. At the same time they were desirous of spiritually caring for the growing number of their countrymen who continued to come after them. And it is not presuming too much to say that they wished to plant the Lutheran church so deep in Knox county that it would continue to live and grow and be a blessing to their descendants from generation to generation. Those who believe that the descendants of the Lutherans are not imbued with the spirit of loyalty to their church or have not strong religious convictions but will remain Lutherans only so long as they speak their foreign language will find themselves greatly mistaken.

Granting then that these were their hopes and aspirations in founding their church in this county, we can say that they have more than realized them. For more than half a century the Lutheran church has been a blessing to thousands of the citizens of the county. Its influence for good in the different localities can hardly be estimated. It is stronger to-day than ever before, and it is continuing to grow. As the Swedish population in the county increased and it became necessary for some to leave in order that there should be more room for others, hundreds of families migrated to different parts of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and other states, where they formed the nucleus of thrifty settlements and strong Lutheran churches. The difficulties of the Lutherans have indeed been many and at times almost disheartening, but they have persevered. God has prospered them greatly in material things out of the abundance of the land, and He has also richly blessed them spiritually. The church is now in its transition period, when the language question is most vexatious, but once safely through this period, when leakage in membership because of the language is greatest, greater things are in store for her, if only her members remain loyal to their God and the principles of the reformation and take an ever increasing interest in those things that work for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the community in which they live.

THE FIRST LUTHERAN CHURCH OF GALESBURG

This church was organized August 24, 1851, by the Rev. L. P. Esbjorn, who had preached regularly in Galesburg since his arrival in Andover in 1849. The membership was then only forty adult persons. Its first settled pastor was the Rev. T. N. Hasselquist, who arrived from Sweden October 28, 1852. The first church had been built in 1850, but for some reason it had passed out of the hands of the Lutherans and was bought back by them in 1852, from the Methodists. This church building was afterwards enlarged, but soon became entirely too small and inadequate for the steadily growing congregation. The present church was erected in 1869. The pipe organ was built in 1877, completed April 12, 1878, the parsonage in 1878 and the Luther hall as it now is, in 1885, thoroughly remodeled in 1901. The Elim chapel on Arnold and Summit streets, 1903. Rev. T. N. Hasselquist served as pastor of the church for eleven years, when he, in 1863, was called to still greater usefulness as professor of theology in Augustana seminary and subsequently as president of the institution. He was succeeded as pastor in Galesburg by the Rev. A. W. Dahlsten. Other pastors who have served the church are Rev. N. Th. Winquist, 1869-1873; Rev. S. P. A. Lindahl, 1873-1885; Rev. C. A. Backman, 1885-1888; Rev. C. J. E. Haterius, 1889-1898; Rev. Peter Peterson, 1898-1904, the present pastor, Rev. F. A. Johnson since March 31, 1905. The Sunday school has an enrollment of ninety teachers and seven hundred scholars. Other organizations within the church are the Mission and Tract society, since 1885, with a membership (1910) of 213; the Luther league, since 1898, with 91 members; the Martha society (1891), the Society of Loyal Helpers (1899), with 60 members; the Men's league (1900), with 157 members; the Dorcas society (1903), with 80 members. The church has a splendid choir, an orchestra and a male chorus. It numbered, in 1910, 1,446 communicants and a total membership of 2,010 souls. It is the strongest church of the city and is in a flourishing condition.

THE SWEDISH EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF KNOXVILLE

The first Lutherans to settle in and around Knoxville came about the year 1849. More arrived in 1850, 1851 and 1852, and a large number in 1853. When Rev. T. N. Hasselquist arrived in October, 1852, it was his first intention to settle in Knoxville. For that purpose twenty acres of land upon which stood a log cabin was purchased for $200 by John Johnson, Swan Randon and John Truedson. But because of its location to the south of the city, Rev. Hasselquist found the distance to Galesburg too great and consequently to make the latter city his home, and the property in Knoxville was afterwards sold. Immediately upon his arrival Rev. Hasselquist began gathering signatures of such as desired to organize a Lutheran church, but an organization was not effected until March 21, 1853. Who and how many the charter members were it is not possible to state, as the earliest records of the church have been lost.

In 1854, a lot was purchased on W. South street, and the same year a church was built, largely from material that had been donated. This church was dedicated December 2, 1855. An addition to this church was built in 1872, and another in 1879. In the year 1910, it was decided to erect a new modern church and a lot was purchased on the corner of South and Timber streets, and a brick structure erected at a cost of $14,000. It was dedicated April 14, 1912.

The first parsonage was purchased in 1869, and after being enlarged later served its purpose until 1901, when it was sold and a new one built at a cost of $3,000.

The church has been served by the following pastors, T. N. Hasselquist, 1853-1863; S. G. Larson, 1863-1869; A. G. Setterdahl, 1869-1874; C. Walleen, 1874-1877; J. F. Borg, 1877-1879; H. P. Quist, 1879-1886; A. Norrbom, 1887-1890; P. A. Cederstam, 1891-1895; H. P. Ottoson, 1897-1906; O. G. Berg, 1907-1910; O. W. Ferm, 1910-1911; Carl J. Bengston, 1911.

The congregation numbers (1912) 190 adult members and has a total membership of 300. It has a Sunday school with an enrollment of 75, an active ladies' aid society and Luther league and men's league. The language used is largely English, this language being used exclusively in the Sunday school and the Luther league and in all Sunday evening services. The Swedish is still used at the Sunday morning services.

THE SWEDISH EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH OF ALTONA

As the records of the organization of this church have been lost, it is not possible to state with certainty the date of its organization. Persons living, who were present at the organization, state that it took place in 1854. So much is certain that the church was organized some time between 1854 and 1859. The lot upon which the present church was erected, in 1864, was purchased in 1859. In 1869 a parsonage was built, and in 1869 a tower was added to the church building. Rev. T. N. Hasselquist served the church as pastor, in addition to his other duties, until 1860. The other pastors have been Rev. F. O. Duvell (or Dowell), 1860-1861; Rev. S. G. Larson, 1864-1866; Rev. P. M. Sannquist, 1866-1871; Rev. A. Lindholm, 1871-1880; Rev. L. G. Abrahamson, 1880-1886; Rev. S. P. A. Lindahl, 1886-1890; Rev. J. G. Dahlberg, 1891-1899, and the present pastor, Rev. Erl Anderson, since 1899. The church numbers 300 communicants and has a total membership of 432.

THE SWEDISH LUTHERAN CHURCH OF WATAGA, ILLINOIS

By Rev. Carl J. Bengton

This congregation is generally conceded to have been organized in 1853, the same year that the church at Knoxville was organized, although the earliest statistics of the synod make 1856 the year of organization. The exact date of organization is not known as the earliest records appear to have been lost. It is almost certain that the church was organized by Rev. T. N. Hasselquist, who at that time had charge of almost all the church work among the Lutherans in Knox county.

Wataga was not, until last year, an independent charge. In 1861, Wataga was added to Altona, and served for two years by the Rev. J. F. O. Duvell. For eleven years, or until 1873, the church was a part of the Knoxville charge, then it was added to the Altona charge for one year and after that to the Henderson Grove charge for one year. After this again it was a part of the Knoxville charge for three years, or until 1879, and then of the Altona charge for six years, or until 1885. In 1886, Wataga was again added to the Henderson Grove charge, remaining in this connection three years, and then it was a part of the Galva charge for five years, or until 1903. From the first of the year 1904, until 1910, Wataga was a part of the Knoxville charge. In 1911, it became an independent pastorate and received its first settled pastor July 17 of that year, in the Rev. Jas. Hultberg.

It is not definitely known when the first church building was erected, but it was struck by lightning, in 1875, and burned to the ground. The present church was built the same year and dedicated February 2, 1876. Later an addition was built to the church, which is used as a Luther hall by the young people and at social gatherings.

The church has at present 150 communicant members and 50 children, in all 200 souls. The Sunday school numbers in all 50 members. It has an active ladies' aid society and a Luther league.

TRINITY EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH, GALESBURG, ILLINOIS

The facts concerning the organization of this church and the causes that led up to the same are of such importance that they should be mentioned more in detail, to enable one to get a true conception of the work. Galesburg, as has already been stated, is one of the pioneer fields of the Lutheran Augustana synod. The First Swedish Lutheran church was organized in 1851, nine years before the organization of the synod. As time advanced, the English question became more and more urgent within the First church. Many of the young people did not learn the Swedish language, others married into families of other nationalities, and as a result, it became necessary not only to give instruction in English in the Sunday school and catechetical classes, but also to have full English services at regular intervals and to use the English at the meetings of the young people and other societies. But in a city the size of Galesburg and in a church as large as the First Lutheran, this arrangement could, in the end, satisfy neither those who desired the Swedish nor those who clamored for English.

Two ideas were held forth as a solution of the question; one that the congregation should gradually resolve itself into an English speaking church and a new Swedish congregation be organized, and the other that a new English speaking congregation be organized. This latter idea became the prevailing one and resulted in the organization of an English Lutheran church. Already, in 1890, an effort had been made to organize such a congregation, but nothing came of it, and it was not until 1906, that definite steps were taken to organize an English Lutheran church in Galesburg. During the summer of that year, the synod of northern Illinois, a branch of the general synod of the Lutheran Church of America, sent its field secretary to Galesburg with the view of organizing an English church. It now became urgent, if anything was to be done by the Augustana synod, that it be done at once. The executive committee of the Illinois conference was therefore communicated with, the field secretary of the synod of northern Illinois was withdrawn, and steps taken by the Swedish congregation to organize an English church without delay. At a meeting of the congregation, held September 24th, the following very liberal resolutions were passed:

Resolved:

1. "That the congregation will gladly welcome an English Lutheran church in Galesburg, organized in all respects in accordance with the word of God and the constitution and by-laws of the Evangelical Lutheran Augustana synod.

2. "That the congregation will leave it to the freedom of each individual member to join such church, if he or she so desires.

3. "That the congregation invoke God's richest blessing upon such English work.

4. "That the congregation petition the executive board of the Illinois conference to call a pastor to have charge of the English work, after consultation with the joint board and with such persons as shall designate their desire to join the new church.

5. "That the congregation grant, as far as practicable, the newly organized church, the privilege of using the church edifice and Luther hall for services, Sunday school and other meetings until a new church building has been erected.

6. "That the congregation shall pay half of the salary of the new pastor for the first year, beginning at the time he enters upon his duties.

7. "That the congregation declare its willingness to give assistance, according to its means, to the English work during the coming years, to such an extent as the congregation may deem it necessary and wise.

8. "That the newly organized church be granted the privilege of soliciting donations from members of the congregation for the purpose of procuring church property.

9. "That the congregation shall return to the exclusive use of the Swedish language as soon as that may be done, and thereby promote the true interest of the whole church work, the Swedish as well as the English."

Steps were immediately taken to organize the new church. Mr. E. G. Knock of the Theological seminary at Rock Island, Illinois, was called by the executive board of the conference to take temporary charge of the work. He met general encouragement in his labors, and on Monday evening, December 3, 1906, a called meeting was held in Luther hall for the purpose of organization. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Knock. Rev. F. A. Johnsson, pastor of the First Swedish Lutheran church, was elected chairman and Mr. Elem Lavin, secretary, and the work of organizing carried through. One hundred and nine persons present at this meeting pledged themselves as members, and sixty-two additional pledges of persons not present were in hand, making a total of one hundred and seventy-one members on the day of organization. By a resolution all those who joined before January 1, 1907, would be considered charter members. By January 1st fifty-one additional persons had joined, making the total number of charter members of Trinity Lutheran church two hundred and twenty-two. To these should be added thirty children, making the total two hundred and fifty-two souls.

The following were elected deacons: Messrs. D. B. Swanson, Elem N. Lavin and W. A. Morehead, and the following trustees, Messrs. D. L. Peterson, L. D. Johnson, P. F. Swanson, C. A. Swanson and A. E. Steinfeldt. Mr. Elem Lavin was elected superintendent of the Sunday school and Mr. W. A. Morehead assistant superintendent. At the annual meeting, January 2, 1907, the number of deacons was increased to six and the following additional ones elected: Messrs. R. G. Gill, Elmer Moburg and F. E. Ferguson.

The good will and intentions of the First Lutheran church were shown at the organization of Trinity Sunday school on the first Sunday of January, 1907, when about 250 members of the First church Sunday school were transferred with books and other necessary literature to Trinity Sunday school, which met in Luther hall. All of these had signified their desire of receiving instruction in English and had also received the consent of their parents to join the English Sunday school. In the number was also contained a large percentage of teaching force in the Swedish Sunday school.

Trinity's first call for a pastor was extended to Rev. C. E. Haffsten of Rock Island, but since he declined to accept, a call was extended on January 29, 1907, Located on the corner of North Kellogg and Ferris Streets. Erected 1891 by a Swedish Episcopal congregation. Bought and remodeled in 1907 by the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Society, organized in 1906. Value of building, $35,000.

Mr. F. O. Hanson of the Theological seminary, who accepted the call and entered upon his pastorate immediately after his ordination to the ministry, preaching his first sermon on June 29, 1907.

In June, 1907, the church purchased what was then known as the St. John's Episcopal church and immediately began operations to complete it, as it had hitherto been in an unfinished state. The work progressed rapidly, and on December 10 the first meeting in the nature of a prayer meeting was held in the basement. The entire church was ready for occupancy in May, 1908, and on Sunday, May 17, the congregation formally moved into its own temple of worship. All services had hitherto been held in Luther hall of the First church. The total expense for the purchase and remodeling and furnishing of the church had been $24,000. To meet this $8,000 were subscribed among the members and friends of the church the first year. Since that time more money has been subscribed and paid in, so that the present indebtedness on the church amounts only to about $10,000.

Within the church are the following organizations, the Euodia society, consisting of all the members of the church and of a social nature exclusively; the Ladies' Aid society, organized early in 1907, very active and successful; the Young Ladies' auxiliary, organized shortly after the Ladies' Aid, and being just what the name suggests, viz., an auxiliary to this society; the Luther league, organized in November, 1907, and holding devotional meetings every Sunday evening at 6:30.

Trinity congregation now (1911) numbers 640 communicant members and 207, a total of 847 souls. This marvelous growth in four years abundantly proves that the Swedish Lutherans in the older Swedish centers are rapidly becoming Americanized and that the English language will have to be used as the medium for religious instruction more than hitherto.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

By H. W. Kowert

About the year 1859 or '60 the Rev. Selle, a minister of the German Evangelical Lutheran synod of Missouri and pastor of a congregation of that denomination in Rock Island, made a missionary tour of this part of Illinois and found on this tour the German people of Lutheran faith who had settled in Galesburg.

This new field was turned over to the Rev. Paulus Heid, minister of the same denomination and pastor at Peoria. Rev. Heid was more able to take this charge under his care than the Rev. Selle. The railroad from Peoria to Galesburg had just been built, while Rev. Selle was forced to come here by team.

Rev. Heid then came to Galesburg every four weeks and conducted divine services in a hall on West Main street; also gave instruction to the children.

A congregation was soon organized. The name which the congregation assumed was: "The German Evangelical Lutheran St. John's congregation of the unaltered Augsburg confession."

No definite statement as to the date or manner of organization can be made. The earliest records on hand, which are minutes of meetings held on October 28 and November 23, 1861, and the organization paper filed for record in the Circuit court of Knox county, testify mainly that the congregation, which had been previously organized and had assumed the name given above, did meet on the 28th day of October, 1861, and choose for their trustees: John Bässler, for two years; Leonhard Dennhoefer, for one year; Friedrich Axen, also for one year. Nor can a complete or correct list of the charter members be given. But so far as can be learned from the early records and personal recollection of two members still living the following may be mentioned: Jacob Sauter, Leonhard Dennhoefer, John Bässler, Friederick Axen, George Sutter, Friederich Hindricks, Wm. Geisler, Simon Mühlberger, John Weis, John Oberhäuser. Of these Jacob Sauter and Leonhard Dennhoefer are still living and members of the congregation.

After the organization, steps were at once taken to buy a suitable site for church purposes. The trustees served as buying and building committee.

The congregation decided to buy a corner lot on Seminary and Berrien streets, and authorized their trustees to give out the contract for building the church, which was to be 36 feet long, 34 feet broad and 14 feet high.

The above mentioned lot was not bought, but instead a lot on the corner of Brooks and Chambers streets. The church, however, was not erected on this lot, as will be explained later.

Rev. Heid continued serving the congregation about once a month until the early part of 1863, when the congregation succeeded in calling as their pastor the Rev. G. Gruber. It deserves to be noted that the members conducted a reading service on those Sundays on which Rev. Heid could not be here, one of the trustees reading a sermon from a Lutheran postil.

The congregation having now its own minister, who conducted services every Sunday and instructed these children during the week, the life and interest in church affairs began to grow and the desire to have their own church home became stronger. And when the Universalist congregation offered to sell to our congregation their church property on Tompkins, near Seminary, the offer was readily accepted and the lots on Brooks and Chambers streets sold to help pay for this property. This was in the summer of 1863.

As the church was in an L shape and larger than the congregation needed, the rear part, which was the newer, was separated from the front part, moved and remodeled to serve as parsonage and school.

Rev. Gruber was pastor of the congregation from 1863-1868, in which year he accepted a call to Warsaw, Illinois.

Of the following years, 1868-1874, there is hardly any record. The minister called to succeed Rev. Gruber was Rev. Boeber, after whom, according to recollections of members, came Rev. Rausch and Rev. Klein. The history of the congregation in these years can be learned from the minutes of the meeting, which was held on the first Sunday after New Year, 1875. Rev. C. Lotz, member of the Iowa synod, was then pastor of the congregation, coming here in October, 1874.

From the minutes of this meeting, we learn that the congregation, in the years 1868-1874, had departed from their original confessional and doctrinal position and had also assumed a new name. The confessional and doctrinal position which was held in these years was that of the "German Evangelical Synod of North America."

The congregation, therefore, passed the following resolutions, in this meeting: To assume the original name, and, whereas, the original constitution had disappeared, to draw up a new constitution in harmony with the original confessional and doctrinal position. This constitution was adopted February, 1875.

When Rev. Lotz left, in 1880, the congregation called a minister from the Wisconsin synod, the Rev. Genisige. He, however, was compelled, on account of sickness, to resign after a few months. Rev. H. Bendler, from the same synod, was his successor. During his ministry, the present church of the congregation was built. The new church cost about $3,600, the ladies' society furnishing the pulpit, altar and benches. The church was dedicated August 11, 1882.

When Rev. Bendler, in 1883, accepted a call to Burlington, Wisconsin, Rev. Traut, of Peoria, was asked to serve the congregation and help them towards getting another minister. After three months the Rev. Bergen, of the Missouri synod, was called. He was pastor from 1883 to 1885.

After his departure, the congregation was without a minister of their own for 16 years. The minister from the Kewanee Lutheran church preached here only every third Sunday. Ministers who thus served the congregation were Rev. O. L. Hohenstein, 1885-1891; Rev. D. Lochner, 1891-1894; Rev. A. E. Reincke, 1894-1900; Rev. H. E. Jacobs, five months, when he succeeded in having the congregation again call a minister of their own. Rev. H. Schmidt was called and was pastor from 1901 to 1909. When he left, Rev. H. W. Kowert was called as pastor.

CHRISTIANS OR DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

By Chester E. Conner

Ranking fourth among the so-called Protestant bodies of the Anglo-Saxon race in America is a people calling themselves "Christians or Disciples of Christ," and designating their congregations "Christian churches, or Churches of Christ."

The people wearing the above and other scriptural designations constitute a movement within the church. They do not claim to be "the church," but only a portion of it or a movement on the part of some of its membership; but being a portion, it does not follow that they are a sect or denomination. They think of themselves as "Christians only, but not the only Christians."

This movement had its origin about one hundred years ago. It sprang from the people somewhat simultaneously in different sections of America, and from diverse denominations, receiving its strong initial impulse from the preachers and scattered members of the various churches on the frontiers of America. Led by such able ministers of the gospel as Thomas and Alexander Campbell, of the Seceeder Presbyterian church in western Pennsylvania; Walter Scott, a prominent Baptist evangelist, in Ohio; and Barton W. Stone, of the regular Presbyterian church in Kentucky, they sought for common ground upon which all Christians could stand united and work together to extend the kingdom of God among the perils of pioneer life. This they found by ceasing to recognize as binding human names and creeds and by maintaining the faith, ordinances, names and ideals of the New Testament church.

The growth of this movement has been marvelous. Since the beginning of the Protestant reformation no religious body has continued through the years to grow so rapidly. The first church to stand forth as Christian only was at Brush Run, Pennsylvania, in 1811, with but a handful of members. Now there are 11,280 churches with 1,375,000 members, comprising a fellowship that ranks sixth among all the Christian bodies of the new world. There are about 116,000 members in the state of Illinois, and 1,900 in Knox county. These people accept the Bible, and especially the New Testament, as the only authoritative religious guide book. They cannot be accused of a private road in religion or of asking men to accept some alleged new revelation, for their appeal is "the word of God liveth and abideth forever."

They accept Jesus as the Christ, the son of God, the Savior of the world, as their only creed. They have laid aside all humanly devised statements of faith, all the historic and authoritative creeds of the church as being unauthorized, unnecessary, and as tending toward schisms or the perpetuation of those now existing. On Him the church is builded, and "he that hath the Son hath life." Recognizing Christ as the living head of the church, His word is their only law in religious matters. While they hold large conventions each year their sessions are always deliberative, never legislative. Each person is, under the divine will, keeper of his own conscience. It is remarkable that among these people there has never been a heresy trial, the ministry exercising the utmost freedom in preaching and teaching and in the order and form of religious exercises and worship. Notwithstanding this fact, their services are always dignified and marked with extreme simplicity.

These people preach and practice the calling of scriptural things by scriptural names. These names do not differentiate them from other Christians, but, on the contrary, tend to break down all barriers between believers. They believe that all denominational names help to perpetuate divisions in the church and that these must all be abandoned before that unity for which our Master prayed and His Apostles labored shall be brought to pass.

From the beginning of this movement the plea has been for the union of all believers, that the world might thereby more speedily and more surely have the truth. They believe this matter to be of gravest concern to the church, as it undoubtedly was to the Master when he prayed the Father that it might be so, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel of John. The Disciples of Christ maintain a commission on Christian union, and through its activity in behalf of this great plea believers of all communions are being brought face to face with the necessity for union if the un-Christian world is to be reached with the gospel message. Out of a conference of this commission recently had with the Christian Unity Foundation, of New York city, an Episcopal organization, the foundation prepared a remarkable and valuable pamphlet entitled, "The Disciples of Christ—A Brief Statement of Their Doctrine and Status in the United States," and at their own expense distributed it throughout the country, which is perhaps the first time in the history of divided christendom that one communion has prepared a friendly statement regarding another communion and distributed it at its own expense. Copies of the pamphlet may be had by addressing the Christian Unity foundation, 143 E. Thirty-seventh street, New York City. Preparations are being made for a world conference on faith and order, to be held six or eight years hence in this country or Europe. Already eighteen communions have consented to be represented and have appointed their commissions. Never have conditions been so ripe for the union of the divided house of God as in these times, and every disciple of Christ in all parts of the world hails it with delight, for Christ's conquest of the world depends upon the union of His forces. The work of the Disciples of Christ for Christian union may be more fully known by addressing the Commission on Christian Union, F. W. Burnham, secretary, Springfield, Illinois.

These people are actively engaged in missions both at home and abroad, maintaining the most remote mission station in all the world at Batang, on the border of Tibet. Their mission at Bolenge, Africa, is remarkable for its evangelistic activity. Each nine members support the tenth in evangelistic work. There were, at the close of 1911, nine hundred and nine members in this congregation, of whom one hundred and two were supported as evangelists. The membership and the number of evangelists have greatly increased since the publication of the 1911 report. The Christian missionaries in China have, during the current revolution, had great influence with the dignitaries of both the revolutionists and the dynasty, and have thus brought the work of the disciples in that land into prominence. The First Christian Church of Galesburg is one of a large and rapidly increasing number of congregations which supports its own missionary on the foreign field. Mrs. W. R. Hunt, stationed at Chuchow, China, is their representative. The practicability of Christian union is being demonstrated in foreign mission work, where denominational differences are forgotten in zeal for the salvation of the heathen world. It is significant of the early conquest of the home land that men are forgetting their differences of opinion and discovering their oneness of faith. The general missionary boards of the Disciples of Christ, located at Cincinnati, Ohio, direct missionary activities in America, the territorial provinces, India, Japan, China, Africa, Philippine Islands, England, Cuba, Turkey, Scandinavia, Australia, Hawaii and Tibet, and have numerous hospitals, colleges and universities with excellent faculties and equipment for the carrying on of their great work. The Disciples of Christ are also very active in evangelism and education, and along all lines of moral and social reform. One of the most promising agencies of the church is of recent origin, the brotherhood, which now has national and state organizations, and many local chapters. There are two prominent local brotherhoods in this county, one in the Galesburg Christian church and the other in the church at Knoxville. The beloved pastor of the Galesburg church is the honored president of the Illinois State Brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ. Mr. R. A. Long, of Kansas City, Missouri, is the president of the general movement, and E. E. Elliott and J. K. Shellenberger are secretaries, with headquarters at Kansas City. The brotherhood publishes a monthly magazine called "Christian Men," which is regarded by men of several communions as the very best periodical literature of its kind.

It was first issued January 1, 1909, and is now being sent regularly to about twenty thousand subscribers.

It has been impossible for the writer to prepare at this time a statement of the history of the disciples of Christ in this state and county. Rev. B. J. Radford, of Eureka, Illinois, is now engaged in the preparation of a work of this kind which will, when completed, be of great interest and value.

It is sufficient here to state that among the very first settlers in Knox county were some who stood identified with the doctrine and plea of the disciples. One of the very first congregations of worshipers in the county was a Christian church at Henderson. The date of its organization is not known. Mr. E. B. Reynolds, who resides at 67 Blaine avenue, Galesburg, Illinois, states that according to his best recollection this congregation was organized about 1838 or 1839. Judge C. H. Nelson, who has known the history of Henderson from his childhood, and still resides there, writes: "In regard to the organization of the Christian church at this place, I have no data previous to the year 1843. I well remember that there was an organization of this church as far back as the year mentioned. Services were held then and for some years afterward in the schoolhouses by itinerate preachers, among whom were John E. Murphy, Smith Wallace and John E. Martin. At that time Morran Baker was an active member of the church. About the year 1850, the church succeeded in building a brick chapel in the village. The work seemed to move rather slowly up to 1853, and about this time Rev. Ziba Brown held a revival which resulted in many conversions and additions to the membership, among whom were many of the prominent families of the community. Rev. Jas. Gaston came to the church in the spring of 1854, and continued to be its minister for nine years, during which time several revivals were held and the church increased in membership and in influence in the community. After Rev. Gaston's ministry came to an end, the work rapidly went down, and with the exception of two years, 1895 and 1896, regular services have not since been maintained." Others have given their opinions as to the time when the Henderson church organized, and are pretty well agreed that it was between 1837 and 1839.

Other congregations flourished in the very early times at French Grove, in the eastern part of the county, about which nothing definite can now be learned; at Walnut Grove, which was near Altona, and was one of the strong churches of the county in the days before the railroad was built through this section; and also at Knoxville there was a small congregation consisting of about twelve people, among whom were Elder Jacob Gum, who performed ministerial duties; Doctor Hansford and wife; John Karns, who for a long time was a tailor and clothing merchant in Knoxville; and John Eads, who was very active in religious work. The Knoxville organization was first formed about the same time as the work at Henderson, but was not maintained longer than about ten years. Union church was built during the summer of 1850, about five miles east and one mile north of Galesburg. The congregation organized in December of that year. These people never had a resident pastor. In addition to those who ministered at Henderson, the following ministered at Union: Milton Dodge, Jordan Dodge, Robert Wallace, Patrick H. Murphy, Henry Murphy, James Butler and many others of some prominence. Mr. E. B. Reynolds was very active in the work at Union.

Anthony Rhodes was here ordained to the christian ministry, March 10, 1869, Rev. Smith Wallace being in charge of the ordination service. The name of Mr. John Spooner is also prominently mentioned in connection with Union church. About the year 1869, Rev. J. H. Garrison held a revival meeting in Knoxville which resulted in the organization of a church, and the members at Union transferred their membership to Knoxville, thus ending the organized work at Union. The Knoxville church has continued to grow and is now one of the splendid groups of disciples in this county. Flourishing congregations are also to be found at Abingdon, Galesburg, Hermon and St. Augustine, and at East Galesburg (Randall P. O.) the First Christian church of Galesburg maintains a mission. All of these congregations, with the exception of the Galesburg church, are established in commodious and conveniently arranged meeting houses, and this congregation has purchased a most excellent lot situated at the corner of Broad and North streets, and is now raising funds with which to build a large, modern plant on that site.

The disciples met in very early times in Galesburg sometimes in the public hall and more often in a dwelling, and later on regular meetings were held in the office of Dr. J. B. Vivion. Elder Haley was one of the first preachers to present the plea of the disciples in this city. The disciples did not organize, however, until in 1871. The meeting at which this organization was effected was held in Dr. Vivion's office. About this time a meeting house was purchased from the Swedish M. E. church, and immediately thereafter Knowles Shaw, the noted evangelist and gospel singer, was engaged for a revival meeting. Some strength was added to the movement through the revival and the cause of the disciples was now fairly launched in this city. The congregation was incorporated April 11, 1872, the certificate of incorporation being filed July 31, 1872, and Henry M. Bruner, Maximilian Shelton and John B. Scheitlan were named as trustees. The corporate name adopted at this time was "The Christian Church of Galesburg." Until 1878 the congregation continued to meet on east Ferris street (the building stood on the north side of Ferris midway between Kellogg and Seminary streets), and during that year the house was moved to West Tompkins street between Broad and Cedar. Here the disciples met until 1892, when they moved into the building which they now occupy on North West street. This building was dedicated by Rev. F. M. Rains, March 6, 1892, during the ministry of Rev. G. J. Ellis. On December 31, 1911, the corporate name of this congregation was changed to "The First Christian Church of Galesburg," and the following were elected and now serve as trustees: Roy Patty, C. E. Conner, R. C. Rice, W. D. Godfrey and Dr. E. D. Wing. Alfred Peterson, church clerk, reported a membership of eight hundred seventy-two persons at the beginning of 1912.

During the past three or four years the Galesburg church has made very rapid progress. It has undertaken large tasks and assumed heavy responsibilities which have deeply impressed the community with the magnitude of their faith and the earnestness of their zeal. In May, 1911, they entered upon a great revival effort under the leadership of Chas. Reign Scoville and his talented company, consisting in all of eight persons. On Tuesday, May 16th, in preparation for the meetings, a monster tabernacle was erected on the Foley lot, corner of North Broad and Waters streets. The labor was donated by about one hundred and seventy members and friends, and the building was practically completed by the hour set for the dedicatory service, and Rev. J. Fred Jones of Bloomington, Illinois, formally set the building apart for religious services that same evening. The ladies of the church served hot dinner free to all who labored on the building. It was a great day in the history of religious activity in this county and in this part of the state. Another huge task was accomplished in preparation for the meetings when these people made a thorough and systematic canvass of the city, getting a complete religious census and distributing announcements and literature. The revival continued four weeks and was attended by multitudes of people, many of whom were converted to the Christian faith and caused to lead better lives. Five hundred and thirty-eight persons made public confession of their faith in Christ. From the first night of invitation until the close of the meetings each night the people witnessed the baptism of penitent believers.

Many godly men have served the Christian churches of Knox county through the past years, and the influence of their lives still leads the way to higher and nobler endeavor. Rev. James A. Barnett came to the Galesburg church November 1, 1907, and he has proven to be a faithful minister, a capable leader and a tireless worker. The progress of the work in this city and county during the the past years, and the influence of their lives still leads the way to higher and his great faith in the plea of the disciples of Christ.

CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST

BY REV. E. FOWLER

Among the religious organizations of the last hundred years in this country, none are more interesting in their rise and development, nor more aggressive in their activities today, than the church of the United Brethren in Christ. The events that led to the establishing of the church had their beginning before the war of the revolution. It is a little difficult to mark an exact date as the beginning of the church. It was not founded as a result of any schism, or broken off from any other organization as a result of any unpleasant relation or any mere matter of church government. The men who formed it came from different denominations and did not, for years, have any thought of forming a new denomination.

Philip William Otterbein came to this country from Germany as a missionary in the German Reformed church in 1752. He was quite spiritual in his make up and preached a clear positive doctrine. The churches of that period were, in many instances, cold and formal and many persons were members in name only. Under the preaching of Otterbein, some were stirred to activity while in other cases opposition was met with. There were ministers in other churches that were having the same experiences, and these ministers, because of their common experience, came together, from time to time, for counsel and encouragement. In 1766, a great meeting was held in Isaac Long's barn in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. At this meeting, Otterbein and Rev. Martin Boehm met for the first time. Boehm was a minister in the Mennonite church and preached the sermon on this occasion. He preached with such unction and power, that when he had finished and was about to sit down, the great Otterbein clasped him in his arms and exclaimed, "We are brethren!" This exclamation probably gave rise to the name, though the formal organization was not made for some years afterward. Such meetings were continued at different times but not till September of 1800 was the name United Brethren in Christ taken and bishops elected.

The United Brethren in Christ is Arminian in doctrine, and the government in many respects is the counterpart of the American republic. There is a fortunate balancing of power between the laity and the ministry, so that neither can act independently of the other. The government is vested primarily in the general conference which meets every four years and is composed of an equal number of ministers and laymen. The bishops and other general officers are elected by the general conference for a term of four years. The presiding elders are elected by their respective conferences annually. There are local and quarterly conference preachers, who have no charge, but preach as they have opportunity. The churches are supplied with pastors on the itinerant plan.

The German language was used exclusively, for the first forty or fifty years. The long delay of the church in adopting the English as its principal tongue operated greatly against its growth, the German population always constituting but a small fraction of the whole. The German speaking people, too, were less progressive than their English neighbors, and this conservatism militated against the growth of the church. There was a constant tendency, just as we find it now with languages other than the English, to drift over into the English. The children of the German families were steadily breaking away from their moorings and finding homes in the English speaking churches. The Methodist Episcopal church from its close resemblance to the United Brethren in doctrine, polity, and general church life, and from the intimate association of the ministers and people of the two denominations, naturally profited at our expense. When once the transition from the German to the English became pronounced, the increase began to grow rapidly. For years, the question of fraternal orders was a troublous question, the church refusing to admit to membership any one who was a member of any secret order. As the number of orders multiplied and their membership grew, this became a serious question, and in many places, the churches experienced difficulties because of this question. This finally resulted in a division in the denomination, in 1889, when the general conference revised the constitution in this respect. Since that time there has been two branches of the church known as "liberals" and "radicals." Both branches are represented in Knox county.

The liberal branch has experienced a good growth, the last few years, now having a membership of about 300,000.

The denomination has evidently had an imporant place in moulding religious sentiment throughout the country all these years. The following is what the church has and still stands for, briefly told:

First—For a positive Christian experience. The "new birth" has been emphasized all these years as necessary to the christian life. The church stands for a positive christian experience as opposed to a mere ritualistic or formal service. We believe in the power of Godliness to save from sin.

Second—The United Brethren church has always maintained a liberal and fraternal spirit toward other denominations. Not only have we welcomed to all our regular and sacramental services members from other churches, but have always stood ready to join in any movement that had for its purpose the extension of God's kingdom. In fact, we have been so liberal in practice, that it has hindered our denominational growth. Emphasizing the need of a definite christian experience rather than the necessity of church membership, our church has been a great feeder for other churches. The Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the Congregationalists, and in fact, every evangelical church have profited at our expense. Not only members in their pews, but ministers filling their pulpits, who were born in United Brethren homes, and converted at United Brethren altars, and educated in United Brethren schools.

Third—The church has always stood for loyalty to the government. When our national life was dominated by the slave spirit and when some of the other churches in humility were down on their knees in submission to that spirit, our church, though operating mostly in the border states of Maryland and Virginia, stood firmly against it. During the civil war, the church was thoroughly loyal to the old flag and according to statistics sent more of her sons to the front than any other church body of equal size.

We have always stood uncompromisingly opposed to the liquor traffic. It is now comparatively an easy thing to stand against this traffic, but it was not always so. The time was when it was not popular to forbid church members from making and using strong drink. But the United Brethren church has always maintained such position.

Fourth—The church stands for christian education. We believe that the spiritual and mental training should go hand in hand. We now have ten institutions for higher education. In addition to these, we have one of the best equipped publishing plants in the United States that is sending out our books and periodicals to all parts of the world.

Fifth—We are a missionary church. We have two missionary societies; the home and the foreign. The one is active in planting our church in the cities and in carrying the gospel to the frontier settlements. The foreign society maintains missions in Africa, China, Japan, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

In the year 1835, Rev. Joshua Dunham was appointed presiding elder for the state of Illinois. At that time, there was but one circuit of the church in the state and that a mission. The fertile and almost boundless prairies presented an irresistible attraction to immigration, and with the pioneer settler came the pioneer minister. Mr. Dunham was soon joined by Rev. Josiah Davis and Rev. John Hoobler. Others soon followed and in a few years there were many preaching places established in different parts of the state. The circuits were large and the appointments were widely separated and the ministers were required to be absent from their homes for weeks together, but by their faithful work the church was established in many parts of the state. These were plain men, but stalwart in character, mighty in faith, inflexible in purpose, and rich in achievement. They rode on horseback, or sometimes went on foot, far away from home and loved ones, hundreds of miles across the great prairies then new and unsubdued, but now throbbing with great life.

Preaching points were established in the homes of the people, in school houses, and when the weather would permit, in the open air. It was perhaps in the latter part of the '30s, or early part of the '40s that some of these pioneer preachers reached Knox county. Unfortunately the records of those early days were not carefully kept and it is difficult to gather exact data for local history.

The earlier preaching points established in the county were at the Condra school house in Henderson township and the Washington school house in Rio township. An organization was effected at the Condra school house at an early date and in all probability was the oldest of the denomination in the county. Some of the earlier members of this organization were Ira Lane, Abraham Cubbage and family, John Cubbage and family, Mrs. Wm. Condra, Wm. Watters and wife, Isaac Waters and wife, Gideon Pitman and wife. Some of the earlier ministers were Barney Wagner, M. Ambrose, Joshua Dunham, George Weaver, a Mr. Condon, Oscar Smith, Isaac Kretsinger, Jacob Kenoyer, Andy Wimsett (familiarly known everywhere as "Uncle Andy"), D. F. Baer, and F. J. Dunn. The last named is still living (1912) and has his home in Knoxville and at the ripe age of 93, still maintains an active interest in the church and community, and preaches occasionally, as he has opportunity.

For years the congregation worshiped in the neighborhood school house but such was the growth of the congregation, that a brick church was built about the year 1858. This building was dedicated by Rev. Andy Wimsett and the meeting was then continued as a revival for a period of some four or five weeks and there were a number of conversions resulted. This building served as a place of worship for a number of years, and in later years, two congregations resulted from this one. An organization was formed in Henderson in the early '70s, where services have been regularly maintained down to the present time. Also about the same time, that the Henderson organization was made, an organization was effected and a building erected at what was known as Maple Grove across the county line.

In 1857, Samuel Calkins and family moved from Indiana and settled in Haw Creek township, and he being a member of the United Brethren church soon induced some of the United Brethren ministers to establish a preaching point at the Hazel Green school house. Appointments were also established at the Nevit school house, and a little later at the Miles school house, in Persifer township.

An organization was soon perfected at the Hazel Green school house, some of the earlier members being Samuel Calkins and wife, B. F. Conner and wife, Miles Steward and wife, Mrs. L. Andrews, Tobias Wells, Jonathan Harshbarger and others. B. F. Conner, who was a local preacher, was the first class leader. It is related that in the early history of the church, a great revival was held under the ministry of Rev. Wm. Hankins and that there were some sixty or more conversions. People came from some distance to attend, and at times there was much shouting over the salvation of souls. It is related, that on one particular evening, some recent converts began singing on their way to meeting, and from singing to shouting and in this way came into the house. This minister had already begun the services and was reading, when they entered, some singing, and some shouting, and the minister had to stop his reading and give all time for shouting.

Uncle Andy Wimsett was one of the great revivalists of the times and held meetings in various parts of the county, and always with a goodly number of converts added to the church. It is related of him that at one time, when holding a meeting in a school house, where they were disturbed by some of the boys on their way home from services by hallooing and shouting, and other disturbances, that one evening when the boys had been especially noisy the evening before, that when Uncle Andy was praying, he said, "And now, Lord, those boys—you know them, those that go hallooing and shouting about like Indians" (here naming several tribes of Indians), and finally closed by saying, "Now, Lord, make their hearts as soft as their heads."

This Hazel Green appointment was maintained for a number of years and finally resulted in the organization of a church in Gilson, where a building was erected and dedicated in 1866. Soon after it was dedicated, a session of the Northern Illinois Annual Conference was held in this building. This appointment has maintained services down to the present time.

Other churches that grew out of these earlier appointments were Persifer and Mound churches in Persifer township, and the Union church in Haw Creek township, all of which were erected in the '70s. All of these are maintaining regular services, excepting the Mound church, which has been discontinued for the last few years. In the early '90s, soon after the decision of the denomination over the question of secret orders, a number of the members belonging to the Mound class withdrew from that organization and formed the Appleton United Brethren church, this being the only representative of the "radical" branch in the county.

In the year 1860, four or five farmers of different denominations desired to open a Sunday school, and organized one to meet each Sunday in a little log school house, near where the South Grove United Brethren church in Chestnut township now stands. Mr. John Spurlock, a Christian of sterling quality, was chosen as superintendent. After about a year of successful Sunday school work, two brothers by the name of Ross, both United Brethren preachers, came and Rev. D. J. B. Ross held a big revival meeting in the grove that surrounds the present church building. Many were converted and in 1862 the class had reached such a size that the school house could not accommodate them and arrangements were made to build a church. The ground, about one-half acre, was donated by Mr. George Drum and the church erected and dedicated soon after. Mr. John Spurlock was the father of two sons, both preachers, and there are also two grandsons that are preachers.

The last organization in the county is that of the church in the city of Galesburg. In the fall of 1906, Rev. E. Fowler was appointed by the presiding elder, Rev. V. W. Overton, to open up work in the city of Galesburg. He, with his family, moved to the city in December, 1906. The first services were held in the Woman's Association rooms, No. 347 E. Main street, on Sunday, February 3, 1907. The following week the pastor, together with Rev. J. E. Shannon, evangelist of Marion, Indiana, began a series of meetings at the singing to shouting and in this way came into the house. This minister had already begun the services and was reading, when they entered, some singing, and some shouting, and the minister had to stop his reading and give all time for shouting.

Uncle Andy Wimsett was one of the great revivalists of the times and held meetings in various parts of the county, and always with a goodly number of converts added to the church. It is related of him that at one time, when holding a meeting in a school house, where they were disturbed by some of the boys on their way home from services by hallooing and shouting, and other disturbances, that one evening when the boys had been especially noisy the evening before, that when Uncle Andy was praying, he said, "And now, Lord, those boys—you know them, those that go hallooing and shouting about like Indians" (here naming several tribes of Indians), and finally closed by saying, "Now, Lord, make their hearts as soft as their heads."

This Hazel Green appointment was maintained for a number of years and finally resulted in the organization of a church in Gilson, where a building was erected and dedicated in 1866. Soon after it was dedicated, a session of the Northern Illinois Annual Conference was held in this building. This appointment has maintained services down to the present time.

Other churches that grew out of these earlier appointments were Persifer and Mound churches in Persifer township, and the Union church in Haw Creek township, all of which were erected in the '70s. above-named rooms. After one week, the meetings were transferred to what was then known as the Knox Street Congregational church. Here a three weeks' meeting resulted in the conversion of some thirty persons and arrangements were made to organize the church. Bishop C. M. Mathews, of Chicago, was secured for Sunday, March 24, 1907, to make the organization. The day was a bright, beautiful spring day and good congregations were out, both morning and evening. In the morning the bishop's subject was "The Song of Immortality." I John 3:2. After the sermon, the pastor read the names of thirty-seven persons who had given their names for membership. These were called forward and addressed by the bishop as to their duties as Christians and members of the church, after which he and the pastor extended the hand of fellowship. At the evening session, fifteen more were received into the church, making a charter membership of fifty-two. Wm. Larson was elected as the first class leader and James Sumner as Sunday School superintendent. Arrangements were soon afterward made for the transfer of the property to the United Brethren. This building continued as the place of worship until January 29, 1908, when it was destroyed by fire. This was replaced by a substantial brick building, which was completed and dedicated January 31, 1909.

HISTORY OF UNIVERSALISM IN THE COUNTY OF KNOX

By Mary Claycomb Grubb

The great distinctive thought in Universalism, that which marks most strongly its difference from other religious doctrines, is the belief in the final "harmony of all souls with God." This belief, not a new one, but old as Christianity itself, is founded on the same Holy Scriptures which other Christians accept, but on a different interpretation of them. We believe that the Bible teaches Universalism. (We quote from "The History of Universalism, by L. B. Fisher, D. D., and by doing so acknowledge the assistance this work has been in the preparation of this article.) "When we say that the Bible is a Universalist book, we mean that Universalism is the logic of the Bible." The Bible shows "a God absolutely on the side of mankind." It shows that "the movement of the whole moral power of the universe is toward a racial redemption" and that "God will have all men to be saved." If God succeeds, then Universalism is the result, and the Bible reveals a successful God. The plan of this article does not permit of argument or proofs, but only of a general statement of the growth and development of this beautiful faith. It was held by many of the early Christians and it was not until 544 that a local council condemned Universalism as heresy. Although there were those who still believed this cheering doctrine, even then, there was no open avowal of it or any attempt to organize a Universalist church. After this date the first breaking away, openly, from the generally accepted teachings of the Christians was toward the eighteenth century, and practically all the difference at that time was the avowal that punishment is not endless, but that all will finally be saved. The first Universalists believed in a lost race, an offended God, the need of redemption, but they also believed that Jesus died for all and therefore all will be saved.

John Murray, the pioneer of Universalism in America, was a very good calvinist in every point save this one, the final salvation of all mankind, a belief to which he had become converted by hearing the London preacher, James Relly. He came to America in 1770, but we must here omit the story of his meeting Thomas Potter on the shores of New Jersey, where he was prevailed upon to preach his doctrine, then new to most of the inhabitants of this country, and the further story of his work in teaching and preaching, along with other believers in this faith, for many years after. Hosea Ballou, the father of the present day Universalism, represents the second stage in the growth of this doctrine. He advanced a new theology which claimed the unity and supremacy of God instead of the trinity, that the atonement was not the reconciling of God to man, but of man to God, the putting at-one-ment of a rebellious child with a loving Father. God does not need to be changed, but man needs to be reconciled to his law. Hosea Ballou believed in a God who is "an absolute sovereign of infinite love and wisdom."

To be sure, there were all along differences in opinions on some points, some believing that there is no punishment after death and others that there is, and so on, but new light was beginning to shine upon the gloomy religion which then held most of the Christians. A better understanding of the Scriptures, new versions, progress in knowledge, have only helped to establish and develop these new views and modern Universalism is the outgrowth of these later interpretations of the Scriptures.

The creed of the Universalist of today, if he may be said to have a creed, is expressed in three statements adopted at the convention held at Winchester, N. H., in 1803, and known as the Winchester Profession of Belief.

These statements are as follows:

I. We believe that Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God and of the duty, interest, and final destination of mankind.

II. We believe that there is one God whose nature is love, revealed in one Lord Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of Grace who will finally restore the whole family of mankind to holiness and happiness.

III. We believe that holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected and that believers ought to be careful to maintain order and practice good works for these things are good and profitable unto men."

These three articles remained our only official statement of belief until 1899. Previous to that date, however, there was much discussion of this creed and many attempts at creed doctoring. The convention held at Boston in 1899 adopted an amendment to the constitution endorsing the Winchester Profession but adding thereto the following conditions of fellowship:

"First, the acceptance of the essential principles of the Universalist faith, to-wit:

I. The universal fatherhood of God.
II. The Spiritual authority and leadership of His Son, Jesus Christ;
III. The trustworthiness of the Bible as containing a revelation from God;
IV. The certainty of just retribution for sin;
V. The final harmony of all souls with God."

"The Winchester Profession is commended as containing these principles, but neither this nor any other precise form of word is required as a condition of fellowship, provided always, that the principles above stated be professed."

"Second, The acknowledgment of the authority of the general convention and assent to its laws."

Universalism has suffered much from ignorance of its teachings and a misunderstanding of its requirements. It is an exacting religion. To be a Universalist and to live Universalism demands that one should not only profess, but do; that he should "love God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength, and with all his mind, and his neighbors as himself." This is not easy to do, all will agree. We believe that there is no escape from the punishment for sin; that he who dies in his sins must pay the full penalty, but we do not believe that this covers an eternity of woe; God will not fail to finally save all his children.

Few professed Universalists live up fully to this beautiful faith, but there are among them many saintly men and women who are fine examples of its influence.

This, a very brief statement of the growth and development of Universalism, has seemed necessary to a full understanding of the rest of the article.

The mere statement of the number of members of this Christian denomination, the enumeration of its churches, its schools, and other property holdings will not give an adequate idea of its progress. This beautiful faith has been like a ray of sunshine in the midst of darkness and its teachings have touched and softened all other religious beliefs until they are permeated with its principles and the ministers in other pulpits, the members of other churches preach and practice them.

In this way we may say that Universalism has made a wonderful growth in not only Knox county but also in America.

Galesburg, Knox county, has always been recognized as the center of Universalism in this part of the state. Here was the first organized society, here was established our school, Lombard college, and from here the influence of this denomination has gone out to other places. Parishes have been maintained for longer or shorter periods in other places in the county, as at Oneida, Yates City and at other points, but none of these have proved permanent organizations, although there are Universalists in all parts of the county. At Abingdon, within the last two years, a parish has been organized and a new church is nearing completion. The promise of a successful effort at that point is good.

I have obtained from a history given by Dr. J. V. N. Standish in 1895, when the congregation left the old church edifice to occupy the present building at the corner of Prairie and Tompkins streets, many of the facts given in this sketch and hereby acknowledge the debt I owe him. The record of the clerk's books have supplied others.

There are two separate organizations in the church here, one known as the First Universalist Society of Galesburg, the other as the First Universalist church of Galesburg. The first meeting to organize the Society, the older of the two organizations, was held in December, 1854, at the home of Uriah Conger on Mulberry street. This organization was completed in January, 1855, under the pastorate of Rev. William A. Ballou. All of that company, few in number, have passed on to the "great beyond" and we have not even a list of their names, as the first record book was lost.

Jesse Beals was the first clerk and held that office until failing health compelled him to resign. Dr. J. V. N. Standish was chosen as his successor, serving until he resigned in December, 1870. Prof. Isaac A. Parker was then elected clerk and held the office until 1911, a period of forty-one years. Prof. Frank H. Fowler, who for a number of years acted as assistant clerk, is now the official secretary of the parish.

The preamble of the constitution of this society reads as follows: "We, the subscribers, feeling desirous to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, do hereby form ourselves into a society that we may be helpers to each other, and by our united energies we may better serve the purposes of religion and truth."

The purpose of the organization is stated in Article II, and is this, "The object of this Society shall be the promotion of truth and morality among its members, and also in the world at large. And as the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ tends above all things to inspire the heart with the motives of benevolence and virtue, this Society shall deem it one of its main objects to support the preaching of the gospel and to aid in any other practicable way in spreading the knowledge of it among men."

These statements are clear and simple and may be accepted without question by any believer in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The third article of the constitution affirms that this society adopts as the basis of its religious faith the Winchester profession of belief accepted by the general convention of Universalists.

The officers of the society consist of a moderator, clerk, treasurer, and at present a board of six trustees. The business matters of this church are under the control and management of the society or of its board of trustees. They meet all obligations and expenses, provide the minister to occupy its pulpit, and have the care of the grounds and buildings. The whole number of members at present is represented by two hundred families.

The church was organized in 1857 by Rev. Otis A. Skinner, then president of Lombard college, assisted by Dr. J. V. N. Standish, at whose suggestion this step was taken. Its officers are a moderator, the pastor by a constitutional provision always holding that office, a clerk, and deacons. The first clerk of the church was Dr. J. V. N. Standish, who held the office until 1897, a period of more than forty years.

At its inception, the profession of faith of the church was brief, consisting only of the declaration, "We believe in the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, claiming for ourselves and according to others the right to interpret them in the fear of God, and according to the light which He has given us; and we adopt the written word of our Lord and His apostles as our standard of faith and system of discipline, and as revealing the great truth of the final reconcilation of all things to God, so that He at last shall be all in all."

This church was first known as an association, but in 1869 it took the name of First Universalist church of Galesburg, Illinois, and at the same time adopted as its creed the Winchester profession of belief. The secular affairs of the church are managed entirely by the society, but its members "consider the church organization the best means of conserving and carrying forward the great interests of religion."

The members at its organization numbered forty-two. Among those earliest members were Samuel Dow, Rev. J. P. Fuller, A. S. Devendorf, J. V. N. Standish, Rev. L. J. Carney, Lorenzo Chapin, W. H. Pettee, Wm. Livingston, Jesse Beals, Mrs. Samuel Dow, Mrs. E. S. Jordon, Mrs. Jesse Beals, L. E. Conger, Uriah Conger and wife, Mrs. L. E. Conger, Mrs. J. L. Clay, O. A. Skinner, Francis Pryne and wife, S. W. Brown, Mrs. Fielding Miles, Joseph Williams, Mrs. Seba Williams, Mrs. W. D. Look, all of them earnest men and women and devoted to the church of their choice. Two are still living, Dr. J. V. N. Standish of Galesburg and Mrs. Pryne who lives with her two daughters, Josephine and Effie, at Waseca, Minnesota.

The ministers who have been called to preside over this people have been men of talent and power. We find among them the gifted orator, the keen theologian, the cultured scholar, the fine writer and deep thinker.

The first pastor was Rev. William S. Ballou whose term of service was about two years.

Rev. Otis A. Skinner officiated as pastor from the fall of 1857 to 1859 and was the first pastor of both society and church.

The next pastor, Rev. A. G. Hibbard, came to us from the Congregationalists and remained also two years.

Rev. H. Slade succeeded him and under his administration the second church building was erected, the congregation previous to that time using at first the old Liberal institute until it was burned in 1855. For a short time thereafter the Swedish Lutheran church was used for Sabbath worship when the society in the fall of 1855 bought a small church belonging to the Second Presbyterian church. This building stood on South street, but was moved to Tompkins street to the block east of Kellogg street. A subscription book was opened for the purpose of raising funds to build the new church in January, 1863, and the building was dedicated in January, 1864, Rev. H. R. Nye, D. D., preaching the dedicatory sermon. The church was prosperous under Mr. Slade's ministration and its people were happy. Rev. William S. Balch succeeded Mr. Slade as pastor in 1865, and served the church for five years.

Rev. W. G. Haskell's pastorate was brief, covering the year from 1870 to 1871 only.

Rev. S. A. Gardner followed Mr. Haskell and was the pastor for a period of four years to be succeeded by Rev. Geo. S. Weaver, two years, then Rev. Charles W. Tomlinson, three years, Rev. Stephen Crane, three years, and then Rev. Edwin J. Chaffee, two years. Rev. George B. Stocking became pastor of the Galesburg church in 1894. At this time it had become evident that the congregation must again enter upon the work of erecting another edifice, and the canvass for funds to do this was begun with enthusiasm. In May, 1894, a farewell service was held in the old church and from that date the services were held in the circuit court room until the new building was completed. At this service Dr. Standish read the historical sketch. I quote from this address. "Old church, you have witnessed many and varied scenes. From a small village, as it were, you have seen a beautiful city grow up about you. You have seen halls of learning and courts of justice spring into existence right before you. * * * You have seen those that loved you dearly taken from you. You will never forget a Sanborn, a Knowles, a Conger, a Harrington, a Wester, a Livingstone and many others that once trod these halls. Now the time has come when we must part. We shall leave you without any regrets. * * * The times demand a change. We must keep pace with the march of events. Old churches, old creeds and old forms must stand aside.

"Our brethren of other churches are already in the field and a spirit of liberalism is taking possession of them. In liberal christian thought they are nearly abreast of us and we must not delay but march on. Our creed and our religion demand that we shall lead the van."

The entire cost of the bell, furnishings, lot and building of the old church exceeded $11,000. The new building was dedicated on May 5, 1895, and the services were impressive, the faces of all present showing the joy coming from a good work accomplished. The closing exercise was the singing of a hymn, written by Mrs. Julia A. Carney. The cost of the new building was $27,000 and the pledges received at the dedication were sufficient to cover all indebtedness. In the afternoon the pastors of the different churches of the city brought their greetings to the Universalists and in the evening services were conducted by the Young People's society.

Dr. Stocking continued to serve as pastor until 1902, and was succeeded by Rev. Edson Reifsnider in June 1902, who served this congregation until he resigned to become dean of Ryder Divinity school at Lombard college in 1908. Rev. Albert R. Fiske was called to be the pastor January, 1910, and is just entering upon his third year of service for this parish with a church free from debt, a united congregation and every promise of success for the future.

The pulpit of this church during the intervals between the pastorates has been filled by leading men of the Universalist denomination. We find among them Rev. Chas. P. West, Rev. P. R. Kendall, the first president of Lombard, Rev. Josiah Davis, Rev. J. P. Fuller, Professor Wm. Livingston, Prof. J. C. Lee, Dr. Nehemiah White, Dr. C. Ellwood Nash, and Dr. Lewis B. Fisher, the last three while serving as presidents of Lombard college.

The first deacons of the church were Rev. J. P. Fuller, and Jesse Beals. In 1860, A. S. Devendorf was made deacon in place of Mr. Beals. In 1863 S. D. Colburn and C. Stevens were chosen. In July, 1864, Prof. I. A. Parker was elected in Mr. Stevens' place and is still serving the church in this office, a period of forty-eight years. Albert Webster was elected to the office of deacon in 1881 and served until his death in 1901, when Hiram Myers was chosen to fill this vacancy. Rev. Edson Reifsnider is at present clerk of the church while the pastor, Rev. Albert Fiske, is the moderator. The active membership of the church at present is 275.

The Sunday school was organized in 1855, Hon. Samuel W. Brown being its first superintendent. Dr. Standish succeeded him in 1860, filling the office for nearly twenty years. Others who have served the church in this capacity are Otis Jones, Rev. Eben H. Chapin, William Mecorney, James W. Carney, Hon. T. J. Hale, John W. Grubb, Mrs. C. E. Nash, Dr. E. N. Nash and Edson Reifsnider. The present superintendent is J. S. Adams, and he is bringing the Sunday school up to a high standard.

A Young People's Christian union has been maintained by the young people of the church and of the college and a Junior league has at times been a feature of the work of the church.

The Ladies' Aid society has for many years been an active, efficient organization and has been of great service in the work of the church. It was organized in 1866, under the able direction of Mrs. Dr. Balch. This organization paid $1,500 to the building fund of the new church and since its completion has maintained an organist and choir for the church services, and helped to meet other church expenses, the past year having raised for church expenses the sum of $1,478. Mrs. Chas. A. Webster is now the president, Mrs. Edson Reifsnider, secretary, and Mrs. Howard Knowles, treasurer.

Under the pastorate of Rev. Albert R. Fiske, the church has been open daily for the service to those who might need its help. A very successful Girls club was conducted in its parlors for some months, while in the office of the church for two seasons an employment bureau has been maintained, and here the needy have been helped by gifts of food, clothing, and temporary loans, and employment for those out of work has been found free of cost to the applicant.

This is a step in the line of work which many churches are now seeking, the keynote of which is service to others. The maintenance of the Girls club has recently been undertaken by the civics department of Galesburg Woman's club and will soon be recognized as one of the permanent institutions of Galesburg. A very successful Boys club was conducted in the church for some months, and now it is expected that a parish house will be erected where not only the Boys club but other kinds of social service may find a home. The Universalist church leads in this kind of work in Galesburg.

A feature of church life for this parish under the pastorate of Mr. Fiske is the church Bulletin which is issued monthly. It contains not only such announcements as are of interest to the congregation, but a sermon which is adapted to missionary work for the Universalist church.

For nearly sixty years this church has ministered to its people in this community, teaching the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all men and that all souls will finally be harmonized with God. Its growth cannot be measured by what appears in this history, but the influence it has had in spreading the principles of this beautiful faith to all churches and all peoples in the community.

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS

By A. C. Gaylord

The Seventh-Day Adventist denomination was developed by the great Advent movement which swept over the world from 1834 to 1844. This movement stirred the world, as the message of the soon coming of Christ was proclaimed in all the leading countries of the earth by men who, without a knowledge of one another's work, went forth to sound the same message.

The basis of this proclamation was the prophetic periods of the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel and the fourteenth chapter of Revelation, the slogan being, "The hour of His judgment is come." Thousands from all denominations accepted the message and for a time believed in the soon coming of Christ; but not realizing the fulfilment of their hopes so soon as expected most of these abandoned their belief and returned to their former faith.

A few, however, still clung to the idea that there was a great truth in that movement though but dimly comprehended at the time, and these searched the word for further light on the prophecies, the proclamation of which had been attended by such wonderful manifestations of divine power.

They soon discovered that the hour of His judgment is a brief though indefinite period just preceding the second coming of Christ—court week—at which time the cases of all are investigated before judgment is passed. That during this time we are to look for the signs given in the Word of God as tokens of the end, which they believe is near, but do not set any definite time for that event.

As they continued searching the word light was revealed on other points, prominent among which was the fact that the seventh day of the week is still the Sabbath as required by the fourth commandment of the law of God, and that in the last days there is a special call to reform on this point and to return to the Sabbath of the Bible.

These two truths—the belief in the near advent of Christ and the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath—have given them the name of Seventh-day Adventists.

The fundamental idea which has served as the actuating impulse and the creative principle of this movement is loyalty to the plain teachings of the Word of God, rather than to tradition or creed. United with this is the recognition of the fact that God gives light upon the scriptures for the proclamation of special truths due to the world at any special time.

Thus, when the time came for the first advent of Christ, God raised up John the Baptist, charged with a divine message based on the fulfilment of prophecy. This forerunner of our Lord proclaimed to rulers, priests and people the truths they needed to know in order to be ready to receive the Saviour.

Just so, as the great prophetic periods recorded in scripture had either come to a close or were nearing fulfilment and the specific signs marking the last generation were appearing, the providence of God raised up the great second advent movement. This movement is proclaiming to the world the speedy second coming of Christ in power and glory, and with special emphasis urging upon all repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, and obedience to His Word as a preparation for that event.

Prominent among their points of doctrine are the following:

1. They believe in the deity, divinity, and pre-existence of Christ.

2. In salvation from sin through faith in the merits and atoning work of Christ—"righteousness by faith," the original Protestant doctrine; also that faith without works (obedience) is dead.

3. In conversion or a new birth by the operation of the Spirit of God.

4. In the perpetual obligation to obey the law of God—the ten commandments—but this can be done only by grace, through faith.

5. That man is not by nature immortal, that eternal life is a gift of God given only in Christ.

6. In a literal resurrection from the dead, and that rewards and punishments are bestowed at the close of the judgment.

7. That immersion is the scriptural mode of baptism.

8. In the separation of church and state and in granting to every man freedom to believe or not to believe, to worship or not to worship, according to his own choice. They are especially active in opposing the efforts made to enforce religion by law.

9. They believe in and practice temperance in the strictest sense, and are putting forth earnest efforts in the temperance cause. They use no tea, coffee, tobacco, nor alcoholic drinks. Vegetarianism is advocated and a large proportion of the members practice it.

10. That the best method for the support of the gospel is that which God has established, and have therefore adopted the tithing system for raising means to carry forward their work.

11. That the divine commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature is still in full force, and to this work Seventh-day Adventists are devoting their means and their lives.

Seventh-day Adventists have not set aside or modified any of their first principles of faith; but as the Word is searched and new light revealed it is accepted and added to what they already have. One truth never contradicts another but only adds to and strengthens its meaning.

Seventh-day Adventists were not organized as a separate denomination till 1861, when the rapid growth of the movement made such a step necessary.

It was first suggested in 1859 that each state hold an annual meeting in which careful planning of the work should be made. This suggestion really looked forward to the formation of state conference organizations.

During the summer of 1860, the subject was discussed at length in their paper, The Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, and in a general meeting of representatives from different states held in Battle Creek, Michigan, October, 1860, there was a candid consideration of the subject and a full and free discussion of legal organization which was gradually perfected.

In October, 1861, the Michigan conference was organized by the election of a chairman, a secretary, and an executive committee of three. By vote of the conference, it was recommended that the believers enter into church organization adopting the following as a church covenant:

"We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together as a church, taking the name Seventh-day Adventists, covenanting to keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus."

At this conference it was first decided that credentials should be granted to all Seventh-day Adventist ministers in this state who were in good standing and that ministers should carry papers consisting of a certificate of ordination and credentials signed by the chairman and clerk of the conference, which credentials should be renewed annually.

In the month of September, 1862, the Michigan conference held its first session in Monterey, Mich.

Here, for the first time, was presented the idea of receiving churches into conferences, as members were voted into churches. As seventeen churches in the state had already been organized, these were, by vote, taken into the conference and all members of these churches, who were present, were accepted as delegates.

It was at this conference too that the plan was adopted of paying ministers a certain sum per week for services rendered. This plan of organization was unanimously adopted by the other states, and in May, 1863, the general conference held its first session in Battle Creek, Mich. May 21st a constitution was adopted by the general conference and on the same day a constitution was recommended to the state conferences which was soon adopted.

Thus, step by step, as necessity required, order was established in the work. The same principles adopted in the organization up to 1864 were incorporated into the work as it enlarged and extended to other countries and nationalities.

As the movement advanced, the following general organizations were formed, the officers of which were elected at the regular sessions of the general conference:

The General Conference association—a legal body of twenty-one members to hold the title to the property of the various institutions in America and other countries.

The Foreign Mission board—to superintend and extend mission work outside of organized conferences.

The International Tract society—whose province was the distribution of reading matter and correspondence, seeking to open up new missions.

The Religious Liberty Association—its special field being to aid those persecuted for conscience sake and to circulate literature on the principles of religious liberty.

The International Sabbath-school Association—the object of which was the building up and advancement of the Sabbath-school work in all fields.

The Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association—its work relating to the training of physicians and nurses, the conducting of sanitariums, homes for orphans, the aged, etc.

The Young People's Missionary Volunteer society—the purpose of which is to foster the missionary spirit among the young people of the denomination.

In the Seventh-day Adventist denomination just as the members are united in a local church so the local churches are united in local conferences and the local conferences are united in a union conference, consisting of from three to five local conferences; and the union conferences form the general conference.

The General Conference acts only in an advisory way in organized fields but has direct supervision in unorganized territories, mainly now in heathen lands.

The statistical report of 1910 shows a membership of 104,562, with 106 organized conferences, 2,769 church buildings, 74 sanitariums located in different parts of the world devoted to the treatment of the sick and to promote the principles of health and temperance, believing that the true gospel has healing for the body as well as for the soul. In these sanitariums there are employed about 2,000 skilled physicians, surgeons and nurses, who treat their patients without drugs and endeavor to correct improper habits of living and to bring them in harmony with nature's laws.

In these institutions are utilized all the established remedial measures including scientific hydrotherapy, massage and Swedish movements, electrical treatments, sensible dietetics, regulated physical culture, and modern surgery. The assets of these institutions are over $3,368,000.

Aside from the sanitarium work for the benefit of mankind, the denomination is carrying on a complete system of education which combines the training of head, hand and heart, believing that the only true education is a three-fold development. They have 86 colleges and academies and 594 primary schools, with an enrollment of 20,526; assets of over $2,000,000.

Another important feature is the publishing work. They have twenty-eight publishing houses devoted exclusively to the publication of Christian literature, which is issued in 67 languages in the form of 363 bound books, 315 pamphlets, 12,000 tracts, 126 periodicals. This literature is circulated in all parts of the world.

Seventh-day Adventists are a missionary people and are working on the basis of "The gospel to all the world in this generation," believing that when this is accomplished the end will come as stated by Christ in Matt. 24:14.

They are now contributing over $2,000,000 annually for evangelistic work. The per capita for 1910 was $21.27. The per capita for foreign missions from communicants in the United States for 1910 was $6.58, and for the world $5.44. The Sabbath schools are contributing over $2,000 a week for foreign missions.

Of the 57 countries in which missions are sustained by the Protestant missionary societies, throughout the world, Seventh-day Adventists have entered 47. They have also entered a large number of countries not entered by any other Protestant society; so they are now carrying on missionary work in more than 70 countries.

The following statistical report speaks for itself regarding the growth of the movement:

The church of this faith in Galesburg was organized in 1897 in American Hall on East Main street, with a charter membership of 16. The first Seventh-day Adventists in Galesburg were Charles Newberry and wife, of Monmouth boulevard, they having come here from Michigan in the early eighties.

The first sermon preached in Galesburg by a Seventh-day Adventist minister was by Pastor L. D. Santee in 1895, in a tent erected for that purpose at the corner of Allen's avenue and Main street, where he, assisted by Pastor W. D. Curtis, conducted evangelistic services for a number of weeks. All but three or four of the charter members of this church were converted to the faith in this city. They continued to meet in American Hall to the year 1903, when they purchased a lot on Blaine avenue and erected a small church building at a cost of $2,500. This building was dedicated in March, 1904.

In the fifteen years since the organization of this church, two hundred and fifty members have enrolled. Of this number, five have gone out as missionaries to foreign countries: one to Africa, two to Australia, and two to Honolulu. Mr. and Mrs. Ames, for several years members of this church, went to Mountain Grove, Missouri, and established an orphanage, where they are caring for and educating more than twenty orphans. Another member, Mr. Corbally, went out from here into the ministry, and has raised up a large number of churches in the west. This company also furnished the funds which established a mission at Bulawayo, South Africa.

The church in this city has never had a regular pastor, but services are carried on regularly each week by the lay members, under the direction of a leader or elder chosen from the membership. The late James M. Osborn served the church in this capacity for the past seven years, up to the time of his death, which occurred January 3, 1912.

During the fifteen years this church has existed, they have contributed $16,350 for evangelistic work, aside from building their church and sustaining the local work. They are also putting forth earnest effort in this city to encourage the study of the Bible, and to hold up Christ as the only Redeemer and Saviour of men.

The church in Galesburg is the only one of this denomination in Knox county.

Yours Respectfully,

A. C. GAYLORD.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST, OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, AND OF ITS RISE AND GROWTH IN KNOX COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

I have carefully read the following article, and it meets my approval. The facts pertaining to the general history of the church are correct.

HEMAN C. SMITH,
General Historian of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Since the history of no people is complete without it take into account the religious principles that have governed in the lives of its citizens; and since there have been in the past, and are now, those citizens dwelling within Knox county who adhere to the doctrine of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints, we, briefly as may be possible, endeavor to set forth what those principles are; what the source of inspiration claimed by its founders; and to chronicle some of the more important events in the lives of its leaders.

We have gathered our information from the accredited standard records of this church, and have received the approval and sanction of the general church historian, Heman C. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa. Therefore, we submit the article as authentic.

Joseph Smith, the man whose name is most familiar in connection with what the world is pleased to call "Mormonism," was born in the town of Sharon, Vermont, December 23rd, 1805.

When but ten years of age, his father moved his family to Palmyra, New York, and four years later to Manchester, a town in the same county. While living at this latter place, Joseph Smith says "there obtained an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. It commenced with the Methodists, but soon became general among all the sects in that region of country; indeed, multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties, which created no small stir and division amongst the people, some crying, 'lo, here!' and some, 'lo, there!'"

Joseph Smith's family were not unaffected by all this excitement. But his mother, sister, and two brothers joined the Presbyterian church. Joseph, himself, thought seriously upon these matters and became inclined to unite with the Methodist church.

But the conflict between the various claimants as to which was the right church was so great that he grew uncertain in mind and knew not whom to believe nor what to do. Often he said to himself, "If any of these are right, how shall I know it?"

It was at this juncture that he was reading his Bible, one day, and came to the book of James. He read the 5th verse of the 1st chapter. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Thrilled with a strange and new sense of the significance of the statement, and of its application to his present need, he determined to put the matter to the test, and sought God for counsel.

Going apart to a secluded spot in the woods, he knelt in prayer, and poured forth his desires to God. At first, thick darkness seemed to envelop him. This was followed by the appearance of a pillar of light which descended from the Heavens, and the messenger of the Almighty answered his petition. He was instructed to join none of these "sects," for their creeds were an abomination in the sight of God. To quote, the Voice said, "They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; and they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness but they deny the power thereof."

When he related this remarkable experience to some of the preachers of the neighborhood, his story was greeted with contempt and unbelief. But, notwithstanding this, it excited the most bitter persecution, which grew and multiplied as the days went by.

But Joseph Smith was deeply impressed with the vision, and ceased not to bear testimony to the knowledge received. He continued in the common avocations of life for the next few years, until September 21st, 1823, when there was another visitation from the messenger of God. After describing the personal appearance of his heavenly visitor, Joseph Smith relates the occurrence thus: "He called me by name, and said unto me that he was a messenger sent from the presence of God to me, and that his name was Nephi. That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people. He said that there was a book deposited, written upon gold plates, giving an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang. He also said that the fulness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also that there were two stones, in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book. * * *"

Much more instruction was given, and the place where the plates were deposited was so plainly shown, in the vision, that he had no trouble to go directly to the spot the next day. The entire vision was repeated three times, successively.

The day following this remarkable experience, he went to the place shown him in the vision and found the plates with the Urim and Thummim exactly as stated by the messenger. He was not permitted to come into possession of them, however, for four years, or until September 22, 1827, when the work of translating the book began. The work of translation occupied the greater part of the next two years so that the first edition was not issued until 1830. In this work, he was greatly assisted by Oliver Cowdery, who acted as scribe, and by Martin Harris, who assisted with his means. These two, together with David Whitmer, who also aided them, were permitted to examine and bear witness to the divinity of the plates, and the angelic ministration which accompanied their delivery and translation. Their testimony, which remained unretracted and unshaken to the end of their lives, was as follows:

"Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we through the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi; and also of the Lamanites, their brethren; and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven and brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bear record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen."

The Book of Mormon is the record of God's dealings with the inhabitants of the American continent, of the ministry of their priests, and the teachings of their prophets, of the reign of their kings, and the rulers of the land. It covers historically twenty-six centuries, from the dispersion from Babel, 2200 B. C., to the hiding of the records, about 400 A. D.

The book derives its name from the compiler, Mormon, a Nephite prophet and general, who prepared metallic plates, by the instruction of the Lord, and engraved thereon the abridged history of the Nephite and Lamanite nations.

While the translation of the Book of Mormon was being carried on, from 1827 to 1830, another equally important, if not a greater work, was being instituted; and that was the establishment of the Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth. The everlasting Gospel was once again taught among men, in fulfillment of the prophecy uttered by John, the Revelator, upon the Isle of Patmos, recorded in Rev. 14:6. The angel had come; the gospel was preached.

The Church of Jesus Christ was formally organized, agreeable to the laws of the land, April 6, 1830, at Fayette, Seneca county, New York.

Making claim to a restoration and not a reformation of the gospel, the organization included the same officers as were mentioned in the "apostolic" church of New Testament history, namely—apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, elders, priests, deacons, bishops, etc.

The faith and doctrine included,

(1st) Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ, Heb. 11:6; 1 Pet. 1:21; 1 Tim. 1:10; John 3:16; Mark 11:22.

(2nd) Repentance. (Ceasing to do evil and learning to do well.) Matt. 3:2; Luke 13:8; Ezek. 18:30; Mark 1:5; Acts 2:38.

(3rd) Baptism, by immersion for the remission of sins. Matt. 3:13; Mark 1:4,5; Luke 3:3; John 3:5; Acts 2:38; 22:16; 2:41; 8:12, 37, 38.

(4th) Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the ordination of the ministry, the healing of the sick, and the blessing of children. Acts 8:17; 13:2, 3; Mark 16:17; Deut. 34:9; 1 Tim. 4:14; 1 Cor. 12:3.

(5th) Resurrection of the body; that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired. Job 19:25, 26; Dan. 12:2; 1 Cor. 15:42; 1 Thes. 4:16; Rev. 20: 6; Acts 17:31.

(6th) Eternal Judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished, according to the degree of good or evil they shall have done. Rev. 20:12; Eccle. 3:17; Matt. 16:27.

Further, the church believes that no man has the right to minister in the ordinances of the church, "except he be called of God as was Aaron" and authoritatively ordained to the office in which he occupies.

Relative to marriage, the church has always taught that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock for either man or woman, except in cases of death, or where the contract is broken by transgression. Upon this matter the Book of Mormon is very explicit, reading, "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me and hearken to the word of the Lord. For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none. For, I, the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me, saith the Lord of hosts." Jacob 2:6, 7.

Thus was the church organized in 1830, and such was the doctrine taught then.

Such is the organization, faith and doctrine held now by the re-organized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which claims to be the successor to the original church.

This claim has been sustained by the decision rendered by Judge L. S. Sherman of the Court of Common Pleas, Lake county, Ohio, in the "Kirtland Temple Suit"; and by Judge John F. Phillipps of the Circuit Court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, western division, at Kansas City, Missouri, in the celebrated "Temple Lot Case."

From the place of its organization at Fayette, New York, the main body of the church moved westward, settling in Ohio, and there building a temple at Kirtland. This temple is standing today in a good state of preservation, and is visited annually by sightseers from all over the world. From here, emigration carried the greater number to Missouri where large numbers settled in Jackson county with headquarters at Independence, near where Kansas City now stands.

The same spirit of persecution which had very early been manifested by those who opposed the message and mission of Joseph Smith and his associates, followed them here and was much increased by the fact that the Latter Day Saints, without exception, were opposed to slavery. Without entering into the details of those terrible times, when "might" seemed to make "right," we will only state that during the winter of 1838-39, the saints were forcibly driven from their homes and most of them compelled to leave the state. Large numbers crossed the Mississippi river into Illinois and many found a temporary shelter with the kind hearted people of Quincy. Among these were the families of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

Here, in April, Joseph Smith came, and in May, 1839, they moved on to the little town of Commerce. This place was a village of some half dozen houses situated on the Mississippi river. The land was literally a swampy wilderness, when purchased by the refugees. They were joined by others and the village grew into a thriving town within the next few years.

On April 21, 1840, the name of Commerce was officially changed to Nauvoo. Nauvoo became the headquarters of the church. The erection of another temple was begun.

But they were not allowed to dwell here in peace. Continued and unceasing efforts were made to destroy the lives of the leaders; they were repeatedly charged with crimes of which they were never proven guilty. In the year 1844, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, together with several others, were charged with "riot." Fearing the violence of the mob spirit so prevalent, they crossed the river into Iowa, where they were secure for the time being. But upon receiving assurance from Governor Ford that they would be protected by the state militia, they returned, went to Carthage, and gave themselves into custody.

On June 27, 1844, the jail was surrounded by a mob of from 150 to 200 men (the greater part of the guard had been withdrawn) and Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot and instantly killed. And as is ever the case, the blood of the martyr but strengthens the cause for which he dies.

It seemed to have been generally conceded that young Joseph Smith, the son of the slain president, should occupy his father's place, but he was only a lad of 12 years of age. What to do until he should reach an age to fit him for the responsibility, was the grave question that confronted the church. In the preceding 14 years since the church was organized at Fayette, in New York, with but six members, there had been a remarkable growth made. Despite all the fierce opposition encountered, they now numbered between 150,000 and 200,000 members. Only about 30,000 of these resided at or near Nauvoo.

In the decade that followed the death of the prophet and president of the church, many would-be leaders arose. The members that were at Nauvoo, were scattered in various directions, some going with one, some with another. They were indeed as sheep without a shepherd.

A portion of these at Nauvoo followed Brigham Young and his associates out across the western plains, and it is largely owing to the conduct of this faction that the name of Latter Day Saint came to be regarded as synonymous with evil.

But the major part of the church remained faithful to the original doctrine and teachings of the prophet and waited for the time when God should raise up faithful men to again unite them under one banner, and that, the unchangeable message of the gospel.

leader. Since the year 1852, the church has been known as the Re-organized Gradually this was accomplished. In April, 1860, Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith, martyred, was formally accepted by the church as its prophet and Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The reason is quite evident.

And from that date until this present writing, the church has made steady progress in membership and in the esteem of all honorable men.

And now we come to the time when these people became identified with the history of Knox county.

Prior to the year of 1860, there had moved into Knox county several families who were members of the church in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Among these was Zenos H. Gurley, a man very intimately associated with the reorganization of the church; one who was not only an active local preacher, but who also labored for many years under general church conference appointment.

Through his efforts, together with those of others no less zealous, a flourishing branch (congregation) of the church was soon built up and established at Henderson and long known as the "Henderson Grove branch." To the original number, many more names were added by conversions. During the year of 1870, a chapel was built and for many years was the gathering place for not only the resident members, but the quarterly conferences were often held at this place in the years that followed.

Possessed of the "missionary spirit" to an unusual degree, the elders of the Henderson Grove branch were very active in promulgating the doctrine of their church and preached their faith in all the surrounding territory. Since they went without hire, and their only reward was the joy of sharing with others the consolation of a "heaven-born" faith, we must credit them with sincerity, at least. Laboring in the field, the shop, or at the bench during the day, they would drive or walk for miles at night or on Sunday in order to preach in schoolhouse or church. Such efforts resulted in other branches being established.

At Abingdon, a branch existed for a number of years. They reported but ten or eleven members in 1862, but the next year their report read "membership over forty, with great interest manifested."

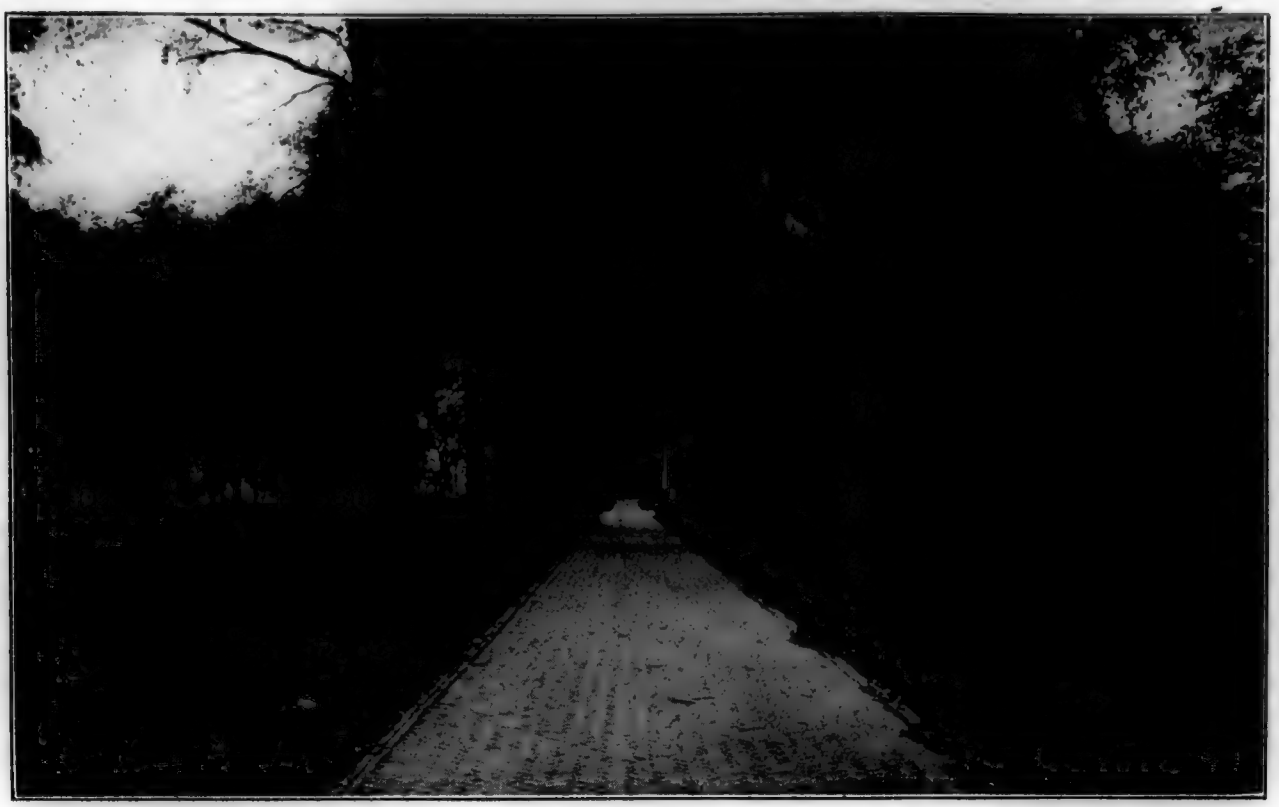
About this time, several families belonging to the church were residents of Galesburg. And here, on November 15, 1863, was held a meeting, or council, which was the beginning of the organization of the several branches in northwest Illinois into what is now known as the "Kewanee district."

The following ministry from Knox county attended this meeting, and participated in its deliberations: Zenos H. Gurley, Edwin Stafford, Lorin Page, C. M. Brown, Thos. Allen, W. A. Moore and Eli Atkinson.

At the beginning of the '70s and as a direct result of the labors of Elder M. T. Short, there was a small branch established in the eastern part of the county at Truro.

A similar effort was made at Victoria by other elders and resulted in the work being rooted here in an organized branch composed of some twenty or more members.

At Viola, likewise, a small nucleus was organized. But all three of these congregations made but an indifferent growth, and after an existence extending over some twenty years, they ceased to live. The membership was largely scattered; some of them later being instrumental in establishing the church at Dahinda.



Long ago, death and removals had depleted the numbers at Abingdon, and where there was once a growing congregation, there was no longer any branch.

But Henderson Grove branch lived and grew. They continued to send representatives to the district conferences, and reported to the same until in the early part of 1900. Then this congregation, like the others mentioned, was affected by death and removals. The little chapel was sold, and the scattered membership largely enrolled elsewhere.

But at no time since 1860, has there been a date when the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ has not been represented in Knox county by one or more congregations. The last one to be organized and the only one now extant within the county is the one at Dahinda, Illinois, known as the Dahinda branch.

In 1896, the saints living near Dahinda made an effort to build a chapel for church services at that place. Helped along by favorable friends they succeeded in doing this and the building was ready to occupy in May. It was not dedicated, however, until in June, 1904, when Elder J. W. Wight, missionary-in-charge of the Kewanee district, preached the dedicatory sermon at a session of the district conference.

Beginning with but eleven names, this branch has made a steady growth, and have added to the original number, by baptism, sixty-one names. Additions by letter have swelled this number to over eighty, but death and removals have decreased the list until today there is a membership of about sixty. Some of these members are the descendants of the early-day Latter Day Saints, but a large number are those who have been converted and joined the church in recent years.

There is a scattered membership residing at Galesburg, Victoria, Henderson and elsewhere in the county, but only at Dahinda is there a local organization with regularly appointed weekly services. The church here is in charge of the local ministry.

Dahinda branch reports to, and is under the supervision of the Kewanee district, and the district makes report to the general church conferences held annually.

The official headquarters of the church herein described are at Lamoni, Iowa. From the publishing house located at this place, is issued the official paper of the church, "The Saints Herald," together with various other publications, tracts, books, etc.

The aged president and prophet of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints lived at Lamoni for many years until recently, when he moved to Independence, Missouri, where he now resides.

The work of the ministry, or priesthood of the church, may be classed under three general heads, namely, that of the pastoral, the missionary and the financial.

The pastoral or presiding line includes the work of the presidency, high priests, elders, priests, teachers and deacons.

Each local congregation is presided over by an elder, a priest, a teacher or a deacon, sustained by the vote of the branch.

Each district is presided over by a high priest, or an elder sustained by the vote of the district.

The entire church is presided over by a president, assisted by two counsellors. These are appointed by revelation, but are acknowledged or received by the voice of the church.

The missionary line of the priesthood is composed of the twelve apostles, the seventies of elders; also the high priests, elders and priests when laboring in missionary work. The entire missionary work, that is presenting the gospel to those who are not members of the church, is in charge of the twelve apostles. The seventies are sent under their direction and report their labors direct to them.

The finances of the church are in charge of a presiding bishop, assisted by two counsellors, assisted by other bishops. The families of the ministry are sustained from the church treasury, which is supplied by the tithes and offerings paid in by the members. Each member contributes according as he has been prospered, and each family receives according to their needs and requirements.

The books accepted by the church as containing the word of God are the Bible, the book of Mormon, and the doctrine and covenants.

The Latter Day Saints believe in a God that never changes; in a Gospel that never changes, but is the same in all ages of the world, that obedience to the same law will always produce the same effect, and hence the same "gifts and blessings" accompany the obedient believer today as in former times.

They believe in a religion that will enable the individual to develop a character fit to associate with the Divine One. It must prepare man "to live," not especially "to die." That death does not change character; it only changes environment. Therefore, we believe that obedience to its principles will make men better citizens of the town, county and state.

In conclusion, we say in the words of Jesus (John 7-17), "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE IN KNOX COUNTY

The Christian Science church was founded in 1879 by Mary Baker Eddy, the discoverer of Christian Science and author of its text-book, "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures." The church was organized "to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing" (Church Manual). In 1892 the church was reorganized as The First Church of Christ, Scientist, known as The Mother church, in Boston, Massachusetts. The present officers of The Mother church are: President, Judge Clifford P. Smith; clerk, John V. Dittemore; treasurer, Stephen A. Chase; directors, Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, Stephen A. Chase, John V. Dittemore, Adam H. Dickey.

All Christian Science churches and societies, of which there are now 1,260 in the United States and 135 in foreign countries, are branches of The Mother church. Lesson-sermons compiled from the Bible and "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures" are read at the services in Christian Science churches. There are about five thousand Christian Science practitioners regularly devoting their time to the practice of Christian Science mind healing.

Mrs. Eddy founded The Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, Quarterly, Der Herold der Christian Science and the Christian Science Monitor (a daily newspaper), all of which are published by the Christian Science Publishing society in Boston.

There is in connection with the Christian Science movement an official board of lectureship designed to furnish the public correct information concerning the fundamental teachings of Christian Science. Lectures given by members of this board are free to the public.

There are in the state of Illinois ninety-two Christian Science churches and societies. All of these churches hold public services and maintain free reading rooms where the public may have access to all authorized publications on the subject of Christian Science.

Christian Science was first introduced in Galesburg about 1886. Services were held at the home of one of the Scientists, and the interest gradually increased until the year 1909, when it seemed best to purchase a church home. Accordingly the Hale property on the corner of South and Cedar streets was purchased and the building remodeled into a large audience room, which accommodates about two hundred. Services are held every Sunday morning at 10:30 and Sunday school at 11:45. Wednesday evening testimonial meetings are held at 8 o'clock. There is also a reading room in the building, which is open daily except Sundays and legal holidays from 12:30 to 4 p. m. The public is welcome to this reading room, and Christian Science literature may be read or purchased there.

Three former residents of Knox county who are prominently identified with the Christian Science movement are Alfred Farlow and Willis F. Gross of Boston and John H. Wheeler of Kansas City.

GEORGE SHAW COOK.

In nearly every township of this county there are a few members of this church, but Galesburg, having the only branch church within the county, the outside members have to come to Galesburg when they attend church. Members from Knoxville are often visitors at the church in Galesburg.—Editor.

THE IRISH IN KNOX COUNTY

BY MRS. LIZZIE MINEHAN, MARGARET SLATTERY AND ROSE HOBEN

Because of the fact that the story of Ireland's golden age is comparatively unknown, and because of another fact, that the coming into the knowledge of that age is a great source of pleasure to the Irish especially, we have woven some of it into our work on the county, for which liberty we trust that our readers will pardon us.

"To begin wid," Knox county bears the name of an Irishman. It has been estimated that one-fourth of the officers in the Revolutionary war were of Irish birth or parentage. Among that number was General Henry Knox, the distinguished soldier, statesman and confidential friend of the great Washington. In the naming of the many counties of the Military Tract it was planned to do honor to the heroes of the revolution, and thus it came about that these twenty townships of the fairest land in all Illinois have become a lasting monument to the memory of Henry Knox. Stark, Sullivan and Wayne are the names of sister counties that in like manner give lasting testimony to the high per cent of Irish blood that officered the American revolution, while we make but passing reference here to the quantities of that blood which fired the veins of the rank and file of the Colonial army.

You know then that the Irish were here early in colonial history and that as an integral part of the growing population of the eastern states they drifted westward on the tide of a pioneer people and with that people took root where they lodged. You do not know, perhaps, just how the Irish came to be in and of this country and why it was that they left their island home in such myriads during certain decades; the climax of emigration being reached in the unprecedented exodus that took place during the third quarter of the nineteenth century, when Knox county was making its most rapid growth.

In order to make clear the causes of that outward movement, we will touch upon some history known to but few except the most interested.

We introduce this historical sketch with a spotlight picture of the Irish nation in that glorious and now almost forgotten period that lies between the conversion of Ireland to Christianity by St. Patrick in the fifth century and its subjugation by the English in the twelfth. This picture we have adapted from "Ireland's Story," by Johnson and Spencer.

This island was the most potent factor in the refinement of Europe and the civilization of the world. The classics, the arts and the sciences flourished in the Emerald isle when camelopards and tigers bounded in the Roman amphitheater. These Irish apostles, Columba to Scotland and England, Columbanus to the banks of the Rhine, in Switzerland and in Italy, Fursa to Belgium, Virgil to Austria, were among the missionaries who went in companies, taking with them their books, those beautiful manuscripts for which Ireland is justly noted. Excelling in religious and classical learning, they were also skilled in music, painting and carving. This enthusiasm for teaching flowed from a sincere and abundant culture at home. The fame of her schools and universities went abroad and students flocked to Ireland from all the neighboring countries, especially from England, coming thence in fleet loads. From kings and nobles down to the poorest students all were received, cared for and taught free of charge. Where? In Ireland. St. Finian's school at Clonard had 3,000 pupils and the school at Bangor had almost as many. Well might Ireland be called the bridge over the dark ages. The Roman empire fell, swallowed up by the tide of northern savages, Gaul was overrun by the Franks, Spain and Italy by the Lombards, Britain by Angles, Saxons and Danes, Austria was swept by Asiatic nomads, all Europe was submerged by a deluge of heathendom. Ireland was the one exception, the ark of safety for the old wisdom and beauty of the classical days. Ireland was the bridge over the dark ages, and as soon as the flood of heathen invasion ebbed light and hope crossed the bridge and were carried by Irish teachers and preachers to all the new formed countries of Europe.

There are nearly sixteen million Americans here in the United States to-day that can look back with pride upon this brilliant picture of old Ireland's golden past, for to them as Irish-Americans it is a family possession. Many millions of them, however, never take that backward look, because in so doing they must look across the broad and terrible gulf of bitter centuries that yawns between.

The first Irish who came to the United States were the prisoners taken in the Cromwellian wars. They were delivered to the English merchants, who sold them as slaves to the planters of Virginia and the West Indies. In those black days Cromwell paid $25 for the head of a wolf and $50 for the head of a patriot Irishman.

You have heard of the blue laws of Connecticut. For two hundred years they have been obsolete, a joke, a standard space filler, used by the compilers of almanacs. Have you heard of the penal laws? Far from being a joke, they were in force from the days of William and Mary down through two centuries and up to the days of our own fathers, when the history of Knox county begins. These laws lie back of Irish emigration, for they were the means of converting into utter misery the lives of the happiest natured people on earth. They obliterated even the footprints of learning and education and by strangling to an early death every native trade and industry, these same laws converted into a barren, neglected waste the fertile and entrancingly beautiful island home of the Irish race.

The penal laws were directed chiefly at the Catholic population, but caused just as much suffering among the Presbyterians of the north and the other non-conformists to the English church. Each law struck a two-edged blow, first at the ancient religion of the Irish, second at his ancient thirst for education. "Catholics were strictly forbidden to teach either in private or in public, and parents were forbidden to send their children out of Ireland to be educated. This meant absolute lack of education for Catholics. The eldest son of a Catholic landowner, if he went over to the legal church, could straightway oust his father and take all his possessions. No Catholic could buy land or lease it for a long term. He could not inherit an estate under a will. No renter could make a profit greater than one-third of the rent. Of course he could not sit in parliament. He could not hold civil or military office. Besides this tithes had to be paid to the Anglican clergy, who collected them rigorously. Catholic and Protestant suffered alike." Finally the English parliament passed an act in 1699 prohibiting trade relations between Ireland and all external ports, thus deliberately killing that which had been the subsistence of the masses. Ireland's best single commodity was wool. Like the Irish linen of to-day, Irish wool was then famed all over Europe, finding a large market and bringing high prices. The English merchants, fearing the competition, demanded its complete destruction. Nothing was left the Irish but starvation or immigration. Great numbers of the Presbyterians and non-conformists left at once and found their way to New England, where they straightway gave great impetus to the weaving industries that have since made New England rich as well as famous.

Jonathan Swift, Protestant, a noted writer and dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin, who has left us full accounts of the distress of the times, tells us that the poverty and misery caused by the destruction of all these trades brought famine and pestilence in their wake.

During the eighteenth century the peasantry of Ireland, the most wretched in all Europe, were reduced to a state of misery, from which they have not fully recovered to-day. In considering this legislation it must be borne in mind that a similar state of affairs existed in other lands at the same time. Only in Ireland, however, did a small minority try to suppress the religion of a whole nation on whose confiscated land they lived and whose revenues they enjoyed.

What stamps the Irish penal laws as particularly infamous is that they represented not only religious bigotry, oppression and cruelty, all three common enough in those days, but also a broken promise, a violation of the solemn promises of the treaty of Limerick. Under the provisions of that treaty the Irish leaders had consented to end the war and dismissed the army of relief which had already reached Limerick from France.

Relief came from an unexpected quarter. Across the open Atlantic to the westward providence flung wide the doors to the English colonies of the new world and there a young people might work out its destiny and at the same time ward off outside interference. Into that colonial life the Irish entered heart and soul, and when the war for independence gathered and broke there were minute men and Green Mountain boys in plenty whose speech was tinctured with the brogue, who exercised especial zeal in the prompt and efficient delivery of powder and ball to the red-coated ranks of England. That the Irish in America, like the Irish elsewhere, have been a military people goes without saying. From Major Mollie Pitcher on the plains of Monmouth to Bucky

O'Neil at Santiago, from Andrew Jackson at New Orleans to Phil Sheridan of Shenandoah fame, the Irish have been on the firing line.

Some one has said "that an Irishman may get on the wrong side of the fight, but one thing is certain, he will never get on the fence."

"It is a matter of simple truth in American history that the Kellys, Burks and Sheas have been to the front in every generation. They were all in the battle of Lexington, and the same names appear on the death list of the ill-fated Maine."

Beginning with the prisoners of war exported to America in the days of Cromwell and including the Presbyterian weavers who fled to these shores in the seventeenth century, there were always fresh relays of Irish coming to the colonies and later to the United States. These were rapidly absorbed, and in a few decades became difficult of detection among the masses of the population. In contrast with these there was the constant influx of the late arrivals, simplest of the simple and greenest of the green apparently, but every one equipped with a willing hand, a bright, observing eye and an unfailing sense of humor—a three-round ladder that leads to the top of any situation.

Before the famine of 1847 the population of Ireland was nearly nine million. To-day it is less than half that total, having diminished every year in the last half century. No western country has ever suffered a calamity equal to that of the black '47, and as to the events of that year and those immediately following it, question any graybearded Irishman of your acquaintance.

In the earliest county records we find the name of Michael Fraker, the first settler not only in Lynn township, but the first in that entire portion of the county. Major Thomas McKee, hero of the first and second Black Hawk wars, and Hon. Wm. McMurtry, lieutenant governor of Illinois in 1848, were pioneers of Irish extraction, the latter locating in Henderson township in 1829.

The descendants of Francis McDonough are to-day living upon the land just north of the limits of Galesburg that was given to Mr. McDonough by the government for his services in the War of 1812. Mr. McDonough came here from Kentucky in 1854 with the family of his daughter, Mrs. Michael Duffy, to take possession of his allotment of the Military Tract.

At the village of St. Augustine in Indian Point township occurred in 1837 the first grouping of Irish settlers within the county. It has been said that the state of Illinois constituted an important link between the north and the south in the stress of Civil war times, stretching its length for four hundred miles across the very center of the nation. It lay open to two distinct lines of settlement, namely, the Hudson river, Mohawk valley and Great Lakes route and the Virginia, Maryland and Kentucky trail. Over the one came the Yankee, the York stater and the rawer emigrant from the old country; over the other came the drawling tongued, slow moving, courteous southerner, and with him many a pure blooded Irish family, identified for two or more centuries, perhaps, with the American colonies of the southern seaboard. In Illinois these two streams flowed rapidly together and became an important factor in cementing the Union. To Knox county came Irish blood by both channels. The southerner came first.

Up from Beardstown, Kentucky, in the late thirties came the founders of St. Augustine. They traveled on horseback and were headed by one Patrick Clements, a man of wealth and related to the Spaulding family of Maryland.

With him came Henry and Austin Matingly, William and Henderson Hogan, Hamilton O'Man, Joseph, Marcellas and Lawrence McKeirnan, John Gallet, George Tippet, Thomas Livers and Patrick H. Smith. There were men of English and French extraction in this party, but as many of the names given are pure Irish and most of the families seem to be related we give the entire roll.

These men established the Catholic church in St. Augustine, and became important owners of land in Fulton and Knox counties. As to their sterling and kindly qualities, we have the interesting testimony of the venerable Mrs. Mary Barber Roe, of Garfield avenue, Galesburg. Mrs. Roe is herself a native of New York, and came to St. Augustine in 1841. Her mind is bright and active at the advanced age of ninety-seven. Of the pioneers mentioned above, she says, "I tell you those were good people. No matter what church the sick or the needy belonged to, they would take them right in and care for them."

Robert Supple and John Kinella joined the colony in the late '40s.

From Pennsylvania, by way of the Illinois river, came the families of Thomas and Michael Dougherty, in 1854. They were soon followed by about fifteen other families, among them were Patrick O'Pray, Edward, John and Barney Larkins.

After the Northern Cross railroad was built, which soon became the Quincy branch of the Burlington, the colony was greatly augmented.

The following with their families came in the '50s: Nicholas Crow, Thomas and William Burke, James and John Fogerty, John Kearns, Peter Mack, Lawrence Clay and M. Condon.

A group that formed almost immediately after the St. Augustine colony was that of the Presbyterian Irish of Salem township. These sturdy pioneers came from the counties of northern Ireland, and landed most of them at Philadelphia. From 1839 to 1850, they were entering from the government small pieces of land in the township where their descendants now own entensive tracts.

The Mathews, William and John, were emigrants from County Tyrone. The late Robert G. Mathews was a son of John Mathews. For six years R. G. Mathews served on the county board of supervisors and was chairman of that board while the court house was being built. For a term of eighteen years he served the county in the offices of sheriff and deputy sheriff alternately. In that capacity also he rendered valuable service to the county. Charles H. Mathews, father of Mrs. J. Grant Beadle, who at his death, in 1883, was rated as the wealthiest man in Galesburg, was the son of another John Mathews, also an emigrant from County Tyrone.

The Sloans, John and Solomon R., were emigrants from County Antrim and County Derry respectively. The former is known as the Hon. John Sloan, having served on the county board of supervisors from 1869 to 1878, after which he was sent to the state legislature, where he served several terms as democratic representative. His son, Hugh Sloan, has long been a prominent member of the county board.

The McKeighans, Alexander and James, were emigrants from County Antrim. Alexander H. McKeighan is a son of the former and for many years has been proprietor and publisher of the Yates City Banner.

John Wasson was a native of County Fermaugh, and like the others of this group, became, during his long residence in Salem, a man of wealth and influence.

The office of W. S. Gale, in the year 1851-52, was a meeting place for the directors of the Central Military Tract Railroad Co. These promoters, one Patrick Dunn among them, were using every means to attract the prospective railroad through Galesburg. Their gigantic efforts brought gigantic returns. Their every hope was realized and some things unthought of as well, for at that very time, as we have shown, events across the sea were loosing the unparalleled flood of immigration that swept into the land during the '50s and '60s. The heads of nearly every full blooded Irish family in the county came in by stage or along the new laid rails of the "Q" during those two decades, first perhaps, as roistering, high spirited lads plying the pick and shovel in the construction gangs that pushed the glistening steel into the waiting west, often as raw farm hands and untrained house maids stepping from immigrant trains with scanty bundled belongings. A few years, and they came as better trained artisans, having been apprenticed in the towns of Massachusetts and New York, where they had lingered for a short time before pushing west.

In Columbia county, New York, the Shaker settlements were flourishing in the '50s. Many of the immigrants took the stage at Albany and obtained employment in and about Lebanon. The Tilden family of that place, as well as the Shakers, were large employers; and just over the line in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Barker Brothers, manufacturers of drugs, added many other Irish to their pay roll. There, at Lebanon and at Pittsfield, many a lad and lassie from opposite counties of Ireland met for the first time and either married outright or plighted their troth until they should lay up a little and meet again on the plains of Illinois, for this stop in the Mohawk valley was merely to get their bearings and earn the price of a railroad ticket to the state where it was rumored the Gales, Moshers and Ferrises would pay higher wages and so open the door to larger opportunities.

In Pittsfield was formed the clan of Redingtons, Hobins, Herleys, Clareys, Hewitts, Magners, Mackeys, Browns, Franeys, O'Connells and Haleys. From Lebanon came another group made up of the Nortons, Penderghasts, Maleys, Coffeys, Minihans, Milans, Shays, Nashes, O'Connors, Ryans, Hustons, Carmodys, Flynns, Torticels, Slatterys; as Mrs. Margaret Nash Minihan puts it, "We followed each other like the ducks."

Mr. John Slattery tells of early experience on the Tilden place.

Weeding all day under a blistering New York sun at raw seventeen was far different from leading the life of an idle care-free boy under the caressing skies of Limerick. Worn out by the sickening heat, he lay down to rest a moment between the rows of herbs. He closed his eyes and opened them to behold H. A. Tilden himself peering down at him. The reddest kind of a blush poured up into the boy's hair. At the same instant there flashed into his mind the possible consequences of his breach of duty—disgrace, no work, the dependent brothers and sisters. "I—I'm sick," he faltered. Mr. Tilden cried out "He's sunstruck," lifted the astonished lad carefully to his feet, supported his agitated steps to the house and telling him not to try to talk made him comfortable on a couch. At sundown he was dismissed as being out of danger and as the shamefaced boy scuttled home to his father's cabin, he vowed a lasting devotion to his kind-hearted employer.

When Samuel J. Tilden was elected by the people to the presidency, in 1876, and lost by one historic vote in the heated contest that followed, there was many a democratic vote polled in Knox county that carried with it an extra measure of good will, because of personal memories of Lebanon and the Tildens.

Many families came to Galesburg from the old country directly, such as the Connertons and Keefes. Mr. Connerton used to twit his pious little wife with having said to him fifty years ago when preparing for their wedding trip, "Tom, I will go any place in the west with you and live on two meals a day if you will settle near a church." "We lived next door to St. Patrick's church, first on one side and then on the other," said Mr. Connerton, "but all these forty-seven years I have noted she likes her three square meals a day." The home of this pioneer couple was rendered sacred to many a Galesburg family as the place where "father and mother" were united in matrimony before the completion of St. Patrick's church.

Most of those mentioned in the preceding groups made permanent homes in Galesburg, while a high percentage took up land at the earliest opportunity and became prominent and permanent farmers in their respective townships.

Henderson creek was a sizable prairie stream. Along its banks stretched heavy patches of timber, and these miniature forests have become historic in Knox county as "Henderson Grove," or briefly, "the grove." (We are indebted to Mrs. Eliza Minehan, of Arthur avenue, and to the family of Mr. Michael Huston for most of our data concerning the Grove colony.)

This timber land was obtainable by the early settlers in fifty acre tracts. The price was low, but mountain high to the penniless. At the cost of heavy and prolonged manual labor, any able bodied man might become a landlord. The Milans, Boylstons, Minehans, Coffeys, Penderghasts, Shays, O'Briens, Powers, Donahues, McGraths, Cofields and Slatterys here obtained their first square foot of land and were well established as tillers of the soil at the outbreak of civil war. In many cases two brothers would take up fifty acres between them, fell the trees and grub out the stumps by their combined efforts. Fuel and building material were to be had for the hacking and splitting. Log houses were quickly rolled up and housekeeping began with the briefest of ceremony. One great advantage of living in the Grove was the diversity of labor obtainable when the farming season ended. Wood could be cut at fifty cents per cord and hauled to Galesburg. Coal mines were being opened here and there along the creek, while Brow's brick yard was rapidly converting timber clay into building material. Blazed trails led from cabin to cabin and each new comer from Lebanon or far off Ireland was given the heartiest of welcomes by each hearthstone where he listened with open mouthed pleasure to the bombastic measures of "the praises of Henderson Grove," as sung in the wailing cadences of a genuine Celtic "Come All Ye." This poetic gem was composed by one Nicholas Lawrence, a roving Irish wood chopper who sat himself down one day on a newly sawed log and made himself the wonder of the community by the careless ease with which he wrote off the rolling stanzes.

THE PRAISES OF HENDERSON GROVE

Air, Bundle and Go.

1

I've traveled the states, and I've ranged them all over,
From Mexico's gulf to Canada's shore.
I was in Nebraska, in Utah and Kansas,
And across the ocean where billows do roll.
I was in Alabama, likewise Louisiana,
And sweet Indiana I often did rove.
But it is my declaration, in all this nation
I saw no place equal to Henderson Grove.

The Grove is the healthiest part of creation,
The loveliest place that a mortal can dwell;
It would take some great poet of vast education
And deep appreciation, its praises to tell.
But had I this whole country, its mansions and houses,
I would rather live here in a simple alcove,
The fire of old Bacchus is here to arouse us
Whenever we're drowsy in Henderson Grove.

The trees in the Grove are the best in the nation,
They answer each purpose our wants do require,
With walnut and oak we build our habitation,
Good hickory and maple we chop for our fire.
The linns and the elms are tall beyond measure,
They clatter their leaves midst the thunders of Jove.
The Swedes and the Irish are vying with each other Purchasing farms in Henderson Grove.

4

The birds of the Grove are melodious, charming,
They twitter their notes with beauty and skill,
The blackbirds and thrush in concert each morning,
At night we are charmed by the sweet whip-poor-will,
There are pigeons and prairie hens here beyond number,
Besides the wild partridge and sweet turtle dove,
And game of all kinds to entice the fond hunter
To ramble all day through Henderson Grove.

5

The folks of the Grove are goodhearted and social,
The blessings of freedom they seem to enjoy,

Are honest, industrious and jovial,
No envy or malice their peace to destroy.
No matter what country or county you hail from,
It's here you are treated with kindness and love.
I challenge the state from Galena to Cairo,
To find such good neighbors as live in the Grove.

At Williamsfield the first Irish settler was Patric Grady, who made himself memorable in that section by using as a building material for his house quantities of pebbles from the banks of the Spoon.

Peter Morgan arrived soon after. Peter gave up the seafaring life for that of a farmer. We are told that he crossed the ocean seventeen times.

From Limerick, in 1852, came the Welsh brothers, Richard and Michael, accompanied by James Murphy. They landed at New Orleans on Christmas day of that year. The father of these elder Welshes raised horses for the fox chase in the old country. Owing to this circumstance his sons struck up an acquaintance at first sight with the driver of an especially fine team of horses on the streets of Peoria. The driver was Simpkins of Maquon. As a result of this chance meeting the wanderers located at Williamsfield. The Welsh brothers had had the opportunity of college training at Dublin. Michael, generally known as Squire Welsh, filled many offices of trust during his long life in Elba township. The squire was justly proud of his title and resented from his old associates the familiarity with which some of them addressed him as "Mike." Michael Grimes was riding home from Williamsfield with him one rainy day, and in his conversation frequently and emphatically addressed him as "Mike." The squire chafed inwardly and at length protested. "Why don't you call me squire, that's me title?" "Faith, I'll never call the likes of you squire," was the answer. Arguing the point they reached the banks of the angry Spoon. The squire stopped his horses and seemed greatly concerned as to the condition of one of the traces of the nigh horse. "Will you get out and fasten that trace, Grimes?" "I will that," said Grimes. He had scarcely cleared the wheel when the squire struck his spirited horses a resounding crack with the whip. They plunged headlong into the river and before the astonished Grimes could draw a second breath, the tail board of the wagon was far beyond his reach. He realized he was beaten. He said several things to Mr. Welsh in loud tones. It was only when he began pleading, "Please, Mr. Squire, won't you come back?" that Mr. Welsh's hearing returned.

Other pioneers of the vicinity of Williamsfield were Philip Brenan, John Malone, Dennis Murphy and Michael O'Connor. These in their day and generation acquired fine farms which have passed on to their descendants.

In Sparta township on the rough land bordering North creek, which is a tributary of Spoon river, settled a number of immigrants, chiefly from County Waterford.

Mr. Patrick O'Connor, of Wataga, gives the following account of early settlers at Barefoot. Mr. James O'Connor with his sons, Patrick and Thomas, took up land there in 1855. Antedating them several years was Solomon McCleary of Scotch-Irish descent.

Following the O'Connors came Peter O'Hern, Michael Murray, John Mangon, William Butler, James Torticil, Thomas O'Brien and Ed Kennedy, known throughout the community as "the king." He was considered final authority on all matters pertaining to law and justice.

These men, by their industry and perseverance, converted timber land and virgin prairie into productive farms, which in many cases are still operated by their sons or grandsons. The dwellers along North creek were quaintly termed in an early day "the Barefoot Nation." There, as elsewhere throughout the county, expensive shoe leather was reserved for wear on Sundays and state occasions. Sometimes there was but one pair of shoes in a family and he who was most speedy in dressing stood the best chance of securing the family shoes to complete his toilet.

There was a lovesick swain in the North Creek community who felt his heartstrings drawn in the direction of Henderson Grove. Being a little bit slow, perhaps, or possessed of more than ordinary good nature, he found that Sunday after Sunday he was losing his turn at the coveted footwear. He must have been stout of heart, as well as calloused of sole, for, nothing daunted, he covered regularly the long miles that intervened between him and the object of his affection. The people of the Grove took notice of the young man's courage and devotion and, overlooking their own bare toes, which were quite the correct thing when one was at home, humorously termed their friends of the North Creek locality, "The Barefoot Nation," which in time became abbreviated to "Barefoot."

As early as 1855 a number of Irish were already settled within a radius of a few miles of what is now the village of Oneida. Among the first were the Sullivan brothers—Owen, Michael and Daniel. A few years later came the Swift brothers—Martin and John; the Barry brothers—James and Michael—came in 1857: Joseph and James McGovern, Simon, Clark and Owen Conley settled in the locality since known as Dublin. Other early comers were Dan Faloon, Pat Mead, Locke Feely, Timothy Hannon, Thomas Huston and Patrick Nash.

The breaking out of prairie sod, the digging of coal, the quarrying of stone and the making of brick were the chief occupations of the new comers to Ontario and Sparta townships. A brickyard was kept by Tom Quinn and Tom Ryan near Oneida. John Dimsey conducted one of the first butcher shops there.

Mr. Timothy Hannon opened a shoe shop in 1857 in this village. During the fifty-five years that have since elapsed Mr. Hannon has shod two generations of Oneida's inhabitants. In front of his store stands a splendid hard maple that was planted by him and his good wife on their wedding day fifty-three years ago. His most distinguished patron was one that walked into a shop which he operated in Springfield previous to his coming to Oneida. That patron was Abraham Lincoln, for whom Mr. Hannon made a substantial pair of shoes.

Michael Courtney was an early resident of Oneida, a colonel in the Civil war, and, like the others of his family, influential in the life of the community. George Courtney was a road foreman of engines for the C., B. & Q. R. R. at the time of his death by accident in 1889.

There were but few Irish families scattered over the other townships of the northern portion of the county.

John Sheahan took up a quarter section of land in Lynn township in 1864. His brother-in-law, Richard Goodman, came to Lynn in 1865. The Story family, James Graham and John Hagarty came a few years later. Patrich Sheahan and his family took up land in Walnut Grove township in 1866. The Welsh brothers, Patrick, James, John and Thomas, with their brother-in-law, Henry Locklin, were pioneer owners of land both in Rio township and over the line in Henry county.

These early settlers by their untiring efforts and keen business insight became, all of them, substantial citizens, and some of them owners of extensive tracts of land, which to-day means wealth and independence for their children. But few of the emigrants from the old country were so daring as to embark at once on the stormy seas of a business career. The following did so and were highly successful:

Daniel Farrell was a pioneer in the clothing business in Galesburg, and those who knew him best are enthusiastic in their appreciation of all that he did in the old days of religious and political dissension as mediator. He lived to a ripe old age, always at his post of business, a dignified and lovable figure in the community. Edward Houston conducted a grocery store in Wataga for years. He was postmaster of that place during both of Cleveland's administrations. Mr. Thomas Keefe was in the grain business first at Wataga, then at St. Augustine and for the last twenty-five years has been a leading lumber merchant in Galesburg.

An amusing incident of Mr. Keefe's boyhood is the fact that when his father decided to leave the old home in Roscommon and try his fortune in the new world he deliberated long and earnestly over the chances of his youngest children securing an education in America. Depressed by reports of scanty schools in that wilderness, he left the young Thomas and his brother, still younger, to attend the school kept by their uncle in Ireland. The father and the rest of the family proceeded to New York. Four years passed before the younger children were permitted to come on and join their elders in "York state."

Mr. James O'Connor, now in the real-estate and insurance business, has been actively associated with the growth and development of Galesburg from early manhood. Timothy Hannon, pioneer shoe merchant at Oneida, has been mentioned previously.

There is a tendency to regard the Irish as merely an element of the rank and file, while the truth of the matter is, their work has been structural. At first they had nothing to offer but labor, and labor was what Knox county needed in her early days. In the clearing away of timber, in the breaking up of prairie sod, in the building of railroads and in the construction of solid masonry, the handiwork of the Irish laborer was everywhere. That laborer had had but the briefest of schooling in the newly established national schools of the old country. In many cases he could barely write his name and just spell out the headlines in the weekly paper. Most of them, however, were well able to peruse that paper from end to end and were soon deeply interested in every live question of the day. That laborer, being Irish, was the best of good fellows (often to his undoing). He was fluent of speech, a persuader of men by birth and a leader of causes by inheritance. Fate and the lack of education left him a worker with his hands. He raised large families, and to his children he gave the education for which he had thirsted and with it his native gifts of magnetism and persuasion. The second generation took to the professions, to business and to public life like the duck to the quiet pool.

From many generalities we have at last come to the winding path of continuous personal mention. As your guide on the long journey that we have come together, we must warn you of many abrupt turns from this person to that and of very sudden leaps from one calling to another in no way connected with it.

Hon. M. J. Dougherty represents the second generation of the St. Augustine group. The father of Mr. Dougherty came to this country at the age of five. With his parents he boarded the first ship that sailed out of Londonderry harbor after peace was declared and it was known in that port that the War of 1812 was over. News traveled but slowly in those days, and we know that the battle of New Orleans was fought after peace was declared. It is interesting to learn that the above mentioned ship was given a lively chase, all of one day, by an American privateer. How much of wit and good-fellowship the Knox county bar would have lost had one of those death-dealing cannon balls taken effect! Landing at Philadelphia, they went west by ox team and steamboat until Mr. Thomas Dougherty cast in his lot with the St. Augustine colony. The younger Mr. Dougherty has been for years a prominent member of the bar. He was postmaster for the city of Galesburg during Cleveland's administration and has represented this district in the state legislature for a number of terms.

Lewis Matingly was sheriff of Williams county, Kansas, for many years and led the posse of citizens that broke up the notorious James gang.

John Keefe, the eldest son of Thomas Keefe of Galesburg, left St. Augustine for Sioux City, Iowa, where he has long been a prominent and respected citizen. Mr. Keefe is a member of the firm of Flynn and Keefe, street pavement contractors.

We have already mentioned two representatives of the second generation of the Salem group, R. G. Mathews and Hugh Sloan. James Wasson, the attorney, belongs to that group.

Representatives of the Henderson Grove group are James Minehan, editor of a paper at Geddes, South Dakota; W. H. Coffey and the Slattery brothers. Mr. Coffey is justice of the peace in Galesburg. Dr. W. H. Slattery is located in Lincoln, Nebraska, and Dr. George N. in New York city.

From Williamsfield came those able attorneys Judge J. D. Welsh and his cousin, James J.; also Dr. Thomas Murphy, a prominent physician of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Of the Oneida barefoot group Harry A. Nash, son of Patrick Nash, represents the second generation. Mr. Nash is a leading citizen of Perry, Iowa, where he follows the business of real estate, insurance and investments. The Torticell brothers, sons of James Torticell, are both in business in Kewanee, James L. in the plumbing, and Will dealing in hardware. Dan Hannon, son of Timothy Hannon, is auditor for Adams Express Company in Denver, Colorado.

Prominent sons of Galesburg are Dr. L. R. Ryan, widely known as an eye and ear specialist, the Maley brothers, Dr. W. H. and Dr. George, Dr. Thomas Birmingham and Dr. Frank Flynn. Attorneys, the late J. C. Stephens, Edward McTiernan, of Chicago, Will Brown of Bellingham, Washington, W. H. Sullivan and J. E. Maley. In mercantile pursuits are M. J. Buckley, grocer; John Huston, grocer; George Farrell, one of the partners in the clothing store founded by his father Daniel Farrell; J. B. McAuley, contractor; the O'Connor brothers, Mart and J. D., contractors; Miss Jean Halpin, beauty parlors; Miss Mollie Morrissey, ladies' supplies; Daniel Nolan, of the blacksmithing firm of Dewine & Nolan, Joseph Sullivan, laundry business; Bernard Ryan, banker and lumber merchant at Neleigh, Nebraska; the Hurley brothers, Myer and Edward. Edward Hurley is president of the Hurley Machine Company of Chicago. Through the successful management of a newly invented pneumatic tool he leaped into the millionaire class. Mr. Myer Hurley is proprietor of a hardware store at Marseline, Kansas, and holds an important position among the officials of the B. of L. E. Miss Kathryn Ryan is proprietor of a dry goods store at Black Foot, Idaho. Mr. Edwin Daugherty, son of Honorable and Mrs. M. J. Daugherty, is in the wiring business at Riverside, California.

Among the adopted sons of Galesburg are Dr. W. O'R. Bradley, Dr. John Bohan and Dr. Fred Gurley, J. P. Foley, undertaker; J. P. Quigley, plumber.

Knox county has contributed these names to the roll of the clergy: Rev. Wm. Graham, son of James Graham, theological student at Rochester, New York; Rev. Edward Welsh, of Keithsburg, son of Thomas Welsh; Rev. J. J. Burk, of Peoria, son of Thomas Burk, of St. Augustine.

Less than twenty years ago Knox county adopted that genial clergyman, Rev. John Phelan, who came direct from the Royal University at Dublin to open Corpus Christi lyceum. Of a retiring nature, he has endeared himself by the charm of his personality not only to the students in his charge, but to the various communities which they represent.

From the first, the Irish have been intimately associated with the railroad. Mr. James Clary, of South Chambers street, retired from active service ten years ago. He was for forty-seven consecutive years a section boss on the Quincy branch and gives many interesting pictures of the floating population that made up his gangs through all that period. Mr. John Sullivan entered the employ of the Burlington in 1860. He was made division road master in 1871, which position he is acceptably filling today.

Of the second generation in railroad life are the following: Michael Franey, who was called from the Galesburg shops to become master mechanic and superintendent of shops at Collinwood, Ohio, for the Lake Shore railroad. Will Graham comes from a family of railroaders, his father and five uncles being well known conductors. Mr. Will Graham is road master at Superior, Michigan. Maurice Daley is superintendent of a western railroad with headquarters at Seattle, Washington. His brother, James Daley, is state boiler inspector of Montana, with headquarters at Helena. Frank P. Dolan, son of John Dolan, of North Cedar street, won distinction in the railroad world at an early age. Born and educated at St. Augustine, he became a dependable operator at the age of fourteen. He rose rapidly to the general superintendency of the Rock Island, with his headquarters at Topeka, Kansas.

Patrick H. Morrissey has made Galesburg his home for a quarter of a century. Entering the railroad life as a call boy, he is now president of the American Railroad Employees and Investors Association. His national standing is best attested by the following extracts from lengthy articles concerning him in our best magazines. The Saturday Evening Post of January 8, 1910, says: "Mr. Morrissey is a diplomat of long experience and approved skill, a man of fairness and moderation." He is justifiably proud of a letter written him by a recent tenant of the White House, in which he is assurred "That mighty few men have helped me as much as you have." In the Outlook of August 5, 1911, Mr. Roosevelt says of a speech made by Mr. Morrissey to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, "It sets forth such good doctrine that I wish it were possible to quote it in full. I cordially agree with Mr. Morrissey's views on this matter." These quoted words are much more forcible and expressive than would be any comments of ours.

George Davis, for twenty years treasurer of Knox College, was a native of County Lietrim, Ireland. The splendid new building just dedicated to science at Knox is a lasting monument to his name. A large donor to that building was J. T. McKnight, a son-in-law of Mr. Davis, a trustee of Knox, and a most influential citizen of Galesburg. Although a man of means, Mr. McKnight is also a man of affairs, active in every interest of the community. Mr. McKnight is the son of an immigrant from County Monaghan.

The late Alfred M. Craig was one of Knox county's best known sons, both as jurist and banker. He served on the supreme bench of the state for twenty-seven years. Judge Craig was the grandson of an immigrant from Londonderry.

Dr. Thomas McClelland, for the past twelve years president of Knox College, is a native of Colraine, North Ireland. During his administration the endowment of Knox College has been raised $350,000. Two handsome buildings have been erected during this term which have greatly enhanced the usefulness of this progressive college.

Professor W. L. Steele is the son of an immigrant from County Antrim, his father being twenty years of age when he came to this country. Mr. Steele has devoted a life work of incalculable and lasting value to the county, first as superintendent of county schools and later as superintendent of the public schools of Galesburg. He has given these schools a reputation that is state wide for excellence and efficiency. By the introduction of the outline of study for the country schools and the institution of the yearly township examination, he brought order out of chaos and gave to the whole system a solid basis of well graded work.

Thomas Smith, father of Mrs. Geo. W. Gale, was a pioneer contractor and mason, widely respected throughout the county.

Rev. Joseph Bell, the present superintendent of the Galesburg district of the Methodist Episcopal church, informs us that his four grandparents were natives of the County Down.

Others of more remote Irish descent are W. F. Boyes, county superintendent of schools; Judge R. C. Rice; the Hardy brothers, of the law firm of Hardy, Welsh & Hardy, and Attorney B. E. McLaughlin; John George, a pioneer farmer of Galesburg, whose sons, C. and E., are ranked among the prominent business men of Omaha; Captain F. A. Freer, for many years postmaster of Galesburg, who came of a Huguenot family that emigrated from France to Ireland. There the original name Frere took on its present form. J. C. Stuart, father of Mrs. F. W. Wolf and Miss Maud Stuart, was mayor of Galesburg for three terms. The grandfather of Mr. Stuart was a native of Ireland.

Our list ends with the name of Galesburg's present mayor, George Sanderson, who is a grandson of Patrick Dunn, one of Galesburg's first bankers, and our history of the Irish in Knox county will close with the following series of incidents and stories, which are true in every detail.

Patrick Reddington was an unknown nabob among his fellows, arriving here from Pittsfield with six hundred gold dollars, earned in the employ of Barker Brothers, sewed in the lining of his belt. This was in the very time when barrels of wildcat money were being rolled from McCoy's bank in Galesburg and burned on the public square. Two hundred dollars of Mr. Reddington's belted hoard made up a trust fund belonging to his sweetheart. He went to work on a farm where there were frequent wrestling bouts among the men, and it became a matter of great concern to Patrick lest his treasure be discovered. His employer was taken into his confidence and offered to care for the money. The offer was accepted and Patrick treasured carefully the piece of paper that recorded the exchange. The heartbreaking panic of '57 came on, and among its sorrowing victims were Patrick and his young wife. There was but scanty consolation in the possession of a doubtful note that represented the solid earnings of six long years. A decade later Patrick was a rising landowner and raiser of stock. He determined to avail himself of the neat profits of the middleman, and when his first carload of stock was ready for market he ventured to Chicago alone. Nervous and with beating heart he heard the comments of the dignified buyers, fearful lest he should have to reship his cattle to Galesburg. But not so. His stock brought the highest price on the market. Regaling himself with a simple breakfast of fruit eaten in front of a pretentious barroom, he was interrupted by the gruff voice of the pompous proprietor, who ordered him to gather up the peelings and move on. Stung by the indignity of the tone and realizing the size of his substantial check, Patrick thought, "I'll show him." Squaring himself, he walked past the proprietor and casually displayed his check as he stood at the counter. He studied the wet goods with critical eye and coolly ordered a quantity of the very best imported liquor in the place. He stated that he would call for it later and declined every advance of the transformed proprietor, who was more than anxious to attend to the cashing of the imposing check. Mr. Reddington neglected to say how much later, but proceeded straight to the station with a merry twinkle in his eye, and to this day of our Lord he has not yet returned for his purchase.

James Phillips was a notable wag and a good fellow known far and near. A temperance lecture was being preached at St. Patrick's, and James, in response to invitation, was there, but, perhaps foreseeing trouble, pulled away from his escort sufficiently to pass beyond a portly lady of great dignity and so secured an end seat with his back against the wall. The missionary father was a powerful speaker, and before he concluded dozens were crowding forward to sign the pledge. Every man around Mr. Phillips went up and signed, but he sat immovable. His brother and sisters, nephews and nieces could not reach him, but they appealed with eye and hand. But his eyes were riveted upon the speaker. At length one and then another of the relatives leaned toward the woman next to Mr. Phillips and whispered her to urge James forward. At that the object of all this interest sat up with great dignity, rolled a reproving eye at the whole group and whispered loudly: "Can't ye let this woman alone? She looks like a sober woman."

Nearly all the Irishmen that came over during the '50s and '60s cast in their lot with the democratic party, the reason being that that party welcomed immigration rather than opposed it.

The "Know Nothings" were an extreme branch of the republicans, and they voiced the bitterest of prejudice against the newcomers. In the east convents, schools and churches built by the Irish were fired by fanatics allied to the Know Nothings, and this, of course, had the immediate effect of swinging the newly naturalized to the other party with a vengeance.

In Knox county, as elsewhere, in those days political feeling ran so high in contrast with our times that a rally of to-day looks like a Sunday school picnic in comparison. We are coming to a story of the redhot campaign of 1856, in which figures a wild Irishman of Goliath bulk and build and with ultra David gameness.

"Big Bill" was in the employ of Mr. Wm. Ferris and was quite a favorite with his employer, who found him willing always and quite tractable. The townspeople had opinions of their own concerning him. Mr. Ferris owned a team of most fractious mules which were as wild as Bill. He was the only person who could handle them. Bill would tear down Main street from one end to the other, mounted on one mule and leading the other, singing and yelling at the top of his voice, while those on foot were privileged to look out for themselves. The village policeman grew quite indignant at his repeated failures to stop Bill. One evening when the watchman was in good sprinting trim he managed to get the front mule by the halter. Did Bill or the mule stop? Not they! They rolled the representative of the law in the dust, neatly hurdled him and then tore up Academy street to the Ferris barn. It was a short walk to 220 North Academy, and the dusty, boiling, indignant watchman soon arrived, lantern in hand. Straight upstairs to where he knew the Irish boys slept he went, and, with lantern held high in shaking hand, he scanned their beds. Doc lay on the outside, Mike in the middle and over next the wall was Big Bill, deeper in sleep that the other two, for every muscle was relaxed and loud, regular snoring pulsated from his open mouth. He was a perfect picture of sleeping innocence. The irate watchman stopped, influenced by the fact that two other able-bodied sons of Erin lay between him and the object of his wrath, as Bill intended they should. He prudently turned on his heel and went downstairs to vent his wrath on Mr. Ferris, ordering him to discharge the whole gang on general principles if nothing more. Mr. Ferris indignantly refused, declaring that the boys were all right and that Bill in particular would jump to obey his least wish, day or night. "Let those fellows alone and they won't make you any trouble."

One evening about this time a string of teams was on its way home, Big Bill mounted on one of the mules in the lead. The boys in the rear twitted

Bill with having to open the gate for the rest. But that dauntless hind had no such intention and with a dig of his heels, a rattle of the reins and an encouraging, threatening "Ah—ha, Jack, Jennie," leaped his team over the gate and went on in triumph.

The democrats scheduled a rally, but, being in the minority, their parade was broken up. The republicans were to have a rally, and the democratic boys were anxious to get even and enlisted in their service Josiah Gale, a brother of W. Selden Gale, and, unlike his better known brother, a staunch democrat. He placed at the disposal of the boys a spirited team of young Morgan horses hitched to a good stout lumber wagon with Jack ———— as driver. According to plan, the horses were to become unmanageable at the head of Main street just as the procession was about to start. The streets were thronged with excited, hotblooded partisans. The smoky glare of the torchlight and the dazzling gleam of fireworks lit up a sea of faces intent on the exciting spectacle. Gaudy floats, high waving banners, gallant republicans forming in serried ranks and mounted marshals galloping up and down, all were watching for the signal that meant the final start. One village band and then another struck up the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner." Up near Seminary street a dreadful commotion broke out, which swelled and grew to a frightful clamor. The procession wavered and broke, rolling the crowd of spectators back over the boardwalks up dark stairways and streaming into side streets. The music died in a discordant wail, and the rattling sound of clattering trumpet and horn followed, for the Morgans with distended nostrils and eyes starting from their sockets, smarting and resentful under the lash of their daring driver, availed themselves of an undisputed right of way down Main street. There was no stop until the Gale farm was reached, where Jack tossed the reins to a faithful accomplice, leaped to the back of a fresh horse, and, leaving the mounted police far behind, disappeared in the direction of the south timber.

Meantime on a side street things were happening. Insulting remarks were directed at two Irishmen. A fistic combat started. Big Bill, speeding to the aid of his friends, was gathered in with them by the police. Doc was a spectator and told me about it. "Bill knocked the first policeman down wid wan blow of his fist. Another stud between him and the door. Bill grabbed him by the coat collar and hurled him clean over his shoulder. Oh! a fine big sthrappin' fellow was Bill! In front of the lockup Bill prepared for more trouble by taking a buildin' brick in each hand. Officer Heroune came running up, and by the same token it would have been betther for him to have stayed away. 'Stand back!' says Bill in a terrible voice. 'Stand back,' he says a second time. A third time 'Stand back!' Heroune didn't know Bill. He came on till he met the brick. Then he stopped, wilted on the flat of his back. It was six months before he was around again. A big, tall butcher named Brinkerhoof held Bill till he was overpowered and locked up.

"Hogan and I left the crowd yelling and cheering and making threats outside the jail, and we went home. We barricaded the door good, for we heard that the republicans were going to hang the whole gang of us up at Ferrises. Hogan took the ax, I took the spade, and I never shut an eye all night. About three o'clock I heard a noise on the stairs and something heavy struck the door a terrible blow. I thought it was all up. I called Hogan and found he was sound asleep. I gave him a vicious jab wid me elbow, for how he could sleep I didn't know. Says I, 'They're here.' Says Hogan, 'Who?' Says I, "The republicans to hang us.' 'No, it ain't,' says Hogan, rubbing his eyes, 'that is Bill.' 'You are right,' says I, for I heard his voice. We opened the door quick to stop the pounding. Bill bounded in and began bundling up his clothes. He had broken jail and looked like a Zulu. In two seconds he was gone, and it was many a day before we saw him again, for he stayed hid in Henderson Grove till Heroune was well out of danger. Then he again went to work for Mr. Pitcher, who liked his help so much that he settled for Bill with the court for $50."

THE SWEDES IN KNOX COUNTY AND GALESBURG

By Axel Gabrielson

Knox county, Illinois, and her chief city, Galesburg, and also lesser cities and towns, are typical American communities in build, socially and educationally, and in customs, habits and taste as well, and yet, as will be seen by an investigation of the facts, a good proportion, probably 50 per cent of the population, is foreign born or the descendants of foreigners, a condition at once a tribute to the power and thoroughness and grace and ease of American assimilation and of nice foreign adaptiveness.

Chief among foreign-born citizens and their descendants, in Knox county, are the Irish, Scotch, Germans and Swedes, the Swedes being the strongest numerically. Lately a considerable number of Italians, Austrians, Poles and Mexicans have come into Knox county, and principally to Galesburg, adding to the total foreign element, and while they are too recent in arrival to have yet made any appreciable impression, given time and opportunity they, too, no doubt, will merge beautifully into the body politic and contribute generously to the welfare and upbuilding of our commonwealth.

The first Swedish immigations to America date back to 1038-1665, resulting in the founding of New Sweden ("Paradis Udden," or "Paradise Point") on the Delaware river, in the original project of which the king, the great Gustaf Adolph the Second, of Sweden, was interested, but which he was not permitted to consummate, that honor falling instead to his chancellor, the brilliant Axel Oxenstjerna. Between the periods of 1638 and 1665 ten colonization parties were equipped and sent out to the new world, and as late as 1693, fifty-five years after the arrival of the first party of Swedish immigrants on American soil, there still remained one thousand of them in the settlement of New Sweden.

During the existence of New Sweden as a colony of Swedes thirty-five ministers or preachers were sent out to it from the mother country to minister to the three churches at Wicacoa, now Philadelphia, Kristina and Racoon, and chief among these preachers was the talented and distinguished Carl Magnus Wrangle, of the noble family of Sag and Wachel. This early Swedish settlement, it is true, lost its distinctive identity as such after a period of a third of a century, being by conquest merged into the stronger Holland settlements along the Delaware, these, too, in turn being obliged to give way to the English, but after a lapse of nearly 300 years multiplied evidences of the early presence and influence of the Swedes may be found in the city of Philadelphia and vicinity.

So far as known, the first Swede who came to Illinois was Raphael Widen, who, January 12, 1814, was appointed justice of the peace of St. Claire county by the territorial governor Ninan Edwards and was one of fourteen territorial justices, conducting the affairs of Randolph county from December, 1818, to May, 1819, and also a member of the fourth and fifth general assemblies, serving as president of the fourth general assembly.

Olof G. Hedstrom came to America in 1825, settling in New York, and in 1833 his brother, Jonas Hedstrom, joined him, the latter, pushing on to Victoria, Illinois, in 1838. G. Unonius, with a little party coming to America in 1841, settled on Pine lake, near Nashotah, Wisconsin. In 1844 a company of fifty Swedish immigrants, with Daniel Larson as leader and spokesman, landed and settled in Boston, Massachusetts, and a second company of sixty immigrants under Larson's leadership came a little later, settling in Campello and Brockton, Massachusetts. Peter Cassell and five families came to America from Sweden in 1845 and settled in New Sweden, Iowa, where his son, Andrew Cassell, and his descendants still live, honored and respected by all, Swedes and Americans alike.

Between 1665 and 1846 but few Swedes immigrated to America, and such as came arrived not as parties or colonies, but as individual families or singly. However, beginning with 1845 or earlier a wanderlust for America revived in Swedish hearts on the mother soil, and in 1846 large parties and colonies of the sons and daughters of the north again landed on our shores, this time not remaining in the east, as before, but instead resolutely setting their faces toward the setting sun they tirelessly continued their long journey on lake and river by boat and on land by wagon and on foot, until they reached the rich fertile lands of Henry county, in western Illinois, where their guiding star stopped, when they, too, stood still, and, looking around, discovered that this was their Mecca and that they now had reached their long-sought goal.

The Swedish immigrations beginning in 1845, and resulting in the founding of the Swedish Communistic colony at Bishop Hill, Henry county, Illinois, September 26, 1846, is called the Jansonist movement, being inspired by Eric Janson, a religious leader and preacher, who with his followers, because of persecutions, imprisonment and confiscations of property in the homeland, came to America, "the land of the free and home of the brave," that here they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, and without molestation engage in the pursuit of liberty, peace and happiness. Having found what they sought, these courageous, stalwart sons of the north, exponents of the simple life, in hopeful toil and labor subdued the wilderness, tilled the virgin soil, and passing, left to their descendants, a priceless heritage in character, of motive and purpose in life and material wealth as well. Bishop Hill enjoys the distinction of being the first and oldest exclusively Swedish settlement in America, subsequent to the New Sweden settlement of 1638-1665, on the Delaware, and Victoria and Galesburg in Knox, and Andover in Henry county, Illinois, follow it, but the large masses of Swede immigrants coming to these places later than the Bishop Hill settlement found that pioneer American and individual Swede settlers had preceded them, and established an embryo civilization with which to hospitably greet later comers on arrival. All Swedish immigrations, following the Bishop Hill settlement, differ from it too, in that material welfare and advancement, not religious liberty, was the motive.

It will interest readers of the Knox county history, not familiar with the facts, to know that in fifteen of the one hundred and two counties of Illinois, are many communities urban and rural, with so large a population of Swedish citizens, as to warrant calling them Swedish counties. These counties are Cook, Winnebago, Kane, DeKalb, Will, Bureau, Henry, Rock Island, Mercer, Warren, Knox, Peoria, McLean, Ford and Vermillion. Flourishing cities, towns and rural districts, in each of these counties, have Swedes numerically strong enough to make distinct impression upon the body politic, for weal or woe, and since the Swede counties and communities rank high, if not highest in the state in point of wealth, education, refinement and Christian culture, and all that makes for good citizenship, it is conceded that the Swedes as a rule stand for the uplift and betterment of themselves and surroundings. In the counties of Illinois designated as Swede counties are the following communities in which there are large numbers of Swedes: Galesburg, Knoxville, Wataga, Altona, Victoria, Henderson, Galva, Bishop Hill, Cambridge, Nekoma, Kewanee, Geneseo, Orion, Osco, Lynn, Woodhull, Ophiem, Rock Island, Moline, Aledo, New Boston, Keithsburg, Swedona, LaFayette, Toulon, Monmouth, Roseville, Swan Creek, Princeton, Wyanet, New Bedford, St. Charles, Geneva, Batavia, Elgin, DeKalb, Sycamore, Rockford, Peccatonica, Bloomington, Paxton, Danville, Peoria, Joliet and Chicago—the latter place alone with its suburbs, having an approximate Swedish population of a quarter of a million, and it has been said that starting at Galva, in Henry county, and going west to Keithsburg and New Boston, on the Mississippi river, a distance of fifty miles, a traveler may pass along all the way on soil owned or tilled by a Swede.

Daniel Robertson, the first white settler, came to Henderson, Knox county, in 1828, and in 1830 the county was organized with a population of 230 scant, and in 1836, Geo. W. Gale and company came to the county, organizing Galesburg the following year with a population of about 232. Ten years later, in 1847, and seven years before the advent of the C., B. & Q. railroad in Knox county, Galesburg already had a Swedish population of 20, among whom were John Youngberg, Nels Hedstrom, Andrew Thorsell, a Mr. Modine, Kristina Muhr and Olof Nelson.

In 1854 the stream of Swedish immigration to Galesburg became most active, continuing steadily until 1880, at which time the Swedish population was at least three thousand five hundred, if not four thousand. Since 1880, there has been no arrival of greater parties of immigrants direct from Sweden to Galesburg, although families as such and individuals have been coming all the while, and still do, and these, together with the natural increase by birth, make the Swedish population of Galesburg, in 1912, easily eight thousand—a figure of no mean proportion, when considered that it constitutes more than a third of the whole population of the city.

As a rule the Swedes were poor and many penniless on arrival, having either borrowed, perhaps, or spent their all in paying for their passage, and work and wages, therefore, for them, was an immediate pressing need, and hence it was no uncommon experience to greet a company of newcomer Swedes on the depot landing one day, with their wooden chests, bundles, bags and baggage all around them, and the next, after temporarily depositing the women, children and luggage in some friendly home or shelter, find the men already at work, beginning at the first possible moment on American soil, the foundation of success, of home and fortune, through the commendable and sure medium of labor and application.

With rare if any exception, all began American life with common manual labor, at a prevailing low wage, first learned the language spoken, and then through sheer merit and inherent worth, rose to better and more responsible and lucrative position, as farm tenants and farm owners, mechanics and boss workmen or superintendents, clerks, merchants and bankers, or, as official and political men, or in the professions, attained to large and honorable places in the community and vicinity.

Among the industries of Galesburg, either past or present, with which her Swedish citizens have been identified as projectors and owners or as responsible managers and workmen in supplying brain and brawn, in founding and developing them, are the Charles Johnson brick yards, Abraham Nelson furniture shop, Industrial Machine Works, Galesburg Machine Works, the Brown Corn Planter Co., the G. D. Colton Co. foundry; Frost Manufacturing Co., the O. B. Judson Furniture Co., and the C., B. & Q. Railway Company, in all of which the rank and file of workmen were and are Swedes, some of whom attained to enviable prominence in management and conduct of the business—among whom besides the personal names given above, may be mentioned, first, the brothers Charles and William Erickson, for fifty years continuously in the employ of the "Q" railway, and now foremen respectively of the round house, and machine shops, where also their father before them was a trusted workman. Also may be named in this general connection, J. A. Oberg, D. L. Peterson, Claus Anderson, Alfred Lindgren, P. N. Granville, Magnus Holmes, Andrew G. Gabrielson, John Pierson, Andrew Stromstedt, F. T. Albert, W. A. Peterson, Claus Thoreen, Peter Olson, John A. Ehn, Magnus Peterson, Frank A. Olson, W. O. Nelson, Andrew P. Gustafson, Aug. Abramson, Peter Swanson, J. A. Renstrom, A. O. Peterson, Andrew Johnson, L. J. Olson, Swen, Peter and Ernest Ekwall, S. J. Johnson, T. W. Peterson, Abram Anderson, A. J. Anderson, F. O. Peterson, C. X. Johnson, S. W. Nystrom, Frank A. Gustafson, J. W. and Claus Ekwall and many others equally deserving of mention if space would permit.

Among early Swedish Galesburg merchants and tradesmen are: Hawkinson & Pierson, Hawkinson & Charlson, Akey Themanson, C. E. Landstrom, Nelson & Bengston, Peter Nelson, Clarkson & Johnson, Clarkson & Roadstrum, Nelson & Swenson, Olson & Hofflund, grocers; Nelson & Williamson, dry goods; Victor Velander; John Granville; Wenquist & Johnson, boot and shoe dealers; Abram Nelson, furniture; Swen Nyman, jeweler; Swen Anderson, John Peterson and N. G. Engstrand, tailors; Chas. Ferris; Clarkson & Anderson and John Ekwall, restaurant; A. O. Ahlenius, J. W. Anderson, butchers; Peter Gabrielson, Peter Wetterberg, J. F. Johnson and Eskil Johnson, blacksmith, wagon and carriage shop; Andrew Thorsell, Fred Lindquist and brother and C. J. Lindquist, painters and decorators.

At present out of forty-four grocery establishments doing business in Galesburg twenty-one are owned and operated exclusively by Swedes, and in all other lines, too, of mercantile activities one finds a like proportionate per cent in the hands of and owned by Swedes, who by close application, careful and conscientious observance of business principle and frugality, coupled with keen knowledge and shrewd forethought, are surely, if yet slowly, accumulating a competence. Foremost among present day Swede business establishments are such houses as the N. P. Nelson Co., dry goods; J. H. Nelson Co., Jarl Young & Co. and A. P. Wetterberg, clothing and men's furnishings; Swanson & Perceful, Hannah Holcomb, Highlander & Faulks, Johnson & Fagerburg, millinery; A. E. Steinfeldt, jeweler; Holmes Bros., laundry; Lindstrum & West and Oscar Thorelius, druggists; Karl Salzberg, harness and saddlery; A. O. Lindstrum, O. P. Wenquist, insurance; Eric Cederoth, W. A. Anderson & Co., shoes; P. B. Anderson, Oscar Johnson, Albert Joneson, J. I. Engstrand & Bro., tailors; A. A. Hallberg, artist; M. W. Olson, dentist; C. G. Johnson, physician; R. J. Walberg, attorney; C. A. West, undertaker and embalmer; Duvon & Brown, C. S. Peterson & Co., bakery; Lass & Larson Co., C. J. Lindquist, decorators and painters; T. E. Johnson Machine Shop, A. F. Landstrum & Co., Galesburg Machine Works, automobile and garage; Galesburg Broom Co., David Carlson, Charles Hawkinson, planing mill; Hofflund Bros., G. A. Swenson, cigars; W. M. Stromberg, Hawkinson & Kenyon, confectioners; P. T. Olson, John Dahlberg, Victor Johnson, Carl Carlson, Nels Person, C. E. Youngquist, P. O. Munson, C. E. Rundquist, C. N. Munson, A. F. Strandberg, F. O. Munson, contractors and builders; S. H. Olson & Co., J. H. Walberg, Ericson & Larson, Galesburg Commercial Union, R. O. Ahlenius, Larsen-Hulgren Grocery Co., J. A. Oberg & Son, O. W. Johnson & Bro., J. T. Johnson & Co. and C. M. Burgland and a dozen additional grocery firms, swell, but do not complete, the list of Galesburg's Swede merchants, now actively in business.

Galesburg's first fire department was organized in 1856, and nine years later, in 1865, an all Swede fire company, called Ericson Engine Company No. 2, numbering sixty men, was formed, captained by O. P. Pearson, and soon after a Swedish fire hose company, captained by D. L. Peterson, was organized. Between these Swedish companies and the other Galesburg fire company, the Tornado, and the Peoria and Quincy companies, friendly but sharp contests of superiority often occurred, leading to a high degree of efficiency and skill, and on two occasions the Swede fire laddies captured from their worthy opponent the prizes of two hundred and fifty and fifty dollars offered the winner. In this day and age Galesburg boasts a paid fire department, but even so the spirit of the old Swedish volunteer fire fighters seems to move a younger and later generation of Swedes, for a respectable number of the personnel of the present department, including its capable chief, Martin Peterson, are Swedish lads, who time and again have demonstrated, like their "landsmen" of old, that they understand the science and art of fighting and subduing fire.

Among early Swedish societies in Galesburg was Scandia, a literary organization formed in 1866. Its first president was Louis Peterson, now deceased. Its second president, the Honorable A. W. Berggren, many times honored with high political preferment by his fellow-townsmen, respected and esteemed by all Swedes who know him, still lives, hale, hearty and active, apparently wholly untouched by the weight of passing years, a typical, ideal, self-made, becomingly modest man. Svea Independent Order of Good Templars was formed in 1867, A. O. Peterson, P. B. Anderson, L. L. Gibson, Hon. Nels Nelson and A. Youngreen, the first two still living and residents of Galesburg, being prominent in its organization.

First Scandinavian Lodge, No. 446, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized in 1871, with Hon. A. W. Berggren, N. G.; A. Klingberg, V. G.; P. B. Anders, R. S.; John Clarkson, treasurer. Present Swedish Galesburg fraternal organizations are Svea I. O. G. T., First Scandinavian Lodge, No. 446, I. O. O. F., and Vasa Lodge 210, Independent Order of Svithiod, each of which is active, aggressive and prosperous.

Galesburg Swedish citizens of remote years, as well as those of a later day and present period, aspired and attained to political honors in the community. In 1860-1-2 P. L. Hawkinson was street superintendent. P. Shoberg in 1863 was the first Swede to be elected to the Galesburg common council as alderman; Lewis Bergland was elected street commissioner in 1865; John Peterson alderman, 1867 and '68. Beginning with 1871, the Hon. Nels Nelson, recently deceased, was repeatedly honored for long terms with the office of city treasurer and city clerk, and the Hon. A. W. Berggren, late in the sixties and during the seventies and eighties, was successively elected to the office of justice of the peace, sheriff and state senator and later, by appointment, served with distinction, too, as warden of the Joliet penitentiary. Other Swede men, too, notably P. N. Granville, Albert Truedson and N. J. Oleen, have filled places honorably in Galesburg's official family, and in the common council and at present Hon. C. F. Hurburgh is state senator; F. F. Seaman, sheriff, and Charles H. Westerberg, circuit clerk, while no inconsiderable number of Swede men enjoy the distinction of being members of the honorable body of supervisors.

Galesburg's Swedish churches, strictly speaking, are five in number, namely: First Evangelical Lutheran, Emanuel Methodist Episcopal, Saint John's Episcopal, Covenant or Congregational and Baptist church, but the Lutheran and Covenant churches each maintain a chapel and Sunday school in outlying districts, and in addition Swedes constitute fully 95 per cent of the membership of Trinity Lutheran church, which by courtesy is called an English church, because its services are conducted in that language. But since each of these church societies is to be treated separately in this work by competent writers, it is needless to enlarge upon them here beyond this point.

Patriotism, loyalty and courage are marked features in Swedish character, and therefore when in the dark and trying years of 1861-'65 the fate of the American nation hung in the balance Swedes everywhere, with other valiant sons, responded in large numbers to the country's call for men tried and true, and Galesburg sent out her full quota of these. Company C, Illinois Volunteers, 43d regiment, was recruited in Galesburg and organized in Camp Butler in September, 1861, all in its enrollment being Swedes, with the exception of two men. February 6, 1862, the company was ordered to Fort Henry, and on February 18th to Fort Donaldson and was joined to General Ross's brigade of General McClelland's division.

With its regiment, Company C went to Pittsburg Landing, and thereafter participated in the battle of Shiloh, in which engagement Captain Olof S. Edvall fell, together with comrades Lars O. Berglöf and Carl Samuelson. The company also distinguished itself at the siege of Corinth and in battle with General Forrest, in capture of guerrilla forces and at Little Rock in battle with General Shelby's brigade and in the assault of Prairie d'Anne and Camden. At Jenkins Ferry Company C fought in the memorable battle when 4,000 Union soldiers repulsed 20,000 of the rebel force under Kirby Smith's army division, entailing a loss of 2,000 of the enemies at a cost of 700 Union soldiers.

On May 3, 1865, Company C returned to Little Rock, at which time and place it was mustered out of the service. A roster of the rank and file of the men composing Company C cannot be given here, but appended is a list of the officers of the company, all gallant men, heroes in peace or war, all of whom, so far as the writer knows, with the great majority of their comrades in arms, have responded to "taps", put out the lights and lain down to well earned, peaceful, undisturbed rest.

LIST OF OFFICERS OF COMPANY C

Hugo A. Starkhoff, Olof S. Edvall, Carl Arocenius, captains.

Olof S. Edvall, John P. Arendberg, first lieutenants.

Nels C. McCool, Nels Knutson, second lieutenants.

Magnus M. Holt, first sergeant.

Nels Peterson, Nels Knutson, Nels Nelson, Nels Anderson, sergeants.

Gust Anderson, Charles Kling, John W. Erickson, Olof A. Hallfast, Peter Bergstrom, Adolph Larson, Magnus Larson, John Paulson, corporals.

Andrew Engstrom, musician.

In monetary matters Swedes in Galesburg have taken a proper place in the community corresponding to their character, numbers and influence as a people. Invariably the Swedish householder owns his home, has good remunerative employment or is in business for himself, and independent usually, whatever his vocation or calling may be and in each of the five strong, splendid banks or financial institutions of Galesburg, the Swedes also are given marked recognition in directory boards, and in official and clerical force.

The Bank of Galesburg, an institution with capital surplus and undivided profits of more than four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, deposits in excess of one million and assets beyond a million and a half dollars, organized, mainly capitalized, largely officered and generally patronized by Swedes, is commonly spoken of as the Swede bank. N. O. G. Johnson is its vice-president, P. N. Granville, cashier, and C. E. Johnson, assistant cashier, each of whom are directors too, together with Thomas W. Peterson and Sam. R. Swanson, all Swede men. Hon. M. O. Williamson, a Swede, and formerly treasurer of the state of Illinois, is president of the People's Trust and Savings bank, of which bank, too, Senator C. F. Hurburgh is a director, and Hon. A. W. Berggren for many years has been and still is the efficient and respected vice-president of the Galesburg National bank.

Galesburg is favorably known far and wide as an educational center, and no class of her citizens, not excepting the original settlers who made it a school and college community, have benefited more by its halls and avenues of learning, than her Swedish population. To finish the grade and high school courses, is the general practice of Galesburg young people, and many go on through college and university, distinguishing themselves in scholarship, in professional and higher walks of life, or win fame in the vocational affairs of men.

THE SCOTCH IN KNOX COUNTY

By Hugh Greig

One cannot, in any true sense, write a sketch of the Scottish born citizens who live, or have lived, in this county without a fairly clear understanding of some of the conditions which in a measure made the Scotchman what he is.

We must bear in mind that Scotland is a small country, in all, less than two-thirds the size of Illinois. A large portion is comparatively barren moorland. Farming, however, has always been fairly prosperous, and it is probably true that in no equal area of equally good soil is so much put in and consequently in no similar area is so much taken out.

It is perhaps needless to say that nearly all the farmers are merely tenants, but to an Illinois tenant this statement is somewhat misleading because many farmers not only spend a lifetime on the same place, but there are families who have occupied the same farm for several generations with a reasonable prospect of continuing to do so.

But while farmers increased, farms did not; and though other industries gave remunerative employment to increasing numbers, yet there remained an unwanted fraction of the people for whom an outlet was needed, and found. Large numbers migrated to the southern end of their own island, while even greater numbers scattered themselves throughout the length and breadth of the British empire, and in business, in science, in literature and even in halls of legislation in England, in India, in Canada; in short, in every British colony, they seemed to wield an influence out of all proportion to their numerical strength.

In America,—the "melting pot" of the nations,—where the Scottish people come into keen competition with the skilled and unskilled labor of two continents, they seem to more than hold their own, and are not often engaged in the most menial tasks which though honorable are not alluring.

There were, no doubt, numerous causes contributing to this way of getting on in the world. As previously stated, their country was small and, on the whole, infertile. Its climate was most capricious. Moreover, for centuries the Scots were on anything but good terms with their richer and much more populous neighbor kingdom on the south. All were more or less lawless; there was between the two countries what might be called a neutral zone—but which really was a fighting zone. All tangible property belonged to the strongest band of thieves. Such conditions led to much desultory warfare. The Scots, being the weaker numerically, had, in order to hold their own, to become more persistent and more shrewd in their wholesale stealing operations. Besides this noted border warfare, on many occasions the armies of the two kingdoms came together in sanguinary conflict, sometimes on English, but more often on Scottish soil. Eventually, however, the weaker gained their independence, and in an after century under a Scottish king, England and Scotland became one nation, though not exactly one people.

It is possible this almost constant battle with adverse conditions—whether it be of climate, soil, poverty, a pugnacious neighbor Scot or little less pugnacious Saxon from beyond the Tweed—may have been a sort of education,—an education severe certainly, strenuous certainly, but perhaps the only kind suitable to the people, place and time; and in all the succeeding days, even until now, we see its effects in a dour, canny, self-assertive, self-reliant people.

Perhaps no one thing so influenced and moulded the character of the Scottish people as that great wave of religious reformation which touched and, to some extent, changed the thought of the Christian world. In some countries of Europe, the monarch embraced Protestantism and led his subjects in the same direction; most notably the great Tudor Henry VIII of England gave to noble and peasant alike a slightly changed religious system; a church in many of its forms resembling that of Rome, but with the Roman pontiff left out. The king himself becoming the head of this newly constituted church, his people as a whole, clergy and flock, high and low, meekly acquiesced.

How different in Scotland, where a succession of weak and vacillating Stuarts occupied the throne, and instead of being leaders were led, or rather driven. The idea that the king should be the acknowledged head of the church never became prevalent among the Scottish people. They had bowed the knee in matters of religion to a foreign ecclesiastical autocrat, the yoke became irksome, was discarded, and now they had no wish to substitute a king for a pope. But alas, for the peace of Scotland! This complete independence of the church from all parliamentary meddling was not to the royal liking. Therefore, the mandate went forth that a uniform ecclesiastical system must prevail from John O'Groats to Lands End, and such system was to be Episcopalian.

Acquiescence, however, did not follow the mandate north of the Tweed. The Scots respected royalty and were firm believers in the monarchical plan of government; they were Christians, militant Christians, and Episcopacy, prelacy, papacy, were to them almost synonymous terms, and leaving the question of creed entirely out of sight (which, however, they did not do) not only the ministers, but the vast majority of the common people were utterly opposed to any system of church government which recognized any man as supreme head, be he king or bishop.

It is no doubt true that during all the many years of ecclesiastical and doctrinal readjustment, there were in Scotland, in the ministry and laity, excellent leaders. At the same time, there were not only willing, but intelligent followers, men in the full possession of the spirit of intellectual independence, claiming the right of the individual to think, and having thought, to express his convictions. Among those leaders, and chief among them, was he who never feared the face of man, he of clear insight scholar, preacher, statesman, patriot—John Knox—measured. by today's standard, stern, exacting, intolerant, but in his day and generation, liberal. To John Knox, more than to any other man, is Scotland indebted for its excellent system of education. It is not, of course, to be supposed that Knox could look adown the vista of the centuries and see the means supplied whereby every child, poor and rich, would be equally favored with school privileges. Nor is it to be understood that he found his fellow countrymen wholly illiterate, for the congregations who gladly heard his preaching and as gladly applauded when he personally took to task his and Scotland's queen, the clever, witty, wayward Mary Stuart, were not dullards. They were the same people who, with Knox and other scholarly leaders, gave to their country that most logical ecclesiastical republican system known as Presbyterianism—a system that in a very large measure compelled them almost to a man, and woman, to acquaint themselves not only with the doctrines, but also with the polity of the church; and building even better than they knew, this same spirit of doctrinal research, in after years, divided the Presbyterians into sects, the members of each feeling that all were in duty bound to argue the point, with all comers. The writer has, in his boyhood days, heard many earnest and lengthened discussions in which the scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation, were ransacked for quotations which, it was hoped, would overwhelm an opponent.

As to the ministers, they were very largely recruited from the homes of a thrifty, self-denying and comparatively poor peasantry. They were well educated, were invariably college men, so that in their intellectual equipment they had, in their respective communities, no superiors; although, because of the critical spirit prevailing, their parishioners were wont to quote the lines of Burns:

"What's a' the jargon o' your schools
Your Latin names for horns and stools,
If honest nature made ye fools
What sairs your grammars!"

But none the less the minister was ever the chief man in the community, not only on the Sabbath or other holy days, but every day, sharing in the simple joys and comforting in the common sorrows that befell the flock. The schoolmaster, who in very truth was the school master, and the doctor, also college men, ranked just a little lower than the clergy. Strange as it may seem to the man of today, though the minister might know more of Hebrew, Greek and Latin than did his hearers, yet King James' version of the English Bible was almost if not quite as often read, carefully read and clearly understood, by the man at the anvil or plough, as by any D.D. in Scotland or out of it. The shorter catechism, which to the average boy or girl was not short, and anything but a pleasure to memorize, yet memorized it must needs be. However, it is at least a comfort to know that we were not required to understand it.

Such were some of the educative conditions which, for good or ill mentally, morally and theologically, largely moulded the sturdy Scots, who, bidding adieu to poor, but much loved native land, crossed the ocean, and in the formative period in the history of this commonwealth in some measure assisted in laying a foundation, of which no superstructure needs to be ashamed. They brought with them an inheritance of good physique, good moral fibre, a deeply religious turn of mind, a willingness to work, a passion for saving. The Scotchman is a good neighbor, a good friend, an outspoken, honorable enemy, a patriot in the old home, a patriot in the new; in religion, conservative, in politics, decidedly progressive. With him sparkling wit is a rarity, a peculiar grim humor uncommonly common.

There also came with him, or in him, a strange glorification of the virtues of strong drink. Though there were so-called unsociable individuals who eschewed the cheering cup, yet on the whole, the national failing asserted itself and many a transplanted Tam O'Shanter found at hand a Souter Johnny, who gladly with him felt "O'er a' the ills o' life victorious." It is a matter for regret that our peasant poet, while he did not originate the sentiment, yet he is quite largely to blame for its perpetuation, thus, by his genius, making the convival habit almost a virtue. It seems strange that he who on the farm of Mossgiel in his young, ardent manhood and poethood

"Walked in glory and in joy Following his plough upon the mountain side" and at the same place and time could sing, and sing from the heart of the "Wee, modest, crimson tipped flower" could, and did also sing

"Fortune, if thou'll but gie me still Hale breeks, a scone, and whisky gill
An' rowth o'rhyme tae rave at will Tak' a' the rest
An' deal't aboot as thy blind skill
Directs thee best."

In this connection, it may be well to quote the remark of an Altona merchant, who well knew and respected the first generation of Scots. Said he:

"They were sometimes hilariously happy on Saturday afternoons, but all were good Presbyterians on Sunday."

And

"In trading, cash was sometimes lacking, but credit never."

No doubt, the criticism in regard to the failing was just the recognition of their honor equally so.

The early settlers on these prairies, come from where they might, suffered many privations. The Scots, unused to the excessive summer heat and the equally excessive winter cold, occasionally, no doubt, wished themselves in the "land of the mountain and the flood," but the wish remained a wish, and as new arrivals came, the loneliness gradually passed away.

Between 1835 and 1855, nearly all of the Scottish people who have been residents of this county arrived, and though they can be found in various sections, yet it is only the northern part of Copley township that can truly be called a Scottish settlement.

And to some it may appear strange that not until the eighties did the Scottish residents of this vicinity, led by a few of the more intense lovers of the "land of brown heath," from themselves into a Caledonian society which enjoyed a short if not uneventful existence.

The annual meetings were, with one exception, held on the anniversary of the birth of Scotland's peasant poet; he who, by his genius, gave to our Lallan tongue, a name and place in the world's literature. A name and fame which must endure seeing that he has in his own beautiful simple words, with a master hand, touched the universal heart. And when we foregathered, we often spoke of the poet's birth, that birth in the "auld clay biggin'" when the "Janwar win' blew hansel in on Robin"; and though the midwinter night might be such

"That a child might understand
The Deil had business on his hand"

yet to us, for the time being, a loyal, happy band of Scots,

The minutes winged their way with pleasure.

It was an evening of reminiscences, we each and all, who were to the manner born in memory, saw the lonely height and home, the mist-covered mountain, the deep-wooded glen, the far-reaching stretches of unsullied purple heather; and it often seems to the writer that we, who have spent our days, few or many, on this, our most prosaic prairie, can hardly imagine the exquisite pleasure that comes to the average Scot of whatever station when he sees the rural beauties of his native land, when in the words of Burns

"For nature's charms the hills and woods,
The flow'ry dells, the foaming floods
Are free alike to a';
On Braes when we please, then,
We'll sit and sowth a tune,
Syne rhyme tilt we'll time tilt
And sing't whan we hae dune."

And someone who called to mind his crook and plaid hummed, if but to himself, the moorland ditty—

"Ca' the yowes tae the knowes,
Ca' them whaur the heather grows,
Ca' them whaur the burnie rowes,
My bonnie dearie."

Then hand in hand the various circles, in unison, feelingly sang:

"Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And never brought to min',
Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
And days o' lang syne."

But in the passing of the older Scots the society lost the enthusiasm of numbers and for some years no meetings were held; but in the late summer of 1904 we and our descendants, in all about one hundred, again came together at Craig-Knowe farm and had as speaker for the occasion, Rev. Hamilton Spence, who was most assuredly in the spirit on that day, for such winning eloquence, such a masterly mingling of pathos and pleasantry will not be by us forgotten; and as the autumn sun sped toward the glowing west

"We each took off our several way, Resolved to meet some other day."

By far the larger percentage of the immigrants became farmers, though quite a number engaged in mercantile pursuits, and others, with their well-trained hands, well trained by the now almost obsolete apprentice system, secured for themselves a competence. Back to the soil was not at that time a common cry; however it was to the soil they nearly all went, and they were wise or fortunate in selecting exceptionally good land. It may not have been scientifically, but it was at least carefully farmed, and for many years the crops were sufficiently abundant, and even though prices were low and markets distant the early education in thriftiness which nearly all had inherited or acquired in the old home made them "contented wi' little and cantie wi' mair." Nevertheless this constant moneyless condition became monotonous and perhaps exasperating, as this recorded incident will show: Some guid wife had been, perhaps not for the first time, reminded that she ought to be a little more saving, and replied: "Oh, it's hain whan ye hae an' it's hain whan ye haena; it's a deil o' a hainin'." The significance of this anecdote is not applicable to the women alone, for the hainin' was necessarily practiced both indoors and out, and it is well known that the women of the settlement were in every true sense worthy helpmeets not only in the saving but also in the making, for were the fathers, brothers, husbands unusually busy in the field a most willing and often a strong hand from indoors kindly came and such were, as a rule, quite as able to grace a harvest field as "ben the hoose."

Many of the settlers had been brought up in houses in Scotland which were neither comfortable nor convenient. They had but few ideas and almost no experience in house erection, and when, with the help of neighbors, they undertook to build, with logs or even a frame house, they were handling materials wholly new to them; and the finished product was not always a thing of beauty or convenience; but it was a home, it was their own, and these were comforting thoughts; thoughts that greatly modified their homesickness. The outbuildings were usually of a type even more primitive than the houses, and it has been said that when barn accumulations became troublesome they moved the barn.

Postoffices, while not so distant as markets, were not at all convenient, and they were not much needed; letter writing, while not a lost art, was not much practiced. There was nothing very exciting to write about and a more potent reason was the great cost of postage, especially when compared with the average income. It is well known that there were isolated cases where letters remained in the hands of the postmaster for many weeks after they were known to be there solely because of the lack of money to pay the postage. When, as is most likely, such letters were from loved ones in the far away home we can form some idea of the scarcity of ready money. Of course daily newspapers were unheard of, even weeklies were rare; the magazine for the prairie was yet to be. The peripatetic book man of other days was missing and missed, but in every home, however poor, there was at least one book, the Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments with Psalms in meter, Scottish version, and its unique worth in private estimation is shown by the fact that it was often referred to in speaking of family worship as "taking the Book."

Coming as they did from a land where a community without a church was unknown, it was felt as a peculiar deprivation that they could not, as Pres-

A VIEW FROM THE SOUTH, ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, KNOXVILLE

By far the larger percentage of the immigrants became farmers, though quite a number engaged in mercantile pursuits, and others, with their well-trained hands, well trained by the now almost obsolete apprentice system, secured for themselves a competence. Back to the soil was not at that time a common cry; however it was to the soil they nearly all went, and they were wise or fortunate in selecting exceptionally good land. It may not have been scientifically, but it was at least carefully farmed, and for many years the crops were sufficiently abundant, and even though prices were low and markets distant the early education in thriftiness which nearly all had inherited or acquired in the old home made them "contented wi' little and cantie wi' mair." Nevertheless this constant moneyless condition became monotonous and perhaps exasperating, as this recorded incident will show: Some guid wife had been, perhaps not for the first time, reminded that she ought to be a little more saving, and replied: "Oh, it's hain whan ye hae an' it's hain whan ye haena; it's a deil o' a hainin'." The significance of this anecdote is not applicable to the women alone, for the hainin' was necessarily practiced both indoors and out, and it is well known that the women of the settlement were in every true sense worthy helpmeets not only in the saving but also in the making, for were the fathers, brothers, husbands unusually busy in the field a most willing and often a strong hand from indoors kindly came and such were, as a rule, quite as able to grace a harvest field as "ben the hoose."

Many of the settlers had been brought up in houses in Scotland which were neither comfortable nor convenient. They had but few ideas and almost no experience in house erection, and when, with the help of neighbors, they undertook to build, with logs or even a frame house, they were handling materials wholly new to them; and the finished product was not always a thing of beauty or convenience; but it was a home, it was their own, and these were comforting thoughts; thoughts that greatly modified their homesickness. The outbuildings were usually of a type even more primitive than the houses, and it has been said that when barn accumulations became troublesome they moved the barn.

Postoffices, while not so distant as markets, were not at all convenient, and they were not much needed; letter writing, while not a lost art, was not much practiced. There was nothing very exciting to write about and a more potent reason was the great cost of postage, especially when compared with the average income. It is well known that there were isolated cases where letters remained in the hands of the postmaster for many weeks after they were known to be there solely because of the lack of money to pay the postage. When, as is most likely, such letters were from loved ones in the far away home we can form some idea of the scarcity of ready money. Of course daily newspapers were unheard of, even weeklies were rare; the magazine for the prairie was yet to be. The peripatetic book man of other days was missing and missed, but in every home, however poor, there was at least one book, the Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments with Psalms in meter, Scottish version, and its unique worth in private estimation is shown by the fact that it was often referred to in speaking of family worship as "taking the Book."

byterians, come together in a church of their own denomination and in some old, ever new, song, with the precentor's aid

"Chant their artless notes in simple guise," and not in the words of Heber, Watts, Wesley or even of the Scottish Bonar, but in the crudely versified Psalms of David, in Dundee's

"Wild warbling measures rise
Or plaintive martyrs worthy of the name."

For a number of years in a most primitive appearing log structure—used as a schoolhouse—situated on the south side of the Victoria road and some three and one-half miles west of that village, a faithful few, when a minister could be secured, met in public worship. In the course of time a frame building was erected which served as schoolhouse and church, and although the occasional preacher was usually a Presbyterian yet to some of the older attendants it must have seemed rather strange and scarcely the proper thing to do, to invite to preach, as they did, one who had been ordained as a Methodist, or even one as Lyman B. Ferris, who, though respected and loved by the whole community, had never been ordained at all.

Although these occasional meetings were spiritually and socially profitable and enjoyed as such, still the ideal ever present in the thought of the settlement was their own church, their own manse, their own minister—he who would be to the little flock a shepherd indeed. Today, when customs and creeds are equally elastic, it is somewhat amusing to hear of the peculiar experiences, in church affairs, of the iconoclasts of that early day; for instance, when a certain musical enthusiast induced some of his young friends to join with him in organizing a choir, and having succeeded, they, on a subsequent Sabbath, hymn books in hand, presented themselves before the astonished congregation. The hymn was announced; there was a murmur of suppressed excitement and one of the fathers in Israel marched out slamming the door, and otherwise letting it be known that he disapproved of such sacrilegious conduct.

Even a day came when it was suggested that an organ would greatly help in the musical part of the services; but ere the suggestion became more than such, there were many earnest discussions concerning the sinfulness of the sin; and one not rigidly sanctimonious member gave them to understand that "tam so and so and' Johnnie so an' so, and' me' we dinna believe in praising God wi' a blaw o' win'." But the hymn book came, likewise the organ, likewise heaven's blessings. And in the estimation of the community no greater blessing could be given than that long hoped for, fervently prayed for, church home.

For although, in April, 1855, Rev. T. S. Vaile and R. C. Matthews, by authority from the presbytery of Schuyler, organized the John Knox Presbyterian church,—the names of the first members of which are herewith given: William Leighton, Janet McCornack, Elizabeth Kelley McCornack, Samuel McCornack, Janet Tait McCornack, Margaret McClymont, Mary Ann Gordon, James McCornack, John McDowell, Sr., Agnes McDowell, Mary Miller McCornack, Lockhart Leighton, John McKie, Janet Stewart McKie, Robert McCornack, Peter McClymont, John McConchie, Elizabeth McConchie, George Stephenson, Richard Stuckey, Martha Jane Stuckey, Mary Wood, John Aberdeen, David McConchie, Isabella Stephenson.

Trustees elected for one year: Peter McClymont, William McCornack, Andrew McCornack, Peter Gordon, James McCornack. Elected deacon: Andrew McCornack.

Samuel McCornack, Lockhart Leighton, Richard Stuckey were elected elders. However, it was not until the spring of 1863, that, on land donated by James Cook, the thankful congregation finally realized their fondest hopes and saw their own church occupying the site whereon had stood the log and frame schoolhouses both of which, by their associations, had been endeared to them.

The name given was an additional bond that bound as one, the old land and the new. Here for nearly fifty years this Scottish community weekly assembled in public worship. No doubt, during the services many hearts turned to the auld hame, to the auld kirk, where all around the "mossy marbles" mutely marked where "The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

The John Knox Presbyterian church, born of the desire of the Scottish immigrants to gather as a body of worshippers, lived its life—a life of blessing to the individual and to the community; it ceased to exist as a structure, it even ceased as an organization, but its influence has not and shall not cease. Many of the members took their letters of dismissal and allied themselves with the church of their choice in some nearby village; others moved to various parts of the state; others to states farther west; and some, like the old church, ceased to be.

And yet must we not conclude that the spirit which animated the fathers, that spirit which defied militant persecutors, who, with fire and sword for decades, desolated Scotland, has not yet vanished from the land? Are there now none who are willing to make sacrifices, to give life itself that the right to worship God as they choose may not perish from the earth?

In this, an age of readjustment in matters of belief, do the Scots of today forget their duty to the neighbor, be that neighbor in Knox county or in Hindostan?

Perhaps it is not too much to say that the Scots of today are still fairly Christian in their ideals, fairly Christian in their daily living, fairly Christian in their forgetfulness of the lapses of the yesterday, fairly Christian in their unfaltering faith in the morrow.

Therefore, though the church itself is but a memory, even the original organization beyond human reconstruction, yet may not the scattered remnant collectively or individually, in the words of Tennyson, look trustfully to "That God who ever lives and loves,

One God, one law, one element
And one far off divine event
To which the whole creation moves."

It must have been, to the remaining few, a day of peculiar sadness, when the purchaser of their old and loved church home began the work of demolition and in truth they might have said, "The past rises before me like a dream."

They remembered the daily self-denial on the part of the community as a whole, a self-denial with one principal aim in view. They were willing to bear the inconveniences and discomforts of their poorly built, poorly furnished homes, and in time they gladly realized that the many littles made a meikle, and that meikle became transformed into a church of their choice, and that assuredly was well worth, not a day, but many days of self-denial, and afterwards of hearty thanksgiving.

It is not to be inferred that at that time there was, among the settlers, any real poverty, they were—to slightly change the words of Burns—"Weel fed, weel clad, weel sarkit," but the money-getting opportunities on the prairie were exceedingly limited, and the individual capital brought from Scotland was meager enough, for by far the larger part of the immigrants were drawn from the ranks of the smaller tenant farmers who, through the strictest economy, were in comparatively easy circumstances, but found it impossible to furnish the means for placing each member of the family in a position similar to their own. Such, however, were well equipped to make their way in this new land; theirs had been a life of hard work, plain fare, and small pay; such conditions, for a considerable time, were much the same here; socially there was little, if any, change; in the old home they met and mingled with their own class; there being scarcely any other here, they freely mingled as before. But a very few had received the so-called higher education, yet as a rule a thorough schooling had not been neglected and it is almost certain that there is not now, nor at any time has been, in this county, a person of Scottish birth who is or was wholly illiterate.

As stated, but very few were highly educated, so that, in this respect, all were on a fairly good level, as in their intellectual, so in their moral and religious training, and this sameness manifested itself in the neighborly spirit that permeated and controlled the community; they seemed to share their joys and their sorrows. They shared their toil, and this kindly and mutual helpfulness in some measure grew out of a mutual need, and this in turn developed that spirit of unfeigned hospitality, which is one of the most pronounced and redeeming traits of the Scottish peasantry; and though here but a transplanted virtue, it found a congenial environment, so that not only relatives, friends, neighbors, but even the stranger within the gates lacked not of aught which the humble prairie home could grant.

They were equally neighborly in their recreations. As towns, villages and dollars were scarce, they were compelled to furnish their own amusements, and one that was much and often enjoyed was dancing, and it is quite probable that it was indulged in oftener than was recommended by some of those who had lost the knack thereof. It also was a transplanted virtue—or vice—as the case may be, and the vicinity seldom lacked some rustic violinist who perhaps knew as much of Greek as of musical notes, yet he all the same with

"Hornpipes, jigs, strathsplys and reels Put life and mettle in their heels."

And on other occasions, at social gatherings, the long winter evening was most pleasantly spent at what was locally known as "sang aboot," and the songs were almost invariably reminders of the land where

"The snawdrap and primrose the woodlands adorn
And violets bathe in the (dew) o' the morn."

Or Annie Laurie, Bonnie Doon, Afton Water, Coming Thro' the Rye, John Anderson My Jo, and the parting song seldom failed to have the words:

"We twa hae paid 'lt i' the burn
Frae morning sun til dine."

All of these various amusements—the dance, the song, or what not—were in their rustic manner as eagerly pursued and as keenly enjoyed as such ever could have been under what might be considered more favorable circumstances; but all were wholly weekday pleasures. When the Sabbath came it was Sabbath indeed. If anyone to himself or herself essayed to hum a tune there certainly was no hint of ragtime in it. Lips were so trained they could not take on, on that day, a whistling form; there was in all and over all a Sabbath solemnity, and, as has been mentioned, for years previous to the erection of the John Knox church services were held and attendance at public worship was not a matter of good weather, good clothes or even of good intentions, but was strictly a religious duty. They brought with them from over the sea some national failings, and may have acquired a few after their arrival, but non-attendance at church on the Sabbath day was not one of them. There was, however, as shown by the records, an occasional individual who for some reason, or for no reason, absented himself even for years from church, and it being the duty of the session to advise, admonish, indeed, so far as possible, compel the recalcitrant member to at least assume the virtue of attending divine services, and, by holding the sword of excommunication over the guilty head, an apparent, if not a real change of heart usually took place.

It is, however, a pleasure to note that the labors of the elders were not greatly increased on this account.

In the reference on a previous page to the school master it is feared that some may have received the impression that he was in his sphere a tyrant, and it is no doubt true that there were, in that profession, men who were patienceless, tactless, overbearing, even cruel, as there are such in all the grades from the prince to the pauper, inclusive, but in their life and life's work they were worthy of honor, respect, love, as earnest, capable, Christian gentlemen; it is also true that in the schoolroom their word was law, they were clothed with more than a little brief authority, but such authority was simply on a par with that in the home. The phrase, the life's work, may to some appear meaningless when we note that teachers of to-day, in a way, resemble birds of passage, changing schools as they might garments. I well remember the master from whom I received my school training. He had been in the same position for years previous to my school days and for many years afterwards, and from the same school within a short time a teacher voluntarily retired after an incumbency of more than forty years. It is small wonder that the teacher ranked high as a component part of the community, for besides his scholarly acquirements, which were of a high order, he shared with the minister in the moral and spiritual training of the young. Therefore in the matter of doctrinal soundness he had to be like Caesar's wife, above suspicion; and it is little less wonder that in all of their world-wide wanderings these teachers never lost sight of many a gifted and longer lived "Geordie Hoo." The pen picture of the "Domsie" by Ian McLaren, while faultlessly truthful, is not at all unique. Many of us can call from memory's "land of used to be" just such another, so that we can most heartily appreciate the beautiful little poem, and bless the author, Dr. John H. Finley, for putting into rhyme and that in our own loved dialect, "The Retirement of Domsie."

"Dear Domsie has slippit awa',
He's silently gane frae the glen;
He heard i' the nicht a voice ca',
Guid servant and faithfu', 'Come, Ben.'" and concluding:

"Whan I maun gang oot frae myglen;
An' owre strange hills I maun fare,
I pray to meet Domsie again
Whaur skails the bit schule nevermair."

THE NEGRO PEOPLE

A history of the people of Knox county would be far from complete without some account of the negroes. In fact, when we come to consider the different races that have homes here, the negro race is of scarcely less importance than any other one race. Not perhaps on account of the work it has done or on account of any place it has filled in this county from an economic viewpoint, but rather because its history here is supplemental to conditions and experiences which were at the bottom of a civilization which had been developing in one-half of the whole United States for two hundred years. The influence of negro slavery can be seen in old colonial life of Virginia, Maryland and the Carolinas and wherever that life existed. It may be difficult to imagine that the courtly manners, the quiet dignity, the almost limitless hospitality which characterized the southern colonial gentleman had its origin largely in the unrequited toil of an inferior race. Of course climatic conditions always play a part in moulding the character of a race; but beyond all this, the fact that the institution of slavery gave leisure and therefore refinement to the whole household still remains. The financially successful owners of slaves had much less to do than their northern brethren who not only contended with a more vigorous climate but looked wholly after their own personal matters upon which their subsistence and that of their families depended. The leisure that was enjoyed in the southern colonial home was spent largely in the entertainment of friends. Th social side of life was the principal element in which he lived and the largest contribution that came to this state of existence came from the negro slave. This life had been moulding the southern character for generations.

But let it be said of the negro slave, that the institution of slavery did not inure to the sole benefit of the white men. The negro received a certain benefit also. Some of them lived on, comparatively, quite intimate terms with their masters and derived much intellectual benefit thereby. And it would seem that in no other way can we account for the phenomenal advancement of the race since the limiting influences of slavery have been removed. The progress of the black man in the United States has been almost as remarkable in the last half century as the progress of the Japanese in Japan and if we consider the races from the standpoint of general improvement and not the military side, we may reasonably give the negro first place. The number of homes that the negroes have made for themselves, the farms that they have acquired, the professions they have adopted, the wealth they have gained, not only as a people, but as individuals (some of them are really wealthy), all speak most hopefully of and for the future of our colored citizens.

Truly, then, a consideration of the negro race in Knox county will be of especial interest.

This consideration, however, is attended with more or less difficulty. The first comers left little or no record of their doings. Most of them have passed away and those who are still living have rather poor or uncertain memories, so that anything like exact or authentic accounts are hard to get. Generally speaking, the negroes have been unskilled day laborers in this county. Some have been masons, some carpenters, and others contractors. We are pleased to present the following article by Mr. Lewis C. Carter, one of our most respected citizens of the negro race:

THE NEGRO RACE—BY MR. LEWIS C. CARTER

Among the first of the negro people coming to Knox county before the civil war were Harry Van Allen and Susan Van Allen, his wife. They came some time about the year 1840. They were free people and if they were ever slaves, the writer never knew it. Being the only colored people in Galesburg at that time, they were very prominent. Mrs. Van Allen was a member of the old First church. Mr. Van Allen died some time in the fifties.

Two children were born to them, Mary and Owen Van Allen. Owen Van Allen became a barber, following the trade of his father. He is now living in the west. Mary died some years ago.

Some years after the death of her husband, Mrs. Van Allen was married to Mr. Thomas Richardson, being his second wife. Thomas Richardson was also among the early colored people of Galesburg. He and his first wife, were about the second arrivals in Galesburg of the colored people. Mr. Richardson became a prominent and useful citizen of Knox county. His home was on the corner of West and Ferris streets where the Galesburg Electric Light and Power company's plant now stands. The property passed out of the hands of the Richardsons a few years ago. Mr. Richardson was well known as a good farmer and a very capable teamster. He had eight children, four sons and four daughters and all grew to manhood and womanhood. The boys were Tilford, Samuel, Benjamin and Richard; the daughters, Angeline, Janet, Clarissa, and Prodine. Farming was the principal occupation of the sons. They were well known in the city and county for years. Samuel owned property in the northwest corner of section nine, Galesburg township. As far as known, all of the first family of children are dead. Some of the grandchildren are living. Alfred Richardson still resides in this city. He has been a trusted night watchman of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad company for many years, and his devotion to duty has given him an enviable reputation. It is said of him that he is known to the tramps who swarm in this part of the state as a man who permits no lounging about the company's buildings or yard. He has served several terms on the police force of the city with equal credit.

The Searles family was one of the largest of the early colored families. The old gentleman, Mr. Francis Searles, was born in Steward county, Georgia, March 8, 1772. He was a white man. His wife, Mrs. Polly Searles, was born in the same county and state and was a colored woman. They left their native state in the year 1847 and came to Galesburg where they made their home until he died, in 1875. For a time they lived on South Chambers street. He bought the old Chappell farm situated one mile northwest of Galesburg, where he was living at the time of his death. His wife followed him a few years after. Their family consisted of three sons and six daughters and they all reached mature ages, and they stood well among their people. James Matteson Searles, the oldest son, was an expert in well-digging and laying sewer. His son George W. Searles was a graduate of Knox college. John Adams Searles, the youngest son, moved to Kansas and settled upon a farm belonging to one of his sisters, where he died last year. The other brother died in 1880. The daughters were Mary Ann, Jane Gensey, Betsey, Sarah, Charlotte and Martha. Four of the daughters are still living and are well along in years. Mary Ann lives on North Henderson street and her name is Richardson. She is the mother of Albert Richardson above spoken of. Charlotte lives at 473 South Chambers street where she has resided since the death of her parents. She was injured in a railroad accident some forty years ago, by which she lost a leg and an arm. She follows the trade of dressmaker and earns her living thereby. The older sister runs a nine hundred acre farm in Kansas. She is a widow. The youngest sister, Martha, lives in Chicago. The mother was a liberated slave before the war and the children were all free-born.

Rev. Levi Henderson was the first negro minister of Galesburg. He came in an early day and his home was about No. 423 West Tompkins street. Rev. Henderson built the first colored church in Galesburg, known as Allen Chapel on East Tompkins street. Rev. Henderson was a very devout man. The writer of this article, at that time a runaway slave boy, had the pleasure of living with him in July, 1863. He died in the '70s and his wife followed him a few years later.

Rev. McGill and his wife, Rachel, were a very venerable couple. Mr. McGill was one of the early pastors of Allen chapel. He was a retired minister of the denomination. He was the father of seven children, two sons and five daughters. One of the daughters is living in Iowa. His son, Isaiah McGill, was well known in Galesburg for many years. He followed the trade of brick mason and plasterer. His son, Hiram McGill, is now living in this city and follows the trade of his father Isaiah.

Many families came from the south during and after the war, which increased the colored population of Galesburg and Knox county very materially. Aaron Welcome and his wife, Sarah, came in 1862. He was a farmer and also followed the carpenter's trade. In 1863 he, with William Webster, John Davis and several others, enlisted in the Union army of the war of the rebellion. There also came the following between 1862 and 1875: George Fletcher, Thomas Roads and wife, Paul Fletcher and wife, Abraham Murray and wife, Perry Cook and wife, Edward Washington and wife, William Stewart, William Laport, Peter Lawsey, William Elsey and brother, George Owens and wife, John Brown and wife, George Solomon, John Hopkins and wife, Elijah Slaughter and wife, John A. Logan, James Lyons and wife, Moses Jenkins and wife, James Johnson and wife, Andrew Anderson and wife, Thomas Stevens and wife, Elias Fletcher and wife, Jefferson Turner and wife, James McGruder and wife and Dennis Fletcher and wife. Several sons of Andrew Anderson are still living in Galesburg and Charles McGruder, son of James McGruder, is now the janitor of Central Primary school building.

The Gash family constitutes quite a large circle. They came soon after the close of the war. They were Jefferson Gash, Anderson Gash, William Gash, George Gash, Harrison (Tip) Gash, Sarah Gash, Mrs. Craig, Mrs. Waters, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Williams and George, her husband, and Mrs. Hildridge, being the brothers and sisters of the Gash family.

Among those who came to Galesburg about this time were William Stewart and wife, Levi Johnson and wife (the wife being a sister of the Gashes), Isaac Green and wife, Mrs. Melissa Alexander (later Mrs. Warren, who became a successful nurse), Jesse Hazel and wife, Henry Will and wife and William Davis. Isaac Green died December 11, 1911, at the age of 76 years. He raised a large family. Jesse Hazel was a soldier in the war of the rebellion, was taken prisoner and confined in Libby prison for nine months. He is still a conspicuous figure on our streets. William Davis was also a soldier and a capable plasterer and mason.

Most of the above persons spent their lives in Galesburg and helped to develop the resources of the city and county in their respective vocations and trades. Though their pursuits were in the common walks of life, yet they were useful and filled a general demand, some as farmers and some as common laborers or mechanics. Most of these people came from Missouri, but Kentucky, Tennessee and Louisiana have each furnished quite a number. Richard Worthington, an old soldier, came from Kentucky. He was very well to do and was supposed to be worth $30,000 to $40,000. He died recently, leaving one son, Richard, Jr., and a fourth wife.

The negroes of the south, as a rule, were better posted on the progress of the war than the poor white people, for the reason that some of their numbers were always with the better educated class of the white people. They were house servants and therefore heard the newspapers read and heard war matters talked over. The information thus acquired was communicated to the colored people on the farms at secret meetings held by the colored people. At these meetings the war situation was pretty carefully considered. The question of freedom was also much talked of. The result of every battle fought, as reported in the southern papers, was soon known to the colored people. They knew the details and whether the victory was favorable to the master or to the slave. The countenances of the white people were carefully observed and if an anxious expression was seen, the colored people knew the news was good for them and bad for their masters, and the reading aloud of the papers told the story. Besides this source of information there could always be found in every community some white man or men who sympathized with the slave, and these men helped to keep the slaves informed of the true conditions and really encouraged them in hoping for freedom as the final result of the war.

All of the above named families became property owners, as well as a number of colored families not mentioned in this article. Out of a population of about twelve hundred colored people, there are about 165 families who own homes. Many of these homes are comfortable and compare favorably with the homes owned by the laboring classes of other races. As it is with the white men, the homes of the colored men improve as their conditions improve and the race generally developes as conditions grow better.

There are two churches in the city of Galesburg belonging to the colored people, the African Methodist Episcopal church and the Second Baptist church. The total value of the two church properties is about $20,000.

I am pleased to insert also the autobiography of Mr. Lewis C. Carter, author of the foregoing account of the negro race in Knox county.

I was born on the farm of Winder C. Dingle four miles north of Palmyra, county seat of Marion county, Missouri, and about fifteen miles southwest of Quincy, Illinois, on the 15th day of March, 1850. I was the slave of Mr. Dingle, he having purchased my mother about six months before I was born. My mother had been the property of his brother-in-law, Wm. Kelly. Kelly had mortgaged all of his property, including my mother, to a money lender and slave dealer by the name of Bill Thompson. Mr. Kelly lost his property as the result of a fast life and high living. At the request of Mr. Kelly, my mother was purchased by Mr. Dingle. My life on the farm was passed about like the average slave boy of that day. As soon as I was large enough to run about I was kept busy as errand boy. I was also soon large enough to look after the babies, both white and colored. Later I waited upon the table and drove the carriage for my mistress on her visits around the neighborhood. I also looked after the saddle horse. At eight years of age I was put to plowing corn and other field work in general. Mr. Dingle had but a few slaves, three men, Edmond, Bill and Jack. When I was about nine years old Jack was sold south. Soon after Ned, as he was called, was sold to a Dr. Geater in our neighborhood. In 1861 Bill died with lung trouble, leaving me the only male slave, except a brother four years old. I had three sisters on the place. There were two other girl slaves.

Dr. Dingle had two daughters and four sons. The sons had to work on the farm the same as boys do in Illinois. He also hired slaves from other farmers. It was through the influence and assistance of one of these hired slaves that I ran away from my owner. The name of this slave was Ephraim Easley, the uncle of William Easley, the porter at the Galesburg Business Men's club of this city. Ephraim owned a horse which he sold to the soldiers for $90. He had married one of the slave girls. On Monday night, July 14, 1863, he took his wife, one of my sisters, the other slave girl and myself and our plow horses and left for the land of freedom. We left our horses in the woods near Quincy all night in the rain. We had ridden the horses (four of them) thus far and there turned them loose, hoping that they would find their way back to the farm, and we learned that they were recovered about a week later.

We arrived in Galesburg Thursday night, July 17, 1863. We did not know where we were going to stop. The bus driver took us to the home of Mr. Henry Bailey, situated on East Ferris street on the lot now occupied by the Swedish Episcopal church. Mr. Bailey proved to be an old acquaintance of us all. He had recently come from Palmyra. I remained there a week. I worked for a Mr. Stowell on the Knoxville road for twenty-five cents a day hoeing corn. I spent my first free money for a hickory shirt, as I had but the one I wore on my back. Shirts were high in those days, the same could be bought now for twenty-five cents. I lived a week with Rev. Henderson, the colored Methodist minister and then with Dr. Chapman, who found me a home on a farm with Cyrus Metcalf, living north of Mr. Chas. A. Hinckley on Farnham street. I went there August 7, 1863, and remained until March 1, 1864, when Mr. Metcalf moved to Ontario township onto his brother Michael's farm where I remained for two years. All this time I worked for my board and clothes as I had been disabled the winter of 1863-4 with rheumatism. That winter was a very severe one, the roads were blocked and drifted in every direction and my rheumatism proved to be a very stubborn case for I was in bad shape for several years. Nevertheless, the two years spent in Ontario were exceedingly pleasant and happy ones. I had been given my first opportunity of attending the public schools. I was fourteen years old. January 1, 1865, I started to the Ontario school. It was a happy day for me. My mother used to tell me in slavery that in the north black children and white would go to the same school. I could not realize it until I had seen it. I nearly mastered three books the first three months. Three months of schooling a year were all boys got at that time, yet they seemed to get about as much out of it as they do now in nine months or a year. Clothes was not the question in our grandfathers' days. High heeled shoes and peg-leg pants were not known.

Mr. Metcalf moved to Oneida in the spring of 1866 and I hired out to Wm. Stephenson for three months. The remainder of the summer I worked for Henry Leffingwell at Ontario. He was a brother of Dr. Leffingwell of St. Mary's school, Knoxville.

About the middle of August, 1866, I met Mr. S. H. Ferris who lived in Galesburg. He owned a farm at Woodhull. I finally bound myself to him until I would be twenty-one years of age. I was to have board, clothing, three months' schooling each year, one dollar a month to buy collars, ties, take my girl to shows and buggy riding, and one hundred dollars at the end of my service. I had to figure some to make ends meet. When I became twenty-one I had overdrawn $2.35 of my monthly dues, so that was taken off of my hundred dollars. I took a horse instead of the money. A year later I sold the horse to a Mr. David Cutter for $75. I finally had to take two months' board for pay. That was living high—five years' work for two months' board. All together I obtained twenty-two months' schooling, against nine years' schooling that the average boy gets today. All of my four boys received that or more.

I worked nine months for Mr. Ferris after I was twenty-one. The last of November, 1871, I went to work for Mr. Henry Hitchcock, superintendent of the "Burlington" at Galesburg. I worked for him five years, then went into the grocery store of Greene & Dore, June 12, 1876. I remained with that store through five changes of proprietors, covering a period of seventeen and one fourth years. From that house I took up employment with D. C. Raymond & Son, for whom I have worked over eighteen years, making over thirty-five years in the grocery business.

In 1878, June 18th, I was married to Miss Emily Louisa Alexander, daughter of Mrs. Melissa Alexander, a widow, who came from Palmyra in the fall of 1864. They were the slaves of Walker Loutham of Palmyra. Her brothers, Ralph and John, came with them. Ralph Alexander was one of the first mail carriers in Galesburg, appointed by Hon. Clark E. Carr while he was postmaster. To our union six children were born, four sons and two daughters, Eugene, Estelle, Lewis, Jr., Eva, Clarence and Harold. At this writing all are living and in good health. The oldest is thirty-two, the youngest eighteen. We purchased our home at 186 West South street of Hon. T. J. Hale in 1881 and are living in the same house at the present time. I have always endeavored to lend my influence to every cause that seemed good to me, and to work as far as possible for the improvement of the moral tone of the city, and I am pleased to add that my wife has always been an active associate and worker in all efforts of this kind.

LEWIS C. CARTER.

The fact that Mr. Carter has spent thirty-five years in the grocery business in this city with but one change in location is a strong testimonial to his honesty, ability and courtesy as a salesman and the writer further states that during all those years he has been personally acquainted with Mr. Carter, has found him all that one could expect from a young man who has always displayed the steady perseverance, industry and upright character revealed in the foregoing autobiography. That it is not birth or education alone that makes a man is conclusively demonstrated by the story of Mr. Carter's life.

LABOR UNIONISM IN KNOX COUNTY

By E. A. Tate

THE RISE OF TRADES UNIONISM IN GENERAL

Though the "song of the toiler"—the cry of an underpaid producing class—the struggle for existence of that overwhelming portion of humanity forced to undergo severe oppression at the hands of the taskmasters, has continued throughout all ages, the present-day labor union is of but comparatively recent origin, and scarcely more than in its infancy.

The history of the past five centuries teems with narratives of gallant efforts made to improve the industrial and social conditions of the working classes; yet little relief obtained earlier than the middle of the 19th century when the spirit of united effort through organization took permanent hold upon the world's producers.

Strife, strikes and revolts against the tyranny of taskmasters have existed since time began. Moses, the great leader and emancipator of the Israelites, tells in the book of Exodus of Holy Writ, 1500 years before the coming of Christ, how Pharaoh so oppressed the children of Israel and made conditions so unbearable that the toilers, unable to produce the required quantity of brick, were forced to strike for freedom and flee into a new country. Early historians of England relate wonderful stories of rebellions of the workers against conditions made unbearable by an obdurate employing class. Yet we cannot regard as in any way analogous to the trades union movement of today the innumerable insurrections of subject races, or even the revolts of the tailors' "serving-men," the cotton spinners and others of early England of which the annals of history are full. They were not evoked by any clearly definite body of men, nor did they result in any permanent association of toilers.

The earliest record of any form of organization among the working classes dates back to the early part of the 13th century and even these primitive associations, found chiefly in England and known as Guilds or Friendly societies, bear but little resemblance to the trades unions of the present generation, largely because of the fact that the membership consisted of both the master and the journeymen in any craft or trade (and sometimes of many trades) and the former always made sure that his interests were not neglected. He frequently presided at the meeting, imposed and collected the dues and fines, paid out the funds and conducted whatever correspondence was necessary. Any attempts on the part of the journeymen to secure increased wages, shorter hours or better conditions were promptly frustrated.

Several things contributed to the journeyman's indifference or lethargy in attempting to bring about any change in the make-up or management of these associations. No master employed any great number of journeymen—one or two being the rule rather than the exception, and the journeyman looked forward to the time when his ability would permit him to open shop for himself. Hence, there was a constant changing going on and the journeyman accepted his surroundings for the time being with little thought of bettering his working conditions.

In the year 1387, however, the "serving men" of the London cord wainers are reported to be aiming at making a "permanent fraternity" in rebellion against the "overseers of the trade," and nine years later the saddlers' "serving men" announced they had a fraternity "time-out-of mind," though the masters declared it was not more than 13 years old, and that its object was to raise wages.

In 1415, a law was passed forbidding the "serving men and journeymen" in London to dwell apart from their masters "as they hold assemblies and have formed a kind of association." The masters and the nobility of the nation had always looked upon the toilers as a sort of chattel property belonging to them, and, of course, held sufficient influence with the law makers to control legislation in their favor. On the other hand, the workers had for so many centuries accepted these conditions and toiled on—14, 15 and even 18 hours a day—caring little else than to serve their masters, that the next fifty years saw only isolated attempts at some sort of separate associations of workers. About the beginning of the next century, however, the masters were aroused to find many "friendly societies" and other organizations solely of journeymen being formed. Moreover, the trouble was not confined to London, and in 1538, we find the bishop of Ely reporting to Cromwell that "21 journeymen shoemakers have assembled on a hill without the town and sent three of their number to summon all the master shoemakers to meet them in order to insist upon an advance in wages, threatening that 'there shall none come into town to serve for that wages within a twelve month and a day, but we woll have an harme or legge of hym except they woll take an othe as we have doon'."

LABOR UNIONS OF ENGLAND

Prior to 1700, however, no continuous association of wage earners existed for maintaining or improving the conditions of employment. The journeymen tailors formed what might be classed the first possible forerunner of the trades union, in England, by organizing a trade society about 1710 to 1720, and between that time and the close of the century a number of other societies of tradesmen were instituted, only to be exterminated later by the passage of the famous "general combination act" in 1799, which forbid any combinations of wage earners in the united kingdom.

Through the efforts of one Francis Place, a member of the common council, a broadminded man, whose sympathies extended to the toiling masses, though he himself was a man of some wealth, this unjust act was repealed in the early part of the nineteenth century and organizations of labor began once more to thrive throughout the kingdom.

The traditional history of the trades union movement represents the period prior to 1810 as one of unmitigated persecution and continuous repression. Such unions as claimed an existence before that date possessed a romantic legend of its early days. The midnight meeting of patriots in the corner of the field, the buried box of records, the secret oath, the long terms of imprisonment of the leaders formed the base of many an interesting anecdote told later as the organizations gained strength throughout the land. Even as late as 1834 six Dorchester labor leaders were convicted for the mere act of administering an oath and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, which action stirred the toilers to still greater demands for justice and the right to associate themselves together for protection.

Early in 1829 the fact became self-evident that solidarity among the whole body of wage earners was essential against the combination of employers, and, following a disastrous six months' strike at Hyde, near Manchester, the spinners' societies of England, Scotland and Ireland were invited to send delegates to a conference to be held at Ramsey, in the Isle of Man, in the month of December, 1829. As the result of this conference a "grand general union of the United Kingdom" was established, subject to an annual delegate meeting. John Doherty was general secretary and Thomas Foster and Patrick McGowan were appointed to organize the spinners throughout the United Kingdom. The revenue of the grand union consisted of a tax of a penny a week per member.

In February, 1830, at Doherty's instigation, a meeting was held at Manchester, consisting of delegates from twenty different organized trades, which resulted in the establishment five months later of the "National Association for the Protection of Labor," the expressed purpose of which was to resist reductions, but not to strike for advance.

About the time of the forming of this association the United Trades Cooperative Journal (a weekly paper devoted to the cause of labor) was launched in London, but was presently brought to an abrupt end by the commissioner of stamps, who insisted upon each copy bearing a four-penny stamp. In January, 1831, Francis Place (the toilers' friend) established a paper called the "Voice of the People," said later to have 30,000 circulation.

After two years' existence we hear no more of this national association, but a builders' union sprang up composed of seven distinct building trades, all separate, yet with centralized authority for defensive and aggressive purposes. This union sent strong demands for shorter hours and more pay to the employers, who got together and decided to refuse the demands. They publicly declared that henceforth no man need apply for work unless he was prepared to sign a formal renunciation of the trades union and all its works. In the very heat of the battle the annual convention of delegates was held at Manchester, lasting six days, at which it was decided to erect a central office building at Birmingham, to be known as "Builders' Guild hall." After a fair start the building was abandoned. The strike failed, as did also two other great strikes at Liverpool and Manchester, and many of the local unions were broken up, causing the disruption of the General Builders' union.

In 1833 Doherty began the agitation for an eight-hour workday, and new unions began to form with some rapidity, until in 1834 Robert Owen organized the "Grand National Consolidated Trade union," the real forerunner of the trades union of to-day.

This, then, is in brief the history of the beginning of trades unionism throughout the world, and England is its birthplace.

To-day the British Trades Union congress, organized in 1868, and which corresponds in America to the American Federation of Labor, is the national head or federation of all the unions of the British Isles. Though not so large as the American Federation of Labor, it is a gigantic organization embracing 1,665,000 trades unionists. At the last convention, held at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, September 4th to 9th, 1911, there were 521 delegates, and the reports of the secretary showed an increase in membership of 14,418 during the previous year. Daniel J. Tobin and William McFarlane were fraternal delegates to that convention from the American Federation of Labor. The British Trades Union league is the federation of the women's unions and has affiliated about 280,000 women trades unionists.

IN OTHER COUNTRIES

The history of the movement in other European countries is very similar to that of England. All went through a period of severe oppression. But today Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and even Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania and others have their national federation, embracing almost the entire labor forces in their respective countries.

INTERNATIONAL TRADES UNIONS

Then came a closer relationship of the toilers of the entire world, and a convention of national trades federations was formed. Beginning August 10th, 1911, the seventh biennial international conference of representatives of national trades union centers was held at Budapest, Hungary. Twenty-seven delegates, representing eighteen nations, and two official interpreters (both union men, each of whom spoke three languages) composed the convention. Herr S. Jaszai of Hungary was chairman and J. Sassenback, representing Germany, was secretary. James Duncan, national secretary of the Granite Cutters of America and first vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, represented North America at the conference. The preceding conference (1909) was held at Paris, and an invitation has been extended to hold the 1915 meeting at San Francisco, when the Panama exposition will be on in that city.

TRADES UNIONS IN AMERICA

The birth of trades unionism in America occurred in the year 1803, when we find the New York Society of Journeymen Shipwrights was incorporated on April 3rd. The house carpenters of New York city soon followed, as did also a society of journeymen tailors, both of which were organized and incorporated in the year 1806. The aims of these unions at this early date were the shortening of the daily labor time and an increase in wages.

As time drew on the workingmen in other trades began to realize the benefits of organization, and many new unions were formed, not only in New York city, but in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and several others of the large cities of America. Then came the idea of a union of unions—the first form of federation in the United States—and in August, 1833, a "general trades union" was formed in New York, binding together in one federation all the local unions of the city. On December 2nd, 1833, occurred what had been advertised in one of the daily papers of New York as a procession of the "general trades union," taking part in which were the following local unions: Typographical union, Journeymen House Carpenters, Bookbinders, Leather Dressers, Coopers, Carvers and Gilders, Bakers, Cabinetmakers, Cordwainers, Tailors, Silk Hatters, Stonecutters, Tin Plate and Sheet Iron Workers, Typefounders, Hat Finishers, Willow Basket Makers, Chair Makers and Gilders, Sail Makers and Block and Pump Makers. The parade was an imposing one, with Robert Townsend, Jr., as grand marshal, following which an address was delivered by Ely Moore, who afterwards (during Jackson's administration) became the first labor representative in congress.

January 8, 1834, the General Trades union of Boston was formed, and about the same time a similar organization was instituted in Baltimore. Aside from a few of these large cities, nothing was done in the way of federation until about the close of the civil war.

The earliest federation of any form embracing larger districts than the city was the New England association of farmers, mechanics and laborers, whose first meeting was held in Boston, in 1832, though no records of this meeting are found. Subsequent meetings were held in 1833 and 1834, but after that date we lose all trace of the association. Eleven years later, however, another organization was formed in New England called the New England Workingmen's association. This was not a federation, but a larger association of the individual mechanics and working men of the New England states. Aside from its formation, little was ever heard from it. In the same year (1845) the first national industrial congress was held in New York, with representatives from the unions of all the large cities of the east. Annual meetings were held for the next four or five years, after which it drops entirely out of existence.

From about 1850 to the close of the civil war was a period of autonomous trade organizations on a national basis, while little energy was spent devising or perfecting federations of any kind. The International Typographical union was organized in 1850, the National Trade Association of Hat Finishers, in 1854, the Iron Molders Union of North America, in 1859, the machinists, blacksmiths, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and scores of others from 1860 to '66.

In 1866 the central unions or trades assemblies of New York and Baltimore issued a call for a national labor congress, and on August 20, 1866, 100 delegates representing 61 labor organizations, met in Baltimore. These delegates came from international, national and local unions and city central bodies throughout the country. Political, industrial and social questions of every hue were brought forth and discussed. The "National Labor union" was formed as the result of this meeting and Chicago was selected as the place of holding the session the following year, at which time more than 200 delegates were in attendance. In 1868 two conventions were held, one in May, at Pittsburgh, and the other in September, at New York. This latter meeting was called principally to discuss the general movement for an 8-hour day. Nothing of special importance transpired at the conventions of 1869, '70 and '71, which met at Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia. At the convention of 1872, held in Columbus, the "National Labor union" felt called upon to enter politics and nominated David Davis, of Illinois, for president of the United States. This action, however, proved the undoing of the National union, for the locals, one by one, withdrew, and the "National Labor union" died out.

Trades unions in 1873, like everything else that depended upon industrial activity for support, went to the wall in the financial panic, and wages fell rapidly. An effort to revive the National Labor union at a meeting at Rochester, New York, April 4, 1874, showed no life, and another convention at Tyrone, Pennsylvania, in 1875, met a like fate.

In 1878, however, there began a healthy growth of local unions, central bodies and even national organizations. In 1881 a call was published emanating from the central and western states for a convention, which was held at Pittsburgh about the middle of November of that year. This convention was important as laying the foundation of the American Federation of Labor, and was organized with John Jarrett, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, as chairman. One hundred and seven delegates were in attendance and an organization was formed to be known as the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada. Samuel Gompers, now president of the A. F. of L., was a member of the first congressional committee; and at the second convention, held at Cleveland, Ohio, in November, 1882, Mr. Gompers was chosen as president of the federation, which position he has retained ever since. The third meeting was held in New York, the fourth in Chicago, the fifth in Washington. At this fifth session, the tactics of the Knights of Labor, a secret society, organized in 1869, at Philadelphia, by a local union of clothing cutters, was severely criticised and condemned. At the next session, held in November, 1886, the title of American Federation of Labor was adopted and from which point the organization dates the beginning of an aggressive, firm, onward march until today its membership consists of 115 national and international unions, having jurisdiction over approximately 28,000 local unions, 493 local unions having no national heads, 631 city central bodies, 187 federal labor unions, and 38 state federations; representing in all an affiliated membership, September 1, 1911, of 1,768,614 trades unionists; gaining 199,723 over the previous year. The four great railroad brotherhoods, the bricklayers and several other trades organizations are not affiliated with the A. F. of L., hence the 1,768,614 members represent but a part of the organized labor movement of America.

The officers of the American Federation of Labor consist of a president, eight vice-presidents, a secretary and a treasurer; all of whom constitute the executive council, empowered to transact official business when the convention is not in session. Samuel Gompers, a cigarmaker, is president; Frank Morrison, a member of Chicago Typographical union, is secretary; and John B. Lennon, a tailor of Bloomington, Illinois, is treasurer. Last year the receipts from all sources were $182,914.96, and the expenditures $175,524.08. The balance in the treasury, September 30, 1911, was $189,579.56.

The A. F. of L. is divided into departments embracing the building trades department, the metal trades department, the label trades department, and the railroad employes' department; each having a secretary to look after the affairs of his respective department.

As an idea of the extent of the use of the label, 48,234,136 garment workers' labels were used during the year ending September 30, 1911, while the bakery and confectionery workers used 548,210,590 labels during the same period and the cigarmakers, 27,795,900.

The inception and marvellous growth of the railroad brotherhoods above referred to—the engineers, firemen, trainmen and conductors—forms an interesting part of the world's labor history.

In 1831 the first steam locomotive tested in the United States was given a tryout on a short road between Albany and Schenectady, in the state of New York, and in 1906, the first great electric high speed passenger engine was tested on almost the same historic ground.

Only a little more than thirty years after the first test, with the country well honeycombed with railroad lines, the few engineers who daily gathered about the little old dingy roundhouse at Marshall, Michigan, instituted a movement from which resulted the first organization of railway employes in America. W. D. Robinson was the leading spirit in the agitation for some sort of banding together for mutual benefit. Others agreed that they should get together somewhere and organize. Invitations were therefore extended a number of engineers on other roads and a meeting was held at Detroit, Michigan, May 8, 1863, at which an order was founded known as the "Brotherhood of the Footboard." Mr. Robinson acted as chairman. He formulated the obligation and read it to the twelve engineers who had responded to the call, as they stood in a circle with joined hands. The records of this meeting contain the following:

"It was motioned and carried that George Adams and E. F. Elwell see about getting hall and furniture for same.

"It was motioned and carried that the $10.00 should be paid back to Mr. Robinson and Mr. Shephard which was their initiation fee, and the same has been done.

"The following members were initiated: Geo. Adams, pd. $5.00; Fred Smith, pd. $5.00; E. F. Elwell, pd. $5.00; Mat McCormack, pd. $5.00; Edward Garrison, pd. $5.00; A. Mott, pd. $5.00; Samuel Hall, pd. $5.00; Fred Swart, pd. $5.00; Fred H. Johnson, pd. $5.00."

This was the starting of what today is Division No. 1, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. A few days later Division No. 2, Brotherhood of the Footboard, was formed at Marshall, Michigan, and the next month the engineers at Galesburg founded a brotherhood in this city.

The name Brotherhood of the Footboard was changed to Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in 1865. W. D. Robinson was the first grand chief engineer.

On the 14th of May, 1910, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers dedicated a magnificent, up-to-date, absolutely fireproof office and headquarters building in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. This building, erected and owned by the brotherhood, contains over 500 offices, with 132,000 square feet of floor space, and has on the ground floor an auditorium seating about 1,400 people. It is 15 stories high, built of structural steel with outside walls of white stone and white glazed tile, and stands at the corner of Ontario and St. Clair streets, a magnificent monument to the rapid developments and achievements of organized labor.

Five years after the organization of the first Brotherhood of the Footboard, the conductors employed on the Amboy division of the Illinois Central and the Chicago division of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad met at Amboy, Illinois, and formed an order known as the Conductors union. In 1878, the present name—Order of Railway Conductors—was adopted.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen was organized in 1874 at Port Jarvis, New York, and from this has grown the present continent-wide and powerful organization of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

The Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, now numbering many thousands, is the youngest of the train-service brotherhoods and was organized at Oneonta, New York, September 23rd, 1883.

The Switchmen's International union, the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, the Order of Railroad Station Agents, the Order of Railway Clerks and other kindred organizations have followed.

From a few miles of wooden track in 1830 the railroad business has grown so rapidly that to-day there are more than 325,000 miles of track in the United States and about 1,500,000 persons engaged in the industry, the greater portion of whom are members of the various brotherhoods.

LABOR UNIONS OF KNOX COUNTY

Galesburg Lodge No. 62, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, has the distinction to-day of being the oldest labor organization in Knox county. Its charter, now hanging on the east wall of the Trades Assembly hall, bears the date January 17th, 1865, though its history dates back almost two years prior to that time.

About the middle of June, 1863, ten or a dozen of the engineers running out of Galesburg, imbued with the idea that "in union there is strength" and inspired by the institution of the first railroad brotherhood in America only a month previous at Detroit, met in a little back room over where is now Burt's drug store and formed a local organization known as the "Brotherhood of the Footboard." And Stephen A. Randall of 556 South Broad street is the only surviving charter member of that little band of devoted men who, in this county, first awoke to the realization of the need of workingmen banding themselves together for protection and advancement.

Knowing full well that capital was unalterably opposed to combinations of labor, the utmost secrecy was maintained as to membership in the new society, for knowledge of its existence had spread to the company to whom it was a "thorn in the flesh." The railroad officials determined to nip the new union in its infancy and used every tactic to find out just who were members. Every engineer found to belong, or thought to belong, was summarily discharged. Mr. Randall was one of the men instrumental in forming the organization and one also who was soon let out of the company's employment. Those who were discharged left the city and sought work elsewhere, only to learn that they were blacklisted, and securing a run on other roads was a difficult proposition. Mr. Randall returned to Galesburg, however, and was one of the men who, in January, 1865, transformed the "Brotherhood of the Footboard" into Galesburg Division No. 62, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Notwithstanding the opposition of the company, the men were determined that they should not be deprived of their rights to organize, and soon the organization grew so strong that the company began to realize the futility of further antagonism and ceased its hostility. Many of the discharged engineers were reinstated to their former runs, among whom was Mr. Randall, who remained in the engine service of the Burlington, the Wabash and one or two other roads, until, as he puts it, "the trains were made so long that the engineer could not hear the shouts of the conductor from the way-car," when he retired from the service and has since devoted himself to caring for a small farm he succeeded in acquiring, though he still maintains his membership in the brotherhood, and was last year given an honorary membership by the grand lodge, a thing held by few members of the order.

Mr. Randall is authority for the statement that Galesburg's Brotherhood of the Footboard was the fourth railroad brotherhood to be formed in America, and though given No. 62, many lodges have lower numbers which were since formed, such as Los Angeles No. 5, Indianapolis No. 11, Springfield No. 23, Aurora No. 32, etc. With a twinkle in his eye, he relates that Galesburg, though the fourth to form, was given No. 62 to make the railroads believe there were many locals in existence and that the order was exceedingly strong.

Galesburg now has two lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the second, No. 644, being instituted February 29th, 1904, and is the largest brotherhood in the United States on any one railroad division.

Singular as it may seem, though the engineers had sown the seed of unionism in this county in 1863, no further efforts were made to formulate other organizations for almost twenty years. The records at headquarters in Peoria of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen show that Progress Lodge No. 105, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, was organized at Galesburg March 15th, 1882, with twenty-two charter members. Also that the lodge was removed to Chillicothe, Illinois, in September, 1899 (after the Burlington strike), and finally surrendered its charter on June 10th, 1902. However, the firemen soon realized that this was too big a division point to be without an organization, and Lodge No. 477, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, was instituted here May 1st, 1904. The name was changed to Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen March 1st, 1909.

The cigarmakers were the third to take the step towards forming a union, and on March 22, 1883, a charter, signed by Adolph Strausser, as international president, was granted to Cigarmakers' Local Union No. 200 of Galesburg, Illinois. The first officers were: Val Weiss, president; Ed Tomlins, vice-president; J. A. Williams, recording and corresponding secretary; C. Geist, financial secretary, and D. Sherlock, doorkeeper. None of its charter members now reside here, and little is known of the early formation of this, the first trades organization to begin its existence in this vicinity.

Galesburg Division No. 83, Order of Railway Conductors, was next in line and was formed July 23rd, 1883. The following years, in September, Galesburg Lodge No. 24, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, first saw the light of day. Both of these railroad organizations met with some opposition on the part of the company at first, but later were well received, and to-day are flourishing brotherhoods.

Seven years later there developed a spirit of organization among the tradesmen of the city, and Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners No. 360 was organized December 22, 1890, with Oscar Renier, first chairman; Cal Gray, secretary, and J. R. Rogers, treasurer. The initial meeting was held in a small hall on the south side of the public square. Typographical Union No. 288 soon followed with a meeting in the old Brotherhood Steam Print office on South Cherry street, where the Plaindealer now operates, and was granted a charter February 22nd, 1891. A number of tailors met in what was then Fletcher's tailor shop on the second floor over where is now the People's Trust and Savings bank, and organized Journeymen Tailors' Union No. 169 on March 21st, 1891. During the winter some of the wives and daughters of the railroad trainmen began the agitation for a women's auxiliary to the trainmen, which resulted in the formation on January 19th, 1891, of Sincerity Lodge No. 6, L. A. to B. of R. T.

As summer approached these new trades organizations began to discuss the advisability of celebrating Labor Day—the first Monday in September being designated as a legal holiday in many of the states of the nation by this time. The carpenters and the tailors favored the holding of a celebration, while the other unions and brotherhoods did not. Celebrating Labor Day at this early date was rather a difficult undertaking. Trades organizations were comparatively a new thing and lacked numbers. Many of the citizens also looked upon them as sort of anarchistic bodies designed to destroy rather than to build up industry. Few cared to encourage them, and the securing of speakers for such an occasion was no easy task. However, the carpenters and tailors determined to pull off a celebration and gained the consent of Eugene W. Welch and Congressman George W. Prince to deliver addresses.

On September the 7th, 1891, then, the first Labor Day celebration was held in Knox county. At 9:00 o'clock in the morning the Galesburg Marine band, dressed for the first time in their new uniforms, began playing in front of the square facing Main street. By 10:00 o'clock the parade was formed on Main street, headed by Lewis Thompson, of the carpenters, as chief marshal, with John Forsythe of the tailors and Chris Geisler of the carpenters as assistant marshals. The standard bearer for the tailors was C. G. Lind, while Ed. Bushong bore the banner for the carpenters. In line were 40 tailors and 58 carpenters, besides a few scattering members from the cigarmakers, printers and perhaps one or two other organizations. Following the band came the speakers' carriage —a handsome new barouche, drawn by J. H. Williamson's matched team of greys, with "Hank" himself handling the lines. Seated with the speakers were Chas. Hasselleaf, president of the carpenters, and Albert Johanson, president of the tailors. The profession passed around the square and east on Main street across the "Q" tracks to Pearl street, where street cars were waiting and all went out to Highland Park, where the festivities were to be held. An admission to the park of ten cents was charged to help defray expenses.

After a stirring selection by the band, Mr. Hasselleaf, who acted as chairman, introduced Hon. Geo. W. Prince, who delivered a splendid address to the great crowd which had gathered. He was followed by Eugene W. Welch, who, in a short but stirring speech, made a deep impression with the union men on the ground. B. F. Holcomb and F. A. Freer were also called to the stand and made short speeches. A basket dinner followed, which was greatly enjoyed. Then the afternoon was devoted to games and sports of various kinds. Dancing proved a special feature of both afternoon and evening with Gaines' orchestra furnishing the music.

The success of the first Labor Day celebration and the showing made by the carpenters and tailors inspired other tradesmen and resulted in the organization, on December 14, 1891, of Bricklayers and Masons' Union No. 12, and of Painters and Decorators' Union No. 29, on December 28th, of the same year.

In Galesburg, as it had been elsewhere, when a sufficient number of trades were organized, the tendency was to associate all into one central body composed of delegates from each of the unions. In the room known as Spring's hall, 104 Main street, delegates from the various unions of the city met, on July 8, 1892, and formed the Galesburg Trades and Labor assembly. J. Forsythe of the tailors' union called the meeting to order. A. G. Mathieson, George Gallarno and Daniel Nolan were chosen as a committee on credentials and they reported the following delegates present and entitled to a voice in the proceedings:

Cigarmakers, No. 200—A. M. Everly, W. L. Woods, F. J. Weiss.

Painters, No. 29—J. A. Peterson, H. W. Lohmar, C. M. Peterman.

Tailors, No. 169—Daniel Nolan, J. Forsythe, Edward Ayten.

Carpenters, No. 360—C. H. Geisler, J. R. Rogers, N. P. Swanson.

Printers, No. 288—Geo. Gallarno, H. C. Smalley, A. G. Matheson.

Bricklayers, No. 12—A. W. Truedson, W. E. Harry, W. Davis.

The election of its first officers resulted as follows: President, A. M. Everly; vice-president, J. Forsythe; recording and corresponding secretary, George Gallarno; financial secretary, W. E. Harry; treasurer, Daniel Nolan; sergeant-at arms, J. R. Rogers; trustees, C. H. Geisler, H. W. Lohmar and A. W. Truedson.

Standing committees were appointed on organization, legislation, grievances, labels and printing.

The four principal officers of the assembly since its birth are shown by the annexed table:

OFFICERS OF GALESBURG TRADES ASSEMBLY SINCE ORGANIZATION

1892-93, A. M. Everly, Cigarmakers, President; Geo. Gallarna, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; W. E. Harry, Bricklayers, Financial Secretary.

1893-94, L. N. Thompson, Carpenters, President; L. R. Maddox, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; W. E. Harry, Bricklayers, Financial Secretary.

1894-95, Adolph Fink, Printers, J. H. Donnelly, Cigarmakers, Presidents; L. R. Maddox, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; W. E. Harry, Bricklayers, Financial Secretary.

1895-96, L. N. Thompson, Carpenters, President; W. E. Cleveland, Broommakers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; A. Gustafson, Painters, Financial Secretary.

1896-97. J. A. Smith, Printers, W. A. Marshall, Printers, Presidents; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; A. Gustafson, Painters, Financial Secretary.

1897-98, W. A. Marshall, Printers, President; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; C. H. Eckhart, Printers, Financial Secretary.

1898-99. H. Holborn, Bricklayers, President; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; D. Nolan, Tailors, Treasurer; A. Gustafson, Painters, Financial Secretary.

1899-1900, J. C. Tate, Carpenters, President; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; Earle Thompson, Printers, Treasurer; A. Gustafson, Painters, Financial Secretary.

1900-01, J. C. Tate, Carpenters, President; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; Geo. Sanderson, Clerks, Treasurer; J. H. McKamy, Clerks, Financial Secretary.

1901-02, J. C. Tate, Carpenters, President; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; W. O. Thompson, Cigarmakers, Treasurer; J. H. McKamy, Clerks, Financial Secretary.

1902-03, W. R. Boyer, Broommakers, W. O. Thompson, Cigarmakers, Presidents; E. A. Tate, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; W. O. Thompson, Cigarmakers, Treasurer; H. E. Kent, Cigarmakers, Financial Secretary.

1903-04, E. P. Nelson, Clerks, President; Mrs. N. D. Parker, Label League, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. J. Hughes, Bricklayers, Treasurer; J. C. Sjodin, Painters, Financial Secretary.

1904-05, E. P. Nelson, Clerks, J. C. Sjodin, Painters, Presidents; E. J. Corbin, Painters, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; L. A. Swanson, Broommakers, Treasurer; F. W. Kinney, Cigarmakers, Financial Secretary.

1905-06, J. C. Sjodin, Painters, President; E. J. Corbin, Painters, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. A. Tate, Printers, Treasurer; W. H. McKeighan, Printers, Financial Secretary.

1906-07, J. C. Sjodin, Painters, W. F. Kinney, Cigarmakers, W. A. Marshall, Printers, Presidents; C. F. Calson, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. A. Tate, Printers, Treasurer; J. Hultgren, Broommakers, Financial Secretary.

1907-08, W. H. Lohmar, Painters, President; C. F. Calson, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. A. Tate, Printers, Treasurer; Geo. Palmer, Printers, Financial Secretary.

1908-09, F. L. Morrill, Cigarmakers, C. F. Calson, Printers, Presidents; E. J. Corbin, Painters, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. A. Tate, Printers, Treasurer; Geo. Palmer, Printers, Financial Secretary.

1909-10, E. J. Corbin, Painters, President; Geo. Palmer, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; E. A. Tate, Printers, Treasurer; Henry Isaacson, Clerks, Financial Secretary.

1910-11, E. A. Tate, Printers, President; Geo. Palmer, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; J. W. Ramp, Clerks, Treasurer; C. S. Bartlett, Clerks, Financial Secretary.

1911-12, Geo. Palmer, Printers, President; R. S. Barnes, Printers, Recording and Corresponding Secretary; J. W. Ramp, Clerks, Treasurer; C. S. Bartlett, Clerks, Financial Secretary.

One of the first actions of the assembly was to pass resolutions at its initial meeting offering sympathy, support and aid to the miners at Homestead, Pennsylvania. At this meeting it was also decided to celebrate Labor Day under the auspices of the trades assembly. At the second meeting, July 20, 1892, a committee consisting of J. Forsythe, C. H. Geisler, A. G. Matheson, W. E. Harry, C. M. Peterman and A. M. Everly was appointed to make arrangements. The committee met the following Sunday and started plans which resulted in Galesburg's first celebration of Labor Day under the auspices of the Galesburg Trades and Labor assembly the first Monday in September, 1892. A splendid parade was held on the principal streets of the city in the forenoon with two bands and many floats. The afternoon exercises were held at Highland Park, where nearly 6,000 people assembled. Mayor Forrest F. Cooke and Hon. S. H. Bashear were the speakers. Galesburg trades unions have participated in Labor Day celebrations as follows:

LABOR DAY CELEBRATIONS PARTICIPATED IN BY LOCAL UNIONS

1891—Highland Park. L. N. Thompson, Marshal. Speakers: Hon. G. W. Prince and E. W. Welch. Chairman, Charles Hasselleaf.

1892—Highland Park. Speakers: Mayor F. F. Cooke and Hon. S. H. Bashear. Chairman, J. Forsythe.

1893—Lake George. Speakers: Mayor Cooke, W. F. Bailey and John Hammerstrom. Chairman, O. N. Marshall.

1894—Went to Quincy (Baldwin Park).

1895—Lake George. J. H. Donnelly, Marshal. Speakers: Father L. S. Coffin, Godfrey Haas and Rev. J. H. Rudy, Quincy. Chairman, G. C. Wright.

1896—Lake George (Kewanee here). A. Gustafson, Marshal. Speakers: Mayor Tunnicliff and Bishop Fallows. (W. J. Bryan spoke from train at Mulberry street in the evening.) Chairman, J. H. Donnelly.

1897—Lake George. C. C. Mattocks, Marshal. Speakers: Mayor Cooke, Cong. Prince, Rev. Stead, M. J. Daugherty and C. K. Ladd of Kewanee. Chairman, W. A. Marshall.

1898—Went to Kewanee. (2,285 tickets sold here.) Speakers: Cong. Prince and A. J. Boutelle.

1899—Galesburg Race track. Speakers: Hon. L. Y. Sherman and Thos. I. Kidd. Chairman, J. C. Tate.

1900—Went to Canton. Speaker: Eugene V. Debs.

1901—Court House Park. (Kewanee, Canton and Farmington here.) Speakers: Bishop Spalding, W. A. Alton, Peoria, and George Thompson, Chicago. Chairman, J. C. Tate.

1902—Went to Kewanee.

1903—Went to Peoria by way of P. T. Co. and I. C. Ry. Speaker: John B. Lenon.

1904—Maley's Grove. Speakers: W. T. Wallace and John C. Sjodin. Chairman, E. P. Nelson.

1905—Highland Park. E. A. Tate, Marshal. Speakers: Clarence Darrow, S. G. Cunningham, Mayor Sanborn and Ex-Mayor Shumway. Chairman, J. C. Sjodin.

1906—Highland Park (Kewanee and Canton). W. L. Jordan, Marshal. Speakers: Mayor Shumway and J. H. Dehner. Chairman, J. C. Sjodin.

1907—Went to Burlington, Iowa.

1908—Parker Amusement Co. on Frost lot.

1909—No celebration here; some went to Rock Island, some to Peoria.

1910—Excursion on the new Rock Island Southern Traction line to Rock Island.

1911—Highland Park. - Speaker: P. J. Flannery, Chicago.

The following condensed list of Knox county's labor unions, with dates of organization, will prove of value to some students of labor history:

Brotherhood of Footboard, 1863, changed to Division 62, B. of L. E., January 17, 1865; B. of L. F. March 15, 1882, reorganized May 1, 1904, changed to B. of L. F. & E. March 1, 1909; Cigarmakers, March 22, 1883; O. R. C., July 23, 1883; B. of R. T., September, 1884; Carpenters, December 22, 1890; L. A. to B. of R. T. No. 6, January 19, 1891; Typographical, February 22, 1891; Tailors, March 21, 1891; Bricklayers, December 14, 1891; Painters, December 28, 1891; Trades Assembly, July 8, 1892; Barbers, November, 1892, reorganized May 12, 1898, again January 1, 1902; Building Laborers, December 10, 1892; Stonecutters, April 4, 1893, reorganized 1905; Plumbers, April 18, 1893; Broommakers, August 14, 1895; Federal Labor union, September 18, 1896; Retail Clerks, September 30, 1897, reorganized May 15, 1906; Plasterers, February 5, 1898; Bakers, June 17, 1899; Iron Molders, August 14, 1899; Laundry Workers, August 29, 1899; Ladies' Label league, November 13, 1900; Teamsters, December 8, 1900; Broom Corn Sorters, Sizers and Helpers, January 19, 1901; Hod Carriers, January 29, 1901; Electrical Workers, May 9, 1901; Horseshoers, May 14, 1901; Sheet Metal Workers, August 5, 1901, reorganized May 7, 1903; Women's Trades Union league, December 14, 1901; Musicians, January 14, 1902; Brickmakers, March 15, 1902, reorganized March 14, 1910; Bartenders, July 28, 1902; Ice Handlers, August 5, 1902; Machinists, November 26, 1902; Pressmen, May 23, 1903; Street Car Men, September 22, 1903, reorganized October 22, 1908; B. of L. E., Division 644, February 29, 1904; L. A. to B. of L. E., February 14, 1905; News Boys, March 17, 1906; T. M. A., December 29, 1906; L. S. to B. of L. F. & E., 1909; Stage Employees, July 13, 1909; L. A. to B. of R. T. No. 425, July 24, 1909; Cement Workers, September 18, 1909; Freight Handlers, February 28, 1910; Steam Shovel and Dredge Men, April, 1910; Stationery Firemen, May 5, 1910; Draymen, October 1, 1910; Garment Workers, August 7, 1911; the Lathers, Blacksmiths, Switchmen, Bro. Ry. Clerks, Bro. Ry. Carmen, dates not learned.

After organizing on July 8, 1892, the Trades assembly met in Spring's hall, 104 Main street, nearly two years, when it removed to a hall at the corner of Prairie and Simmons streets, over Wright's laundry, now Ferris feed store. In 1895 the third floor of the Peter Nelson block, corner Main and Seminary, was rented and the assembly met there until October 21, 1897, when it occupied a hall in the Ferris building at 8 Main street. On December 16, 1898, the assembly rented the third floor of the new Jacobi Bros. & Mack building, where fine quarters were established and occupied until March 10, 1904, when the central body moved to the Buckley building, 12 Main street. Finding more room necessary, a door was cut through the wall separating the Buckley building from the Lescher building and both halls were occupied. On September 22, 1905, the second floor of the Buckley building was also leased and fitted up and some of the unions met there. On October 3, 1898, the assembly bought the lease of the Knights of Pythias in the O'Connor building, at 61 South Cherry street, and removed to that hall, remaining there until May, 1910, when it leased the entire fifth floor of the Bank of Galesburg building, with elevator service at the Kellogg street entrance, and has met there since. Twenty-one unions are now sub-renting of the Trades assembly, while the others meet in various other halls of the city.

In the spring of 1901 the assembly voted to place a business agent in the field to keep in close touch with industrial conditions in the city, report unfair work, act as arbitrator in disputes and secure the best conditions possible for the toilers. Accordingly on April 11 H. W. Lohmar was elected to act in that capacity and served for one year. On May 22, 1902, G. A. Tilton was elected and served until June 11, 1903, when he resigned and the office was left vacant for a year. On July 27, 1904, Mr. Tilton was again selected to act as business agent, and did so until November. The assembly dispensed with a business agent then until May 21, 1908, when C. M. Peterman was elected, but resigned on August 1. He was succeeded by Ed Wood, who filled the office for six months. On April 8, 1909, E. K. Brasel was made business agent and served until the fall of 1910, since which time the assembly has done without such officer. The business agent devoted his entire time to the interests of the unions and the assembly and was paid a salary raised by a special per capita tax upon all bodies affiliated with the Trades assembly. His was a disagreeable job at best, always sought when trouble arose, frequently sent to inform employers that unfair conditions must cease or trouble would begin. Threatened, abused, despised by the employer, who would take advantage of labor, the business agent, nevertheless, accomplished much good in his daily rounds, straightened out many a knotty situation, secured shorter hours and better pay for the toilers of the city.

Much of the success of organized labor in a community depends upon the facilities for intelligently informing, not only the entire membership of all organizations, but the public at large, upon the objects and aims of labor unions, and presenting a fair statement of the issues in any controversy. To this end Galesburg and the surrounding territory has been exceptionally fortunate in having a newspaper published weekly in the interest of the toilers, which has borne the highest respect of the citizens generally.

The Galesburg Labor News was founded by Jacob Smith in November, 1895, and, although the voyage of seventeen years has been extremely rough at times the little ship has sailed steadily onward bearing its messages of cheer and encouragement, spreading the doctrines of trades unionism, never missing an issue. Two years previous Charles F. Calson had launched "The Unionist," a most creditable advocate of trades unionism, which appeared in May, 1893, but, owing to the financial distresses which invaded the country during that year, was soon forced to suspend publication.

On November 7, 1896, Henry C. Smalley acquired a half interest in the Galesburg Labor News, and the sheet was enlarged and its usefulness extended through the new blood instilled and a greatly increased circulation. January 16, 1897, the paper was removed from the "Gazette" office—the scene of its birth—to the "Plaindealer" printing office. On September 4 of that year Mr. Smalley assumed full control of the paper by purchasing the interest of Mr. Smith and for six years labored unceasingly to give his readers a reliable, fair and conscientious publication devoted to the cause of labor. His untimely death on October 29, 1903, brought sorrow to a multitude of admirers both in and out the ranks of trades unionism. He was a member of the city council, being an alderman from the first ward, and was known for his honesty of purpose, his clear understanding of the needs of a growing city and his conscientious efforts to give it his best endeavors. On November 1 five hundred union men marched with bowed heads to pay tribute to a departed leader. The services were held at the Baptist church conducted by Rev. J. Y. Aitchison. John C. Stevens also spoke.

Upon the death of Mr. Smalley, his brother, S. Warren Smalley, took control of the Labor News and, with J. L. Wilcox as editor, continued to issue the paper until his death, September 4, 1904, the day before Labor Day. Then it was that a stock company was formed and the purchase of the paper made from the heirs. The stock of this company was subscribed entirely by the unions of Galesburg, Canton and Monmouth, and the paper is still owned and published by the unions. No individuals own any of the stock. The first officers of the board of directors were C. T. Salisbury, president; S. O. Means, of Monmouth, vice-president; William A. Marshall, secretary, and C. F. Keeling, treasurer. J. L. Wilcox was chosen as editor, but resigned on April 1, 1905. E. A. Tate, then of Chicago, was selected as editor and manager of the paper and got out his first issue on April 28, 1905.

The paper was now being issued from the press of the Evening Mail. After six months' publication in this office, Mr. Tate presented the company a plan to purchase an outfit of its own, and on November 1, 1905, a plant was installed at 143 South Cherry street, which has since been paid for out of the earnings of the company. Mr. Tate resigned on December 1, 1910, to accept the position of deputy county treasurer, and George H. C. Palmer was reelected as editor and manager, which position he has since filled with credit to the company.

The labor union of to-day is indeed a complex institution. It is made up of a great variety of minds, each possessing ideas of perhaps widely different character, yet so blended into the one real purpose of uplifting mankind as to make it a most compact organization, exceedingly democratic in its principle of abiding by the will of the majority. It thrives through the axiom that "the welfare of one is the concern of all." No community of any industrial importance could prosper well without it. The idea of freedom of contract by the individual in a community where no unions exist means the competition of the laborers to secure a job resulting in the lowest standard of wages, long hours of toil, the inability of the parents to properly educate the oncoming generation, all of which in turn means very little money to be spent in the regular channels of trade and which determines the prosperity of the community. If the workmen get good pay the business man will enjoy a good trade; if poorly paid, the business interests will suffer and prosperity lurk in the distance.

Frequently we see conflict between capital and labor. Neither will agree to the appeals of the other. Each hurls abuse at the other and threatens dire results. Labor boycotts and capital blacklists. Almost invariably it is a misunderstanding of the absolute needs of the one or the other. A conservative conference by both parties would doubtless reveal a means of conciliatory methods beneficial to all.

No organization of capital ever destroyed a combination of labor that did not, or will not, again come forth stronger and more determined than ever. Both are essential to the needs of society as composed to-day, and both are, or ought to be, of vast benefit to society. Carefully compare the intelligence, the morality, the social and financial standing of a community thoroughly unionized with one where no organizations exist and you will readily discern the superiority of the organized community.

The spirit of fraternity existing in all unions is especially helpful to a community. Many a sick or decrepit brother has been kept from want through acts of kindness on the part of fellow-unionists. Families of deceased members have been provided with means to tide them over perils that confronted them. Sanitariums, hospitals and homes have been established to care for the aged and disabled members in their declining years. The railroad brotherhoods have a home for disabled railroad men at Highland Park, Illinois, valued at a quarter of a million dollars, where hundreds of the so-called "broken rails" have been happily cared for. Beneath the shadow of Pike's Peak at Colorado Springs the printers have established a home where consumptive and otherwise disabled printers are enjoying the hospitality of their more fortunate brothers, who take great pride in providing this beautiful home for the wornout typesetters, many of whom are restored to health and returned to their families cured of the dread disease. Six hundred thousand dollars has been spent in the purchase of lands, erection of buildings, tents, annexes and cottages. The pressmen have recently established a home in the beautiful hills of Kentucky. These homes are maintained through setting aside a small fraction of the annual dues paid by each member, little felt by him as he contributes his share to the maintenance of an organization which pays him a hundred per cent dividend in the advanced wage and improved working condition.

Occasionally a trades unionist oversteps the bounds of propriety and commits deeds which reflect discredit upon the organization. These are to be deplored and should not be charged up to the unions, none of which approves any act of violence or lawlessness. The time is fast coming when trades unionism will be better understood and commended rather than condemned.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS

MISCELLANEOUS

Water transportation in the early days was considered of much more importance to the people than it is today. Then there seemed to be no question about the advisability of using the streams of the state for that purpose and to assist and further make available the principle of transportation by water, various canals were constructed and it seems that provision by the state was made for such counties as had no canals or railroads to aid in the transportation problem. In illustration of this point, we find the following entry in the county commissioner's record of March 12, 1838.

Ordered: That the auditor of public accounts of the state of Illinois, be and he is hereby authorized and requested to issue his warrant on the treasurer of said state, in favor of H. J. Runkle or his order, for the amount due Knox county in the appropriation to the different counties through which no railroad or canal is provided to be made at the expense of the state of Illinois, as provided by the eighteenth section of "an act to establish and maintain a general system of internal improvements," approved February 27, 1837, and that the clerks issue a certified copy of the order to the said H. J. Runkle.

This order was made to obtain what was coming to Knox county by virtue of that crazy policy of internal improvements which was inaugurated in the state of Illinois by the act referred to in the order and which practically annihilated public and private credit in the state of Illinois and of the whole country and gave us the most terrific financial crash that the country has ever seen. It is stated on good authority that a former citizen of the city of Galesburg was a prominent broker in the city of New York at that time and that he lost every cent he had and that he never after recovered from his downfall.

Another call for internal improvement funds was made by the county of Knox at the June term of court and at the December term, 1838, a payment was actually made to the county on account of said funds.

To H. J. Runkle, agent for Knox county to draw the appropriations by an act of the legislature entitled "an act to establish and maintain a general system of internal improvements" approved February 27, 1838, who was appointed at the June term of this court, rendered his account as follows:

Drawn from the Fund Coms.....		5850.
Treasurer's receipt filed	$5800.
Expenses of said Runkle	49.65
11 days employed at $1.50.....	16.50
	$5866.15
Amount drawn	5850.00
Due H. J. Runkle	$ 16.15

Ordered: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of H. J. Runkle for sixteen dollars and fifteen cents for account as above stated.

Also, at the June term, 1839:

H. J. Runkle, agent, to draw the internal improvement appropriation, made an additional return as follows:

One hundred and ninety-nine dollars received, Knoxville, April 18, 1839, of H. J. Runkle as agent of the county of Knox, to draw the appropriation of the state of Illinois, to such counties through which no railroad or canal passes through the sum of one hundred and ninety-nine dollars.

(Signed) JOHN EADS, Treasurer.

There is another order of the court made at the March term, 1838, which will be interesting reading and which is given below. It seems it was supposed that there was valuable salt mines in Vermilion county, and the state claimed the ownership of the same and ordered the sale of these lands, the proceeds to be divided among certain counties named in the act providing for the sale. Knox county was allowed $100 of the proceeds as shown by the following order:

Ordered: That the auditor of public accounts of the state of Illinois, be and he is hereby authorized and requested to issue his warrant on the treasury of said state in favor of H. J. Runkle or his order for one hundred dollars, being the amount appropriated to the county of Knox, out of the avails of the sales of the Vermilion Saline lands by "an act making appropriations to counties therein named." Approved March 4, 1837, and that the clerk issue a certified copy of this order to the said H. J. Runkle.

The board of supervisors of Knox county has expressed itself on a variety of subjects and apparently in a variety of ways. Sometimes the action of the board has been very commendable and sometimes the action taken would not be taken again after more experience and further deliberation. The following resolution offered by W. S. Gale, at the January meeting, 1866, forms very good reading today and might with propriety be offered today by any board or even any political gathering:

Resolved, That as the war for the preservation of our county and the free institutions bequeathed to us by our fathers, has left our county burdened with a debt, vast in proportions, and testing to their extent the endurance of the American people,

The honor of the nation requires that all this debt, and the obligations incurred in this great struggle shall be fully met and paid to the last dollar.

That the credit and commercial prosperity of the county are promoted by such legislation as will insure at an early day the resumption of specie payment by the government, and the return to coin as a measure of value in commercial transactions.

That the people of Knox county are ready and willing to accept their responsibilities, and bear their full proportion of the public burdens.

That asking no other relief, and no other favors, they have a right in common with their fellow citizens, to expect from the national and state legislatures, such legislation as will properly adjust and apportion these burdens as will develop to the uttermost the industry of the country and protect the people from plundering, monopolists and office holders.

That we approve of a tariff on foreign importations sufficiently high to protect the infant manufacturing enterprises of the country, and secure the development of our vast mineral resources.

That we believe it the duty of the government to secure the opening of every natural channel from the grain growing districts to the seaboard which is worth the necessary outlay, and to secure within a short period a railroad communication across the continent, and with the rich mines of the interior.

That we believe the control of the great highways of the country has been too long intrusted to the exclusive management of men, who have no responsibilities to the public, and who are expected to seek only the promotion of private interests without any regard to the wants, necessities and interests of the public except so far as attention thereto may promote such private interests.

That while we do not propose to indicate what legislation is called for in the case, we are satisfied there is something which requires correction, when a railroad from the city of Galesburg to the city of Chicago can, in one year, without running to its full capacity, earn a sum of money equal to its entire cash cost, when the road through this county to Peoria can collect rates of freight which will afford a fine compensation for wagons drawn by horses.

That there is something requiring correction when we are entirely deprived of the important markets of St. Louis and Cain, except in time of navigation, notwithstanding we have from this county railroad communication with both, from the fact that the connecting railroads are the property of different companies and permit the passage of no freight, except with the loss and delay of repeated changes of cars, and rates of freight double those charged for similar distances on single lines of road.

That the construction of new competing lines of railway is not the true remedy for these evils, requiring as it does an impossible outlay of capital and utterly inefficacious in securing that connection of lines, and transfer of freight, without suitable provision for which we can never realize the full benefits of railroad transportation.

That in our opinion prompt and wise legislation to effect the opening of new channels of trade, the improvement and proper control of the old, protecting all the vested rights of corporation, and the inalienable rights of the people, is essential to the prosperity of the country and absolutely required to enable the people to support those burdens, which must be borne if the national honor is to be sustained.

ENDORSEMENT OF BOARD OF HEALTH AND INSTITUTE FOR IDIOTS

April, 1866.—Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution, which was adopted: Resolved, That "an act to provide for a board of health in each township in those counties adopting township organization" approved February 16, A. D. 1865, be and the same is hereby accepted by this board.

January, 1867.—Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution, which was adopted: Resolved, That in the opinion of the board of supervisors of Knox county the legislature of this state should make a liberal appropriation and permanently establish the institution now in operation in this state for the schooling and intellectual elevation of idiots. And our senator and representative are hereby respectfully requested to use their best efforts to accomplish this purpose. And that the clerk of this board is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to the parties above named.

CONDEMNATION OF REGISTRATION LAW

January, 1869.—Mr. Lanphere offered the following resolution, which was adopted: Resolved, That the enactment of the registry law of this state, approved February 15, 1865, has been attended with a heavy expense to the county without any aggregate returns. That in our opinion it has failed to prevent illegal voting, the ostensible object of its enactment, and we therefore request our member of the legislature to use all honorable means to procure its repeal.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

January, 1876.—Mr. Sumner offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted: Whereas, This is the centennial of our national birth, and it appearing to us eminently fitting and proper that the people should in some suitable manner give expression to their gratitude and appreciation of the blessings of civil liberty secured to us in the birth and continued growth and prosperity of our free institutions, therefore,

Resolved, That we recommend to the citizens of the military tract to come together at Galesburg on the 4th day of July next and in an appropriate manner commemorate the centennial of our national existence.

April, 1876.—Robert L. Hannaman, Esq., appeared before the board in behalf of the committee on centennial celebration of the Fourth of July and in a brief speech represented the action taken in favor of such general celebration of the Fourth to be held in the county at Galesburg, and concluded by asking on behalf of the committee that the board appropriate from the county fund the sum of $2,500 or $3,000, to be expended in such centennial celebration.

On motion the request was referred to the committee on miscellaneous business.

In the matter of the request for an appropriation out of the county treasury to pay the expenses of a centennial Fourth of July celebration, your committee would beg leave to refer the same back to the board for its action.

On motion of Mr. Holyoke the application for an appropriation in aid of the centennial Fourth of July celebration was laid upon the table.

PUBLICATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD

The board always objected to the newspapers' charges for the publication of its proceedings, which were considered too high. For a number of years the proceedings were published in one paper and also in pamphlet form. This matter is pretty well explained in the following action:

September, 1876.—Mr. Temple offered the following resolution: Resolved, That the printing and distribution of the proceedings of the board of supervisors in pamphlet form be discontinued.

Mr. Gaines moved to amend, or substitute, that the publication of the proceedings of the board in the county papers be discontinued; and that in lieu thereof two thousand copies of the proceedings be published in pamphlet form.

Mr. Felt moved to lay the whole matter on the table. Adopted. Those voting in the affirmative were: Messrs. Campbell, Bates, Felt, Gale, Dieterich, Chambers, Sisson, Deatherage, McFarland, Barnett, Eiker, Woodmansee, Swigart, Stuckey, Sloan, West and Soles, 17. Those voting in the negative were: Messrs. Curtis, England, Temple, Tucker and Gaines, 5.

Mr. Felt offered the following resolution, which was adopted: Resolved, That this board will not pay any paper for publishing the proceedings of this board, unless such paper shall publish a full report, as furnished by the clerk.

CONCENTRATION OF RAILROADS

April, 1877.—Mr. Tucker presented the following resolutions, which were adopted: Resolved, That whereas the concentration of all the railroads in this and the adjoining counties, in a single management, seriously threatens the prosperity of the community and creates an apparent absolute necessity for concert of action for the protection of individual interests; that there being no other organization to whom it more properly belongs, we deem it right and appropriate for the county board, as the representatives of the people, to adopt such measures as are within its power to secure to citizens such measure of protection as the law can be made to afford, therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on revenue and equalization be directed to inquire into and ascertain what rates of freight are charged by the railroad companies on property shipped to and from points in this county; how such rates compare with charges made on other roads for like service; whether such rates are exorbitant and unreasonable and contrary to law; whether and to what extent points in this county are discriminated against; what legal steps can be taken, if any are thought necessary, to procure from the companies modifications of their charges; what legal redress the citizens of the county may have and what steps may properly be taken by the county board to protect its citizens.

Resolved further, that the county boards of the counties of Warren, Henderson, Mercer, Henry and Stark be invited to take similar action and to correspond with the chairman of the committee on revenue and equalization with reference to calling a convention of representatives of the several boards to provide for united action.

Resolved, That the committee be directed to hold such sessions between this and the next meeting of this board as they may deem best and that they be authorized to incur such reasonable expenses as may be required to carry into effect this resolution.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

January, 1878.—Mr. Hale presented the following preamble and resolutions, which were on motion unanimously adopted:

Whereas, From the most remote ages, and among all nations, gold and silver, either exclusively, or in common with other metals, have, by common consent and universal custom, as well as by the enactments of the law-making power, been established, recognized and used, as the representatives of value, and the mediums of exchange of property, in other words, as money; and

Whereas, The value of all property has been measured, and the rights of the creditor, and the liabilities of the debtor class, in every community, have been fixed, limited and defined, by the conjoint money power of these two metals; and

Whereas, During the years 1873-74, in an obscure, indirect, oblique—if not in a clandestine, surreptitious manner—silver was in these United States deprived of its main money power; thus, in its immediate and remote consequences (if persisted in), causing a greater disturbance in values, and a greater convulsion and revolution in every civil and social relation, than any event that has transpired in the history of the country, whereby the purchasing power of the money remaining, that is, gold, is greatly increased, but only by the great depreciation in the selling power of property; whereby the value of all securities and the profits of all creditors are greatly increased, but only by a great increase in the burdens and liabilities of all debtors; whereby the rich are to be made richer, and the poor poorer; and

Whereas, Acts of legislation are pending in the congress of the United States having in the purpose the repeal of this unjust, unequal, and injurious legislation, and the restoration to silver of its original full money power: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by this board of supervisors, representing in this expression the almost unanimous voice of the people of Knox county, that we denounce as unjust, unequal, partial and injurious, the legislation that was resorted to for the demonetization of silver, and demand its repeal.

Resolved further, That the senators and members of the house of representatives, from this state, have our hearty approval and support in their efforts to secure such repeal.

Resolved further, That we respectfully but earnestly present these views to the president of the United States, with the hope that he will unite with the other departments of the government in restoring silver, as money, to the circulation of the country.

Resolved further, That these resolutions be spread upon the records, and a copy thereof be furnished to the member of congress from this district, to the senators from this state, and to the president of the United States.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

January, 1881, 1883.—Mr. Gale (W. S.) offered the following resolution, which was made the order of business for 2:30 o'clock this afternoon:

Resolved, That this board request the state senator and representatives from this district to endeavor to have repealed so much of the law referring to industrial school for girls, as makes the counties from which inmates are sent responsible for their support.

Mr. Gale (G. W.), committee on almshouse and paupers, read bills of almshouse for that institution, previously examined by the committee, and after a partial reading of said bills, the further reading of such bills was suspended, and the special order of the hour being called, it being 2:30, the resolution offered this morning by Mr. Gale (G. W.) was called up.

The ladies representing the auxiliary society of the Illinois Industrial school for girls being present, were heard upon the resolution, and after a free discussion the resolution of Mr. Gale was adopted.

January, 1883.—The following is taken from report of committee on miscellaneous business, read by Mr. Mathews:

That in the matter of resolution from the county clerk of McLean county, in the matter of industrial school for girls, we endorse the same and recommend that a copy of same be printed as part of the record.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. G. MATHEWS,
HARVEY MONTGOMERY,
W. A. BOYDSTUN,
Committee.

The following is a copy of the resolution referred to in the foregoing report:

Resolved, That we request our senator, Hon. J. W. Fifer, and our representative in the legislature, Hons. LaFayette Funk, Simeon H. West and Thos. F. Mitchell, to use all honorable efforts to secure a repeal of the "act to aid industrial school for girls," or at least so much thereof as makes counties liable in any way for the expense of maintaining such schools, or the expense of sending girls to such schools.

On motion of Mr. Eiker said report was accepted and the recommendations of the committee concurred in, and the clerk directed to issue orders in accordance therewith.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOODS, MARCH, 1883

March, 1883.—Mr. Latimer, chairman of the road and bridge committee, stated that the bridges of the county had been badly damaged by the recent floods. The Trenton bridge is gone; also the bridge at London Mills, and the bridge known as Cedar Creek bridge in Indian Point. The Burnett bridge at Maquon is badly damaged. The bridge at London Mills is a county bridge. Fulton county has authorized its commissioners to rebuild or replace the bridge on the same conditions as it was originally built. So far no proposition has been made by contractors, with reference to the old bridge, that is more advantageous to the county than to sell it for old iron; some contractors refuse to consider the old bridge at any price. Its original cost was about $3,000. It is probable that contracts can be made to rebuild this bridge for about $2,000, and the old one turned in as old iron in part payment. The Rio and Henderson bridges, heretofore ordered, are in process of construction, and in some of the towns the construction of stone abutments has been contracted.

He stated further that he had considerable correspondence with different bridge contractors, and had learned that unless contracts were made at once Knox county would have to wait until fall for the completion of her bridges, so many bridges throughout this state and other states having been washed away, and he recommended that contracts for such bridges as we require be made at once.

(Mr. Robson said he thought the committee, in making contracts, should be confined to bridges, the abutments for which had been constructed and approved of by the committee. This course should be pursued for the protection of the county and as a guarantee of good and substantial work.—Clerk.)

After some discussion Mr. Robson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the road and bridge committee be, and is hereby authorized, in connection with a like committee from Fulton county, the same to act jointly, to rebuild or replace the bridge at London Mills, on abutments and approaches to be built by the town of Chestnut in Knox county and the town of Hickory in Fulton county, to the satisfaction of said committee.

Mr. May offered the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words "to act jointly" and then add "to rebuild or repair the iron bridge and approaches at London Mills on abutments to be built by the town of Chestnut in Knox county and the town of Hickory in Fulton county, to the satisfaction of said committee."

(It was objected that the resolution as amended was contrary to the usual custom of the county in this, that by it the county assumed the cost of constructing the approaches to the bridge and it would constitute a precedent whereby the towns, in the future, might claim the same relief.

In favor of the amendment it was argued that this bridge was exceptional and could not be cited as a precedent. It is located on the county line, and the resolution as amended corresponds with the action of Fulton county, and unless the same action is had by Knox county no progress could be made on the work until after another meeting of the Fulton county board.—Clerk.)

And thereupon Mr. May's amendment was adopted.

And the question recurring on the resolution of Mr. Robson, as amended, and a vote having been taken, said resolution as amended was carried.

Mr. Wertman offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the road and bridge committee be instructed to examine the piers on Spoon river at the bridge known as Trenton bridge and, if found suitable, to place thereon an iron bridge suitable for the place. And if the piers are not found good and substantial that said committee be authorized to construct a bridge at that place as soon as the town of Truro makes said piers to the approval of said committee.

On motion of Mr. Wertman the road and bridge committee were authorized to sell the old Trenton bridge on Spoon river to the best advantage.

On motion of Dr. Foote the joint committee of Knox and Fulton counties were authorized to dispose of the old bridge at London Mills as they see fit.

Mr. Harden stated that the bridge at Cedar Creek ought to be of iron, and moved that the matter be referred to the road and bridge committee with power to act and that said committee be authorized to dispose of the old wreck to the best advantage. Carried.

April, 1883.—Mr. Latimer read the following report of the committee on roads and bridges:

State of Illinois, ss.
Knox County.

Board of Supervisors—April Term, A. D. 1883

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee, to whom were referred the matters pertaining to roads and bridges, would beg leave to submit the following report:

On matters referred to us at special meeting March 20 we report as follows: We met with the Fulton county committee at London Mills on 26th of March and received bids from five different bridge companies, and we accepted the bid from the King Iron Bridge company for the erection of an iron truss bridge 120 feet long, at the sum of ($2,563) twenty-five hundred and sixty-three dollars and the old bridge to be completed by the 1st of June next, and also received proposals for the erection of the approaches, but have not yet contracted for the same. We also contracted with the Massillon Bridge company, Ohio, for the erection of the three bridges ordered by this board, namely, one in Indian Point, 66 feet; one in Henderson, 46½ feet; one in Rio, 46½ feet, to be completed twenty-five days after notification of completion of the masonry, at eleven dollars and seventy-five cents ($11.75) per lineal foot, the same five companies competing.

The committee visited Walnut Creek site for bridge, and under the instructions of this board we agreed with the commissioners of said town of Walnut Grove to place an iron structure, on completion of stone work, to the satisfaction of this committee, and the bridge will be contracted for by your present committee. We visited the Truro bridge and found the abutments of no account. We sold the old bridge for one hundred seventy-six dollars and twenty-five cents ($176.25), which amount is now in hands of chairman of this committee for your disposal. The old wooden bridge at Cedar creek is not yet disposed of.

We further report on matters referred to us at this meeting, the following bills be allowed:

J. W. McCutchen, com. work and mileage.....$3.30
J. A. Shaffer, com. work and mileage..... 5.00
A. L. Smith, com. work and mileage..... 7.80

The appropriation asked for Haw creek in aid of repairs of Burnett bridge, we recommend be allowed and the amount of ($300) three hundred dollars be issued by the clerk in favor of the highway commissioners of said town.

J. S. LATIMER,
WILLIAM A. BOYDSTUN,
JAMES PADEN,
J. C. EIKER,
JOHN SLOAN,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Gale, said report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in, and the clerk directed to issue orders in accordance therewith.

On motion of Mr. Gale, Mr. Latimer was directed to pay into the county treasury the money received from the sale of the Trenton bridge.

DRAM SHOP LICENSE

September, 1889.—In report of committee on miscellaneous business we find the following:

In the matter of the petition from Truro township asking the board to grant one, G. O. Tucker, licensed to keep a dram shop in Williamsfield, your committee would refer the same back to the board for their action.

On motion of Mr. Gale, the board took up the question of license.

Moved by Mr. Becker that the prayer of the petitioners for dram shop license be refused. Carried.

GALESBURG BOARD OF PARK COMMISSIONERS

July, 1894.—The following communication was read and referred to the judiciary committee:

GALESBURG, Ill., June 22, 1894.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

The undersigned, constituting the board of park commissioners of the city of Galesburg, respectfully represents that they have as such commissioners charge of the city park adjoining the courthouse grounds owned by the county. The two tracts lie contiguous, and, there being no intersecting streets, they constitute in appearance one park. It would greatly improve the appearance to have the trees in both tracts uniformly trimmed and the lawns and walks kept clean and in good condition. Untrimmed trees, dead trees and unkept lawns in either tract of land necessarily disfigure and mar the symmetry of the other. While we have official charge of the city park, the west half of said grounds, we tender our unofficial service to the county in taking charge of the courthouse grounds, we offer to superintend the trimming of trees, the removal of dead limbs and dead trees, caring for the lawn and keeping the walks clear of grass and weeds and the planting of trees and shrubbery with the advice of the sheriff and perform all duties connected with properly caring for said grounds the same as we care for the city park.

Our services, whether of any particular value or not, would be gratuitous. If permitted to take charge of your grounds, the only expense would be necessary bills for labor, and for any material purchased for use on said grounds.

We respectfully suggest that the trees on the court house grounds now very much need trimming, and that a trivial expense for unskilled labor under the direction of a person experienced in caring for trees will greatly improve the appearance of the grounds. This proposal is not intended and should not be construed as in the slightest degree criticising the condition of the county grounds.

Our view is that uniformity in the care of the park and court house grounds will be of benefit and add much to the beauty of both.

Very respectfully,

J. V. N. STANDISH,
P. F. BROWN,
HIRAM MARS,
HENRY GARDT,
J. W. HAMMOND,
O. F. PRICE.

Mr. Gale presented the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That until further action of the board, the park commissioners of the city of Galesburg be authorized to take charge of the court house grounds in terms and manner proposed in the communication at this meeting read, from said park commissioners.

Referring to the proposition from the park commissioners of the city of Galesburg to take charge of the court house grounds, your committee are of the opinion that it is inexpedient to place the care of the grounds in other hands than the officers of the county, and that an attempt to give partial control to others might result in complications and make it difficult to define the responsibilities of the officers in general charge. The committee fully appreciates the motives that prompted the offer of service and recommend that the sheriff and janitor be directed to give more care to the proper trimming of the trees and care of the grounds and avail themselves of the advantages of frequent consultations with the park commissioners, and that the sheriff be authorized to incur reasonable and necessary expenses in carrying out these directions.

INVESTIGATION OF CRUELTY AT ALMSHOUSE

July, 1894.—A petition was presented requesting the board to investigate the charges of cruelty to an idiotic boy confined in the almshouse, John Moore by name, by the authorities thereof by snipping or cutting off strips of skin for the purpose of grafting upon the arm of another inmate. Said petition being signed by J. D. Moore, J. B. Miller, J. U. Pickrel, J. D. Housh and eighty-two others, residents of the county.

Mr. Gale moved that the petition be referred to the almshouse committee with instructions to investigate and report to the board.

Mr. Pickrel moved to amend so that the petiton be referred to a special committee. Yeas, J. F. Latimer, Ed. A. Felt, W. H. Wiley, R. H. Pickrel, John R. Young, John McCrea, 6.

Nays, W. S. Gale, J. L. Burkhalter, Nels Nelson, C. E. Allen, Isaac Callender, H. M. Sisson, Alex Heflin, Henry M. Reece, J. S. Simpson, Malcom Smith, Wm. Robson, F. C. Bearmore, Frederick Becker, J. F. Hubbell, R. A. Lower, B. F. Pitman, John G. Emery, 17. Amendment lost.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. Gale the same was adopted by a viva voce vote.

Mr. Robson of the same committee, read the following additional report, which, on motion of Mr. Sisson, was adopted:

In the matter of the complaint of cruelty to Jake Moore, at the almshouse, by the superintendent and county physician, referred to the committee for investigation, we find the undisputable facts to be: Anne Kendahl, a young woman suffering from the effects of a severe burn, and otherwise in ill health, was a temporary inmate of the almshouse. She was of a poor, respectable family, had been employed at the time of the accident as a domestic, and was spoken of as a well mannered, industrious girl, and she enlisted sympathy by the bravery with which she bore her misfortunes.

Some portions of the burned surface failed to heal, and the loss of one arm was declared by the surgeon almost inevitable with any ordinary treatment. A relief was hoped for by resorting to the process of skin-grafting. There was at the same time a permanent inmate of the almshouse a young man in perfect health, with fine physical development—an idiot or intellectual paralytic—with no defect in vocal organs, unable to speak, with no more apparent reason than the least intelligent of domestic animals, requiring as constant care as the most helpless infant.

To this person the surgeon resorted to procure the necessary bits of skin to supply the wants of the patient. So far as the patient is concerned the operation seems to be successful and the prospect good for her discharge after a time, with use of both arms, not entirely perfect, but sufficient to enable her to provide for herself and remove the danger of her becoming a permanent public charge.

As to her, the acts of the surgeon were eminently wise and humane, and he is entitled to credit and consideration for his courage and skill and he has rendered valuable service to the county.

As to the man. It is claimed that the operation of taking minute pieces of the outer skin is not very painful, and such is the testimony of a well known citizen of Galesburg, who underwent the same operation for the benefit of a friend.

That it has not permanently injured him is apparent on examination, aside from the pain and uneasiness, he suffered no inconvenience as he had nothing to do.

Of course the consent of the young man was not asked, he was not capable of giving consent or of being made to comprehend what was wanted.

If he could have had a moment of reason it might have been called to his attention, that from infancy to manhood he had been cared for by others and for many years by persons who had no interest in him and on whom he had no other claims than his helplessness, that no man of his age in the county had greater prospects of a life prolonged to old age and that for all the years to come he must remain the same heavy charge. That this was the one time in all his life that he might render some service to others in return. Incapable of considering or acting for himself, the superintendent assumed the right to act for him in this case as in others.

The superintendent failed to consult the relatives of the man living in the county, but three years before taking charge of the institution, he found the man there, and from that time to this no communication has been received from anyone on his account, no one claiming to be his friend has visited or inquired for him, none had in any way contributed to the cost of his keeping, those to whom a legal liability to contribute attached were presumably unable. The superintendent considered him abandoned to the county and supposed the officials of the county were expected to use their own judgment and discretion in his management, care and support.

The committee fail to find any good foundation for charges of cruelty or of wilful and unnecessary injury to the young man. They believe the efforts of the surgeon made with the approval of the superintendent were well meant and skillfully applied and were in the interest of humanity and of the public service.

ORPHANS' HOME SOCIETY

September, 1894.—The following communication from the Orphans' Home society was read and referred to the same committee:

Illinois Children's Home Society,
Chicago, August 29, 1894.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Ill.:

Gentlemen:

I take pleasure in handing you a list of the children taken from your county, with date when received, name of child, from whom received, at what place, etc.

This society will be glad to co-operate with you in the care of your homeless, dependent children and will do so on terms already agreed upon, which I think will be mutually pleasant and helpful to you and beneficial to the taxpayers. When a child of sound mind and body is received by us we will undertake to care for it permanently, placing it in a carefully selected and well approved family home, with constant local oversight until of legal age.

Trusting that the relations of this society and your board may continue to be mutually pleasant and helpful, I am,

Very respectfully,
Geo. K. Hoover.

EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF SUPERVISORS, MARCH, 1895

Annual conventions of delegates representing the boards of supervisors from the counties under township organization had been held annually, beginning in the year 1887. Our board did not send representatives until the winter of 1895. W. Selden Gale and William Robson were the representatives, and their report is so full of interesting matter that it is given in full.

Mr. Gale of the special committee appointed at the December meeting of this board to represent the county at the state convention of supervisors and county commissioners, submitted the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors, Knox County, Illinois:

The committee appointed at the December meeting of the board to attend the eighth annual convention of supervisors to be held at Edwardsville on the 15th day of January begs leave to report.

The undersigned only of the committee were able to fill the appointment, Mr. Stephenson, unfortunately, being detained at home by private business.

There were present at the convention, besides the members of the Madison county board, one hundred delegates from forty counties.

The convention was mostly composed of gentlemen who had been connected with their county boards for several years, and the design of the meeting was to permit discussions on matters especially pertaining to the management of county affairs, comparisons of methods and exchange of views drawn from personal experience.

The matters most freely discussed in the formal meetings and in the conversations among members were those that occupy the special attention of the boards at the regular meetings. Revenue taxation, road and bridges, care of poor and insane.

As to the care of the insane, the opinion was unanimous and intensely felt. Men familiar with the management of insane in counties could form no other opinion or fail to realize its overshadowing importance.

Even in counties like our own, where all has been done that can well be done for the care of those unfortunates, the deficiencies are only too apparent, when we compare them with the state institutions, where, with larger numbers to provide for, due classification can be made, suitable provision made for each class and physicians and nurses with thorough special training supplied.

An enlargement of some of the existing institutions and the addition of a new institution, with capacity equal to the largest of those belonging to the state, would be still less than a fully adequate provision and ought not to be at all delayed.

The question is not of cost, but of efficiency. It matters little whether the expense is borne by the people throughout the county or the state. Comparisons were made of the methods of supporting the poor by counties and by the towns, as prevails under former special legislation in some counties.

It was claimed where the expenses are paid from the town funds more care was used to avoid unnecessary and excessive use of money and closer scrutiny of bills than when town officers made the bills and the county paid them.

It was also claimed that great pressure was often brought to bear upon the supervisor in favor of individuals not always deserving by friends of the claimant, who are ready to make their influence felt by their votes. Oftentimes persons become fixed on the counties as pensioners and cannot, without difficulty, be shaken off, very little credit being given the supervisors for resisting claims in favor of the town on the county fund.

As an illustration an experience in Adams county was given, where, after, under the statute, a county agent was appointed to relieve the supervisor in Quincy, the cost was reduced from $16,000 to $8,000 per annum. The supervisor elected in the city could not free himself from the local pressure, in large part coming from saloonkeepers.

A resolution was offered asking the legislature to provide for a change from county support of poor to town support in any county where the people, at an election to be called for the purpose, should so decide. The committee to whom it was referred reported adversely, and by a majority vote of counties the report was sustained.

Reason given it would throw an undue proportion of the cost of the poor on towns containing villages and practically exempt farming towns from that tax, under present conditions the poor being driven into the village for shelter.

The discussion fully confirmed your committee in the opinion that the system into which this county has drifted is, take it all in all, the best.

We have provided a comfortable alms house, where the worthy poor can meet kind and humane treatment, and we insist that all persons, as a condition of receiving aid from the county, should, if able to go, be taken to the alms house.

Leaving to the small towns and trusting to the humanity of their people to provide occasional relief to those in temporary want. Some counties go further than ours in providing for medical attendance on the poor to be supplied by contract. They make contracts in every town, the cost usually being somewhat in proportion to population.

The convention was addressed, as by appointment, by Mr. Charles W. Thomas of Belleville on equitable taxation. Mr. Thomas has very pronounced views and a very energetic delivery.

He declared our system of assessment and taxation the worst in existence this side of Turkey.

He insisted that the increase in wealth in this country is in franchise and privileges in far greater degree than in tangible property, and this vast amount of wealth, for the most part, escapes taxation.

He denounced the state board of equalization and its methods in the valuation of corporate property. He instanced the action of the board as to railroads. He said when the board first assessed the railroads they put an assessment upon their capital stock in addition to the value put on visible property; that this being resisted by the railroads, it was suspended during years of litigation. That the courts of final resort sustained the assessment, but that from that time to this the board had never made another assessment of such capital stock. He stated the valuation and the actual earnings of the Chicago & Alton railroad, claiming that property was undervalued.

He explained and strongly advocated the system of assessment proposed in the report of the revenue commission of '86, by which the revenue for the state should be derived from taxation of railroads, and other property and franchise, which shall be exempt from taxation for local purposes, making the several counties independent of each other in assessments, and take from assessors the motive for competition in lowering values. Mr. Thomas was ill and unable to complete his address which was listened to with great interest.

In conversation among members during recess, some exceptions were taken to some of Mr. Thomas' positions. A former member of the board of equalization fully agreed that the property of corporations was, in many cases grossly under-valued. But while the railroad property seemed under-valued as compared with some descriptions of property, as compared with all the property in the state, it paid more than its fair proportion.

When the board of equalization put an assessment upon the capital stock of railroads, their visible property was estimated at not more than cost of replacement, that the assessment on capital stock was designed to cover the difference between such cost and actual value. That this mode being objected to, the board attempted to put a value on the visible property based, not on apparent cost, but upon its earning capacity, and this method has since been followed.

It appeared also, that the tax on the Chicago & Alton railroad, as stated by Mr. Thomas, was somewhat higher than it would be under the rule proposed by the revenue commission.

A gentleman from Rock Island introduced a proposition for taxation of real estate mortgages as an interest on the land.

On this resolution and the address of Mr. Thomas, the committee on taxation, Mr. Gale, chairman, reported as follows:

In the matter of the resolution referred to the committee in regard to taxation of mortgage interests on land: they are not prepared to recommend the passage of this resolution in its precise terms, they recommend an expression of opinion by the convention that encumbered real estate should be assessed against the owner of the equity and of the encumbrance, according to the proportionate value of the several interests.

As to the matters presented to the convention in the able address of Mr. Thomas, the committee recommend the convention ask of the legislature careful consideration of plans to provide for the revenue required for the expenses of the state from other sources than the assessed valuation of property, leaving the several counties independent of each other, in matter of assessment and collection of revenue. And the further elimination of the element of competition among assessors in law valuations, by providing for assessments by county officers, basing the levies for county, town and municipal purposes on the valuations made by such county officers.

The first item of the report was adopted with some opposition. The second item unanimously adopted.

The committee on permanent highways and bridges submitted a report in two propositions.

First, the appointment of a non-partisan commission to have general supervision of the roads of the state, the manner of constructing, with duty to make surveys and ascertain character and location of materials for said construction, etc.

Second, allowing county boards to submit to the people of their counties the proposition to adopt a county road system, with a board of commissioners to take charge of the roads in the county and employ engineers, requiring all road work to be done under the direction of the county commissioners and county engineers, classifying the roads constructing the more important at the general expense of the county.

The chairman of the committee, Mr. Baldwin, of LaSalle county, the author of the proposition, sustained the report in a well prepared and forcible address.

He dwelt upon the great losses to farmers by want of constant access to markets over good roads—compared the roads of Illinois to those of European countries ancient and modern—declared that with all our progress in civilization and our improvements, our roads were getting, year by year, worse, under wasteful and insufficient expenditures and want of system.

Other speakers followed, sustaining the chairman of the committee. Reference was made to the supply of stone, especially near Joliet, to the use of convict labor on the roads. A gentleman from Quincy proposed a levy tax on successions from 2 to 50 per cent, increasing as the value of estate increase, the proceeds to be applied to highways. As usual the Appian way was referred to.

The first speech in opposition was by a gentleman from Iroquois, who had spent part of his life in sight of European military roads, who had practical knowledge of roads in a country level in its surface without any material for hard roads.

Your delegates felt bound to represent the feeling so decidedly expressed in the Farmers' Institute of Knox county. Others rapidly followed in opposition to the proposition. It was claimed we had already a system of public highways in our magnificent railroads connecting the remote districts with the commercial centers, a system more perfect and complete than ever till our times was known to the world. Carrying men and goods at an economy of time and cost till now undreamed of—moving freight the length of the state as cheaply as by horse and wagon over good roads for ten miles.

We were told to compare the Appian way with the Chicago & Alton railroad.

We were reminded that the roads of Illinois that are maintained at the cost of the tax payer are neighborhood roads leading to the nearest station and few townships are without a railroad station and that such roads will be most properly cared for by the people interested in their use.

The statement that the roads of the state were not improving was on all hands denied. Gentlemen from counties that have within a few years adopted township organization declared their roads are better cared for under the township system.

There is a spirit of emulation in the towns and taxes are more cheerfully paid, and liberally levied when the people feel an interest in the application.

It was urged that it was only a question of local option. No county need adopt the system if opposed by the people, to which it was replied, that it was not merely local option, as it might give the power to a portion of the county by combination, to control expenditures to the prejudice of other portions. The report was rejected by an overwhelming majority followed by continued applause.

A proposition recommending the amendment of the road and bridge laws, to give counties the option to discontinue collection of poll tax was vigorously debated and passed by a small majority.

A proposition was adopted recommending passage of a law requiring semi-annual report to supervisors from state's attorneys.

One recommended making the state's attorney ineligible for re-election was rejected.

A draft of a bill for amendment of the Australian ballot law was introduced, coming from the Adams county board and endorsement of convention asked.

The object was to more clearly define the provisions of the act as applying to the town election, while the object was approved the bill was too complex to be intelligently passed upon by the convention in the limited time. There was general expression of opinion in conversation that the law ought not to have been made to apply to town meetings in rural townships.

A committee was appointed, requested to personally present the recommendation of the convention to the legislature. Mr. Eades, of LaSalle (chairman of convention); Miller, of St. Clair; Collins, of Adams; Gale, of Knox; Irwin, of Tazewell; Hay, of McLean; Conklin, of Iroquois.

A committee was directed to call the 9th annual convention to meet at Kankakee, January, 1896.

Your committee believe the interests of the state will be promoted by annual convention of supervisors for consultation, exchange of views and comparison of methods. That the value will be in proportion to the attention given them and the more or less full representation of counties. They recommend the passage of resolution calling the matter to the attention of the board of '95 and advising the sending of delegates to the convention of '96.

W. SELDEN GALE,
WILLIAM ROBSON.

In connection with the foregoing report, Mr. Simpson offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the foregoing report be adopted and that we hereby extend a vote of thanks to Messrs. Gale and Robson, our representatives to the state convention of supervisors and county commissioners of this state, for the full and complete report presented by them of the proceedings of the convention. And we would hereby most heartily endorse the action of the convention in its adoption of the report of its committee on legislation, recommending to the legislature the careful consideration of plans to provide for the revenue required for the expenses of the state from other sources than the assessed valuation of property, and we would also hereby approve their recommendation of calling the attention of the board of 1895 to the convention which will meet in Kankakee in January, 1896, and their advising of the sending of delegates to that meeting.

April, 1904.—Mr. Robson offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Be It Resolved, That as the next regular state convention of county commissioners, supervisors and clerks is to be held in Galesburg in 1905, the chairman of the county board appoint a special committee of seven, the chairman of the board to be a member thereof, to make arrangements for said meeting.

Mr. Rebstock announced the following special committee on arrangements for state convention of county commissioners, supervisors and county clerks, to be held in Galesburg, Illinois, in 1905: Messrs. Robson, Clark, Swanson, McWilliams, McDowell and Cowan.

December, 1904.—Mr. Robson offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the special committee on arrangements for the state convention of county commissioners, supervisors and county clerks be and are hereby authorized to proceed with and carry out all necessary work pertaining to the convention.

MOTHER BICKERDYKE MONUMENT

September, 1903.—A committee of the Mother Bickerdyke Memorial association appeared before the board and requested permission to be heard. On motion permission was granted, and Mrs. Fannie Blazer addressed the board, asking that the Mother Bickerdyke Memorial association have leave to erect a statue in honor of Mother Bickerdyke on the courthouse grounds.

On motion of Mr. McWilliams such leave was granted.

Mr. McWilliams further moved that the chair appoint five members of the board to form with the chairman of the board a special committee of six, the chairman of the board being chairman of the special committee, to determine the location of the memorial statue on the courthouse grounds and to act with the committee having charge of the same from the association. The motion carried.

Wednesday, 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. Rebstock announced the following named persons, Messrs. McWilliams, Burkhalter, Sisson, McDowell and Woods, as the special committee as provided for in yesterday's proceedings.

FERRY BOATS

On the 2nd day of September, 1834, the commissioners of the county entered into a contract with Simeon Dolph for building a ferry boat on Spoon river, said boat to be completed within three months from this date for the sum of $45, to be paid on the completion and delivery of said boat agreeably to said written contract. On the 4th day of March the year following it appears that the ferry boat was completed according to contract and that the contract was returned and endorsed satisfied by the clerk of the court. It does not appear whether the boat was to transport passengers only or whether it was intended to carry carriages, horses and loaded wagons. That sum of money to-day would just about pay for a good rowboat, but it is quite likely that at the time the boat was constructed it would be large enough to carry anything that might come along and seek passage over Spoon river. At that time the court ordered that the clerk issue a license to Simeon Dolph to keep ferry on Spoon river at the crossing of the road leading from Knoxville in a direction to Canton for the term of one year from the first day of March, 1835, upon the payment to the treasurer of the sum of $2 and giving bond as required by law.

In the early days before very many bridges were constructed the crossing of streams was effected by means of ferries. We have just noted the establishment of a ferry on Spoon river where the road from Knoxville runs southeast toward Canton. On the first day of June, 1835, the county commissioners entered an order that the clerk issue a license to Asa Crooks of Henry county to keep a ferry according to the law across Rock river. The following is the order establishing the ferry, also for the license and the rates of ferriage established.

Asa Crooks made application in open court for a ferry to be established on Rock river at or near the Prophet's Village, in Henry county, and the said Asa Crooks having made it appear to the satisfaction of the said commissioners that a notice of his intention in relation thereto had been posted upon the door of the courthouse, in the town of Knoxville, at least four weeks preceding the sitting of this court and there being no other application before this court in relation to a ferry on said stream, and the court being of opinion that said ferry is necessary and of public utility, it is therefore ORDERED: That a ferry be established on Rock river in the county of Henry at any point on said river within one mile of the mouth of the creek near Prophet's Village, subject to such regulations, restrictions and forfeitures as are provided by law or as may hereafter be provided by law in relation to ferries.

ORDERED: That the clerk of this court issue a license to Asa Crook of Henry county to keep the said ferry according to law, upon his paying into the county treasury the sum of two dollars for the amount of the tax on said ferry for the term of one year from this date, being the amount of the first year's tax on said ferry, and also on his entering into a bond with sufficient securities as provided for by law in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, conditioned as is required by law.

At the time this ferry was established in Henry county the judicial business of Henry county was all performed by the county commissioners of Knox county according to the law in force at that time. Hence it is that the commissioners of Knox county took jurisdiction of this matter.

Quite a number of ferries were established in this county. These are given as representative of all.

SALARY OF STATE'S ATTORNEY

June, 1910.—The following communication was read and together with the petition filed therewith referred to the judiciary committee.

To the Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

In the matter of the petitions asking the judge to submit to a vote the proposition as to whether or not the state's attorney's office should be placed on a salary basis, I beg leave to report that petitions containing the names of 1,478 voters have been returned to my office.

The statute provides that these petitions shall contain twenty per cent of the legal voters of the county before the judge can order that this question be placed upon the ballot. We have not found out the exact number of legal voters, but I think that we will have to have approximately two-thirds as many more signatures as we now have.

Respectfully submitted.

W. C. FRANK.

September, 1910.—To the Judiciary Committee of the Board of Supervisors of Knox county, Illinois:

Gentlemen:

In the matter of petitions for placing the state's attorney's office on a salary basis, I respectfully report that I now have enough petitions returned to assure the proposition being placed upon the ballot for the November election, and there are a few names to be returned yet. When these others are returned the whole will be filed in the county court and the judge will enter an order placing the proposition upon the ballot for the November election.

Dated this 19th day of September, A. D. 1910.

Respectfully submitted.

WALTER C. FRANK.

December, 1910.—The judiciary committee presented the following certified copy of a decree entered in the county court on the result of the votes on the question on the proposition for placing the office of the state's attorney on a salary basis, which was read and on motion of Mr. Barlow was ordered placed on file, and that it appear in the record of the proceedings:

State of Illinois, } ss.
County of Knox. }

In the matter of the petition to the Hon. R. C. Rice, judge of the county court of Knox county, Illinois, to submit to a vote of the electors of Knox county, Illinois, the proposition as to whether or not the electors of said Knox county shall adopt an act of the general assembly of the said state of Illinois, entitled "an act to amend an act entitled 'an act concerning fees and salaries, and to classify the several counties of this state with reference thereto.'" Approved March 29, 1872, in force July 1, 1872; as amended by act approved June 4, 1889; in force July 1, 1889; title as amended by act approved March 28, 1874, in force July 1, 1874, by adding thereto eight new sections to be known as Sections 8a, 8b, 8c, 8d, 8e, 8f, 8g and 8h, approved May 15, 1903, in force July 1, 1903.

This day it appearing to the court from a certified copy of the abstract of votes on the question for adopting the proposed amendments to "an act concerning fees and salaries and to classify the several counties of this state with reference thereto, viz.: Sections 8a, 8b, 8c (8d), 8e, 8f, 8g and 8h, at an election held in the different election districts in the county of Knox, in the state of Illinois, on Tuesday, the eighth day of November, A. D. 1910, as made by the county canvassing board of the county aforesaid, filed in this court by Frank L. Adams, county clerk of Knox county, in said state, that "yes" received four thousand two hundred forty-eight votes, and "no" received one thousand one hundred six votes, and,

It appearing to the court that a majority of the votes cast for or against said proposition at said election were for the said proposition,

Therefore, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the county judge of Knox county, Illinois, that the act of the general assembly of the state of Illinois, entitled "an act to amend an act entitled, 'an act concerning fees and salaries, and to classify the several counties of this state with reference thereto.'" Approved March 29, 1872, in force July 1, 1872; as amended by act approved June 4, 1889, in force July 1, 1889; title as amended by act approved March 28, 1874, in force July 1, 1874; by adding thereto eight new sections to be known as Sections 8a, 8b, 8c, 8d, 8e, 8f, 8g and 8h. Approved May 15, 1903. In force July 1, 1903; be and the same is hereby declared to be in force in the county of Knox, in the state of Illinois.

Dated this twenty-second day of November, A. D. 1910.

DETENTION SCHOOL FOR JUVENILE OFFENDERS

September, 1910.—There appeared before the committee State's Attorney Boutelle, Judge R. C. Rice and Mrs. W. E. Simonds in the interest of a detention school for juvenile offenders, and we recommend that the sum of $500 be taken from any funds not otherwise appropriated, provided the Galesburg board of education agree to hire and pay the matron teacher for such detention school.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

BOARD OF ELECTION COMMISSIONERS

December, 1910.—Chairman Hoxworth addressed the board in regard to the board of election commissioners in the city of Galesburg, and stated that as they were drawing about $4,000 a year from the county for which the county itself derives no benefit, he wished the matter be taken up by the board with the legislators from this county, and that they enter its earnest protest and suggested that a resolution on this subject might accomplish something.

He further stated that he was heartily in favor of a compulsory registration law, that it should apply to the entire county. He suggested that the board appoint a committee of three to draft resolutions on this subject and that the treasurer be directed to get an opinion from the attorney general before the county pays out much more money on that account, but without bringing about any contest over the matter.

Mr. Paden offered a motion that the chair appoint a committee of three to prepare resolutions on the subject of the board of election commissioners in the city of Galesburg, and the payment of their salaries from the county funds, which motion was seconded.

Mr. Robson also stated that he believed the county should go slow in paying out funds for the pay of the election commissioners in the city of Galesburg as on the face of it it seemed contrary to American principles that the county should be taxed without representation, and he favored the motion appointing a committee to look into the matter and suggested that the committee instruct the county treasurer to obtain an opinion from the attorney general and the state's attorney on the matter.

The chairman then announced that he would appoint Messrs. Paden, Greig and Robson as a committee to draft the resolutions as provided in the motion.

Your special committee on resolutions in the matter of the election commissioner's law would respectfully present the following resolutions:

Resolved, that the county treasurer be instructed to obtain the opinions of the state's attorney and of the attorney general as to the constitutionality of the election law under which the city of Galesburg is now operating.

And further, resolved, that this board requests our representatives in the legislature to use their best efforts to obtain the passage of a reasonable registration and election law.

STATE OF ILLINOIS
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, SPRINGFIELD
W. H. STEAD, ATTORNEY-GENERAL

DECEMBER 20, 1910.

Hon. George J. Eastes, County Treasurer, Galesburg, Illinois:

DEAR SIR: I have yours of December 19th, wherein you submit a portion of a resolution adopted at the December meeting of the Knox county board of supervisors which reads as follows:

"Resolved, that the county treasurer be instructed to obtain the opinions of the state's attorney and of the attorney-general as to the constitutionality of the election law under which the city of Galesburg is now operating."

And, in conformity with said resolution, you request my opinion upon the question therein submitted. You also ask that I supply you, upon a separate sheet, my opinion as to whether or not a county treasurer could be held liable for the moneys paid out as salaries of election commissioners, clerk hire and printing bills, in case the law should for any reason be declared unconstitutional.

In reply will state that the state's attorney is made by statute the legal advisor of both you and the board of supervisors upon official matters. It is the duty of the attorney-general to act in an advisory capacity to the state's attorney when requested by him.

It has never been my policy to attempt to supercede the state's attorney in matters pertaining to his office. To do so might result in embarrassment not only to him but also to this office. I must, therefore, in the first instance refer you to the state's attorney of your county, and if he is in doubt as to the law and desires the opinion of this office I shall be glad to accommodate him.

Upon reflection I think you will agree that this policy is the only proper one and that the attorney-general should refrain from superceding the state's attorney in the performance of his official duty of advising the county officers.

Regreting that I cannot comply with your request or that of the board of supervisors in this instance, I am,

Very respectfully,

W. H. STEAD,
Attorney-General.

OFFICE OF STATE'S ATTORNEY OF KNOX COUNTY

GALESBURG, Ill., March 14, 1911.

Hon. George J. Eastes, County Treasurer, Galesburg, Illinois:

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry as to the letter of the attorney-general regarding the matter of an opinion on the "constitutionality of the election law under which the city of Galesburg is now operating," will say that I have given the subject careful consideration and find that our supreme court has passed on this question in the case of The People vs. Hoffman et al., 116 Ill., page 587, in which it is held that the act referred to is a valid one and not in contravention of any constitutional provision. Also the provision that the law has no operation in a city, town or village until adopted by the voters thereof will not render it local or special or make it invalid. A general law may depend upon some contingency as when it takes effect in a particular locality. This election law has also been held constitutional, and above case cited with approval in the case of People vs. Warnek, 241 Ill., page 529.

The same question in principle has been decided by our supreme court upon other laws where a vote of the people was necessary for their adoption. "It is competent for the legislature to pass a law, the ultimate operation of which may, by its own terms, be made to depend upon a contingency." "Delegation of power to make the law is forbidden, * * * but there can be no valid objection to a law which confers any authority or discretion as to its execution to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law itself." 162 Ill., 494.

Same rule was held in reference to the jury commissioner's act of 1897. "Constitutions, like statutes, must receive a reasonable construction. It has been determined and has become the settled rule of construction in this state that an act general in its terms and uniform in its operation upon all persons and subject matter in like situation is a general law and not obnoxious to the objection that it is local or special legislation." "Before an act of the legislature can be held unconstitutional it must be clear that it is so. All doubts are to be resolved in favor of the validity of the statute." 170 Ill., 460.

In regard to the civil service act it was decided: "It is further claimed that the law is unconstitutional as being special legislation. This contention is also without force, as the law itself provides for its operation only in those cities which by a vote of the people may adopt it. Laws of this character are not obnoxious to the constitutional inhibition against special legislation." 171 Ill., 72.

The present local option law, to which constitutional objection was raised, was held not to be contrary to the constitution in the McBride case, 234 Ill.

I note in quoting from the letter from the attorney-general addressed to you that he states that where the state's attorney is in doubt as to the law and desires the opinion of the attorney-general that he would render such opinion. However, in view of the fact that the supreme court has passed squarely on the constitutionality of the so-called election commissioner's law it would hardly be contended that the question was involved in any doubt, as a supreme court decision is the highest authority to which I could refer you.

Respectfully submitted,

A. J. BOUTELLE.

CORN GROWING CONTEST

December, 1911.—Supt. W. F. Boyes appeared and read the following report of the Special Committee on the Boys' Corn Growing Contest:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Gentlemen: Your committee appointed at the April meeting to have charge of the Boys' Corn Growing Contest beg leave to report as follows:

Soon after their appointment the committee met and formulated a plan for the contest. First, second and third prizes of $20.00, $10.00 and $5.00 respectively, were offered for each of four exhibits of corn grown and selected by boys in the county, of eighteen years and under; also three prizes of the same amount for the best essay as to how the writer produced his corn. This series of prizes involved the expenditure of $175.00 and it was found practicable to offer a sweeptakes prize of a rubber-tired top buggy of the value of $125.00. Further, prizes of $3.00 and $2.00 were offered for the best corn shown from each township, barring such exhibits as should receive county prizes. You were asked individually to provide for your townships the $5.00 necessary for the last mentioned prize; and you have the thanks of the committee for responding as you did.

Mr. Paden and the County Superintendent acted for the committee in soliciting from the business houses of Galesburg the $200.00 necessary, in addition to the $100.00 appropriated by this Board, to carry out the plan.

As to the response to the plan; more than two hundred boys expressed their interest, about one hundred, as nearly as could be determined, planted corn. Many of the plots were small and in several respects the season was unfavorable; so a considerable number of those who grew a crop were unable to exhibit. However, just prior to the time of the show forty-one said they had corn to bring and thirty-six entries of corn grown by boys were made. In addition to this twenty-seven exhibited a selection of corn they had made without reference to the grower—sixty-three in all.

The corn was scored by Mr. Leigh F. Maxey, Secretary of the Illinois Corn Growers' Association. He expressed the judgment that it was an unusually successful show.

The attendance throughout the day was good, the county court room being too small to accommodate all present in the afternoon. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Grieg for the committee, Hon. Clark E. Carr, Supt. A. C. Butler, and Hon. J. W. Hunter of Abingdon.

The gathering of boys for this contest was made the occasion of organizing a Knox County Boys' Club, the purpose of which is to foster among the boys of our county an interest in and a love for farm life and to assist them in doing their part in their homes, their schools, and their communities.

Many expressions of approval of such a contest have come to our ears from intelligent farmers and other tax payers interested in the best development of the county.

It is the opinion of your committee that a good start has been made and the members are unanimous in the conclusion that this board would do wisely to provide for continuing the work of encouraging farm boys of the county to an interest in corn and its production.

Accordingly, it is hereby recommended that at this meeting a committee be empowered to have charge of next year's contest and an appropriation of $250.00 be made for the same.

HUGH GREIG,
J. O. BAIRD,
A. F. PADEN,
Committee.

Chairman Hoxworth then announced that in compliance with the request of Superintendent Boyes, as expressed before this board, he would appoint Messrs. Grieg, Baird and Paden as members of the special committee to co-operate with the county superintendent in the matter of the corn contest and exhibition for the boys of the Knox county schools for the ensuing year, which appointment was concurred in by the board.

COLONEL CLARK E. CARR.

Galesburg is proud, as well it may be, of the record of Colonel Clark E. Carr, now one of the venerable and honored residents of the city. His interests and activities, however, have been so broad and varied as to make him a man of national character, for he has sustained many important relations to the public service and in other associations has been found faultless in honor, fearless in conduct and stainless in reputation. He was born in the town of Boston, Erie county, New York, May 20, 1836, and is descended from a family of English origin, the records of which are traced back to the time of the Norman Conquest. William Carr was born in London, England, June 17, 1597, and was married May 16, 1619, to Susan Rothchild, in London. They came to America in the fall of 1621 as passengers on the ship Fortune, Captain Roger Williams commanding, and landed at Plymouth, Massachusetts, on the 7th of November. For many generations the branch of the family of which Colonel Carr is a representative remained in New England. His paternal grandfather was the Rev. Clark Carr, who was born at East Greenwich, Rhode Island, where one of his ancestors, Caleb Carr, had once served as colonial governor. The Rev. Clark Carr was a Baptist minister who preached for fifty years in western New York, becoming a pioneer of that section of the state. He married Patty Merwin and lived to be eighty years of age, while his wife reached the advanced age of almost ninety years. They were the parents of a son and two daughters: Clark M.; Laura, who became the wife of Ambrose Torrey; and Louisa, who married Willard Alger.

Clark M. Carr, born in the Empire state, was reared in Erie county, New York, and having arrived at years of maturity he wedded Delia Torrey, a native of Connecticut and a daughter of Asa and Lydia (Roberts) Torrey. Her father was born in Weymouth, Massachusetts, and was of English descent. The mother of President Taft was a Torrey, closely related to Asa Torrey, Judge Alphonso Taft, the father of the president, having married Louisa Maria Torrey, a daughter of Samuel D. Torrey, of Millbury, Massachusetts.

It was some years after the marriage of Clark M. Carr that he removed to the middle west, arriving in the spring of 1850 in Henry county, Illinois, where he lived for nearly two years, after which he established his home in Galesburg in the autumn of 1851. Clark M. Carr engaged in various lines of business but during his residence in Galesburg was largely occupied with the promotion and building of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He died in this city in 1876 at the age of seventy-two years. His first wife, Mrs. Delia (Torrey)

COLONEL CLARK E. CARR.

Galesburg is proud, as well it may be, of the record of Colonel Clark E. Carr, now one of the venerable and honored residents of the city. His interests and activities, however, have been so broad and varied as to make him a man of national character, for he has sustained many important relations to the public service and in other associations has been found faultless in honor, fearless in conduct and stainless in reputation. William Carr was born in London, England, June 17, 1597, and was married May 16, 1619, to Susan Rothchild, in London. They came to America in the fall of 1621 as passengers on the ship Fortune, Captain Roger Williams commanding, and landed at Plymouth, Massachusetts, on the 7th of November. For many generations the branch of the family of which Colonel Carr is a representative remained in New England. His paternal grandfather was the Rev. Clark Carr, who was born at East Greenwich, Rhode Island, where one of his ancestors, Caleb Carr, had once served as colonial governor. The Rev. Clark Carr was a Baptist minister who preached for fifty years in western New York, becoming a pioneer of that section of the state. He married Patty Merwin and lived to be eighty years of age, while his wife reached the advanced age of almost ninety years. They were the parents of a son and two daughters: Clark M.; Laura, who became the wife of Ambrose Torrey; and Louisa, who married Willard Alger.

Clark M. Carr, born in the Empire state, was reared in Erie county, New York, and having arrived at years of maturity he wedded Delia Torrey, a native of Connecticut and a daughter of Asa and Lydia (Roberts) Torrey. Her father was born in Weymouth, Massachusetts, and was of English descent. The mother of President Taft was a Torrey, closely related to Asa Torrey, Judge Alphonso Taft, the father of the president, having married Louisa Maria Torrey, a daughter of Samuel D. Torrey, of Millbury, Massachusetts.

It was some years after the marriage of Clark M. Carr that he removed to the middle west, arriving in the spring of 1850 in Henry county, Illinois, where he lived for nearly two years, after which he established his home in Galesburg in the autumn of 1851. Clark M. Carr engaged in various lines of business but during his residence in Galesburg was largely occupied with the promotion and building of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He died in this city in 1876 at the age of seventy-two years. His first wife, Mrs. Delia (Torrey)

Carr, the mother of Colonel Carr, died in Erie county, New York, in 1839, when our subject was only three years of age, and in 1845 he married again, his second union being with Miss Fannie L. Yaw. There were four children by the first marriage: General Eugene A. Carr, now deceased; Colonel Byron O. Carr, living in Seattle, Washington; Rev. Dr. Horace M. Carr, of Parsons, Kansas; and Colonel Clark E. Carr, of this review. The children by the second marriage were: George P., now deceased; and Grace, the wife of J. C. Fahnnestock, of Galesburg. The second wife died in 1888.

Colonel Clark E. Carr was but thirteen years of age when the family removed westward to Illinois and was a lad of fifteen years when they left Henry county for Galesburg, where he has since made his home, having now resided in this city for six decades. He pursued his education in Knox Academy and Knox College, after which he returned to the east in preparation for a professional career and was graduated from the Albany, New York, Law School with the LL. B. degree. He has since been given the degree of doctor of laws and for many years following his admission to the bar in 1857 he remained in practice in Galesburg. In fact he was an active representative of the bar here for nearly forty-five years but for the past ten years has lived retired. His work in the courts became a matter of record and indicated his comprehensive knowledge of the law and his ability to clearly, forcefully and cogently present the points of his case and the principles and precedents applicable thereto.

As previously indicated Colonel Carr has been prominently known in many public connections and at all times his life has been one of great serviceableness in the fields in which he has labored. He won his military title by service during the Civil war on the staff of Illinois' distinguished war governor, Richard Yates. He was also postmaster of Galesburg for twenty-four years, being first appointed to the office in 1861 by Abraham Lincoln, of whom he was a personal friend. In fact there are few men living in Illinois today who have had a wider acquaintance among the men of Illinois who have gained distinction and national honors and prominence. Colonel Carr has been a member of many commissions, becoming one of the original members of the Soldiers National Cemetery Association at Gettysburg, which established the cemetery there. He was present on the occasion when Abraham Lincoln inaugurated the cemetery and, seated near him on the stage, heard the president's matchless address, a full account of which Colonel Carr has given in his volume entitled "Lincoln at Gettysburg." Presidential appointment under Benjamin Harrison made him minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to Denmark from 1889 until 1893. In politics he has always been a zealous republican and of the great issues which divide the two parties, with their roots extending down to the very bedrock of the foundations of the republic, he has a true statesman's grasp. Well grounded in the political maxims of the schools, he has also studied the lessons of actual life, arriving at his conclusions as a result of what may be called his postgraduate studies in the school of affairs.

On the 31st day of December, 1873, Colonel Carr was united in marriage to Miss Grace Mills, a daughter of Hon. Henry A. and Julia (Crosby) Mills, of Mt. Carroll, Illinois. Mr. Mills, the father of Mrs. Carr, was a son of Abiram and Grace (deBerard) Mills, the latter of French descent while the former was a native of New York, well known as a minister of the Presbyterian church. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Carr was Stephen Crosby, who was born in Herkimer county, New York, and was a farmer and stock man. To Colonel and Mrs. Carr there were born two children: Clark Mills, who died in 1879 and for whom the Clark Mills Carr prize in Knox College is named; and Julia, who became the wife of Captain W. P. Jackson, of the Third Infantry of the United States Army, who is now on duty at Zamboango, in the Philippine islands. Captain and Mrs. Jackson have one child, Margaret.

Colonel Carr is the honored president of the Illinois State Historical Society and also of the Knox County Historical Association and few men are so thoroughly informed concerning the leading events which have shaped the history of the state. His comprehensive knowledge of all such has been made the basis of his authorship of several most interesting volumes, including: The Illini, A Story of the Prairies; My Day and Generation; Lincoln at Gettysburg; The Postal Railway Service; and The Life of Stephen A. Douglas. When an individual has advanced far on life's journey it is frequently said of him: "He is now living quietly at his home, etc." It is doubtful if this could ever be said of Colonel Carr. His has always been an active life and he still keeps in close connection with events that mark the trend of the times and is thoroughly informed on the questions of significant and vital interest to city, state and nation. He is continuously giving out of the rich store of his wisdom and experience for the benefit of others and thus his life remains a serviceable factor in the world's work.

The people of Knox county, and especially the people of Galesburg, will be interested in knowing how much they are indebted to Colonel Clark E. Carr for having in their midst the great transcontinental Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway line, which is shown by the following letters from Mr. William B. Strong, the president of that great system when the road was built to Chicago.

The Partridge Farm,
Beloit, Wisconsin, December 10, '97.

My Dear Colonel Carr: Yours of November 3d came while I was in Boston visiting my daughter, otherwise, it would have had earlier attention. I was glad to hear from you and pleased to know of Mrs. Gaythes. We were sorry to have her sell her pretty home here and leave us. Wherever she may reside, she will have our best wishes.

Touching the Santa Fe, Chicago line—your letter has brought it all up to me so clearly. It was as you say, my aim to have the shortest line between Chicago and Kansas City. The shortest line runs some miles south of Galesburg—Mr. Robinson, the chief engineer, urged the adoption of this line very strongly. Personally, I was anxious to have the road run through Galesburg. My former connection with the C. B. & Q. made me familiar with the place and its attractions for a railroad. The desire for the short line and Mr. Robinson's pressure for the line would have won the day if you had not come forward at the right moment and plead the cause of Galesburg. It was purely out of respect for you, that I sent Mr. Robinson to Galesburg to consider a line through Galesburg. At that very time, Mr. Robinson had orders to adopt the shorter line. The way you received Mr. Robinson and the arguments used by you and others, which were communicated to me in Boston, caused the company to make the proposition to build via Galesburg—provided the right of way through the city was given. This proposition was limited to a few days—I may say a few working hours—it was accomplished. Your faith, hope and courage carried it through.

My knowledge of you made me lean on you in these Galesburg matters and I want to say to you now—as the president of the Atchison Company, at that time—that if it had not been for your efforts, the Santa Fe line would have gone through from Fort Madison to Streator and left Galesburg to one side. I believe—all things considered, that the best route was adopted. I wish to thank you for speaking so favorably of the line from Kansas City to Chicago and what you say about the whole system being disintegrated without it—I fully believe it. The Chicago terminals and the Galveston line—are the three great things about which I was roundly abused—and woefully misrepresented. Today they are considered of great conception—the rock of strength—and parties claim supreme credit for all these sayings, who actually knew nothing of their inception. Such is life. As I hear and read, I sometimes wonder if I ever had anything to do with the Atchison system. In my doubt, and I find when I went to that line in D. C. 1877, there were, all told, seven hundred and eighty-seven miles. When I left it in 1889, seven thousand miles and the average mortgage debt—was only fifteen thousand dollars per mile and stock less than twelve thousand dollars per mile. Pardon length.

With all good wishes, yours sincerely,

WM. B. STRONG.

The Partridge Farm,
Beloit, Wisconsin, January 6, '98.

DEAR COLONEL CARR: Yours of the second inst. came safely. I thank you for it. Your letter I prize. I simply want to say I was amazed to know that anyone believed the Atchison line would have come to Galesburg anyway—regardless of local aid. I want to say to you in the most positive and unequivocal language that the location of the line rested with Mr. Robinson and myself. We agreed perfectly in the proposition made to Galesburg and in the limit of time for its acceptance or rejection. It was accepted the right day.

I was in Boston and I wired Robinson positive instructions if the proposition was not perfected by the proper responsible parties to adopt the southern or more direct route. The aid granted by Galesburg secured the Atchison line, and without that, the road would have been built several miles south of Galesburg. Personally, I preferred to adopt the Galesburg line and there were influences against it which yielded on condition the local aid was given. I am pleased to know of Galesburg's prosperity. I hope it will continue. I am pleased to know you saw Geo. R. Peck. He is a jewel. We fought and bled together; he is no coward. God bless him.

My Dear Colonel I wish you and yours a most Happy New Year and may it come full of good health and genuine prosperity to you and each one dear to you.

Yours sincerely,

WM. B. STRONG.

HORATIO N. KEIGHTLEY.

One of Knoxville's early citizens who gave his cooperation not only to the promotions of all municipal enterprises but also to the development of educational institutions was the late Horatio N. Keightley. He was a native of the state of New York, having been born in Cortland county, on the 25th of May, 1825, and there he was reared and educated. During his boyhood he attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home, supplementing the knowledge therein obtained by a course in the schools of Auburn, New York. Having decided to become a lawyer, upon the completion of his preliminary education he entered the office of William H. Seward, where he prepared for admission to the bar. In 1850, at the age of twenty-five years, he came to Knoxville and established an office, continuing to be actively engaged in practice here for over forty years. He was one of the well read and widely informed attorneys of the county, and was connected with many of the important litigations in its early history, having successfully plead many a cause in the old courthouse. A man of high standards and upright principles, he became known as one who always conscientiously devoted himself to the protection of his clients' interests. In connection with his professional work Mr. Keightley was also interested in the grain business and agricultural pursuits. He owned two fine farms east of Knoxville that he cultivated for two years, making a specialty of raising hogs.

Mr. Keightley married Miss Mary L. Ewing, who was born in Smithfield, Pennsylvania, on the 25th of January, 1831. They were married in this city, on the 25th of May, 1852, by the Rev. W. Y. Miller, and always made their home here. Mrs. Keightley was a daughter of Alexander and Jane (Campbell) Ewing, the father a native of Uniontown and the mother of Somerset, Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, David Ewing, was a native of Ireland. He came to Knoxville in 1836 and with his brother, George, established a general store. Here both he and his wife passed away and were laid to rest in the cemetery in the vicinity of Knoxville. Grandmother Ewing's maiden name was Ruth Brown and she was a native of Maryland. The maternal grandfather was John Campbell, who emigrated from Scotland to the United States, first locating in Pennsylvania, but later becoming a resident of Ohio, where he engaged in farming until his death. Alexander Ewing, Mrs. Keightley's father, was one of the pioneer merchants of Knoxville, having opened a general store here in 1836, that he conducted for many years. He was one of the many who made the long and perilous journey across the prairies to California in 1849 in search of gold. Both he and his wife passed away in Knoxville, her demise occurring on September 26, 1866, and his, on the 2d of January, 1874. She was a member of the Episcopal church, in the faith of which denomination they reared their family. They were the parents of three children, Mrs. Keightley being the only one surviving. The others were as follows: Anna M., the wife of William M. Phillips of Galesburg; and John H., who in 1860 married Cornelia Weeks, and the widow is now living in Eldorado, Kansas. Among the distinguished members of the Ewing family is to be named General Ewing, and Mrs. Keightley is also related to General Sherman. To Mr. and Mrs. Keightley were born eight children, of whom five are now living. Ida, who was born on February 4, 1857, married John G. Breece, a farmer near Caldwell, Kansas, and they have had six children: Henry, who is deceased; Agnes, the wife of Victor Larson; Bertha, who married Carl Stoner; and Charles, Horatio K. and Wilbur. Alice C. was born on the 20th of September, 1859, and died on the 1st of December, 1907. Alexander Ewing, born on September 15, 1861, married Mary McAuly and has three sons: Thomas Ewing, Charles Nelson and Alexander Elwood. He is a resident of Danville, Washington. Mary Ewing, born on January 5, 1864, is a trained nurse in Chicago and the widow of William Bradford, by whom she had two daughters: Helen and Dorothy. Martin Gay, of Wellington, Kansas, born on the 3d of September, 1866, married Sarah E. Butts and has four sons: George Martin, who is in the United States navy; Harry E.; Louis H.; and Albert Ray.

The family always attended the Episcopal church, in which Mr. Keightley held membership as does also his widow. Fraternally he was a Mason and politically a republican, and at all times he took an active interest in affairs of the municipality, having served as justice of the peace and for several terms as mayor. Mr. Keightley always gave his assistance in promoting the development of the community along lines he deemed qualified to best serve the interests of its citizens. He was the first to start the subscription that brought to Knoxville St. Mary's school, an Episcopalian institution, originally known as Ewing University, so called from Mrs. Keightley's family. He was held in the highest esteem not only in Knoxville, where he had resided for so many years, but in the entire county, and his death, on the 7th of April, 1896, caused deep regret in the community. For several years prior to his demise he had been living retired, his failing health having necessitated his withdrawal from active life. He is survived by his widow, who has been a resident of Knoxville for seventy-five years, forty-nine of which have been spent on the old family homestead, where she is still living. Mrs. Keightley had an extensive acquaintance among the early pioneers of this section, whose names now figure prominently in the state's history. She well remembers Lincoln's early days and struggles and was present at an address he made from the balcony of the old Hebbard House, in 1858, and many are the interesting reminiscences she relates of those early days.

JOHN VAN NESS STANDISH.

John Van Ness Standish is a lineal descendant of Captain Miles Standish, of Pilgrim fame, and was born in Woodstock, Vermont, February 26, 1825. His father was John Winslow Standish, who was born in Pembroke, Massachusetts, July 19, 1785. He was a man of many virtues. He was kind, affectionate, trustful, and had a heart full of love for everyone. He possessed good natural powers of mind, and lived to his ninetieth year an exemplary and honorable life.

His mother was Caroline Williams Myrick, who was born in Woodstock, Vermont, December 20, 1790. She was the daughter of Lieutenant Samuel Myrick, who served his country through the Revolutionary war. She was devoted to her family and friends, domestic in her home life, untiring in industry, frugal, discreet, intelligent, and her whole life of sacrifice and duty is stamped indelibly upon the memory of her children.

The ancestry of the Standish family reaches back to a very early period in English history. In the thirteenth century, there were two branches to the family; one called the "Standishes of Standish," and the other the "Standishes of Duxbury Hall." Their location was near the village of Chorley, Lancashire. The first of the name was Thurston de Standish, who was living in 1222. He had a son Ralph, who had a son Hugh. In 1306, on account of differences in religious views, the estate was divided; Jordan Standish becoming the proprietor of Standish, and Hugh, of Duxbury Hall. In 1677, Sir Richard Standish occupied the possessions of Sir Frank Standish. Titled nobility came into the family in the following manner: Froissart relates in his chronicles that when Richard II and Wat Tyler met, the rebel was struck from his horse by William Walworth, and then John Standish, the king's squire, alighted, drew his sword, and thrust it through Wat Tyler's body. For this act he was knighted. The baronetcy, which was established in 1676, became extinct in 1812.

The history of the Standish family in America begins with Miles Standish, the great Puritan captain, who was descended from the Standishes of Duxbury Hall. He was born about 1584 and died at Duxbury, Massachusetts, October 3, 1656. He inherited in a preeminent degree the military qualities of his ancestors. He was the Moses of his time and led the pilgrim band into the "Promised Land" of liberty. Without him, New England for a generation or two would have remained a wilderness and that little Plymouth colony would have become extinct.

Miles Standish's first wife was Rose, a most beautiful woman. She died in about a month after landing at Plymouth. According to tradition, his second wife was Barbara, a sister to Rose. By this second marriage there were seven children. The eldest was Alexander, who built the cottage in 1666 now standing on the "Standish farm" at Duxbury. For his first wife, Alexander married Sarah, daughter of John Alden. His second wife was Desire (Sherman) Doty, by whom he had four children. Their eldest child was Thomas, who married Mary Carver. Thomas had six children, the third birth being a son whose name was Thomas, the great-grandfather of John Van Ness. This second Thomas married Marta Bisbee and had two sons, one of whom was named Hadley. Hadley married Abigail Gardner and became the father of eleven children. The third child was John Winslow, who married Caroline Williams Myrick. They had six children, the fourth birth being John Van Ness.

John Van Ness Standish belongs to the sixth generation from the Pilgrim captain. He was not born in affluence, and consequently, has been obliged to depend upon his own exertions in the great contest of life. He received the rudiments of his education in the common schools of his native town. From these, he passed into private schools, in which he spent several terms. He next became a student for several years, in an academy at Lebanon, New Hampshire, which would vie in thoroughness and scholarship with many of the colleges of today. Having finished here the entire course of mathematics save the calculus, and being thoroughly prepared, he matriculated in Norwich University in 1844, and graduated as salutatorian of his class July 7, 1847. While in college, he was regarded as a most excellent scholar, and in mathematics, the leader of his class. To meet his expenses during these years of study, he taught school winters, commencing at the age of sixteen, and worked on the farm summers. He made study a business, squandered no time, and had but little leisure for recreation or games.

After leaving college, he taught a select school in Perkinsville, Vermont, and when this was closed, he became principal of a graded school in the same village. Not satisfied with the prospects in his native state, he resolved to seek his fortunes in the west. In the fall of 1850, he went to western New York and taught in the graded schools of Farmington, Bergen, Macedon, and Victor, until he was called to the professorship of mathematics and astronomy in Lombard University. Rev. P. R. Kendall, a classmate, was its president, and the letter of invitation sent by him to Dr. Standish contained the following: "You and I are to build a college. I want you to take charge while I collect money." And it may be said that Lombard University owes its existence to the labors of these two men.

On October 22, 1854, Dr. Standish arrived in Galesburg, and on the following day he entered upon his duties as acting president, and professor of mathematics and astronomy. He was acting president for three years, and the institution prospered greatly under his management. From 1854 to 1892, a period of thirty-eight years, he held his professorship. Nor was he confined to his own department. For seven or eight years, he taught the natural sciences, and if any new branch of study was introduced, Dr. Standish was elected as the teacher. A professor said to him, "You have taught the whole college curriculum." Dr. Standish replied, "Not quite." Counting geometry, calculus, logic, Cicero, Virgil, and Livy, as distinct studies, he has taught over seventy—more perhaps than any other two professors in Galesburg.

In 1892, he was elected president of Lombard University, resigning in June, 1895. For the first seven months, he canvassed for funds, and raised by subscription forty-one thousand, five hundred dollars—a larger amount than was ever raised in so short a time by any other man working in the interest of the university. The catalogues will show that during his administration, the patronage gradually increased.

Dr. Standish performed signal service for the college outside of his professorship. He planned the cabinet cases and, with the aid of Mrs. Standish, raised the money to pay for them. He raised the money and purchased the cabinet of corals. He obtained the Cowan collection. He secured the means to build the bookcases. He arranged and planned the shrubbery on the college campus. As another has said, "There is scarcely a place but that you see his hand."

As a teacher, Dr. Standish had but few equals. He was original in his illustrations and methods, and cared little for the opinions of men as written in books. He was a law unto himself, and his teaching was neither by book nor by rote. He was clear, incisive, and never allowed the dullest student to pass from him without a full comprehension of the subject. Many of his pupils used to say, "I can carry away more of his instruction than that of any other teacher." Dr. Anson L. Clark, a graduate of Lombard University in 1858, a professor and president of Bennett Medical College in Chicago for more than a quarter of a century, and a member of the state board of health for as long a period, pays him the following tribute: "As a teacher, Professor Standish had few equals, no superiors. With the subject so completely in hand himself, it was always a wonder, how for the benefit of some dull pupil he could go over a mathematical demonstration again, again, and again, without the slightest appearance of impatience. And to those observing this conflict between light and darkness, it was especially pleasing to note the kindly light of interest and satisfaction which would pass over his countenance when at last he saw that he had won, and that the problem was comprehended. He made such victories a life-work and acknowledged no defeat."

Rev. John R. Carpenter, whose pastorate is at Rockland, Ohio, and who graduated at the University in 1887, says: "Dr. Standish was an ideal instructor. He was a man of leading characteristics, original, positive in his convictions, clear-sighted, and always worked with a definite and good object before him. He was a growing teacher, always bringing forth some new view of the truth. Those who have been students of Dr. Standish are always grateful for the privilege of sitting at the feet of one of the best instructors that this counry ever produced. He would carry his pupils up to the heights, and give them a view of the promised land just beyond. But when once on the heights, no true student ever came down to his old position.

D. L. Braucher, a civil engineer and surveyor, and one of the best mathematicians ever connected with the university, gives his impressions in the following words: "Professor Standish was always thoughtful, dignified in his bearing, and anxious to make his pupils see the truth as viewed from foundation principles. He seemed more like a sympathetic companion than teacher, while we were delving for the hidden truths of higher mathematics. The more knotty the problem, the more persistent the labor, till victory perched on our banner, as she always did. Time has tinted those memories as delicately as the sunshine has painted the rainbow."

As a scholar, Dr. Standish stands preeminent. He is really an all-round man. Not only is he well versed in the lore of books and the teachings of the schools, but he has been a great student in the broad fields of the world. He is well posted in almost every department of science, literature and art. In criticism, he has but few equals. He excels in rhetoric and in grammatical construction in the use of words, and has been called by some scholars a dictionary man. At the ministers' institutes, held in Chicago and other places, he was selected above all others as the critic for the entire sessions.

In his labors and zeal for the advancement and improvement of the common schools, he has hardly been excelled by any one. He has held teachers' institutes, and lectured all over the state—from Jackson and Macoupin counties on the north. He was chairman of the first meeting to establish graded schools in Galesburg, and attended other meetings held in their interest. From 1854 to 1880, he was a constant attendant at the Knox County Institute of Teachers, and was a leading member of the State Teachers' Association. The latter body, in 1859, elected him president.

Dr. Standish has been a great traveler. In company with Mrs. Standish, he has visited the old world three times—in 1879, 1882-3, and in 1891-2. With the exception of Denmark and Portugal, he has visited every country of Europe. Egypt and the Holy Land, and Asia Minor, went to the North Cape within nineteen degrees of the North Pole, saw the midnight sun seven nights, and took a trip of a hundred miles out on the Sahara Desert. Both Dr. and Mrs. Standish have gone abroad for study, as well as pleasure. In his own country, he has visited every state in the Union excepting the Carolinas.

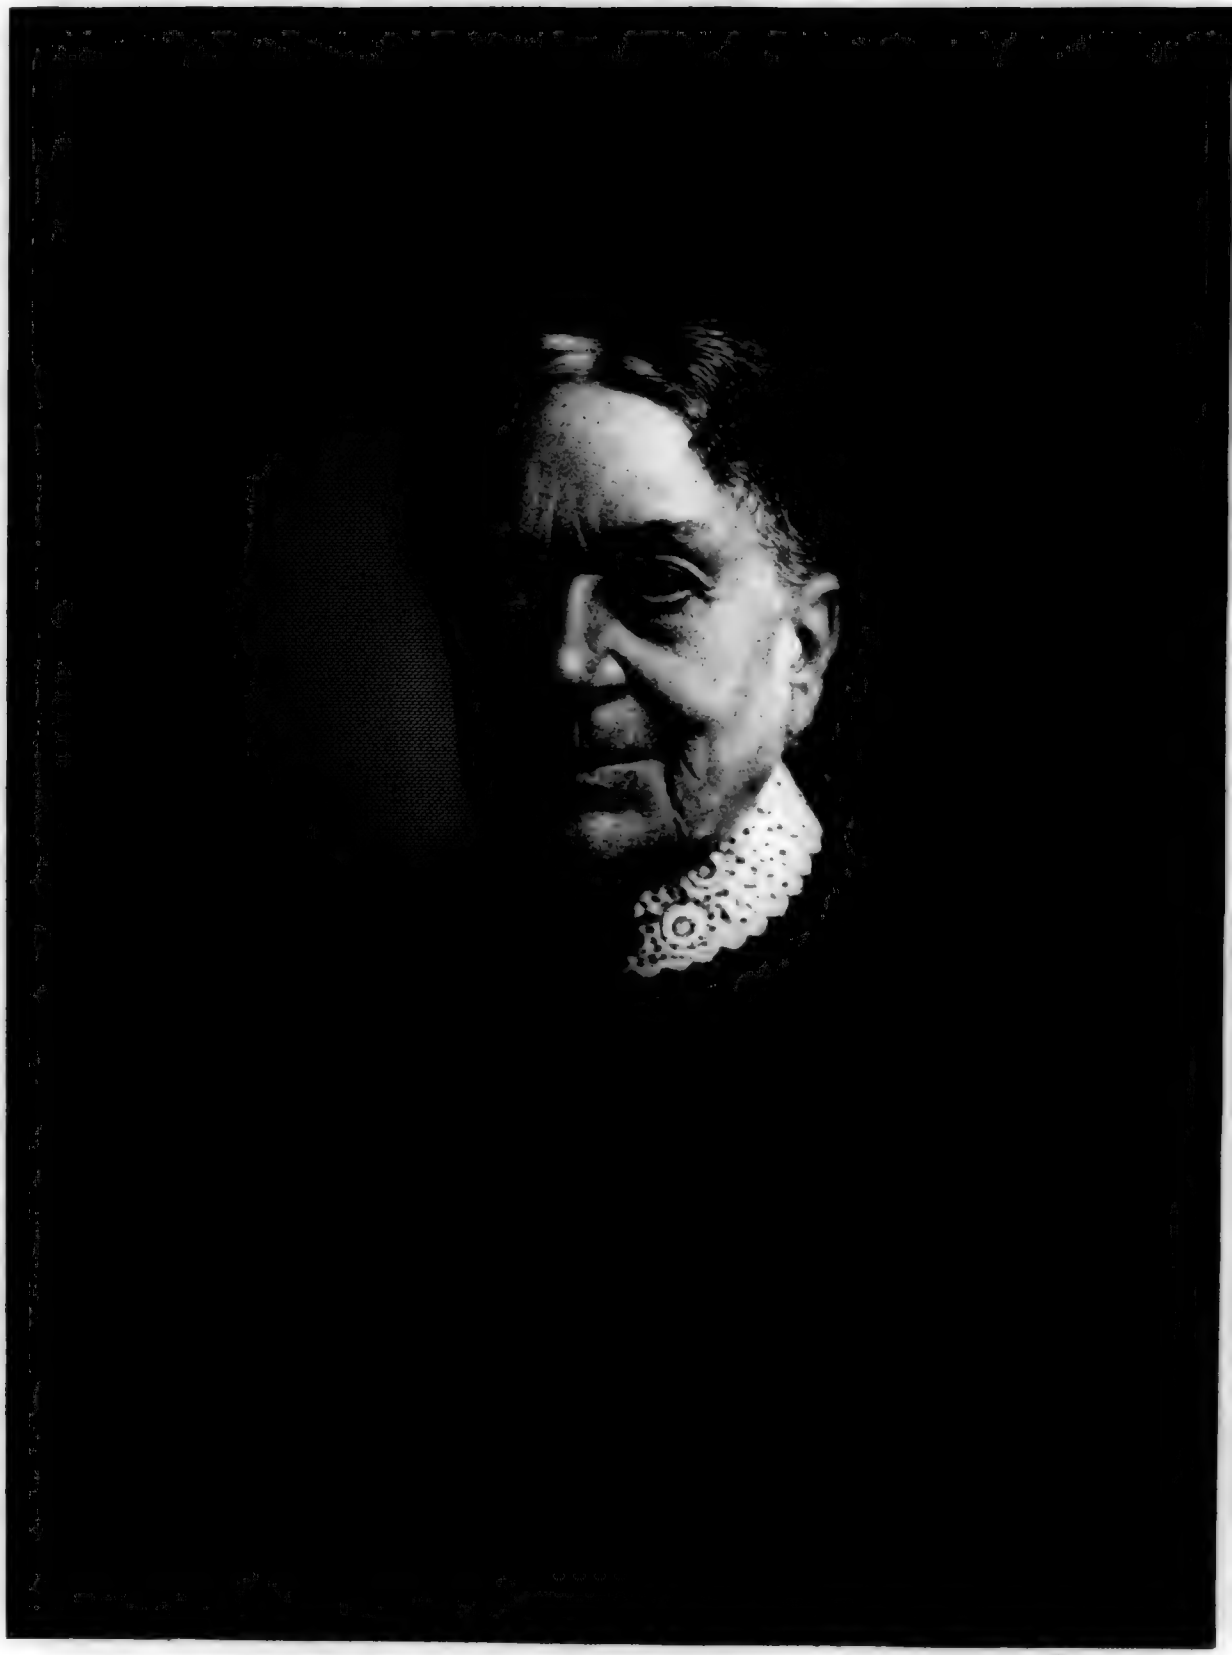
Both Dr. and Mrs. Standish are lovers of art. They have visited every large picture gallery in the world, and many small ones. They are conversant with the museums of Europe and have studied cathedrals and parks, wherever they have traveled. Egypt and Assyria, Greece and Rome, have been laid under contribution, and their treasures have been spread out before them.



As a public-spirited man, Dr. Standish holds a conspicuous place among his fellow citizens. He has done much to improve the city, and has given more hours of labor without compensation than any other man in it. For more than thirty years, he has made his own grounds the most attractive in the city. Another said to him, "Your handiwork is seen all over Galesburg." He has an aesthetic nature, and is fond of mountain scenery, and beauty of landscape. He is a horticulturist, and for nearly ten years, was president of Knox County Agricultural Society. He was once elected a member of the board of education, and for many years, has been a director in the Second National Bank.

As a man, Dr. Standish is kind, benevolent, and charitable, and will make sacrifices for the public good. He is open-hearted, and believes in honesty of purpose and intention. He has no use for double-minded men. In religion he is a Universalist. In politics, he is a republican.

Dr. Standish was married, March 24, 1859, to Harriet Augusta Kendall, daughter of Francis and Rebecca (Stowe) Kendall. She was a teacher of painting, French and Italian in Lombard University for twelve years.

H. AUGUSTA STANDISH.

H. Augusta (Kendall) Standish was born in Phillipston, Massachusetts, March 19, 1823. She died in Galesburg, Illinois, September 17, 1911. Her parents were Francis and Rebecca (Stowe) Kendall, both of whom were natives of Phillipston. The Kendall family were a strong race, both mentally and physically. Their line of descent can be traced back to one of three brothers, who came from England to America about 1630, and settled near Boston. Intellectually speaking, the Stowe family were not, in any respect, inferior to the Kendall family. They were a broad-minded and sensible people and never violated rules of propriety in action. Before acting, they studied conditions and weighed results, so as to accomplish the most without wasting energies or expense. Such were the ruling characteristics of this Stowe family and such were their merits as recorded in the generations in which they lived. In a word, then, both of these families were the stuff out of which good republics are made. They hated anarchy and tyranny and loved freedom for freedom's sake. They believed in law for the lawless and in the largest liberty to those who were governed by the higher law. In truth, they knew no law but duty and right. It was these lofty ideals that made these families such worthy citizens.

Mrs. H. A. Standish

Mrs. Standish was well born. She lived a long and useful life, and died regretted by a large company of sincere friends. When she was but sixteen years old, she lost by death a loving mother. The management and care of the household of five persons fell upon her. For about five years she engaged herself in this domestic task, until failing health compelled a change.

In the district school, Mrs. Standish's school days were happy ones. She was a thorough scholar, thorough in everything she undertook. In her studies, though the youngest, she led her class. Her ideals in education were often expressed by her in two maxims: "It is a sin to be ignorant;" "It does not hurt one to know." In her domestic experience of five years, she did not wholly neglect her studies. She improved every leisure moment and became a proficient in several of the sciences.

But her educational acquirements in the district schools and the instruction she received from private teachers did not satisfy her ambition. She marked out her course and with an unwavering firmness pursued it. She left home and friends and entered as a student the seminary at Charlestown, now a part of Boston. It was here that she pursued the higher branches of learning and became a thorough scholar in French and Italian. It is here that her love for and ability in art were developed, and the many paintings in oil and water colors, which have for so many years adorned her home, were produced. In this seminary, she soon became a favorite. By reason of her earnestness in school work, her womanly character, and her high moral tone, she won the affection and confidence of both teacher and pupil.

She next attended school in an academy at Shelburne Falls, Massachusetts. Here she remained a year or two, still pursuing the higher branches of learning. At this time there were no colleges for women in all our country, nor were they even thought of. The academy and seminary were the only institutions offered them to acquire a broader education. But it must be said that New England academies and seminaries of these early times were fully equal to many of the smaller colleges of today. Then young men and young women "went" to school instead of being "sent." Education then had its full meaning.

At Shelburne Falls, Mrs. Standish bid farewell to seminaries and academies, as far as her schooling was concerned, and afterwards engaged in teaching—her life work. Her first experience as a teacher was in the district schools of her native state. Here she taught with great success. Her reputation as an instructor and disciplinarian was so spread abroad that her services were in constant demand, even at higher wages than other teachers were receiving. She next took a position in an academy in Townsend, Vermont, where she remained a year or more. Resigning her place in the academy, she accepted a similar position in a private school at Saratoga Springs, New York, where she remained until called to Lombard University, Galesburg, Illinois. She arrived in Galesburg, Tuesday, August 29, 1854, and took her position before her classes the following day. The institution then bore the name, "The Illinois Liberal Institute." Its charter gave it the power to confer degrees upon those students who had finished a certain prescribed course of study. Although the institution bore the name "Institute," it was a college to all intents and purposes. What was the character of the institution at this time? Considering this early period, it was "large," two hundred and thirty-three being enrolled at the end of that school year. The classes were composed mainly of students advanced in age and advanced in learning. Advanced Latin, advanced Greek, and the higher mathematics were pursued. There were classes in the differential and integral calculus, and students reading three languages, Latin, Greek and French, in the same term. The great body of the students were so anxious to learn, that they sometimes petitioned the faculty not to omit but to continue their recitations on certain holidays, which petitions were freely granted. To such an institution, to such a company of earnest students, Mrs. Standish was introduced, and of the ability with which she acquitted herself, there are hundreds of living witnesses.

Mrs. Standish was elected to the professorship of French and Italian, and teacher of drawing and painting. Nor was she confined exclusively to this department. She also taught classes in English literature, history, and some of the mathematics. She was principal of the ladies' department, and had a large task in correcting their essays. She held her professorship for twelve years, resigning in June, 1866. During these early years, Lombard University was passing through her most critical period. She was carried through it by the sacrifices of faithful teachers and faithful students. It may be said truly that Mrs. Standish with others passed through fire and water to save the tottering college. Here was an institution of learning without a dollar in the treasury and with no prospect of getting one, with her chapel building in ashes, and with unsuitable recitation rooms scattered all over the city, some of them half a mile apart; and to add to this state of things, each teacher was paid his back salary at the end of the year in script of doubtful value.

Nor were conditions improved on entering the new building in the fall of 1856. Here stood the present college building on the open prairie, far removed from any human habitation. It was unfinished. The walls of many of the rooms were naked, some had lath without plaster, and the outside walls of the rooms exposed to view the rough brick and mortar. There were no baseboards to the rooms and blackboards were not even thought of or planned. But the greatest discomfort was found in the incapacity of two small furnaces to heat the building. No room was heated, and the larger number had no heat at all from morning till night. In recitation, both teacher and pupil, were obliged to wear coats and shawls to protect themselves against the cold. This was the state of things until near Christmas time, when a vacation was ordered with a promise of new and better things. Nor was this the only trouble. During that winter this whole region of country was covered with ice, and then heavy rains came, forming rivers of water near the university, thereby cutting it off completely from the city. To meet the exigencies of the case, lady teachers and lady pupils were compelled to purchase and wear rubber boots in order to reach the university. Notwithstanding these trying times, it must be said that every teacher and every student did his duty. They shirked no task and omitted no lesson. They were at their posts until the day of vacation.

Through all these trials, Mrs. Standish passed. She murmured not, nor complained. She saw the obstacles in her pathway, but like a pilgrim, she took her staff and marched on. Her task was before her, and she could not be turned aside. She knew and felt that success was born of self-sacrifice and self-determination, and success in whatever calling, though humble, gratified her ambition. It was the well done thing that received her encomiums. In all her life her motto was "Not how much, but how well."

As a scholar, Mrs. Standish was more than ordinary. Indeed, she was broadly educated. She was a student all her life. She had an ambition and a desire to learn. If any topic was introduced in conversation of which she was ignorant, she immediately set herself the task of learning it, and that task was finished only when her lesson was learned thoroughly. As a botanist, she was one of the best in the country, having made that branch her favorite study for more than seventy years. She was a superior student in astronomy. She could bound all the visible constellations and call the principal stars by name. Nightly, she watched the planets in their course, and often exclaimed, "How wonderful are the works of the Great Creator!" In the different branches of art, she was almost supereminent. She was really the organizer of the first reading clubs in Galesburg. For twelve years, twice a week, she invited the ladies of the city to her home and discoursed to them on the beauties of the masterpieces in painting and the wonderful creations of Phidias, Michael Angelo, and Canova. Nor was architecture omitted. The Grecian temples, the basilicas of Italy, and the English cathedrals were pictured before them. When Mrs. Laura Bassett visited Europe in 1905, she wrote to Mrs. Standish, "It is over twenty years since I had the privilege of meeting at your home with several other ladies and learning of treasures of art and beauties of architecture. With the maps in Baedecker and plats of the picture galleries, you made it so plain that I always used to say that I felt sure that I could go about here without any trouble at all, and would recognize these different buildings—and so it is." Nor is this all. Mrs. Standish was a scholar in English literature and her correctness of speech was remarkable. Often she would pause and in thought search for a fitting word. It seems that she was born with golden words on her tongue.

As a teacher, Mrs. Standish had but few equals. Her great faculty was in the development of the minds of her pupils. She saw that it was not knowledge the pupils needed, but the power to get knowledge. In her teaching, she was always logical and never diffuse. She never left in the pupil's mind a subject hazily or poorly understood. It was always her endeavor to bring out true manhood and true womanhood in her pupils.

As a citizen, Mrs. Standish was well worthy of the title of public benefactor. She labored for others and not for herself. She believed in civic improvements and worked to make the city a better place to live in. All rubbish and unsightly things distressed her, and no one knows how much time she spent in beautifying the city. Her example and her work she has left behind her, which will be a profit to many. She was ever charitable and kind and a help to all who knew her. She loved the good, the beautiful, and the true, and never descended from the high plane of true womanhood.

Mrs. Standish was united in marriage to John Van Ness Standish, a professor in Lombard University, March 24, 1859. The ceremony was performed in the college chapel by the Reverend Otis A. Skinner, D. D., who was then president of the university, a large number of students and friends being present. The golden wedding was celebrated in Pasadena, California, March 24, 1909. There was only "one" present who attended the original wedding, Mrs. A. M. H. Ellis, of Seattle, Washington, formerly of Chicago.

at the end of that school year. The classes were composed mainly of students advanced in age and advanced in learning. Advanced Latin, advanced Greek, and the higher mathematics were pursued. Notwithstanding these trying times, it must be said that every teacher and every student did his duty. They shirked no task and omitted no lesson. They were at their posts until the day of vacation.

Through all these trials, Mrs. Standish passed. She murmured not, nor complained. She saw the obstacles in her pathway, but like a pilgrim, she took her staff and marched on. Her task was before her, and she could not be turned aside. She knew and felt that success was born of self-sacrifice and self-determination, and success in whatever calling, though humble, gratified her ambition. It was the well done thing that received her encomiums. In all her life her motto was "Not how much, but how well."

As a scholar, Mrs. Standish was more than ordinary. Indeed, she was broadly educated. She was a student all her life. She had an ambition and a desire to learn. If any topic was introduced in conversation of which she was ignorant, she immediately set herself the task of learning it, and that task was finished only when her lesson was learned thoroughly. As a botanist, she was one of the best in the country, having made that branch her favorite study for more than seventy years. She was a superior student in astronomy. She could bound all the visible constellations and call the principal stars by name. Nightly, she watched the planets in their course, and often exclaimed, "How wonderful are the works of the Great Creator!" In the different branches of art, she was almost supereminent. She was really the organizer of the first reading clubs in Galesburg. For twelve years, twice a week, she invited the ladies of the city to her home and discoursed to them on the beauties of the masterpieces in painting and the wonderful creations of Phidias, Michael Angelo, and Canova. Nor was architecture omitted. The Grecian temples, the basilicas of Italy, and the English cathedrals were pictured before them. When Mrs. Laura Bassett visited Europe in 1905, she wrote to Mrs. Standish, "It is over twenty years since I had the privilege of meeting at your home with several other ladies and learning of treasures of art and beauties of architecture. With the maps in Baedecker and plats of the picture galleries, you made it so plain that I always used to say that I felt sure that I could go about here without any trouble at all, and would recognize these different buildings—and so it is." Nor is this all. Mrs. Standish was a scholar in English literature and her correctness of speech was remarkable. Often she would pause and in thought search for a fitting word. It seems that she was born with golden words on her tongue.

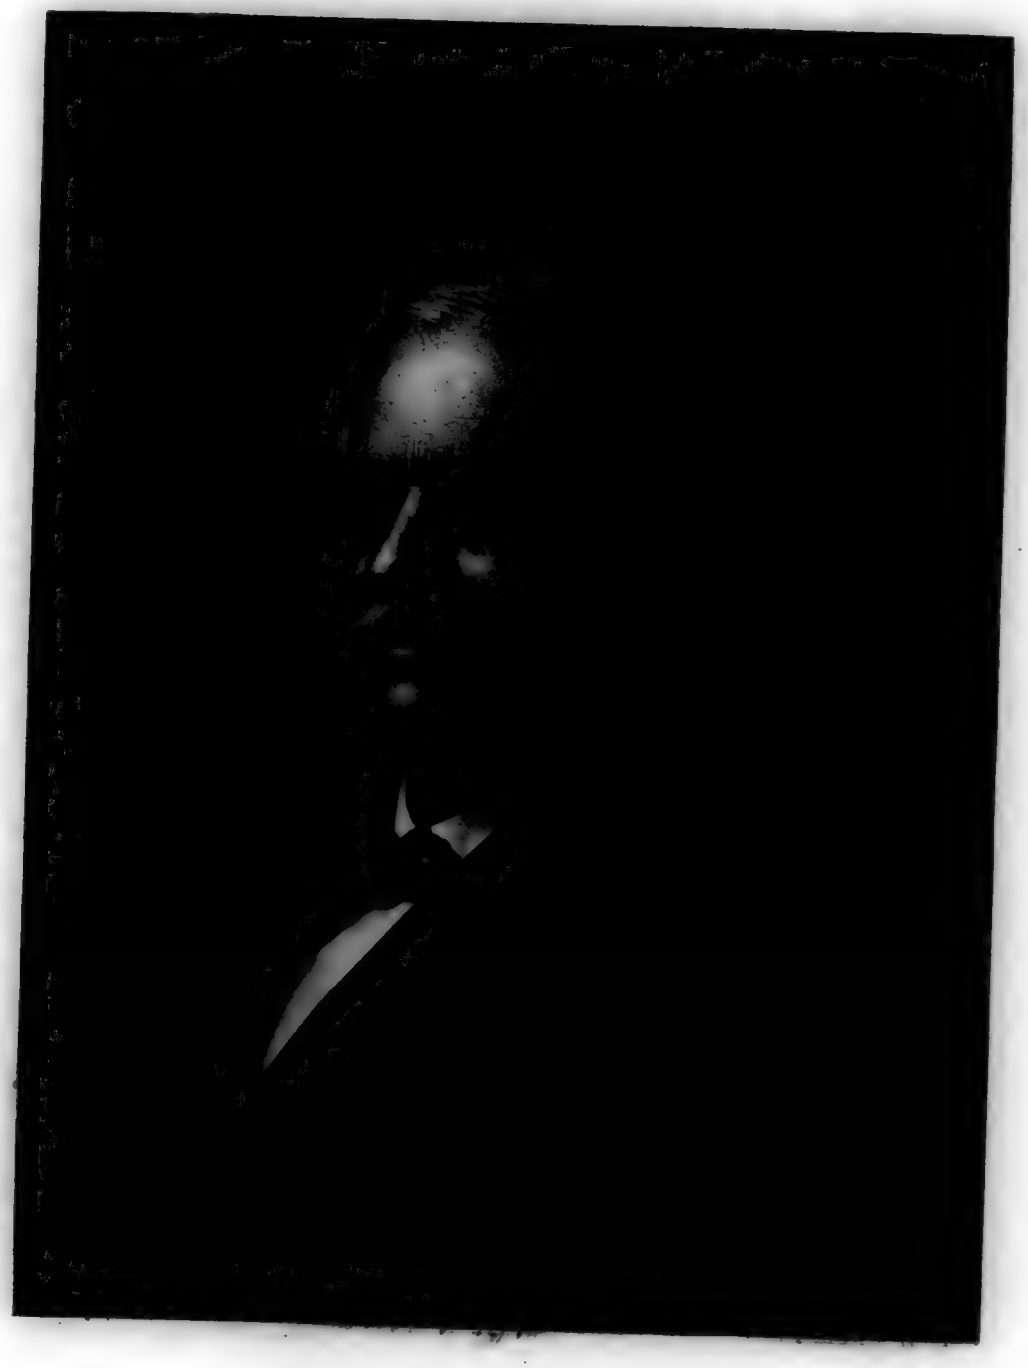
As a teacher, Mrs. Standish had but few equals. Her great faculty was in the development of the minds of her pupils. She saw that it was not knowledge the pupils needed, but the power to get knowledge. In her teaching, she was always logical and never diffuse. She never left in the pupil's mind a subject hazily or poorly understood. It was always her endeavor to bring out true manhood and true womanhood in her pupils.

As a citizen, Mrs. Standish was well worthy of the title of public benefactor. She labored for others and not for herself. She believed in civic improvements and worked to make the city a better place to live in. All rubbish and unsightly things distressed her, and no one knows how much time she spent in beautifying the city. Her example and her work she has left behind her, which will be a profit to many. She was ever charitable and kind and a help to all who knew her. She loved the good, the beautiful, and the true, and never descended from the high plane of true womanhood.

Mrs. Standish was united in marriage to John Van Ness Standish, a professor in Lombard University, March 24, 1859. The ceremony was performed in the college chapel by the Reverend Otis A. Skinner, D. D., who was then president of the university, a large number of students and friends being present. The golden wedding was celebrated in Pasadena, California, March 24, 1909. There was only "one" present who attended the original wedding, Mrs. A. M. H. Ellis, of Seattle, Washington, formerly of Chicago.

In religion, Mrs. Standish was a Universalist, though she was brought up in the Congregationalist faith. She was far from being narrowly sectarian. She thought that good works and an upright life counted for more than blind belief.

In politics, her sympathies were republican, and if she could have voted, her vote would have been cast on that side. In both religion and politics, she believed the higher law should prevail.



REV. FRANCIS BAINES.

Rev. Francis Baines, who is in charge of the parish of St. Patrick of Galesburg, was born in Dudley, Worcestershire, England, on the 3d of December, 1874.

The preliminary education of Father Baines was obtained at Rugby, after which he studied at Mount Wadhurst, Sussex and Monte Calvario, Italy. He subsequently went to Ratcliffe College, as an instructor in Latin, remaining there for two years. At the expiration of that period he engaged in mission work at Loughborough, Leicestershire, England, for a year, and in 1904 he came to this country as an assistant to Father Doubleday, of Galesburg. After serving in this capacity for four years he was appointed head of the parish, over which he has now presided for three years. He is the spiritual counselor of one hundred and thirty families and has under his supervision the following organizations: Sacred Heart Sodality, Children of Mary and the Altar Society. St. Patrick's is one of the popular parishes of the city. Father Baines is very popular not only in his parish but throughout the city, as he is a man of rare culture and scholarly instincts, whose well stored mind makes him a most delightful and entertaining conversationalist. He is progressive in his ideas and exercises a most powerful influence over all the members of his parish, who place a high valuation on his views on any subject, appreciating the fact that they are the result of careful and conscientious deliberation.

LLOYD F. WERTMAN.

Honored and respected by all, there is no man who occupies a more enviable position in business and financial circles in Galesburg than does Lloyd F. Wertman, the president of the First National Bank. This is not due alone to the success he has achieved but also to the straightforward, honorable business methods he has ever followed, and his record indicates that success is not a matter of genius as held by some but is rather the outcome of clear judgment and unfaltering energy. He was born in Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, November 7, 1845, and is one of the seven children of Elias and Mary (Kistler) Wertman. The former was a son of Daniel Wertman, a native of Pennsylvania and of German descent. He removed with his family to Lockport, New York, where he died when well advanced in years. of children, including Elias, Noah, Daniel, Emanuel, John, Jonathan and a daughter. Elias Wertman was also a native of the Keystone state and was there reared. Eventually he followed merchandising in Bloomsburg and Rohrsburg, Pennsylvania, and in the year 1864 removed westward to Illinois, settling that spring in Knox county, where he turned his attention to general agricultural pursuits. He followed farming in both Per Sifer and Elba townships, being for many years actively engaged in the work of tilling the soil. While in Pennsylvania he had wedded Mary Kistler, a native of that state, as was her father, who was of German lineage. He was a distiller and prominent farmer. The death of Elias Wertman occurred in Yates City when he was about seventy-eight years of age and his wife passed away several years before. They held membership in the German Lutheran church and were worthy Christian people. Of their seven children five reached years of maturity, two having died in infancy. Those who attained adult age were: Daniel, now deceased; Sarah, the widow of Spencer L. Finney, of Galesburg; Mary Ellen, the wife of Samuel Chester, of Creston, Iowa; Lloyd F.; and Martha J., the widow of James A. Wilson, of Galesburg.

In his native town of Bloomsburg Lloyd F. Wertman spent his early youth and began his education, which was supplemented by further study in the public schools of Rohrsburg, Pennsylvania, and in the academy at Orangeville, that state. He was also for a year and a half a student in a missionary institute or college at Selinsgrove and when his education was completed he came to the middle west and turned his attention to farming, renting a tract of land adjoining his father's place. Subsequently he purchased his father's farm and remained thereon until 1878, when he removed to Yates City, Illinois, where he spent two years in a cooperative store. On the expiration of that period he formed a partnership with J. H. Nicholson and W. P. Parker for the establishment of a bank at Yates City. Their enterprise was known as the Farmers Bank and its doors were opened for business on the 1st of August, 1880, with Mr. Wertman as cashier. He filled that position for nine years and the success of the bank is attributable in large measure to his efforts and ability. He then sold out to Mr. Nicholson and came to Galesburg, accepting the cashiership in the Farmers & Mechanics Bank of this city, with which he was connected for six years, when he was elected vice president of the First National and after two years was elected to the presidency, so that he is now the chief executive officer of the bank, his guiding policy being such as commends the institution to the confidence and support of the public. In the conduct of banking interests he has ever adhered to the principle, that the banking institution that most carefully safeguards its business in order to protect its depositors, is the bank which most merits the public confidence.

On January 11, 1870, Mr. Wertman was married to Miss Isabella J. Oberholtzer, a native of Eugene, Knox county, Illinois, and a daughter of Henry and Martha (Tucker) Oberholtzer. The family is an old one here, having been established in pioneer times. Her father died from the effects of army experience, having been a soldier of the Civil war, and her mother passed away in Gilson when eighty-five years of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Wertman have been born five children: Elmer, who died in infancy; Mary, who is the wife of Arthur D. Stearns, of Galesburg, and has four children, Philip, Helen, Frances and Virginia; Martha Leorah and Maude, who are living at home; and Norma B., who is the wife of Guy B. Hardy, an attorney of Galesburg, by whom she has one child, Jane. Mr. Wertman is serving as a trustee in the Presbyterian church, in which his wife holds membership. In politics he is a republican, giving unfaltering support to the party, and while residing in Elba township he served as township clerk for ten years, was collector for two or three terms and was also one of the county supervisors while living in Yates City. For twelve years he has been a member of the Galesburg school board and was chairman of its finance committee. No public trust reposed in him has ever been betrayed in the slightest degree and in public office he has done effective work for progress and improvement. Wherever known he is held in high regard and most of all where best known. The close attention which he has given to his business affairs and the honorable and progressive methods which he has followed have constituted the secret of his success, which has won him to a prominent position in business circles among the men of affluence in this county.

RICHARD AUSTIN LAWRENCE.

Richard Austin Lawrence was one of the early residents of Galesburg, identified for a period with its mercantile interests although later he became closely associated with agricultural activities in Knox county. He was born in Littleton, Massachusetts, September 27, 1823, and is descended from New England ancestry long represented in this country. His great-grandfather was David Lawrence, also a native of Littleton, and in Massachusetts he married Hannah Sawtell, of Groton, that state. Their son, David Lawrence, Jr., the grandfather of Richard A. Lawrence, was also born in Littleton and married Martha Adams, a native of Lincoln, Massachusetts. They were the parents of George Lawrence, likewise a native of Littleton, who on arriving at years of maturity wedded Rebecca Merriam, who was born in Concord, Massachusetts, and was a daughter of Joseph and Lucy (Wheeler) Merriam. Her father was likewise a native of Concord as was his father, Joseph Merriam, so that in both the paternal and maternal lines Richard A. Lawrence was descended from ancestry long connected with New England.

In the acquirement of his education Richard Austin Lawrence attended the public schools of his native town and continued his residence in Littleton until thirty-two years of age. Careful consideration of the business situation in the east as compared with the west led him to the belief that he would have better and broader opportunities in the Mississippi valley and in 1855, therefore, he left his home in Massachusetts and came to Knox county, Illinois. He had previously been married, on the 16th of May, 1853, to Miss Edna Miller, and it was two years later that they left New England for Galesburg. Here Mr. Lawrence established a store which he conducted for a time, but later turned his attention to farming which was more to his liking. In that business he won substantial success and as his financial resources increased he acquired considerable land west of the city, adding to his holdings from time to time and improving the greater part of his property. He earned for himself the name of being a thorough and successful agriculturist and did much to develop the county along that line. Moreover, in his business affairs he was progressive and determined and his success was the legitimate and merited reward of his own labors.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence there were born seven children of whom four are yet living: George A., a resident of Galesburg; Fannie E., who is the widow of John G. Vivion and resides in Galesburg; Mrs. Anna M. Linn, of Emerson, Iowa; and Bernard P., a resident of Seattle, Washington.

In his political views Mr. Lawrence was a republican from the organization of the party and always supported its men and measures yet did not seek nor desire office for himself. He held membership in the First Baptist church and his life was passed in harmony with his professions. He passed away on the 11th of August, 1905, in the eighty-second year of his age, and Knox county thus lost not only one of its forceful residents but also a citizen of worth who in every relation of life was found honorable and reliable. He did not seek to figure prominently in public affairs but was ever faithful to his duties and exemplified in his relations with his fellowmen his Christian belief.

FRANK L. ADAMS.

On the roster of county officials in Knox county appears the name of Frank L. Adams, who is now filling the office of county clerk, in which connection he is making a creditable record by the prompt, capable and systematic manner in which he is meeting the duties that devolve upon him. Illinois numbers him among her native sons, his birth having occurred in Yates City, September 23, 1866. His grandfather, William L. Adams, was one of the pioneer settlers of this county, to which he removed when he left his native state of Ohio and sought a home in Illinois. To provide for his family he followed various pursuits. His wife died soon after the removal to Knox county but William L. Adams lived to an advanced age. In the family were three sons and two daughters: Wilson; John W.; Henry; Jennie, the wife of Edward Phillips; and Anna, living in Mulvane, Kansas.

The first named, Wilson Adams, was born in Ohio and was but a young lad when his parents moved westward to Knox county, where he has since resided. He was reared in Yates City and vicinity and there learned the harness maker's trade, which he followed as long as he was able to work. He has since lived retired in Yates City save for a period of five years spent in Galesburg. He was a soldier for a time during the progress of the Civil war and engaged in guard duty in Chicago. His political allegiance has always been given to the republican party, with which he has voted since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He wedded Jane Kerns, also a native of Ohio and a daughter of Alexander Kerns, who was born in that state and made one of the first settlements in Knox county, Illinois, building one of the earliest homes at Yates City. He followed the blacksmith's trade. Both he and his wife lived to an advanced age and passed away in this county. They had two daughters, Jane and Emma, the latter now the widow of Stephen J. Johnson. The former became the wife of Wilson Adams and the mother of two children, Frank L. and Cora, but the latter died at the age of two years.

Frank L. Adams was reared in Yates City and always resided there until 1890, when he came to Galesburg. He had attended the public schools there and after starting out in the business world had followed merchandising for a number of years. His capability for public office was appreciated by M. O. Williamson, who appointed him to the position of deputy county clerk, in which capacity he served until 1901, when Mr. Williamson resigned to enter the office of state treasurer. Mr. Adams was then appointed to the vacant position by the board of supervisors and in 1901 assumed the position, to which he was regularly elected in the following April. For ten years he has now held this position, his reelections coming to him as the unequivocal expression of the high regard reposed in him and appreciation for the worth and fidelity that he has ever displayed in office.

Mr. Adams was married on the 7th of November, 1884, to Miss Annie D. Houser, a daughter of William H. and Sarah (Merchant) Houser. Mrs. Adams was born in Yates City, her parents having become early settlers of Knox county. Both died at Yates City, her father on the 3d of September, 1903, and her mother in 1883. They had a family of five children: Mary and Martha, twins; Laura; and Annie and Nellie, twins. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Adams have been born a daughter, Emma Marie, who is a graduate of the Galesburg high school and is now attending the Conservatory of Music at Knox College.

Mr. Adams has always been a stanch advocate of the republican party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and for several years was chairman of the Knox county republican central committee, in which connection he put forth earnest and effective effort to advance the growth and insure the success of the party. He belongs to Galesburg Lodge, No. 894, B. P. O. E., and also to the Galesburg Business Men's Club, being interested in the movement to promote the business activity and enhance the welfare of the city.

JOHN M. NISLEY.

John M. Nisley, who for a quarter of a century or more as a banker of Knoxville has done much to sustain the financial stability of the county and by honorable and progressive methods has won for himself a position among the representative citizens of this section, was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, near Chambersburg, November 26, 1840. He was one of the nine children of Joseph and Mary (Schwartz) Nisley, who were also natives of the Keystone state. The paternal grandfather was of German descent and both he and his wife spent their last days in Pennsylvania. Of their children two came to Illinois—Joseph and Herman, the latter settling in La Salle county, where he died. The maternal grandfather of John M. Nisley was Daniel Schwartz, a native of Franklin county, Pennsylvania, who devoted his life to farming. With his wife, Mrs. Catharine Schwartz, he removed westward, becoming pioneers of Knox county, Illinois. They settled in Knoxville, Mr. Schwartz purchasing a tract of land on section 31, Knox township, although they lived in the village. Both he and his wife were more than eighty years of age when they were called to their final rest. In their family were seven children, Mary, Christian, Susanna, Daniel, Samuel, John and Catharine.

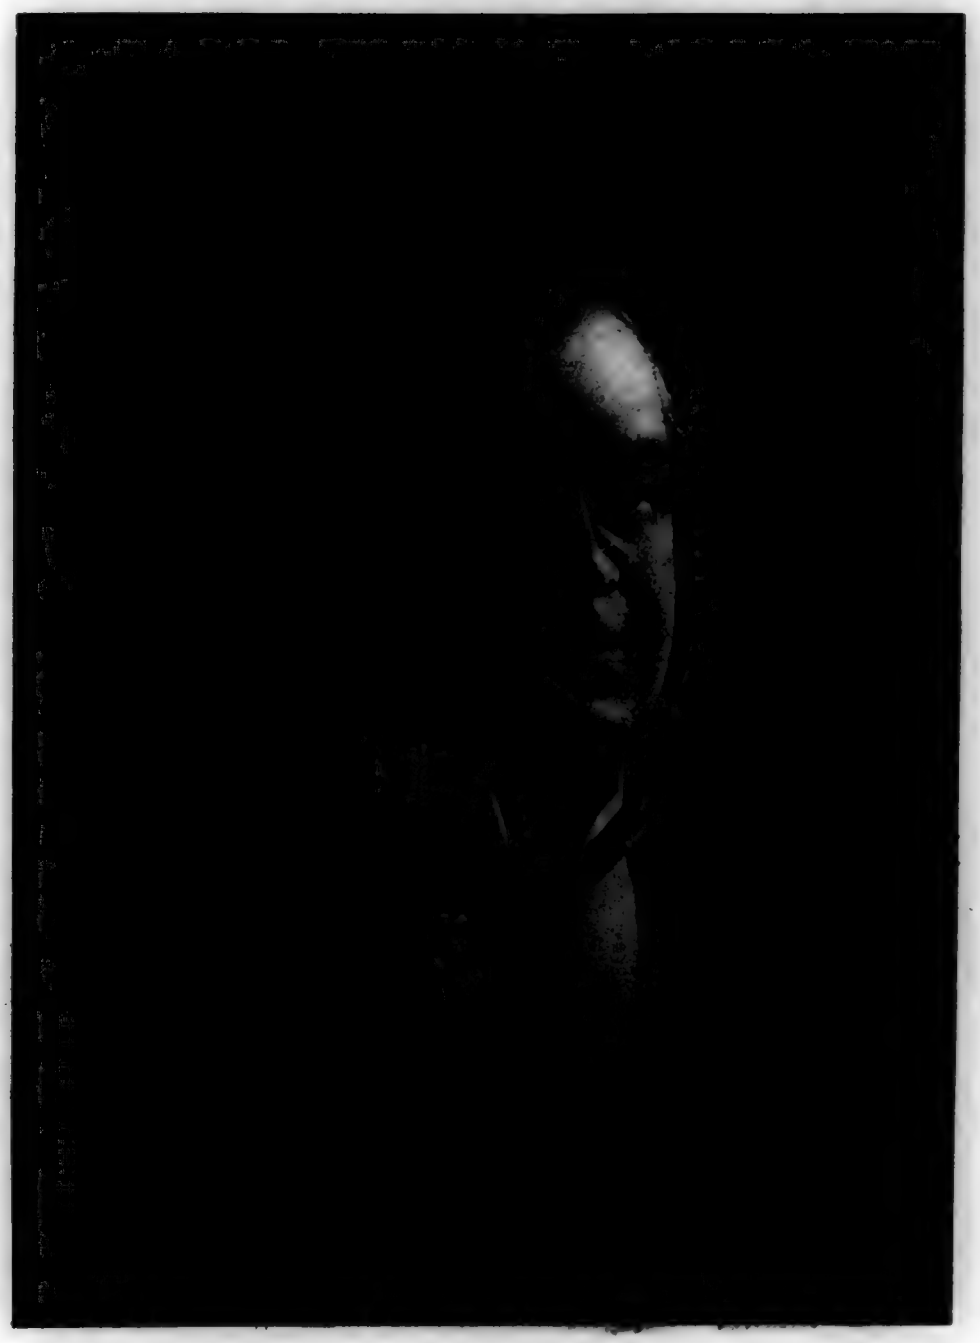
Joseph Nisley, father of John M. Nisley, was reared in Pennsylvania and, being left an orphan when but nine years of age was bound out to learn the cabinetmaker's trade, his apprenticeship covering almost the remaining period of his minority. He worked at the trade until the spring of 1843, when he sought a home in the middle west, making his way to Knox county, Illinois, and taking up his abode upon a farm on section 31, Knox township. With characteristic energy he began to till the soil and transform the wild prairie into productive fields. Year by year the work was carried on with success and he had wrought a marked transformation in the appearance of the farm when on the 2d of January, 1860, he passed away, at about the age of sixty years. His wife long survived him and died in 1894, at the age of eighty-five years. When in Pennsylvania they held membership in the German Reformed church but as there was no organization of that denomination in this county Mr. Nisley afterward became a Lutheran, while his wife placed her membership in the Presbyterian church. They were the parents of nine children of whom seven reached years of maturity, namely: Daniel W. and Abraham, both now deceased; Elizabeth, the deceased wife of Thomas Turney; Samuel, who has passed away; John M.; Mary, deceased, who was the wife of Orlando Case; and Ellen, the wife of Thomas J. Scott, of Galesburg.

John M. Nisley has been continuously a resident of Knox county since 1843, or for sixty-eight years. His youthful days were spent upon his father's farm and his education was acquired in the district schools and in the Knoxville public schools. When not busy with his text-books he worked in the fields and gained practical experience in the best methods of tilling the soil, so that he was well qualified to engage in farming on his own account after he had attained his majority. For twelve or fifteen years thereafter he cultivated the old home farm as a renter and he later purchased it, but eventually disposed of the property and came to Knoxville, where he lived retired for a time. Indolence and idleness, however, are utterly foreign to his nature and, not content without some occupation or business interest, he turned his attention to banking in 1885, opening a private bank, which he has since conducted, having now a well appointed establishment on the south side of the square. Knowing that the bank prospers most which most carefully safeguards the interests of its depositors, he has conducted his business upon a conservative basis and has made the establishment one of the thoroughly reliable financial institutions of the county.



On the 19th of December, 1889, Mr. Nisley married Miss Kate C. Runkle, of Peoria county, Illinois, where her birth occurred. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Runkle, were natives of the state of New York, but removed westward when Peoria county was largely a frontier district. They became identified with farming interests there and both passed away on the old homestead farm. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nisley are widely and favorably known not only in Knoxville but throughout the county, where they have a circle of friends almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintance. Mr. Nisley was made a Mason in 1882 and has always been loyal to the teachings and tenets of the craft. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and for two or three terms he has been a member of the city council, in which connection he has exercised his official prerogatives in support of various progressive public measures. His co-operation can always be counted upon to further any project for the general good and as a man and citizen he stands high in the community. His success indicates the wise use which he has made of his time and opportunities, for in the careful management of his farming interests and of his banking activities he has won substantial success and the most envious cannot grudge him his prosperity, so worthily has it been gained.

CYRUS MINOR AVERY.

In the city of Galesburg, where many years of his life were passed, Cyrus Minor Avery was widely known and his many attractive social qualities and admirable characteristics gained for him the friendship and kindly regard of all with whom he came into contact. He was one of Galesburg's native sons, his birth having here occurred on the 19th of June, 1846, when the city was but a small town and outlying districts of the state were largely undeveloped and unimproved. His parents were George and Saraphena Princess Mary (Phelps) Avery, both natives of the state of New York. The father was born in New Lebanon and was a representative in the seventh generation of a family that traces its ancestry back to Christopher Avery, the line coming down through James, Thomas, Abraham, Nathan and William Thomas to George. As a young man the last named came to the west, arriving in Galesburg in 1837. Here he built the second house in what was then known as Log City. Later the place of his abode now on West Main street came to be called the Avery farm. There he followed general agricultural pursuits at a time when the most foresighted could not have dreamed that his place would one day be near the very heart of the enterprising city. The lady whom he afterward made his wife came to the west with her brother and mother, settling in Knoxville, where they were married. For many years Mr. Avery continued to engage in general farming but at length retired and took up his abode within the limits of Galesburg, living on North Cherry street. There the fruits of his former toil supplied him with the necessities and comforts of life up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 1st of January, 1884. His wife also died at the Cherry street home. They were members of the First Congregational church, in the work of which they took active and helpful part, Mr. Avery serving as deacon for many years. His political indorsement was given to the republican party. In the family were six children: Robert H., who died September 13, 1892; Mary, the wife of W. R. Butcher, living at Roodhouse, Illinois; John T., who died August 11, 1905, at Galesburg; Cyrus M.; Phoebe T., who is living in Biloxi, Mississippi; and George, also of Biloxi.

Cyrus M. Avery was educated in the public schools of Galesburg and in Knox College, where he completed his course with the class of 1868. He worked with his father on the farm for a time and was early trained to habits of industry and diligence. He afterward engaged in the manufacturing business and made for himself a creditable position in trade circles in his native city. Early in the '70s he joined his brother, Robert Hanneman Avery, in the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of agricultural implements in Galesburg. The brother had been a soldier in the Civil war, was captured and was held as a prisoner at Andersonville, where he spent many otherwise idle hours in drawing in the sand of the prison yard designs of agricultural implements which he began to make soon after his release, the first being a stalk cutter and a corn planter. When the plans of the brothers were perfected for the conduct of an agricultural implement manufactory, they began business under the style of R. H. & C. M. Avery, operating their plant at Galesburg until 1882, when they went to Peoria and made arrangements for removing their factory to the latter city. There the enterprise was developed into a very large corporation known as the Avery Company. In 1883, after the removal of the business to Peoria, the Avery Planter Company was organized with a capital of two hundred thousand dollars. Ten years later the authorized capital was increased to three hundred thousand dollars, and in 1900 the name was changed to the Avery Manufacturing Company, at which time the capital stock was increased to one million dollars. The business continued to grow and is now capitalized for two million, five hundred thousand dollars. The plant is one of the most extensive and prominent productive industries of Peoria, with business connections that reach out to all parts of the world. C. M. Avery continued active in the management and control of the interests at Peoria until 1902, when he returned to his native city and erected here a large, comfortable and attractive modern residence. The remainder of his life was divided between the two cities of Galesburg and Peoria, although he regarded the former as his home.

It was here on the 4th of October, 1877, that Mr. Avery was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Evalena Bartholomew, who was born at Elmwood, Illinois, February 25, 1856, and is a daughter of Luzerne and Sarah Elvira (Payne) Bartholomew. They became the parents of five children: Elvira Princess, born September 25, 1878; George Luzerne, September 12, 1879; Grace Ophelia, October 8, 1883; Harriette, June 20, 1886; and Cyrus Minor, May 29, 1899. The first two were born in Galesburg, the last three in Peoria. George Luzerne Avery is still connected with the Avery Company as its secretary. The enterprise is now a business of mammoth proportions and includes the manufacture of agricultural implements, farm wagons, engines, threshers, engine gang plows, gas tractors and city and farm trucks. While the factory and main office are at Peoria, branch houses are maintained at Omaha, Nebraska; Des Moines, Iowa; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Fargo, North Dakota; Billings, Montana; Kansas City, Missouri; Indianapolis, Indiana; St. Louis, Missouri; Grand Forks, North Dakota; Sioux Falls, South Lakota; and Aberdeen, South Dakota.

The family circle was broken by death, when on the 15th of September, 1905, in Galesburg, Cyrus M. Avery passed away. His life record has been a credit and honor to the city which had ever honored and respected him. His business career was notable by reason of its successful achievement and the extent of the concern which was developed through the enterprise and under the able direction of himself and brother. He seemed to possess a faculty for devising and executing the right thing at the right time and this was joined to every day common sense. He seemed easily to discriminate between the essential and the non-essential, to see the possibility for the coordination of forces and to use each opportunity to the best advantage. Method and system were ever features of the business, together with the employment of skilled and expert workmen. In matters of judgment Mr. Avery was seldom if ever at fault and what he accomplished represented the fit utilization of the innate powers and talents which were his. As prosperity came to him he continually reached out a helping hand to those less fortunate and his benevolence was manifest in generous support of many worthy public projects and charities. Something of his position in the city of his birth is indicated in the fact that at his demise the year book of Knox College for 1907 bore the following inscription:

"To the memory of
Cyrus Minor Avery,
honored alumnus, valued trustee, successful business man, upright and influential citizen; whose singular nobility of character, loyal friendship and warm-hearted, open-handed generosity, his Alma Mater holds in grateful and loving esteem,
This book is Dedicated."

This pictured forth the feeling entertained for him not only in Galesburg, and in Peoria, but wherever he was known and no higher testimonial of his character could be given than the fact that he was most honored where best known.

FREDERICK REUBEN JELLIFF.

Frederick Reuben Jelliff, editor of the Republican-Register, of Galesburg, is the son of Fletcher Gould and Mary (Wilcox) Jelliff and was born in Whitesboro, New York, September 25, 1854. His father was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hezekiah Jelliff and was born on Long Island, Connecticut, June 16, 1823. Coming to Knox county, he served as mayor of Oneida in 1869 and his last years were passed in Galesburg, where he died September 18, 1902. The mother of Frederick R. Jelliff bore the maiden name of Mary White Wilcox and was born in Whitesboro, New York, March 21, 1824, being descended from a distinguished New England family that came from England not long after the arrival of the Mayflower. She was married to Mr. Jelliff, May 14, 1846, and unto them were born nine children: Laura, who died in childhood; Helen E., the wife of J. Warren Spera, of Piper City, Illinois; William T., of Galva, this state; Charles F., of Galesburg; Frederick R.; Franklin G., living in Leavenworth, Kansas; Mary W., of Galesburg, who is the widow of Frank Stilson; Louisa C., the wife of W. J. Johnston, of Galesburg; and Lincoln H., of Spring Coulee, Alberta, Canada. The mother died November 26, 1903.

It was in 1858 that the family removed from Whitesboro, New York, to Oneida, Illinois, where Frederick R. Jelliff spent his boyhood and attended the city schools. In 1871 he entered the preparatory department of Knox College and was graduated with honors in 1878. During three winter seasons, while a college student, he taught school in the Dunlap district, northeast of Galesburg, meanwhile keeping up with his classes as far as possible by private study. In the fall following his graduation he accepted a position in the Galesburg high school and for three years was teacher of the first year's work in that institution. He next became local editor of the Republican-Register, with which he has since been associated. At the time he began reporting, Zaccheus Beatty was the editor and Samuel W. Grubb was business manager. Mr. Beatty died in 1896, but for some time prior to his death, owing to his frequent attacks of illness, Mr. Jelliff did the editorial work on the paper in addition to having oversight of the news department. He served as acting editor from the time of Mr. Beatty's death until he acquired an interest in the paper four or five years later and was then appointed editor, in which capacity he has since served. He has seen the paper develop from a small sheet containing no telegraphic news and having a daily circulation of but a few hundred, to one carrying the full telegraphic news of the day, covering the local field comprehensively and the field within forty miles of Galesburg to a remarkable extent and having a circulation of thousands. During all this time he has faithfully tried to do his part to contribute to this growth. Since he became reporter both of the men who then so ably conducted the affairs of the Republican-Register have passed away, Mr. Grubb dying several years ago. The present secretary-treasurer of the paper, O. N. Custer, began as a solicitor under the old management and worked his way up to his present position, while George A. Perry, the efficient business manager, joined the paper on the retirement of Mr. Grubb.

In addition to his work on the Republican-Register Mr. Jelliff has been interested in lines of work having for their object the moral progress of the city and its material development. He was a member of the legislative council of the anti-saloon league, under whose direction the town went dry twice before the local option law was passed and in the two campaigns under that law, in 1908 and 1910, had a share in directing the battle for the "dries." In his editorial expressions he has been consistent in his support for a clean and wholesome city and for honesty and efficiency in the administration of public affairs. In the Galesburg Public Improvement Association and the Galesburg Historical Society he has served as chairman of the program committees for several years. He has also been a member of the Galesburg Hospital Board from the time of its foundation and during most of this period has been the chairman of the committee on accounts and at present is also a member of the administrative committee. While Richard Yates was governor of Illinois he appointed Mr. Jelliff a member of the Western Illinois State Normal School at Macomb and he has for ten years been a member of that board, serving some of the time as its secretary. Mr. Jelliff is a member of the Central Congregational church. For several terms he was president of the men's league of the church and he has been a member of the Young Men's Christian Association from the time he aided in its organization to the present. He was one of the organizers, with Dr. John H. Finley, now president of the College of the City of New York, of the Sunset Club and during much of the time of its existence its secretary. A lover of nature, Mr. Jelliff has for years made a study of the geology of the common sense. He seemed easily to discriminate between the essential and the non-essential, to see the possibility for the coordination of forces and to use each opportunity to the best advantage. Method and system were ever features of the business, together with the employment of skilled and expert workmen. In matters of judgment Mr. Avery was seldom if ever at fault and what he accomplished represented the fit utilization of the innate powers and talents which were his. In addition to his work on the Republican-Register Mr. Jelliff has been interested in lines of work having for their object the moral progress of the city and its material development. He was a member of the legislative council of the anti-saloon league, under whose direction the town went dry twice before the local option law was passed and in the two campaigns under that law, in 1908 and 1910, had a share in directing the battle for the "dries." He was one of the organizers, with Dr. John H. Finley, now president of the College of the City of New York, of the Sunset Club and during much of the time of its existence its secretary. A lover of nature, Mr. Jelliff has for years made a study of the geology of the county and has contributed several papers on this subject to teachers' institutes and local societies. His geological collection is extensive and covers a wide range of the country.

On the 25th of February, 1897, Mr. Jelliff was united in marriage to Miss Lillie C. Bassler, who was born December 11, 1860, to John and Mary (Kern) Bassler, in Galesburg, which place has always been her home with the exception of three years, from the spring of 1874 until the spring of 1877, when the family lived in Burlington, Iowa. During that period she was a student in the Burlington high school. On returning to Galesburg she entered Knox College, from which she was graduated with honor in 1881. While in college she won two prizes, a first and second, in declamation, and her talent in this direction was afterward freely given to the public at social gatherings and in the temperance work in which she has always been deeply interested. For nine years after her graduation she taught in the public schools of Galesburg and then, wishing to make further advancement in her favorite pursuit, she took a two years' course in the Boston School of Oratory under Moses True Brown, from which institution she received a diploma in 1892. Subsequently her work of teaching was confined more closely to expression, which she taught privately, also in the Galesburg high school, in the Waco (Texas) Female College and in the Oswego (Kansas) Ladies' College. Many of her pupils have taken silver, gold and grand gold medals in the Demorest temperance contests; one received a diamond medal and another tied for the same honor. Her services as judge on declamatory and oratorical contests have been repeatedly sought and rendered. Soon after her marriage in 1897 she became a member of the Tourist Club, which she has served as secretary and president. A member of the Central Congregational church, she has always been active in its Aid Society, which she also served as president. For one year she was vice president of the Free Kindergarten Association and two of the most successful tag days ever held were due in considerable measure to her efforts. She also took an active part in two successful campaigns for a dry town and she has twice served on the committee of inspection for the Municipal Improvement Association and also on other important committees. A member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, her activity in its regular work has only been limited by her other obligations. The duties connected with her own home were always placed first by her. The only child born to Mr. and Mrs. Jelliff, Doretta Marie, died April 21, 1899, two days after her birth.

WILLIAM A. JORDAN.

It has been said when in the battle of life the city boy crosses swords with a country lad the odds are against him. The early rising, the daily tasks and the ecnomical habits of the country boy prepare him for the struggle that must precede ascendancy. William A. Jordan is numbered among those who, reared to farm life, have turned to the city for the business opportunities which they sought, and in the utilization and improvement of advantages which have come to him he has made steady advancement, bringing him at length to a most creditable and enviable position in commercial circles of Galesburg, where he is conducting an important enterprise as the senior member of the wholesale grocery firm of the W. A. Jordan Company. He was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, June 19, 1863, a son of William N. and Margaret (Stevens) Jordan, who were also natives of that state. The family, however, was founded in New England at an early period in the colonization of the new world and Newton Jordan, the grandfather, was a native of Massachusetts. He became a farmer, utilizing that occupation in the support of his family. His wife died in early womanhood, leaving five children, William N., Israel, Tain, Lewis and Rebecca. The Stevens family is of Scotch lineage and the maternal grandparents of Mr. Jordan were Reuben and Elizabeth Stevens. The former was born in Ohio, where he died at the venerable age of ninety-four years, while his wife passed away at the age of eighty-seven. Their children were Jane, Prissey, Margaret, Ann, James, Addison and William. Of these Margaret became the wife of William N. Jordan, and they began domestic life upon a farm in Ohio. Mr. Jordan has been reared in that state and devoted much of his life to general agricultural pursuits but had also learned the stone mason's trade, which he followed in connection with farming. At the outbreak of the Civil war his patriotic nature was aroused and he enlisted, serving for four years. He was first a private in the infantry ranks and afterward became a cavalryman. When the war was over he returned to his native state, where he followed farming and also worked at the stone mason's trade until 1887, when he disposed of his business interests there and removed to Grenola, Kansas, where he carried on agricultural pursuits until 1905. In that year he retired from active business life in possession of a handsome competence, which was the merited reward of his labors. Removing to Kansas City, Missouri, he now lives there with his daughter Mrs. Coleman. His wife died in January, 1892, at the age of fifty-four years. She was a Baptist in religious faith in her younger days but afterward went with her husband and children to the Methodist church. The family numbered beside our subject four sons and three daughters: Colonel Ellsworth Jordan, of Galesburg; Raymond, deceased; James L., who is living in Rollinsville, Colorado; John H., a resident of Chanute, Kansas; Renna, the wife of John Crother, of Grenola, Kansas; Lizzie, the wife of Ware Sprague, of Chanute, Kansas; and Margaret, the wife of C. L. Coleman, of Kansas City, Missouri.

William A. Jordan spent his youthful days in Guernsey county, Ohio, remaining on his father's farm until he had attained his majority and early becoming familiar with the duties and labors incident to the cultivation of the fields. His education was acquired in the district and public schools and in 1884 he came to Galesburg, where he entered the employ of Crocker & Robbins, grocers of this city. He attended night school in Professor Barringer's Business College. For seven years he remained with the firm of Crocker & Robbins—a fact which indicates his thorough reliability and worth—and at the end of that time he was admitted to a partnership, a stock company being organized with a capital of ten thousand dollars. Mr. Jordan purchased a fifth interest in the business and became manager, but at the end of three years he resigned that position and in 1894 established his present business under the firm name of W. A. Jordan Company. He is now the president, with F. S. Johnson as secretary and treasurer. The enterprise was established on a small scale and they delivered goods with a cart. The next spring a second-hand delivery wagon was purchased and the family horse was used for delivery purposes. Gradually, however, the business has grown and its scope has been extended until the house now conducts a large wholesale trade in groceries and fruits, shipping its goods to several states. Mr. Jordan is a man of resourceful business ability, who has not limited his efforts to one line, for he is now a director of the E. Z. Trapp Manufacturing Company and is also financially interested in the Wagner Printing Company of Galesburg and other business projects of this city and in the Sun Tunnel, Milling & Transportation Company of Gilpin county, Colorado.

On the 18th of November, 1890, Mr. Jordan was married to Miss Molly M. Elder, a daughter of William J. and Molly Elder, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania and are now residents of Galesburg. The father served throughout the entire period of the Civil war as a defender of the Union cause. In his family are three children who are yet living, Molly, Alto and William J. Mrs. Jordan was born at Dry Run, Pennsylvania, and by her marriage has become the mother of three sons, Clarence William, Cecil A. and Raymond Elder. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jordan hold membership in the First Methodist Episcopal church and he is serving as chairman of its board of trustees, while for sixteen years he has been superintendent of its Sunday school. He is much interested in all the departments of church work and by liberal contribution of his time and means has done much to promote the growth of the church and extend its influence. He became one of the early members of the Galesburg Club and served on the building committee that erected the present handsome clubhouse. He has attained success without allowing personal interests or ambition to dwarf his public spirit or activities. His is the record of a strenuous life—the record of a strong individuality, sure of itself, stable in purpose, quick in perception, swift in decision, and energetic and persistent in action.

HON. ROBERT CLIFFORD RICE.

Hon. Robert Clifford Rice, who since his admission to the bar has given his undivided attention to the work of the courts, his ability as advocate and counselor recommending him for election to the bench, is now serving as judge of the county court of Knox county, to which he was chosen by popular suffrage in 1906 and again in 1910, so that he is now serving for the second term. He was born in Berwick township, Warren county, Illinois, March 31, 1872, one of the three children of Harvey and Laura (Walker) Rice. His paternal grandfather was Rev. Robert Rice, a minister of the Christian church, who also devoted a portion of his time to farming. He became an early settler of Warren county, Illinois, where he carried on agricultural pursuits and also engaged in preaching the gospel as opportunity offered. His death resulted from the effects of injuries sustained, while hauling lumber, in middle life. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Iden, survived him for many years and passed away in Abingdon, Illinois, at the age of eighty-one years. They were the parents of a number of children, including Harvey, Izora, William, Perry and several who died in infancy. The maternal grandfather of Judge Rice was George Walker, who also made farming his life work. He wedded Sarah Hedges and they became early residents of Warren county, where his attention was given to the work of the fields until his labors were ended by death when he was in the prime of life. His wife passed away when about sixty years of age. Their family numbered six children, Laura, Bird, Dottie, May and two, who died in infancy.

Harvey Rice, the father of Judge Rice, spent his youthful days in Indiana and Illinois, coming to the latter state when yet a boy and reaching his majority when a resident of Warren county. He early became familiar with all the duties and labors that fall to the lot of the agriculturist and, after spending one year in Nebraska, in early manhood returned to Warren county, where he followed farming until his death. He was killed by lightning in 1875, when but twenty-nine years of age. In early manhood he had wedded Laura Walker, a native of this state, and the three children born unto them were: Carl, who died in infancy; Robert Clifford; and Eva, now the deceased wife of George Messplay.

Judge Rice is now the only survivor of his family, although his mother is still living in Monmouth, Illinois, with the judge's stepsister. He spent his youth on the old homestead farm in his native county and through the summer months aided in the work of the fields, while in the winter seasons he attended the country schools. Later he had the advantage of a course in the Abingdon Normal College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1893. He afterward engaged in teaching in the district schools for two terms and later worked at the printer's trade on the Enterprise-Herald, of Abingdon, for a year. While thus engaged he devoted his evening hours to reading law under the direction of Judge Dennis Clark, who was judge of the county court for twenty-one years. In September, 1895, Mr. Rice came to Galesburg and entered the office of Thompson & Shumway as a student, there continuing his reading until his admission to the bar in January, 1897. The following year he began practice in Galesburg as a member of the law firm of Carney, Shumway & Rice, this association being maintained until Mr. Carney was elected mayor of the city. The two remaining partners continued together until Mr. Shumway was chosen as the chief executive of the city, subsequent to which time Mr. Rice practiced alone with good success until 1906, when he was elected county judge. An excellent presence, an earnest manner, marked strength of character, a thorough grasp of the law and the ability to accurately apply its principles made him an effective and successful advocate and insured him equal rank with the distinguished men who have presided over the county court. Public indorsement of the first term of service came to him in his reelection in 1910. His reported opinions indicate his legal learning and superior ability and show a thorough mastery of the questions involved, together with an admirable terseness and clearness in the statement of the principles upon which his opinions rest.

On the 17th of April, 1901, Judge Rice was married to Miss Kathryn Gregory, of Bowling Green, Indiana, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Carr) Gregory. Mrs. Rice was born in Bowling Green, Indiana, and her parents were also natives of that state. Her father, who served as a soldier of the Union army in the Civil war, died in 1884, but her mother is still living and yet makes her home in Bowling Green. In their family were five children, Leota, Lena, Kathryn, Bertha and Gertrude, the last two of whom are deceased. Judge and Mrs. Rice have become the parents of a daughter, Dorothy. In his political views Judge Rice has always been a republican, stanchly advocating the principles of the party, yet never allowing his political preference to interfere in the slightest degree with the discharge of his official duties. He holds membership in the Christian church and his wife is a member of the Christian Science church. Fraternally he is connected with Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M. and also with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. His entire life has been passed in this section of the state, and in Galesburg, where he has now resided for sixteen years, he has made many friends, who esteem him no less for the individuality of a personal character which impresses itself upon the community than for the superior ability he has displayed in the profession which he has chosen as his life work.

FREDERICK ZINA WIKOFF.

Frederick Zina Wikoff, a lifelong resident of Knox county, spending the greater part of his years in Sparta township, represented one of the old pioneer families here and his personal record was in harmony with that of an honored and honorable ancestry. He ever followed the occupation of farming and by reason of his practical methods and progressive spirit contributed much to the general advancement along agricultural lines. He was born in Ontario, Illinois, December 27, 1846, his parents being John and Cornelia (Crane) Wikoff. The family originally bore the name of Van Wikoff and came of Dutch ancestry. John Wikoff, father of Frederick Z. Wikoff, came from New Jersey to Illinois in the fall of 1836, making the trip from Ohio on horseback. Knox county was his destination and after arriving here he entered one hundred and forty acres of land, situated on section 36, Rio township. It was just as it had come from the hand of nature, not a furrow having been turned nor an improvement made upon the place, but the soil was naturally rich and productive and responded readily to the care and labor which he bestowed upon it. Year after year the work of cultivation and improvement was carried forward until the farm became one of the valuable properties of that section. Thereon Mr. and Mrs. Wikoff resided for fifty-four years, celebrating their golden wedding there. In early manhood he had married Cornelia Crane, a daughter of Zina Crane, who came with his family to Knox county when Mrs. Wikoff was but fourteen years of age, making the journey from the state of New York overland in wagons. She afterward engaged in teaching school in Henderson and always strove to cultivate a love of learning among her children. She also proved a faithful companion and helpmate to her husband, aiding and encouraging him throughout his business career. The farm that John Wikoff secured on coming to Knox county is still in possession of the family, being now occupied by a son of Frederick Z. Wikoff. The old homestead is a beautiful place, having been improved by two generations and always kept in excellent condition. John Wikoff was actively interested in the public welfare and gave his aid and cooperation to many movements for the general good. He was at one time supervisor of Rio township and there he resided until his death, which occurred April 30, 1897, when he was eighty-four years of age. Unto him and his wife were born five children: Gertrude A., now the widow of Hiram Colby; Frederick Z., of this review; Harriet E., the wife of G. H. Pratt; Carrie F., the wife of S. T. Howell; and Mary M., the wife of O. Oliver, now deceased.

Frederick Z. Wikoff spent his entire life in Knox county, being reared upon the old homestead farm, where he was early trained to habits of industry, economy and integrity. He acquired his education in Knox and Hedding Colleges and the intellectual development thus stimulated constituted a chief source of his success. His entire life was devoted to general agricultural pursuits and he became the owner of a fine farm in Knox county, in the cultivation of which he was very successful, adding thereto many improvements.

On the 16th of September, 1874, Mr. Wikoff was united in marriage to Miss Ida M. Conger, a daughter of John N. and Elizabeth (Wheeler) Conger. Her grandfather, Uzziah Conger, came to Knox county, in 1838, and settled in Cherry Grove. He married Hannah West and they lived to celebrate their golden wedding. Their son, John N. Conger, was a native of New York and, having arrived at years of maturity, wedded Elizabeth Wheeler, a native of Connecticut and a daughter of Alvah and Jerusha (Stevens) Wheeler who on leaving New England removed from Connecticut to Knoxville, Illinois, in 1838. Mr. Wheeler was a carpenter by trade and assisted in building the first courthouse in Knox county. It was their daughter Elizabeth who became the wife of John N. Conger, who was one of the early settlers of the county and is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. Their daughter Ida became the wife of Mr. Wikoff and to them were born four children who are living: Winn C.; Gem, who is now the wife of W. B. Nelson; John N.; and Cornelia. They also lost a child. The death of Mr. Wikoff occurred March 10, 1905, when he was but fifty-eight years of age. He had spent the greater part of his life in Sparta township and no one of the community was more widely known or more highly respected. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and he was ever a public-spirited citizen, interested in the welfare and upbuilding of county, state and nation. He attended the Baptist church and was ever a kindly and generous man, whose heart went out in ready response to all who needed assistance, while his beneficent spirit was manifest in many tangible ways. He did not seek to figure prominently in the public life of the community, but his genuine personal worth gained him high regard so that his death was deeply deplored not only by his immediate family, among whom he was ever a devoted husband and father, but also by the many friends whom he had won during his long residence in Knox county.

JAMES D. O'CONNOR.

James D. O'Connor, engaged in a general contracting business in Galesburg, his native city, was born January 31, 1872, a son of James and Margaret (Ryan) O'Connor. The father was a native of Lebanon, New York, while the mother was born in County Limerick, Ireland, whence she was brought to the United States by her parents when three years old. In his boyhood days James O'Connor came to Galesburg and in early manhood was here engaged in the livery business, while later he figured prominently in real-estate circles, winning along those lones the success that now enables him to live retired, his home being at No. 173 West Main street. He is an independent voter, standing for progress and improvement rather than for partisanship, and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, several times elected him to represent the second ward as alderman. He was also a member of the board of appraisers. He belongs to the Catholic church and is a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Galesburg Club. His wife died in November, 1904. In the family were six children: Martin, who is a resident of Galesburg, Illinois; Mary, deceased; James D., of this review; Lillian, the wife of C. H. Nold, of St. Joseph, Missouri; Alice, the wife of W. C. Johnson, of Galesburg; and Fred, who has passed away.

In St. Joseph's Academy James D. O'Connor pursued his early education and afterward attended Notre Dame University of South Bend, Indiana. Throughout the entire period of his connection with business affairs he has engaged in general contracting, putting in a large portion of the sewers of this city and doing much other public work which has placed him in a substantial position among the industrious, enterprising and successful business men of the city. He has ever realized that energy is the basis of business advancement and has diligently and persistently prosecuted his work so that substantial results have been achieved.

On the 28th of October, 1897, Mr. O'Connor was married in this city to Miss Louisa Hurley, a daughter of John and Sarah Hurley, of Galesburg. They now have two children: Ruth, whose natal day was October 22, 1898; and Fred, whose birth occurred on the 19th of November, 1899. Both were born in Galesburg. The parents are communicants of the Catholic church and in politics Mr. O'Connor has followed in his father's footsteps, maintaining an independent position, supporting such measures as he deems effective forces in good government and such candidates as he believes will prove loyal to the public trust. He has himself served as alderman from the first ward during the past four years and exercises his official prerogatives in support of many progressive movements for the general good.

JAMES H. ROUNDTREE.

James H. Roundtree is a retired farmer living at No. 860 North Cedar street, in Galesburg. He has made his home in the city since 1892, previous to which time he was closely associated with general agricultural pursuits and is still the owner of a valuable farm of one hundred and ninety-six acres from which he derives a substantial annual income. He was born at Old Henderson, in this county, December 10, 1836, and is a son of John D. and Docia (Fuqua) Roundtree, both of whom were natives of Virginia. The former was a son of Dudley Roundtree, who was born in the Old Dominion and became an early settler of Hart county, Kentucky, where he died when well advanced in years. He was

States by her parents when three years old. In his boyhood days James O'Connor came to Galesburg and in early manhood was here engaged in the livery business, while later he figured prominently in real-estate circles, winning along those lones the success that now enables him to live retired, his home being at No. 173 West Main street. He is an independent voter, standing for progress and improvement rather than for partisanship, and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, several times elected him to represent the second ward as alderman. He was also a member of the board of appraisers. He belongs to the Catholic church and is a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Galesburg Club. His wife died in November, 1904. In the family were six children: Martin, who is a resident of Galesburg, Illinois; Mary, deceased; James D., of this review; Lillian, the wife of C. H. Nold, of St. Joseph, Missouri; Alice, the wife of W. C. Johnson, of Galesburg; and Fred, who has passed away.

In St. Joseph's Academy James D. O'Connor pursued his early education and afterward attended Notre Dame University of South Bend, Indiana. Throughout the entire period of his connection with business affairs he has engaged in general contracting, putting in a large portion of the sewers of this city and doing much other public work which has placed him in a substantial position among the industrious, enterprising and successful business men of the city. He has ever realized that energy is the basis of business advancement and has diligently and persistently prosecuted his work so that substantial results have been achieved.

JAMES H. ROUNDTREE.

James H. Roundtree is a retired farmer living at No. 860 North Cedar street, in Galesburg. He has made his home in the city since 1892, previous to which time he was closely associated with general agricultural pursuits and is still the owner of a valuable farm of one hundred and ninety-six acres from which he derives a substantial annual income. He was born at Old Henderson, in this county, December 10, 1836, and is a son of John D. and Docia (Fuqua) Roundtree, both of whom were natives of Virginia. The former was a son of Dudley Roundtree, who was born in the Old Dominion and became an early settler of Hart county, Kentucky, where he died when well advanced in years. He was blind for twenty years before he died. Unto him and his wife were born four sons, Turner, John D., Charles and Dudley. The maternal grandfather of James Roundtree was James Fuqua, a native of Virginia and a farmer by occupation. He died in Kentucky but the mother came to Knox county, Illinois, in 1830, settling near Old Henderson, and there died when about eighty years of age. They were the parents of six daughters and three sons, Daniel, Obadiah, John, Docia, Martha, Mary, Jane, Narcissus and Jeremiah.

Both of the parents of James H. Roundtree on leaving Virginia became residents of Hart county, Kentucky, and in 1830 came to Knox county, Illinois, settling near Old Henderson, in Henderson township. The father purchased land warrants of the soldiers, who had served in the war of 1812. The Indians were then numerous here, for the Black Hawk war had not yet occurred and the red men had not learned that their white-faced brothers were the stronger in an effort to claim the country and convert it to the uses of civilization. When the Indians became troublesome and, in fact, were a menace to life in this state John D. Roundtree joined with the volunteer soldiers for service in the Black Hawk war and after his death his wife drew a pension of about six or eight dollars a month. He purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land and later another one hundred and twenty acres, all of which he improved and thereon reared his family. He was born in 1800 and died about 1851. His wife afterward removed to Marshall county, Kansas, settling near Frankfort, and died about 1896 at a very advanced age, lacking but three weeks of being ninety-four years. In their family were twelve children, of whom five are now living: Betsy, the widow of Robert Osborn, living at Frankfort, Kansas; Dudley, of Oldsburg, Pottawatomie county, Kansas; James H., of this review; Narcissus, the wife of Lathan Howe, of Old Henderson; and William, of Paradise, Kansas.

James H. Roundtree spent his youthful days in this county and is the oldest continuous resident here with the exception of Harvey Montgomery, having spent seventy-five years in this county. He was reared upon his father's farm and attended one of the old-time subscription schools. He was only thirteen years of age at the time of his father's death and upon him devolved the responsibility of managing and operating the farm. As time passed on, he purchased parts of the old homestead until he eventually became the owner of the greater part which, however, he afterward sold. He next purchased a farm of sixty-six acres near Wataga, and traded with his father-in-law for another farm. This he in time sold and removed to Wataga, where he resided until 1892, when he went to Galesburg and in the following year erected his present residence, where he and his wife have since resided, enjoying a well earned rest there. He now owns a farm of one hundred and ninety-six acres in Sparta township and this returns to him a good income. This farm once sold for fifteen dollars an acre but is now worth two hundred and twenty-five dollars. While devoting his energies to agricultural pursuits, his time and endeavors were so well employed that he derived therefrom the merited reward of earnest, persistent labor and thus accumulated a handsome competence that now supplies him with all of the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

On the 19th of December, 1861, Mr. Roundtree was married to Miss Nancy Ann Duval, who was born in Henderson township, this county, May 19, 1844, a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Shumate) Duval, who came from Kentucky to Illinois about 1831, settling first near Monmouth and later removing to Henderson township, where Mrs. Roundtree grew to womanhood. Her father died September 29, 1891, at the age of eighty-two years and her mother passed away in 1888, when eighty years of age. They were the parents of ten children, of whom four are living, Mary, Helen, Martha and Nancy Ann. Mr. and Mrs. Roundtree were married in the old courthouse in Knoxville. They have no children of their own but adopted a daughter, Lillian May, whom they reared from the age of three weeks. She is now the wife of Frank S. Card, and they resided for a while in Denver, Colorado, whence they lately removed to Riverside county, California.

It was on the 19th of December, 1911, that James and Nancy Ann Roundtree could look back upon fifty years of life companionship and celebrated their golden wedding at their home, No. 860 North Cedar street, Galesburg, at which time they received many beautiful gifts and the good wishes of a host of devoted friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Roundtree are members of the Christian church and his political support is given to the democratic party. It is most interesting to converse with this worthy couple and hear their reminiscences concerning Knox county in its pioneer period. He is acquainted with all the events of importance which have left their impress upon the history of the county and has been a witness of many of these. He has participated in the agricultural development of the county and has seen its transformation from a wild and sparsely settled district into one of the most populous and prosperous portions of the state. He can remember the time when many of the homes were log cabins with their great fireplaces and their tallow candles; when much of the farm work was done by hand according to methods that had been in vogue for centuries. He has lived to see marked changes in the methods of farming as the cultivator, the reaper, the riding plow, the harvester and the thresher have been introduced, relieving man of the most trying and arduous work of the fields. In his own farming methods he kept pace with the general progress and his success came as the merited reward of his labor. No history of Knox county would be complete without the sketch of James H. Roundtree who, as previously stated, is with two exceptions the oldest continuous resident of this locality.

FRANK E. WILSON.

The record of Frank E. Wilson is that of an enterprising, reliable business man who has ever recognized the fact that industry and close application are indispensable forces of success and has, therefore, used them in attaining his present position in financial circles. He is president of the Knox County State Bank of Knoxville, in which connection he is conducting a business of considerable extent and importance, the bank being situated in the midst of a rich agricultural region. Mr. Wilson is widely known because of his long residence here, his birth having occurred in Truro township, Knox county, January 12, 1868. He was the third in order of birth in a family of four children, whose parents, John and Mary (King) Wilson, were natives of Westmoreland county, Virginia, and of Ohio respectively. The former was a son of Jacob and Jane (Calhoun) Wilson, both natives of Virginia, the latter having been a cousin of John C. Calhoun, the distinguished statesman. They had five children, John, Solomon, William, Jacob and Jane. The maternal grandfather of Frank E. Wilson was an Ohio farmer, who with his family removed westward to Knox county, Illinois, making the journey overland with an ox team. They settled in the eastern part of Knox county among its pioneer citizens and took active and helpful part in the work of later development and improvement, both dying there when well advanced in years. They had a large family, including James; William; Mrs. Jane Ellsworth; Mrs. Catharine Nicholson, who still lives in Knox county; Mary, who became Mrs. Wilson; Mrs. Matilda Ellsworth, now deceased; and Mrs. Peggy Nelson.

John Wilson was but a young lad when he accompanied his parents on their removal from Virginia to Greene county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood. He then sought the opportunities of a less thickly settled district and became one of the early residents of Knox county, Illinois, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres in Truro township. For a number of years he continued its development but sold out in 1875 and removed to Knox township, where he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, making it his home for a long period. His labors converted the place into a very productive tract, from which he annually gathered rich harvests. There he lived until September, 1893, when he died at the age of seventy-seven years, and his wife's death occurred in 1907, when she had reached the age of seventy-two years. Both were consistent Christian people, holding membership in the Presbyterian church, and Mr. Wilson also capably filled a number of township offices. Ere his marriage to Mary King he had wedded Miss Isabella Hogue, and unto them were born six children, namely: James P., now living in Topeka, Kansas; Gracetta, the wife of John Lucas, also of Topeka; John H., of Knoxville; Jacob, of Unionville, Iowa; William, of Oskaloosa, Kansas; and one deceased. The four children of the second marriage are: Dal, who died when a year old; Effie J., the wife of Charles Wyman, of Knoxville, Illinois; Frank E.; and Lee Chalmer Wilson.

No event of special importance occurred to vary the routine of farm life for Frank E. Wilson in the days of his boyhood and youth. He worked in the fields under his father's direction and also gave a portion of his time to the acquirement of his education in the district schools and in the public schools of Knoxville. His more specifically commercial training was obtained in the Gem City Business College of Quincy, Illinois, of which he is a graduate. The first year thereafter he remained upon his father's farm and in the following winter engaged in teaching school. He then went to Pueblo, Colorado, where he engaged in keeping books for a printing and publishing house but later returned to Knox county and became cashier of what was then the Farmers Bank of Yates City, filling that position for twelve years. He next located in Knoxville and associated with C. M. Corbin and Mrs. Nettie J. Corbin, conducting a private bank for three or four years. In 1906 this was reorganized into the Knox County State Bank, of which Mr. Wilson has since been the president, while Marcus Burnsides is now vice president and R. R. Collins cashier. The bank was organized with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars and the surplus amounts to fourteen thousand dollars.

Mr. Wilson was married October 31, 1894, to Miss Kate M. Collins, whose birth occurred in Persifer township, this county, her parents being Edward and Hannah (Young) Collins, natives of Ohio and Illinois respectively. Their family numbered seven children: Kate M.; Robert R.; Ella G.; Rolland E.; Jessie M.; Bertha, the wife of Raymond Sapp; and Nellie F. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Wilson was Michael Collins, a native of Ireland, and unto him and his wife were born a number of children, including Michael, Peter, Thomas, John, Margaret and Kate. The maternal grandparents were Robert and Mary Young, natives of Ohio, and the former devoted his life to farming, thus supporting his family, which numbered Edward J., John R., Hannah E., Robert L., Ella and three who died in childhood.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson has been blessed with two daughters, Miriam E. and Hortense E. The parents are well known in Knoxville and this part of the state and have an extensive circle of warm friends, while their own home is justly celebrated for its cordial hospitality. Mr. Wilson belongs to Yates City Lodge, No. 448, F. & A. M.; Raboni Chapter, No. 95, R. A. M., of which he has been high priest for a number of years; and Illinois Council, No. 1, R. & S. M. His study of the political issues and questions of the day has led him to give his support to the democratic party and he has filled some local offices, serving as town clerk and also as president of the village board of Yates City. It is characteristic of him that he has ever been loyal to a trust reposed in him, discharging his duties to the best of his ability—and that ability is of no inferior order. He is equally faithful to the trusts reposed in him as a business man and has established his bank upon a broad and safe foundation, built of progressive methods, which are evenly balanced by a safe conservatism, close application, unfaltering determination and strictly honorable methods.

GEORGE D. CROCKER.

George D. Crocker, for many years a leading merchant of Galesburg, associated for almost a half century with the grocery trade of the city and now extensively and successfully operating in the field of real estate, was born in Henderson county, Illinois, July 12, 1845. His parents were F. O. and Mary (Brimhall) Crocker, the former a native of Maine and the latter of New York. They were married in Indiana and came to Illinois about 1843, settling in Henderson county, near Oquawka. Upon a farm there they resided for thirteen years and in March, 1856, came to Knox county, establishing their home in Galesburg. Here the father opened a grocery store, which he conducted during the remainder of his active business life, retiring, however, several years prior to his death, which occurred in 1888. His wife survived him for some time, passing away about 1901. Their family numbered three children but the two daughters, Oricy and Emma, both died after reaching womanhood.

George D. Crocker, the only surviving member of the family, was a pupil in the schools of Galesburg and completed his education in Lombard College. He made his initial step in the business world as assistant to his father in the grocery trade and, when well trained by this preliminary experience, he opened a grocery store of his own, where the Arlington Hotel now stands, this hotel having been built by Mr. Crocker and his partner, W. A. Robbins. The grocery store was established in 1866 and was conducted successfully for thirty-three years. They enjoyed a constantly growing trade and their establishment was ranked with the foremost enterprises of the kind in Galesburg throughout that entire period. When about a quarter of a century had passed Mr. Crocker turned his attention to the real-estate business, buying and selling property. He is now a large owner of farm lands in North Dakota, near Fargo, situated in the midst of the fertile Red River valley. He was also at one time greatly interested in Illinois farm lands. His real-estate investments have been most carefully and judiciously made and have brought to him the success which is the merited reward of indefatigable labor and sound judgment.

On the 22d of February, 1867, Mr. Crocker was married to Miss Gertrude Comstock, a daughter of Abner and Agnes Comstock and a native of Warren county, Illinois, born March 16, 1849. They have become parents of three children: Frank W., who was born in 1868 and is now in the office of the Automatic Telephone Company at Los Angeles, California; Mabel, who is the wife of E. J. Dickson, of Springfield, Massachusetts; and George Leslie, who is associated with his father in business and resides in North Dakota, having charge of their interests in that state, which include a ranch covering three sections devoted to the raising of grain.

Mr. Crocker and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and, although not an office seeker, he has served as alderman of the fifth ward and always keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He is a member of the Galesburg Club, and he and his family are widely and favorably known in this city, theirs being one of the attractive and hospitable homes, which is always a favorite resort with those who are most prominent socially in Galesburg.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

George Williams, who at different times was connected with commercial and industrial interests in Galesburg, had a most excellent record both as a man and citizen. As a soldier, too, his course was most commendable, for on southern battle fields he proved his loyalty to the Union cause. His birth occurred in Mount Vernon, Ohio, April 3, 1831, his parents being Mr. and Mrs. Robert Williams, who were residents of Mount Vernon, where they remained for a long period. The son spent his youthful days under the parental roof and was indebted to the public-school system of that district for the educational advantages he enjoyed. On the 12th of March, 1856, being then about twenty-five years of age, he was married to Miss Eliza J. Marble, a daughter of J. H. Marble, a resident of Mount Vernon. Three days later they left Ohio for Knox county, making their way at once to Galesburg where Mr. Williams thereafter resided, save for a period of two years spent as a soldier of the Civil war. He enlisted as a member of the One hundred and eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, became drum major and was on active duty at Arkansas Post, at Haines Bluff and in other engagements. At length he was honorably discharged and returned to Galesburg.

U. OF I. LIB.

On first becoming a resident of this city Mr. Williams established a shoe store which he conducted for many years, enjoying a good trade in that direction. In later years he conducted a dairy business and found it also a source of gratifying income and profit. In all of his business dealings he was thoroughly reliable and enjoyed the confidence and regard of his fellow townsmen in an unusual degree.

As the years passed by three children were born unto Mr. and Mrs. Williams: Walter W., who lives in Galesburg; Flora B., deceased; and G. W., who makes his home in Bridgeport, Connecticut. Mr. Williams took an active interest in Masonry and was an exemplary representative of the craft. He was also much interested in politics and for a number of years was a stanch supporter of the peoples' party or, as it is now known, the populist party. He adhered closely to its principles and doctrines and always kept thoroughly informed on the vital questions of the day. Few men outside of politics had a broader or more correct knowledge of the many questions which he studied from every possible standpoint. He was a firm believer in the power of the government to issue money and was one of the earliest to advocate that idea. At different times he served his party on various committees and was a leader in all of its movements. At local elections he voted with the prohibition party and was ever a stalwart champion of the cause of temperance and of all those activities which tend to uplift the individual and the community at large. Death called him on the 15th of January, 1905, and thus when almost seventy-four years of age he passed away. He had ever been loyal to his honest convictions and his word no man had ever questioned. His life was in many respects worthy of emulation and wherever known he enjoyed the regard and good-will of those with whom he came in contact.

HON. LEON A. TOWNSEND.

Hon. Leon A. Townsend has been closely associated with financial affairs in Galesburg since 1891, not only through his connection with banking interests but also as county treasurer. In both connections he has made a most creditable record and his business advancement has its root in his ability to coordinate and utilize all the forces at hand, combined with the most thorough and reliable business methods. He was born at Avon, Fulton county, Illinois, October 13, 1854, a son of Robert W. and Rachel Virginia (Terry) Townsend. The father was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, November 11, 1820, and after pursuing his education there turned his attention to mercantile lines, continuing in business in the Empire state until about 1842, when he removed westward to Troy, Illinois. There he worked in a store for a time but in 1853 he established business on his own account in Avon, where he remained for fourteen years. In 1869 he opened a bank in that town and was active and successful in its management and control until 1875, when he retired from business life with a handsome competence that had been won through his earnest and carefully directed efforts. In every relation his life was one of usefulness and of worth. In politics he was a republican and served as deputy revenue collector at Avon. Both he and his wife were members of the Universalist church. The latter was born in Chestnut township, Knox county, Illinois, November 9, 1837, and is still living at Avon but the death of Mr. Townsend occurred there August 17, 1904. Their son, Leon A. Townsend, is the eldest of a family of seven children, the others being: Hettie, now the wife of W. B. Tompkins, of Quincy; Harry F. living in Avon; Fannie V., the wife of George A. Tompkins, of Avon; Grace, the widow of Walter M. Jay, of the same place; Grant, a resident of Galesburg; and Lillian, the wife of George Schneider, also of Avon.

Leon A. Townsend

After attending the public schools of his native town Leon A. Townsend further pursued his education in Lombard College of Galesburg, and then made his initial step in the business world in connection with banking, entering the Avon Exchange Bank as cashier. There he remained until 1875, when he went to Herman, Illinois, where he engaged in merchandising until 1893. In that year he removed to Galesburg, having two years before been elected to the office of county treasurer for a four-years' term. He was a capable and faithful custodian of the public funds and retired from office as he had entered it, with the confidence and good-will of all concerned. This was in 1895 and the same year he entered the Farmers & Mechanics Bank of Galesburg as cashier, retaining that connection with the institution for thirteen years. In 1908 he was elected to the presidency of the bank and in this position of control he is bending his efforts to administrative direction. The progressive methods of the bank are tempered by a safe conservatism and the management realizes the fact that the bank is most apt to win success that most carefully safeguards the interests of its depositors. This course has ever been followed by the Farmers & Mechanics Bank and thus the institution has been enabled to stand unweakened through periods of great financial stress. Mr. Townsend is also interested to some extent in farming, owning some good property.

In May, 1877, occurred the marriage of Leon A. Townsend and Miss Christina Woods, a daughter of DeWitt C. and Katherine (McGowan) Woods, of Avon, Illinois. Her father was born in Clinton county, New York, while her mother was a native of Scotland. He made farming his life work and in his boyhood he became a resident of Avon where he lived for many years, passing away there in 1893. His widow still survives and yet makes her home in that village. His political faith was that of the republican party and his religious belief was that of the Universalist church. He was always loyal to every cause which he believed to be right and nothing could swerve him from the path of duty that he was conscientiously following. Unto him and his wife were born a son and two daughters: Mrs. Townsend, whose birth occurred in Avon, February 5, 1854; Lou, the wife of W. S. Bliss, of Avon; and Ernest C., who is living in Pontiac, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Townsend now have three children: Lora, the wife of Frederick Dickinson, of Winnetka, Illinois, and the mother of a daughter, Dorothy; Nellie, who is the wife of Everett Hinchliff, a lumberman of Galesburg, and the mother of one child, Virginia; and Fern, at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Townsend hold membership in the Universalist church and he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Never faltering in his allegiance to the republican party he has done much to promote its success and has been called to various public offices, serving as supervisor for eleven years, as township clerk for two years, as county treasurer for four years, as state senator for eight years and as United States marshal for five years. Thus duties of an important character have devolved upon him in which connection he has ever proved himself loyal to the general good, placing the welfare of the commonwealth before self-aggrandizement and at no time regarding public office as a personal asset. Regarded as a citizen and in his social relations he belongs to that public-spirited, useful and helpful type of men whose motives and desires are centered and directed in those channels through which flows the greatest and most permanent good to the greatest number.

WEBB A. HERLOCKER.

Webb A. Herlocker is one of the younger representatives of the Galesburg bar and yet his comparative youth does not seem to interpose a limit upon his progress and success for he is now accorded a clientage that many an older practitioner might well envy. At the outset of his career, however, he recognized the fact that he was entering upon a profession wherein advancement can only be secured through individual merit and ability.

Mr. Herlocker was born in Milford, Missouri, May 27, 1881, his parents being Daniel A. and Florence Emma (Earp) Herlocker. The father was born in the southeast part of McDonough county, Illinois, April 27, 1851, and the mother's birth occurred in Blandensville in the same county, May 21, 1858. Daniel A. Herlocker pursued his education in the public schools of his native county and afterward attended the Christian College at Abingdon. He afterward engaged in teaching school for a few years in McDonough county and then entered the drug business at Sciota, Illinois, where he remained until 1884. In that year he was appointed deputy clerk of the circuit court and removed to Macomb, Illinois, filling the position for four years. On the expiration of that period he became a resident of Table Grove, Fulton county, Illinois, where he again engaged in the drug business until about 1905, when he retired. He still makes his home in that town but is not connected with commercial or other business interests at the present time. He votes with the democratic party which he has always supported by his ballot and influence and, aside from serving as deputy court clerk, he has been village clerk, a member of the village board of trustees and school director. He and his wife are members of the Universalist church and their well spent lives commend them to the confidence and high regard of all. It was on the 21st of May, 1876, in Blandensville that they were married and unto them have been born three children, Webb A., Ward G. and Emma Wynette. The last two are twins and were born at Sciota, June 3, 1884.

Webb A. Herlocker largely acquired his education in the public schools of Table Grove and later entered the Lombard University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1903. He next entered the Valparaiso University Law School at Valparaiso, Indiana, and completed his course with the class of 1907. He then came to Galesburg and entered into partnership with Charles S. Harris, this relation continuing until 1908, when the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Herlocker has since remained alone in general practice of his profession. He carefully and systematically prepares his cases and presents his cause in clear and forceful manner, his deductions following in logical sequence.

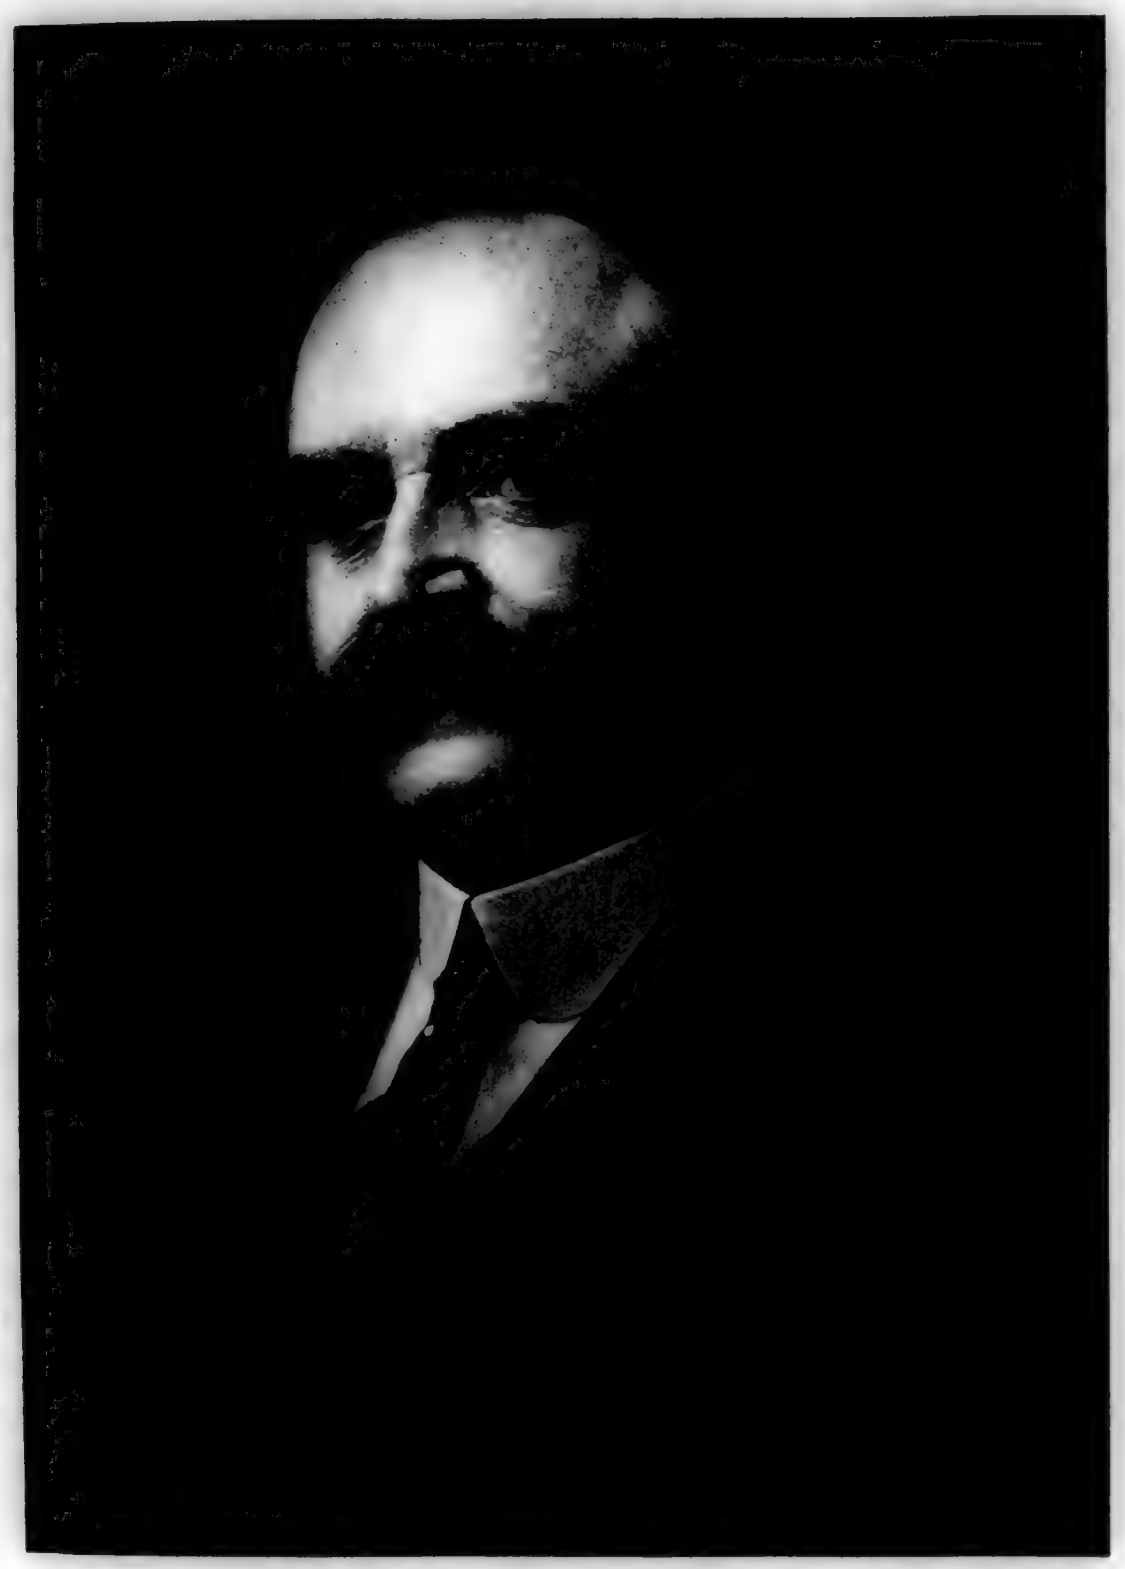
Mr. Herlocker is pleasantly situated in his home life, having been married on the 28th of April, 1910, to Miss Fannie Porter, a daughter of Horace G. and Eldora (Carter) Porter, of DeLand, Illinois. The only child of this marriage is Robert D., who was born in Galesburg, April 10, 1911.

Mr. Herlocker is a democrat in his political views but his public service has always been done in other connections rather than as an office-holder. He belongs to the Universalist church, to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and to the Modern Woodmen camp. He likewise belongs to the Sigma Nu, a college fraternity, and to the Galesburg Club. He was manager of the Lombard University Review and also president of the Erosophian Literary Society during his college days, and was on the Varsity baseball team, of which he was captain for a year. He was likewise a delegate to the Delta Theta chapter for the Sigma Nu fraternity at the grand chapter at New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1904. He was president of the junior class at Valparaiso University and played baseball there for two years, being captain of the team during the senior year. He has ever been interested in athletics and manly outdoor sports and thus preserves an even balance in his physical and mental development. His interests are wide and varied and bring him into close connection with many activities, all of which are commendable forces in a well rounded character.

JAMES SHERMAN ALLEN.

No history of Knox county would be complete without extended reference to James Sherman Allen, who is now seventy-five years of age and has spent the greater part of his life in this locality, his memory forming a connecting link between the primitive past with all of its hardships and privations and the progressive present with its opportunities and advantages. He was born in Oneida county, New York, October 22, 1836, and is a son of Sheldon William and Fidelia (Leach) Allen, who are mentioned at length on another page of this volume, in connection with the sketch of their son, Albert H. Allen. James S. Allen can remember nothing concerning the trip to the west for he was only a year and a half old when the father brought his wife and children to Illinois, driving across the country by team. It was a long and arduous journey and after arriving here there were many privations to be met which are always incident to pioneer life.



James S. Allen shared with the family in the usual experiences incident to settlement upon the frontier and in the acquirement of his education he attended the common schools of Galesburg and also Knox College. He early became familiar with the duties and labors that fall to the lot of the agriculturist for he worked with his father in the fields from an early age and also assisted him in the butchering business, cutting the first round stead in Galesburg. He continued with his father until he had attained his majority and then came into possession of one-half of the butchering business, his partner in the enterprise being Gideon Prentice. They were associated in the conduct of a meat market until 1875, when they sold out to Mr. Allen's brothers. He then turned his attention to general farming and to the buying and shipping of stock, being associated in the latter undertaking with A. W. Ferris and H. P. Berglin. In 1886 Mr. Allen removed to Russell county, Kansas, where he again followed farming for a period of fourteen years, or until 1900. In 1901 he returned to Galesburg and has since lived retired, the success which he had attained in his former labors providing amply all of the necessities and comforts of life.

On the 29th of May, 1858, Mr. Allen had married Miss Amy S. Mitchell, a daughter of John and Bethany (Lee) Mitchell who were then residents of Galesburg, but were natives of Dutchess county, New York. They came to this city at an early day and the father made farming his life work. Both he and his wife are now deceased. Mrs. Allen, who was born in Galesburg, was called to her final rest on the 9th of January, 1890, while living in Russell county, Kansas, and her loss was an almost irreparable blow to her husband, for they had traveled life's journey together for almost a third of a century. Mrs. Allen was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Allen votes with the prohibition party, which indicates his position concerning the temperance question. He regards the use of intoxicants as one of the grave evils of the country and does all in his power to prevent their further use. In fact, his influence has ever been on the side of progress and improvement, of reform and advancement. As one of the pioneer settlers of this county he has witnessed a wonderful transformation here. Much of the land was still unimproved and uncultivated at the time of his arrival and he can remember when the prairies presented one dazzling unbroken sheet of snow during the winter months, while in June they were starred with millions of wild flowers. In all the work that has brought about modern progress and improvement he has been much interested and has aided to the extent of his ability in the development and growth of the county. He can relate many interesting incidents of the early days and is an authority on various matters of history.

JUDGE J. D. WELSH.

Judge J. D. Welsh, a distinguished member of the Knox county bar, well merits the success and honor that has come to him in this connection, for he has ever been careful to conform his practice to a high standard of professional ethics and, while he has given to his client the service of well developed talent, unwearied industry and broad learning, he never forgets that there are certain things due to the court, to his own self-respect and above all to justice and a righteous administration of the law which neither the zeal of an advocate the common schools of Galesburg and also Knox College. He early became familiar with the duties and labors that fall to the lot of the agriculturist for he worked with his father in the fields from an early age and also assisted him in the butchering business, cutting the first round stead in Galesburg. He continued with his father until he had attained his majority and then came into possession of one-half of the butchering business, his partner in the enterprise being Gideon Prentice. JUDGE J. D. WELSH.

Judge J. D. Welsh, a distinguished member of the Knox county bar, well merits the success and honor that has come to him in this connection, for he has ever been careful to conform his practice to a high standard of professional ethics and, while he has given to his client the service of well developed talent, unwearied industry and broad learning, he never forgets that there are certain things due to the court, to his own self-respect and above all to justice and a righteous administration of the law which neither the zeal of an advocate nor the pleasure of success permits him to disregard. He is now a member of the firm of Williams, Lawrence, Welsh, Green & McFarland, having entered upon this connection since his retirement from the county bench.

Judge Welsh was born in a log cabin in Truro township, this county, September 10, 1858, a son of Michael Welsh and a grandson of William Welsh. The latter was a farmer of Ireland, where he died when more than seventy-five years of age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Hoben, passed away in middle life. Their family numbered three sons, Edward, Richard and Michael. The last named was born and reared in Ireland and pursued his education there. He came to the new world when a young man of twenty years, arriving in 1850, and, making his way into the interior of the country, he settled at Maquon, Illinois, where he followed the occupation of farming. In 1853, however, he removed to Truro township, Knox county, where he purchased and improved a farm, making it his home for more than a half century. He won a creditable position among the industrious and progressive agriculturists of the community and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, called him to a number of local offices. He served as justice of the peace for twenty years and made the notable record of never having an appeal from his decisions—such was the fairness and impartiality of his opinions. He was also collector and assessor for a number of terms and served as school trustee. He married Catharine Grace, who, like her husband, was born in County Kilkenny, Ireland. Her parents were John and Catharine Grace, farming people of Ireland, where both passed away. They had a large family, which included John, Catharine, Stacia and others whose names are not remembered. Unto the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Welsh there were born seven children: William M., now residing in Williamsfield, Illinois; Alice, the wife of David Cloonen, of Zearing, Iowa; Benonia F., also a resident of Williamsfield; J. D.; Jay, who makes his home in Williamsfield; M. M., a practicing physician of Odell, Illinois; and Mary, the wife of Richard Judge, of Pontiac, Illinois. The parents were both members of the Catholic church and passed away in that faith, the mother's death occurring six months prior to the demise of her husband on the 28th of July, 1908. He was then seventy-seven years of age and in his passing the county lost one of its worthy and respected pioneer farmers.

Judge Welsh was reared on the old homestead in Truro township and early became familiar with the work of tilling the fields. After attending the district schools he was sent to Lombard College, from which he was graduated in the class of 1885. Subsequently he attended the law school of the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington and in June, 1887, was admitted to the bar. He located for practice in Springfield, Missouri, where he remained for two years, and then came to Galesburg, where he has since followed his profession as an active practitioner save that for four years he was county judge, filling the office from December, 1902, until December, 1906. In his practice from 1890 until 1895 he was associated with George W. Prince and in August of the latter year entered into partnership with E. P. Williams and George A. Lawrence under the firm name of Williams, Lawrence & Welsh. At the same time there were associated with them E. N. and Guy P. Williams and the present style of the firm is Williams, Lawrence, Welsh, Green & McFarland, F. O. McFarland having been admitted to the firm relationship. During his practice Judge Welsh has conducted important litigation in the federal and state courts with gratifying success, winning well earned fame and distinction. He has much natural ability but is withal a hard student and is never contented until he has mastered every detail of his cases. He believes in the maxim "there is no excellence without labor" and follows it closely. He is never surprised by some unexpected discovery by an opposing lawyer, for in his mind he weighs every point and fortifies himself as well for defense as for attack. There are few lawyers who win a larger percentage of their cases before either judge or jury than does J. D. Welsh. He convinces by his concise statements of law and facts rather than by word paintings and so high is the respect for his legal ability and integrity that his assertions in court are seldom questioned seriously. In addition to his law practice he is a director of the Farmers & Mechanics Bank.

Judge Welsh was married June 27, 1888, to Miss Ella C. McCullough, who was born in Galesburg, a daughter of Samuel K. and Emily Rosina (Reed) McCullough, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of New York. They became early residents of Galesburg, where Mr. McCullough was employed as foreman by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, remaining in the service of that company from 1856 until his death save for the period of three years spent as a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war. He died in 1901, at the age of sixty-nine years, and is survived by his wife. They had but two daughters, Ella and Estella, the latter the wife of Charles E. Dudley. Unto Judge and Mrs. Welsh has been born a son, Vernon M., who is a junior at Knox College. The parents are associated with the Universalist church and Judge Welsh is a trustee of Lombard College, conducted under the auspices of that denomination. He belongs to Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M., and to Galesburg Chapter, R. A. M. His political views accord with the pirnciples of the republican party. He is worthily regarded as an able, faithful and conscientious minister in the temple of justice and in his private life the simple worth of his character has gained him the high regard of his fellowmen.

HENRY W. GILES, M. D.

Dr. Henry W. Giles, who for the past ten years has been engaged in the practice of medicine in Knoxville, was born in Peoria county, Illinois, on the 28th of March, 1861. His parents were Thomas and Margaret (Poplett) Giles, the father, a son of Thomas Giles, one of the guards of Napoleon Bonaparte, was born on the island of St. Helena, February 28, 1814. Thomas Giles, Jr., came to the United States with his father first locating in the state of New York, where he remained until 1836, when he came to Illinois locating in Peoria. There he continued to reside during the remainder of his life devoting his energies during the entire period of his active career to farming. The mother was a daughter of Thompson Poplett, one of the pioneer settlers of Knox county, where she was reared to womanhood. She passed away on August 7, 1875, while the father survived for eighteen years thereafter, his demise occurring September 7, 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Giles were married March 7, 1850, and to them were born seven children, five of whom are living; Joseph W., the eldest born January 13, 1853, who is engaged in farming in Peoria county; William Nelson, born March 9, 1858, who is a physician and surgeon of Wataga, Illinois; George, born March 26, 1863, also a farmer of Peoria county; Mary Helena, born December 24, 1865, the wife of George Yates, a farmer of Peoria county; and Henry W., our subject.

The boyhood and youth of Henry W. Giles were spent beneath the paternal roof, his education being obtained in the public schools of Peoria county. After leaving school, for a time he engaged in farm work, but later was employed in a medical laboratory in Peoria, where he remained for four years. During that period he decided to adopt the medical profession for his life vocation and subsequently entered the Keokuk Medical College, from which institution he received the degree of M. D., the knowledge therein gleaned being supplemented by a post-graduate course in Chicago. He began his career as a practitioner in the state of Iowa, removing from there to Wataga, where he remained until 1902, when he established an office in Knoxville, that he has ever since successfully maintained. During his residence here he has built up a substantial medical practice in the town and surrounding country, while his services as a surgeon are in much demand. Thorough in his methods, sympathetic and helpful in his manner and conscientious in his devotion to those who enlist his services, Dr. Giles has become very popular both professionally and socially; those, who are suffering from ills of any nature whatsoever, knowing that in him they will always find one graciously willing to alleviate their sufferings, if possible.

Peoria, Illinois, was the scene of Dr. Giles' marriage, on the 26th of November, 1891, to Miss Christiana Schildwachter. The parents of Mrs. Giles were natives of Germany, whence they came to America, first locating in Missouri. After the war they removed to Tazewell county, Illinois, where Mrs. Giles was born and reared. The father is now deceased, but the mother is living and continues to make her home in Tazewell county. To Dr. and Mrs. Giles there have been born four children: Clark W., born August 29, 1892, who is a student; Willard T., born March 25, 1896; Ruth H., born February 27, 1898, and Howard H., born March 17, 1903.

The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they take an earnest and helpful interest, while Dr. Giles keeps in touch with the members of his profession through the medium of his membership in the Illinois State Medical Association and Knox County Medical Society. Dr. Giles has always exerted an immeasureable influence for good in the community, where he has done effective service in behalf of general progress and improvement.

LAFAYETTE WEINBERG.

The prosperity and growth of every community depends not so much upon its machinery of government or even upon the men who fill its public offices as upon the enterprise and the character of the men who are controlling its commercial and industrial interests. Prominent in this connection is Lafayette Weinberg, a member of the firm of Weinberg Brothers, wholesale dealers in fruits and produce, conducting also a freezer and cold-storage business. Along the legitimate lines of trade they have secured an extensive patronage and the business in its volume and importance is a satisfactory one, bringing annually very substantial returns.

Mr. Weinberg is one of the native sons of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Augusta, January 3, 1868. The surname indicates the ancestral connection of the family. The grandfather, Isaac Weinberg, was a native of Rehburg, Germany, and served for thirteen years as a soldier in the German army, during which period he participated in the battle of Waterloo. He was connected with the cavalry branch of the service. To him and his wife were born four children, Jacob, Simon, Fredericka and Regina. Of this number Simon Weinberg was the father of Lafayette Weinberg. He, too, was born in Germany, near Rehburg, and was reared in that land, there learning the butcher's trade. The favorable reports which he heard concerning America and its business conditions and opportunities determined him to try his fortune in this country, and on the day on which he was twenty-three years of age he landed in the United States. He first located in Cincinnati, where he remained for several years, and subsequently removed to Augusta, Illinois, where he established a butchering business and general mercantile store, continuing in this line of trade throughout the remainder of his life. He married Louisa Jurgins, who was born in the same locality as was her husband. Her father, too, was a native of Germany and on coming to America settled near Cincinnati, where his remaining days were passed. Unto him and his wife were born four children, Louisa, Mary, William and Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Simon Weinberg became the parents of nine sons and nine daughters: Regina, the wife of John Tarr, now living in Moravia, Iowa; Jacob, deceased; Joseph, a resident of Augusta; Elizabeth, the wife of B. E. Bacon, of Pleasanton, California; Fredericka, the wife of F. M. King, of Augusta, Illinois; Deena, the deceased wife of G. S. Stark; Mina, the wife of C. M. Allensworth, of Galesburg; Moses, living in Rushville, Illinois; Mary, the wife of George Worman, of Grubgulch, California; Pearlie, the wife of F. A. Reiche, of Moravia, Iowa; Abraham L., who is in partnership with his brother Lafayette; Aaron, living in Augusta; Lafayette, of this review; Zeline, of Galesburg; Adolph, of Augusta; and Simon, who died when twenty-five years of age. Two of the children died in infancy.

The father's death occurred in Augusta in 1901, when he had reached the advanced age of eighty-three years, and his wife passed away in 1895, when sixty-three years of age. She held membership with the Presbyterian church, while Mr. Weinberg was reared in the Israelite faith.

Spending his youthful days in his native town, Lafayette Weinberg attended the public schools there until 1888, when he entered Knox College in Galesburg, being graduated on the completion of the commercial course. He made his initial step in the commercial world in connection with the wholesale fruit and produce business of Byram Brothers, entering into partnership under the name of Byram Brothers & Weinberg, which connection continued for a little more than a year. Since then his brother Abraham L. has been associated with him under the firm style of Weinberg Brothers. Gradually they have built up an extensive business, handling everything that the market affords in fruit and produce and conducting as well a cold-storage and freezer business. Both branches are proving profitable owing to their capable management, unfaltering energy and thoroughly reliable business methods.

On the 23d of November, 1893, Lafayette Weinberg was united in marriage to Miss Mabel L. Babcock, a daughter of Charles M. and Margaret (McChesney) Babcock. Mrs. Weinberg was born in Detroit, Michigan, and her father was a native of New York, while her mother's birth occurred in Illinois. Mr. Babcock came as an early settler to Knox county, this state, establishing his home in Galesburg, where his last days were passed, his death occurring in 1906, when he was sixty-three years of age. His widow still survives and now makes her home in Los Angeles, California. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, George M., Mabel L., Clara and Frank O. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Weinberg has been blessed with five children, of whom three are now living, Helen Louise, Dorothy and Fayette. The last two are attending school and the older daughter was graduated from the Galesburg high school in the spring of 1911.

In his political views Mr. Weinberg has always been a democrat since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and he keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day, but has never sought nor desired public office. That he is a man of social, genial nature is attested by his membership in the Soangetaka Country Club. He belongs also to the Galesburg Business Men's Club and is interested in all of its projects for the welfare and improvement of the city along the various lines that contribute to the city's growth and development. His life record has no spectacular phases but it stands as incontrovertible proof of what may be accomplished through determination, energy and ambition. Mr. Weinberg is today recognized as one of the foremost merchants and business men of Galesburg, honored and respected by all, not only for what he has accomplished, but also for the straightforward methods which have ever characterized his business career.

ERNEST T. S. MASON.

Ernest T. S. Mason, who since May, 1900, has been general agent at Galesburg for the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, his district covering ten counties in western Illinois, was born in Farmington, Fulton county, this state, on the 21st of August, 1865. His father, Rev. William C. Mason, was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1820, and was educated in the Washington and Jefferson College of that state, from which he was graduated with the class of 1847. He then began preaching in Ohio and later removed to Illinois, where he arrived in 1849. For a time he was pastor of the church at Le Claire, Iowa, and also of the Presbyterian church at Port Bryan, Illinois. His last charge was at Farmington, this state. During the period of the Civil war he enlisted as chaplain of the Seventy-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry and went with Thomas to Atlanta. He also worked in the hospital at different times and returned from the army with broken health, the hardships of war resulting in his death, on the 20th of December, 1870. In early manhood he had wedded Mary Osborne, who was born in Cadiz, Harrison county, Ohio, February 8, 1821. She survived her husband for a number of years, passing away in November, 1904. She, too, held membership in the Presbyterian church and was his able assistant in the discharge of his pastoral work. His political views were in accord with the principles of the republican party. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Mason was celebrated in 1848 and unto them were born seven children: Alexander O., who is living in Chicago; William S., who died February 23, 1911; John M., of Chicago; Clarence H., of Chetopa, Kansas; Ernest T. S.; Mrs. Sarah Amanda Taten, who died December 16, 1904; and Mary Blanche, who died in 1866.

Ernest T. S. Mason completed his education in the Galesburg high school and throughout the intervening period has been identified with the insurance business. For seventeen years he was connected with the Covenant Mutual Life Insurance Company and then became general agent of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company in May, 1900. In this connection he has jurisdiction over ten counties in Western Illinois and has under his control a corps of able representatives who are building up for the company a large and substantial business in this part of the state. Mr. Mason is thoroughly in touch with the work in his territory and his own capability and zeal enthuse those who are working under his direction.

On the 5th of November, 1891, occurred the marriage of Mr. Mason and Miss Maude Alberta Templeton, a daughter of Thomas F. and Mary (Arnold) Templeton. The children born unto them are: Donald, whose birth occurred September 9, 1893; Marjorie Maude, born September 23, 1895; and Nancy Brooke, born February 2, 1897. The wife and mother died December 6, 1904, and on the 30th of October, 1907, Mr. Mason was married to Miss Etta Ingersoll, a daughter of Samuel and Lois (Van Orman) Ingersoll, of Galesburg.

In his fraternal relations Mr. Mason is connected with the Masonic lodge and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He also belongs to the Galesburg Club and attends the Presbyterian church, while his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His political views accord with the principles of the republican party, but he has never sought or desired office, believing it preferable to concentrate all his energies upon his business affairs, and that he was wise in so doing is indicated in the advancement which has come to him, giving him a prominent position in the insurance circles of the city.

JOHN GILPIN VIVION.

John Gilpin Vivion was at different times connected with commercial and financial interests in Galesburg and always maintained a prominent position as a citizen whose activity contributed to public progress while his personal worth gained for him the high regard and confidence of his fellowmen. He was born in Fayette county, Missouri, July 18, 1853, a son of Dr. John B. Vivion. The first twelve years of his life were spent in the county of his nativity and in 1865 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Illinois, residing in Adams county until 1868, when he came to Galesburg and completed his education in the schools of this city. He started in the business world as an employe in the Murdock dry-goods store and from there changed to J. B. Colton, where he gradually

John Gilpin Vivion was at different times connected with commercial and financial interests in Galesburg and always maintained a prominent position as a citizen whose activity contributed to public progress while his personal worth gained for him the high regard and confidence of his fellowmen. He was born in Fayette county, Missouri, July 18, 1853, a son of Dr. John B. Vivion. The first twelve years of his life were spent in the county of his nativity and in 1865 he accompanied his parents on their removal to Illinois, residing in Adams county until 1868, when he came to Galesburg and completed his education in the schools of this city. He started in the business world as an employe in the Murdock dry-goods store and from there changed to J. B. Colton, where he gradually worked his way upward, successive promotions at length bringing him to the position of credit man in that establishment. He enjoyed in the fullest measure the confidence and regard of his employer and at the same time well established himself in public opinion as a man of capability, resourcefulness and unassailable business integrity. At length he turned his attention to financial interests, entering the Second National Bank of this city, and after a few years he was made cashier of the bank, which position he continued to occupy until 1904, when the bank passed into liquidation. He had been acting as credit man in that institution for a number of years and when it passed out of existence he founded the Peoples Trust & Savings Bank, which he assisted in organizing and of which he was elected vice president. He also acted as their loan and credit man and it is said that none of the institutions with which he was connected ever lost a dollar on loans made on his recommendations. In 1909 he severed his connection with the bank and opened an office in the Carr building for the conduct of a general loan business. In this connection he secured a good clientage and had built up a substantial business when on the 15th day of April, 1911, he was called to his final rest.

In 1878 Mr. Vivion was united in marriage to Miss Fannie Lawrence, a daughter of Richard Austin Lawrence, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this volume. Both were well known socially, having an extensive circle of warm friends in Galesburg and in other parts of the county. Mr. Vivion was affiliated with the Baptist church and was ever loyal to its teachings and helpful in its work, and his widow is now attending this church. He belongs to the Galesburg Club, the Business Men's Club and to other commercial and social organizations. His political allegiance was given to the democracy but he never sought nor desired office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs which were capably managed, his well spent life gaining for him the regard and honor of all with whom he was associated. He was never neglectful of any duty, whether of a public or private nature, and ever held to high ideals of manhood and citizenship.

DANIEL C. MILLER.

Among the members of the Knoxville legal fraternity Daniel C. Miller occupies a somewhat unique position, having first entered a court room in a professional capacity after attaining the age when it is generally considered that a man has reached his zenith and should be well established in his life vocation. His life record began on a little farm in Rockingham county, Virginia, his parents being John and Leah (Grigsby) Miller, the father also a native of Rockingham county, while the mother was born in Page county, Virginia. The father had three brothers and two sisters: Henry, Joseph, Jacob, Jane and Catherine. All have now passed away with the exception of Jacob, who resides in Kansas, where he owns about twenty-five hundred acres of land, his wealth being estimated at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Mrs. Leah Miller had one brother and two sisters: Strauther, Jane and Sarah. The first named came from Page county, Virginia, to Pike county, Illinois, about fifty-six years ago and was principal of the high school there until elected circuit clerk, while later he was chosen county judge. He had three children, two sons and a daughter, the latter becoming the wife of Judge Higby, who is now judge of the circuit court of Pike county.

In 1853, with his wife and family, John Miller removed to Illinois, locating on a farm north of Abingdon in Cedar township. After residing there for a brief period he went to McDonough county, where he purchased a farm that he operated for a short time, when he again settled in Knox county. This time they located on a place six miles east of Abingdon, continuing to make that their home for many years. There the mother passed away, but the father was living in Ohio at the time of his death. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Miller numbered eight, six sons and two daughters, all of whom are deceased with the exception of the son Daniel. The five brothers and two sisters were Benjamin, John, Jacob, Joseph, Peter, Elizabeth and Rebecca. Of these, Jacob Miller lived in Texas and at his death left to his wife and one child an estate valued at about eighty thousand dollars. The sister Elizabeth became the wife of Henry Eggers, while Rebecca died in her fourteenth year.

The childhood and youth of Daniel C. Miller contained little of the brightness and joy that are always associated with young life. A large family and limited means precluded the possibility of schooling and the preparation for a full and well rounded mature life, such as every ambitious youth aspires to attain. He left home when still quite young and went to work as a farm hand, following this occupation continuously for many years. Despite an environment that was not conducive to intellectual pursuits and the exhausting physical toil that occupied his days, such spare moments as he had were spent in reading the best thoughts of the greatest minds. These he dwelt upon during the long hours of his daily toil, never permitting his mind to wander and hover over vague and indefinite things but concentrating it upon a specific line of thought. Naturally this training made of him not only a scholar but a thinker, and when at the age of forty-four years it was found possible for him to realize the ambition of his life and begin studying for the profession he was so well adapted to follow, he was fully qualified for the undertaking. He entered Wesleyan University at Bloomington, where he pursued his legal studies, being graduated with the class of 1889. Immediately following his admission to the bar, he established an office in Knoxville and has ever since been successfully engaged in practice. A man of practical ideas, sound judgment and fine reasoning powers, Mr. Miller was readily recognized as an able representative of his profession and as a result has been entrusted with some of the important litigation in his immediate district. Liberal in his ideas and broad in his views, he reads widely and thinks deeply on all the vital subjects of the day, his opinions always being regarded as worthy of consideration because they are the result of long and deep deliberation. He possesses a rare memory, retaining every detail of what he reads, and is unquestionably one of the best posted men in this section of the state.

Mr. Miller was married in 1864 to Miss Mary Humphrey, a native of Knox county, and to them was born one son, Cyrus A. Miller, who is a resident of Alliance, Nebraska. From his first wife he secured a legal separation and afterward wedded Mary Jane Myrick, a widow and the sister of John Buffington.

They lived together for nineteen years but at length decided to separate and in 1890 Mr. Miller was again married, his third union being with Mrs. Nancy (Adkins) Tucker, the widow of Josiah Tucker, and also a native of this county, her parents having been among the pioneer settlers here. Daniel C. and Nancy (Adkins) Miller became the parents of two children. Nellie C., the elder, married Hal Bachus, who is a decorator in Galesburg. They have two children, Louis C. and Helen I., the former born April 1, 1909, and the latter February 13, 1911. Daniel C. Miller, Jr., is living at home with his parents. He possesses much musical talent and has been a member of the Knoxville band for three years, playing the cornet horn.

Mr. Miller has had many vicissitudes in life. He has met with hardships, trials and privations and has felt the sting of base ingratitude from those from whom he should have received love and assistance. However, his lines have at many times fallen in pleasant places and he is now well established in business, is surrounded by a happy and contented family and has in this county many friends.

WILLIAM O'R. BRADLEY.

The medical profession of Galesburg has a prominent and worthy representative in Dr. William O'R. Bradley, who in the practice of medicine and surgery has demonstrated his wide knowledge of the scientific principles that underlie his work and his ability to apply his knowledge in the arduous and difficult task of checking the ravages of disease. He opened an office in this city in 1891 and in the intervening period of twenty years has firmly established himself in the public regard not only as a capable physician but also as a man and citizen. He was born in Rochester, New York, October 14, 1861, his parents being Dr. Thomas and Anna G. (Maloney) Bradley, the former a native of Belfast, Ireland, and the latter of Rochester, New York. The paternal grandfather, Dr. Hugh Bradley, was a successful physician of Belfast for many years, but eventually sought the opportunities of the new world and on coming to America established his home in Rochester, New York, where he practiced for a considerable period. His death there occurred in 1882, when he had reached the venerable age of eighty-nine years. His family numbered two sons, Patrick and Thomas, and a daughter who died in early girlhood.

Dr. Thomas Bradley, coming to America during his boyhood days, was graduated from the Geneva Medical College, of Geneva, New York. He afterward located for practice in Rochester and was well established in business when, in 1866, he passed away at the age of forty-six years. In early manhood he had wedded Anna G. Maloney, a daughter of Henry Maloney, and she passed away September 15, 1879, at the age of forty-two years. Both were members of the Catholic church. In addition to his private practice Dr. Bradley had served as surgeon of the New York state militia with the rank of major. In the family were two children who lived to maturity, the daughter being Marie, who was a Sister of the Catholic church in the order of the Sacred Heart. She was known as Madam Bradley and died in the old City of Mexico in 1901.

Dr. William O'R. Bradley was reared in Rochester and attended its public schools. Subsequently he became a pupil in the Canisius College of Buffalo and later attended St. Michael's College in Toronto, Canada. He then returned to Buffalo and was graduated from the medical department of the University of Buffalo with the class of 1883, having determined to make the practice of medicine his life work. Following his graduation he opened an office in Rochester, New York, where he remained for a year and a half, and then went to Washington, Kansas, where he resided until 1891. That year witnessed his arrival in Galesburg, where he has since practiced, and his pronounced ability has been the means of bringing him a large practice, in the conduct of which he has been very successful, reading and study keeping him in close touch with the advancement in medical science.

On the 22d of July, 1884, Dr. Bradley was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Rivers, who was born in Rochester, New York. Dr. and Mrs. Bradley now have three children, William Rivers, Marie and Anna. Dr. Bradley gives his political allegiance to the democratic party and is a prominent worker in its ranks, because of his belief that its principles are most conducive to good government. He served as mayor of Galesburg for one term and gave to the city a business-like and progressive administration. His fraternal relations are with Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M., Galesburg Chapter, R. A. M., and Galesburg Commandery, K. T. He has also crossed the sands of the desert with the Nobles of Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine and in his life he exemplifies the beneficent and benevolent spirit of the craft. In strictly professional lines his association is with the city, county and state medical societies and the American Medical Association. He holds to high ideals in his chosen life work and conforms strictly to a high standard of professional ethics.

WILLIAM H. SPINNER.

William H. Spinner hardly needs an introduction to the readers of this volume for he is widely and favorably known, both because of the extent and activity of his business interests and by reason of his entertaining powers as a chalk talker. He was born in Deal, County Kent, England, March 15, 1859, and his parents, Henry C. and Elizabeth A. (Lass) Spinner, were also natives of that country, where the father was born in 1830, while his wife's birth occurred in November of the same year. He was a farmer and dairyman and a dealer in live stock. He remained a resident of England until called to his final rest, as did his wife. His religious faith was that of the Church of England, while Mrs. Spinner was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church. Fraternally he was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was at one time noble grand in the local lodge. His family numbered two sons and four daughters: Annie, now deceased; William H.; Ellen S., who is living in Kent, England; Elizabeth L., the wife of Charles Miller, of Galesburg; Fanny M., of England; and Frank, deceased.

William H. Spinner was only seven and one-half years of age when brought by his uncles Eb and John Lass, to the new world and then on to Galesburg, to the home of William S. Lass, his foster father. He attended the public schools here and began earning his own living by working for the Burlington Railroad Company in the telegraph office as messenger. Gradually he worked his way upward, his capability and fidelity winning him promotion, until he became chief clerk. He then had charge of the Western Union wires and was wire chief. He afterward became chief clerk for the division superintendent and later in the general superintendent's office and in September 1888, was appointed to the responsible position of ticket agent at Galesburg, which position he filled until the 16th of February, 1904. Mr. Spinner for many years held the sole agency of all Atlantic steamship lines and many European tourists and emigrants bear tribute to his efficiency and his painstaking work in carefully planning their trips over the ocean. In 1904 he became general agent for the New York Life Insurance Company, having full control of all of its business and interests in this part of the state. This is still his connection and he has made for himself an honored name and position in the field in which he is now operating. Mr. Spinner is also known as a chalk talker and cartoonist, in which connection he has given many entertainments in which amusement and instruction are well balanced features. He draws rapidly with charcoal and colored chalks, illustrating his speech, and in the twinkling of an eye can change a gay face to one of great seriousness or supplement an expression of sorrow with one of joy. He has received many favorable press notices and his work on the platform has been highly commended.

Mr. Spinner is pleasantly situated in his home life, having been married on the 4th of December, 1883, to Miss Florence B. Rice, a daughter of Augustus and Susan (Grant) Rice, of Lewistown, Illinois. Her father, a druggist of Fulton county, Illinois, and a son of Dr. E. D. Rice, was of New England ancestry. Her mother was a daughter of Professor Innes Grant, of Scotch descent, who at one time was professor of languages of the faculty of Knox College. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Spinner have been born three children: Harold R., born December 3, 1885; Delia Grant, February 7, 1889; and Mary, May 22, 1895.

In his political views Mr. Spinner is a republican but the honors and emoluments of office have had no attractions for him. He can find ample opportunity to use his time in different directions and is especially well known as an active member of the Central Congregational church, having for twenty years served as superintendent of its Sunday school. He belongs also to the Young Men's Christian Association of Galesburg, of which he was a director until a few years ago. He likewise belongs to the Masonic Lodge and the Galesburg Club. Throughout his life he has always been the same genial, courteous gentleman, whose ways are those of refinement and whose worth no man can question.

JACOB H. SCHRYVER.

Jacob H. Schryver, who maintains a shoemaking establishment in Knoxville, has been a resident of Knox county for forty-four years, during which time he has noted its wonderful development along the various lines of human activity. He was born in Sag Harbor, New York, on the 5th of June, 1833, and is a son of George and Nancy (Conant) Schryver, natives of Pennsylvania. The father, who was a farmer in his early manhood, removed with his wife and family from Pennsylvania to the Mohawk valley, New York, subsequently locating in Sag Harbor, where he remained for many years. From there he went to Ontario, Canada, and engaged in the lumber business, continuing to make his residence in that country until his death. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Schryver consisted of five sons and six daughters, all of whom with the exception of our subject, are now deceased.

The youthful years of Jacob H. Schryver were spent in Sag Harbor, where he received his schooling. When old enough to become self-supporting he followed various occupations until 1865, when he engaged in the shoemaker's trade. From New York he went to Maine, but later went to Massachusetts, and in 1867 he came to what at that period was termed the west, locating in Galesburg. There he established a shop that he successfully conducted for many years. He has always been a skilful and painstaking workman and as he employed only the best of materials in executing his orders enjoyed a very good patronage. After the death of his wife, Mr. Schryver located in Abingdon for a few years, but has for some time now been making his home in Knoxville. During the period of his residence here he has at all times been found dependable and thoroughly trustworthy in his business obligations and as a result enjoys the respect of all with whom he has had transactions.

In 1855, at the age of twenty-two years, Mr. Schryver was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Myers, who was born and reared in Canada, but passed away in Galesburg in 1891. Her parents were natives of Germany, but in their early life they emigrated to Canada, where the father followed farming during the entire period of his active career. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Schryver there were born four children, two of whom are living: Mary Ellen, the wife of O. T. Martin, of Iowa, and James S., who makes his home in Greeley, Colorado.

In matters of faith Mr. Schryver is an Episcopalian. Although being in his eightieth year Mr. Schryver still leads an active life, and takes an interest in all that is going on about him.

CAPTAIN GEORGE W. REYNOLDS.

Captain George W. Reynolds, a retired farmer owning one hundred acres of land in the corporation of Victoria, belongs to a family that was prominent in the early development of Victoria township. He was born July 15, 1826, in Milton, Massachusetts, which is now within the city limits of Boston. His grandfather, Wincept Reynolds, was born in New Hampshire, of English parentage, and was a private in the Revolutionary war. In early life Wincept Reynolds married a Miss Locke, a daughter of John Locke, a miller of Barrington, New Hampshire. His keen sense of justice and upright life had won for him the title of "Honest John Locke." The children of Wincept Reynolds were five in number, of whom George F., the father of Captain George W. Reynolds, was the fourth in order of birth, the others being: Wincept, who died in Boston; Jacob; Job, who died in New Hampshire; and Mrs. Elizabeth Weeks, who died in Farmington, New Hampshire. Wincept Reynolds was killed by a falling tree in 1832 and buried on his farm in New Hampshire, where he had spent the greater part of his life. His wife died in 1846. They were members of the old-time Presbyterian church. An interesting heirloom that has come to Captain Reynolds is the cane that was used by his grandfather, Wincept Reynolds.

George F. Reynolds, the father of Captain Reynolds, was born in Barrington, New Hampshire, in 1799. He married Abigail Locke, a daughter of "Honest John Locke, Jr.," and to this union were born four children, of whom George W. Reynolds was the eldest. The others were: Charles C., who died in Andalusia, Illinois; John W., who died in Victoria, Illinois; and Mrs. Julia A. Hammond, who passed away in Victoria township. Soon after his marriage George F. Reynolds went to Milton, Massachusetts, where he worked for four years for Judge Robbins, and then, in June, 1835, removed to Peru, Illinois, at which time there was only one house on the site of the present city. Owing to sickness in his party Mr. Reynolds left Peru and went to Pleasant Grove, Tazewell county, where he remained one and one-half years, coming in the summer of 1836 to the farm, on which Victoria now stands. His farm originally covered one hundred and thirty acres but owing to the growth of the town he gradually sold off lots until at the time of his death only eighty acres were left, most of which was cut up into town lots. In 1837 he built the first house that was erected on the road in that section, and in the same year the postoffice at Victoria was established, the only one in that part of the country, and he was made postmaster. Mr. Reynolds was a lifelong republican. He took a very active part in the early development of the county, helped to organize the township, was trustee of the school fund and was justice of the peace. He was an earnest worker in the Congregational church and was known for years as Deacon Reynolds. He died in 1892, at the age of ninety-two and one-half years. His wife had died in 1876 and they are both buried in Victoria cemetery.

Captain George W. Reynolds was reared in Victoria and educated in the public schools there. Later he attended school in Galesburg for three winters. He served all during the Civil war as captain of Company K, Eighty-third Regiment of Illinois Infantry, under Colonel Smith. After the war he returned to his farm at Victoria. He was twice married. In 1846 he wedded Mary Hotchkiss, a native of New York, and after her death he married, in 1859, Elizabeth Swickard, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Jonathan Swickard. Captain Reynolds has one son by his first marriage, Lewis M., who resides in Colorado, and one daughter by his second marriage, Jennie R., the wife of James McMaster, of Victoria township. Mrs. Reynolds and Mrs. Noah Swickard, her sister-in-law, were the only two ladies from these parts who accompanied their husbands into the Civil war, and both were present on the field of the battle of Fort Donelson. It is very interesting to hear her recount reminiscences of this memorable occasion. She is a venerable old lady, who is greatly beloved by all who come in contact with her and appreciated as a bright and entertaining companion. Captain Reynolds, who has resided on his present farm since 1836, is widely and favorably known throughout the county, and the worthy couple is esteemed highly by all. Both are members of the Congregational church, of which he serves in the capacity of trustee. Fraternally, he is identified with P. G. Tait Post, No. 869, G. A. R. He has been active in local politics all his life, always working for the republican party. He has served as school treasurer and trustee, and was for nineteen years village treasurer. His life might be termed one of long service to the country at large and, especially, to his community and county.

JOHN HOWARD BRYANT, M. D.

Prominent among the representatives of the medical profession in Galesburg is Dr. John Howard Bryant, who has wisely and conscientiously used the talents that have been given him in his preparation for the onerous duties that devolve upon him in connection with his chosen life work. His extensive practice is the best evidence of his ability and his success has its root in a comprehensive understanding of the scientific principles that underlie his work together with careful diagnosis. Dr. Bryant was born in Princeton, Illinois, May 27, 1876, a son of Elijah and Laura (Smith) Bryant, both of whom were natives of Bureau county, Illinois The Bryant ancestry in this country can be traced back to Sir Guy Bryant, who came from England in 1632, his ancestry also runs back eight generations to John Alden and Priscilla Mullens of the Mayflower. Elijah Bryant was a son of John Howard Bryant, who was born in Cummington, Massachusetts, and was a brother of William Cullen Bryant, the distinguished American poet. In the year 1831 John Howard Bryant came to Jacksonville, Illinois, with one of his brothers by way of the Erie canal and Ohio river, and in the spring of 1832 he rode horseback to Bureau county, settling on the present site of Princeton, where he took up a section of land which he improved, bringing the farm under a high state of cultivation. He was followed in a few years by two other brothers, all four of whom made Princeton their permanent home, William Cullen being the only brother remaining in the east. He acquired other property in that district, becoming one of the large landowners. There he spent his remaining days and not only took active part in the promotion of agricultural interests but likewise became an active factor in the public life of the community. He was closely associated with those who were instrumental in the creation of Bureau county out of Putnam county and throughout all the active period of his life did much toward shaping its formative policy and guiding its destiny. Under appointment of President Lincoln he filled the office of internal revenue collector and for three or four different terms he represented his district in the general assembly, his active support of various measures proving a potent element in guiding legislative enactment during that period. He took the greatest pride in his work in financing and establishing the Princeton township high school, which was the first school of that character in the state. His influence was always on the side of progress and advancement and he was justly accounted one of the most prominent citizens of Bureau county. He regarded it the duty as well as the privilege of every man to exercise his right of franchise and support the political principles which he believed most conducive to good government. During the greater part of his life he was a stanch advocate of the republican party and at no time was his position regarding any vital question an equivocal one. He married a Miss Wiswall in 1834 and to them were born two sons, Henry who died at the age of nineteen and Elijah. J. H. Bryant reached the venerable age of ninety-five years, while his wife passed away at the age of eighty-one.

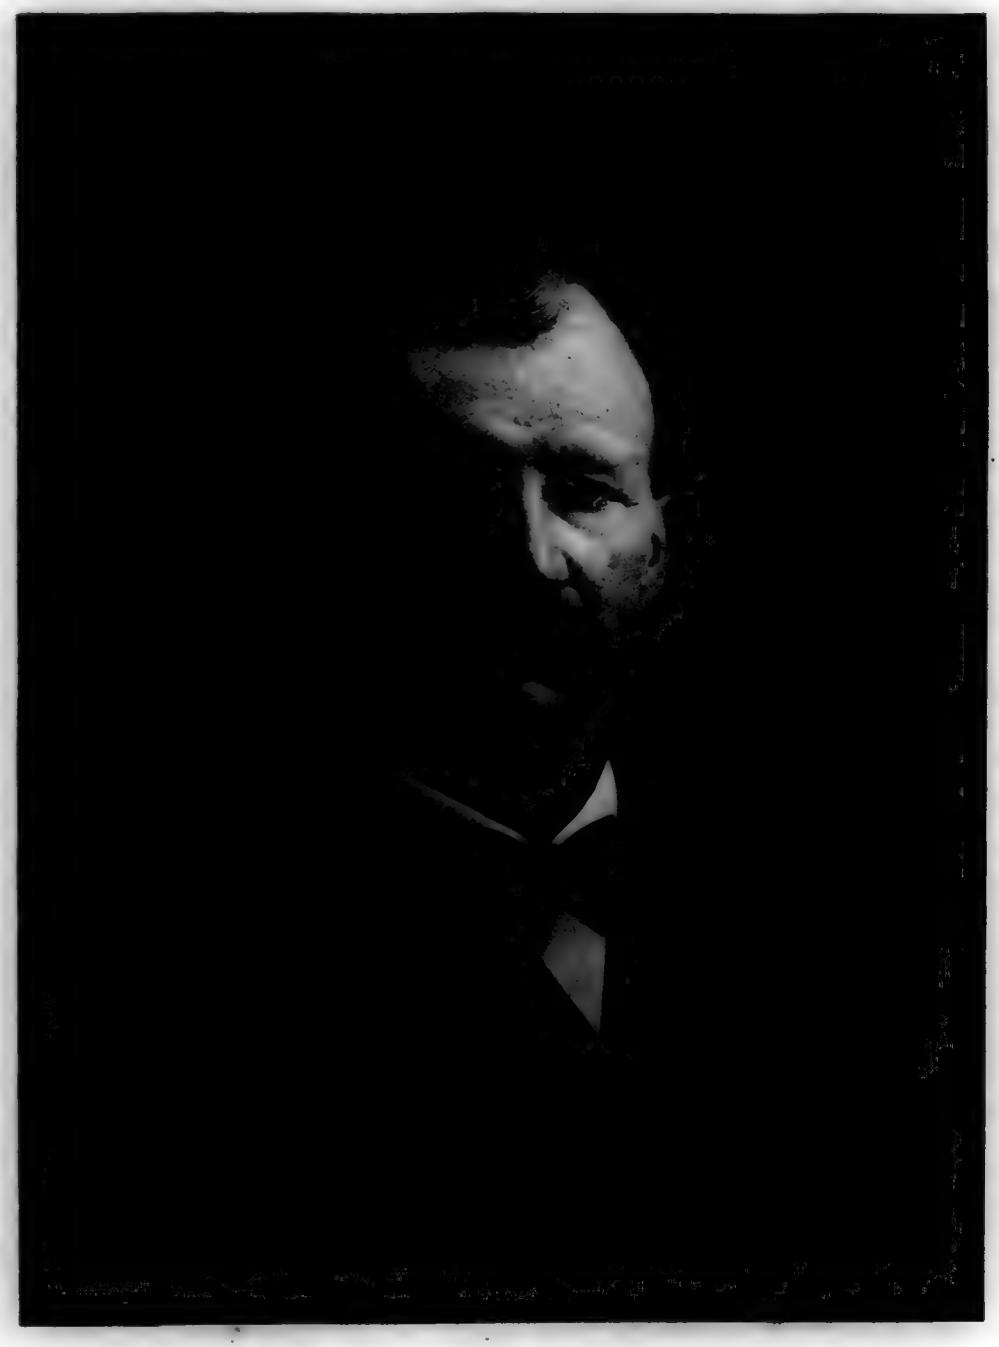
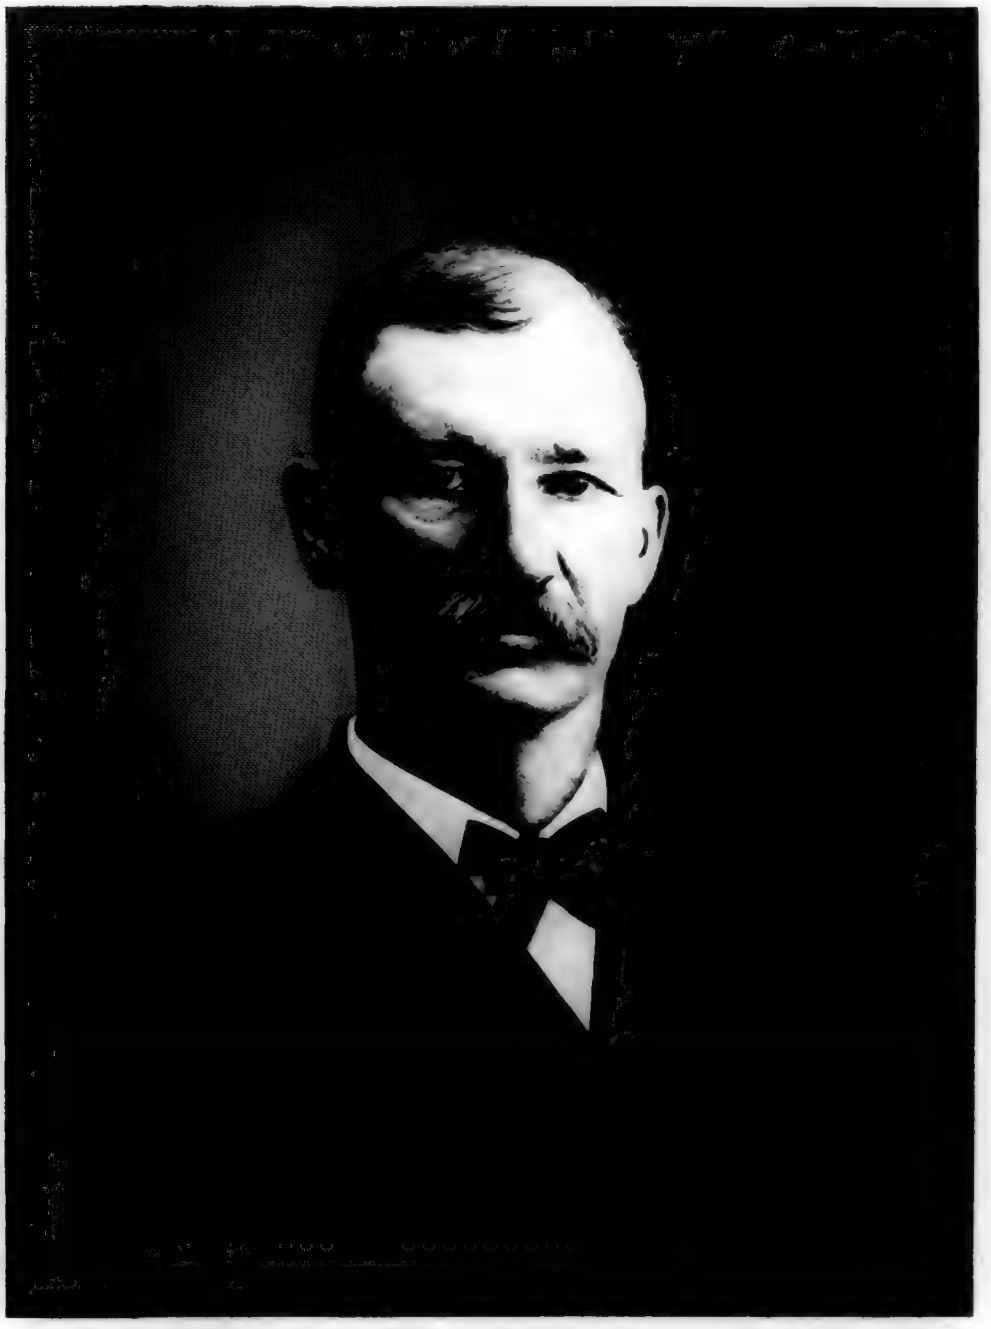
Elijah Bryant, father of our subject, was born in Bureau county, Illinois, during the pioneer epoch in the history of that district and was there reared and educated. As he grew to manhood he became his father's assistant and gradually more and more assumed the management of the estate, to which he devoted his entire life. He married Laura Smith, who was also born in Bureau county and was a daughter of Sidney P. Smith, who removed from New Hampshire to this state. He established his home just outside of Princeton, upon a farm which he carefully developed and improved. He married a Miss Doolittle, of Princeton, and both died in Bureau county when well advanced in years. The Smiths, like the Bryants, were of English descent. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney P. Smith were five children who reached mature years: Lucy, now the wife of A. C. Cutler; Emily, the wife of James Smart, of Chicago; Elizabeth, who married H. H. Curtis, of Chicago; Sidney P., living in Athol, Massachusetts; and Laura, who became Mrs. Bryant. The death of Elijah Bryant occurred in 1892, when he was fifty-six years of age. He had held a number of local offices and in a more quiet but none the less effective way had carried on the work which his father instituted for the development and upbuilding of the county. His widow still survives him and is numbered among the faithful members of the Congregational church, with which she has long been identified. Of their family of six children five are yet living: Frances, the wife of J. C. Bannister, of Kewanee, Illinois; Kate, the wife of W. E. McVay, of Los Angeles, California; William C., living in Princeton; Sue, the wife of A. H. Ferris, also of Princeton, Illinois; and John H., of this review.

Dr. Bryant spent his youthful days in his native city and the public and high schools afforded him his early educational privileges, his course being continued there until his graduation from the high school with the class of 1897, and spent the following summer traveling in Europe. During the two succeeding years he lived in Los Angeles, California, where he was employed as a bookkeeper in a bank. In the summer of 1899 he returned to Illinois and took up the study of medicine in the Northwestern University Medical School of Chicago, therein completing a four-years' course by graduation in 1903. To his theoretical training he added the broad practical experience of hospital practice as an interne, being thus engaged until July, 1904. In the fall of that year he was married and on the 1st of January, 1905, established his home in Galesburg, where he has since remained, gradually building up a practice which has now assumed extensive proportions. He keeps in touch with the progress of the medical fraternity through his perusal of the latest and most valued contributions to medical literature and his sound judgment enables him to select that which is best and most valuable and use such for the benefit of his patients. He is now serving on the Galesburg Hospital staff and is a member of the city, county and state medical societies and the American Medical Association.



On the 26th of October, 1904, Dr. Bryant was married to Miss Lillian R. Warfield, a native of Princeton and a daughter of Jacob H. and Mary (Clark)

Warfield. Her father was born in Uniontown, Ohio, and her mother's birth occurred near Princeton. Mr. Warfield passed away in 1890 but his wife is still living. They were parents of six children: George C.; Andrew A.; Lydia, the wife of W. C. Bryant; Charles W.; Lillian, the wife of J. H. Bryant; and John J. To Dr. Bryant and his wife has been born two daughters, Frances Warfield and Grace Adele. The parents are members of the Central Congregational church and Dr. Bryant gives his political allegiance to the republican party. He manifests unfaltering devotion to his chosen life work and his success is based not alone upon broad scientific attainments but also upon humanitarianism, which is one of the salient elements in his character.



SHELDON C. AYRES.

Among the few soldier boys of '61 still regularly engaged in the discharge of active duties must be mentioned Sheldon C. Ayres, who for forty-two years has been running out of Galesburg as a passenger conductor on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. His birth occurred at Andover, Henry county, Illinois, on the 5th of July, 1843, his parents being John A. and Mary B. (Washburn) Ayres. The father was a native of Connecticut and the mother of Maine, but they were married in Andover. John A. Ayres was reared and educated in his native state and there he also received his agricultural training. In 1835 he came to Illinois, settling on a farm in Henry county that he industriously cultivated for twenty-two years. In 1857 he withdrew from the work of the fields and went to Galva where he engaged in business for four years. He disposed of this in 1861, removing to a farm three miles west of Kewanee and there resided for twelve years. At the expiration of that time he sold his property and together with his wife removed to David City, Nebraska. He invested his money in lands in that vicinity but lived in the town, continuing to make that his home, as did also the mother, until death. He was a deacon in the Baptist church, in which they both held membership, and in politics he was a republican, but never held any office save that of school director. Nine children were born unto Mr. and Mrs. Ayres, as follows: Charlotte B., who is deceased; Sheldon C., our subject; William, who is also deceased; John, who is living in Nebraska; James, of Greenleaf, Kansas; Elizabeth, who is deceased; Edwin, a resident of Fairbury, Nebraska; Frank, who lives at David City, Nebraska; and Clifford, who is deceased.

The early years in the life of Sheldon C. Ayres were in no way unusual, but very similar in every respect to those of other lads of that period who were reared in the more sparsely settled communities. When old enough to begin his education he entered the public schools of Andover, completing his course in those of Galva. Thrilled with the patriotism that dominated so many of the youths at that time, when the call came for soldiers in the early days of the war he responded by enlisting as a private in Company D, Seventeenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He remained at the front for three years and one month, participating during that time in many of the most notable conflicts of the Rebellion. Among the battles in which he was engaged mention should be made

Among the battles in which he was engaged mention should be made of Frederickstown, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, both sieges of Corinth, Iuka, Holly Springs, Old River near Lake Providence, Clinton, Mississippi, Jackson, Meridian, Canton, Yazoo City, and the siege and capture of Vicksburg. He was discharged at Springfield, and immediately resumed the duties of civil life as a farmer, following this occupation until he attained his majority. Subsequently he joined an engineer corps that was surveying for the American Central from Galva to New Boston, and in 1866 he entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company in the capacity of a freight brakeman. He was later promoted to the position of conductor and on the 21st of April, 1869, he was assigned a passenger train. For many years he has been passenger conductor on the Galesburg and Quincy division, and is well and favorably known to all of the company's employes on this section.

Atkinson, Henry county, Illinois, was the scene of the marriage of Mr. Ayres to Miss Ellen E. Nichols, a daughter of Ziba and Mathilda (Smith) Nichols, the event being celebrated on the 2d of September, 1869. Three daughters were born to them: Nellie, Elizabeth and Mary, all of whom are now deceased.

Fraternally Mr. Ayres is a Mason, having joined the order at Kewanee in 1865, where he took the degrees of the blue lodge, and in 1867 he affiliated with the commandery at Galesburg. He is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, and both he and Mrs. Ayres belong to the Presbyterian church. His allegiance in political matters is accorded to the republican party, but he has never sought public honors, although he takes an active interest in all municipal questions and always goes to the poles on election day. On November 9, 1900, Mr. Ayres was appointed by Governor John R. Tanner of Illinois, one of the commissioners to ascertain and mark the position of the Illinois troops in the battle of Shiloh. Mr. Ayres is one of those who can be depended upon to meet the requirements of citizenship by giving his services and cooperation whenever needed, his efforts being characterized by the same fortitude and endurance as well as determination of purpose that distinguished him on the battlefields of the south.

FRANK LAUREN CONGER.

Frank Lauren Conger, a Lombard man, whose educational training has been used to good purpose in a successful and progressive business career, is now cashier of the First National Bank of Galesburg, his native city. He was born December 9, 1873, the elder of two children of Seth B. and Ella (Olmsted) Conger. The younger son is Dr. G. P. Conger, now practicing in Oak Park, Illinois. His paternal grandfather was Lauren C. Conger, a native of the state of New York, who married Amanda Hasbrook and came to Knox county at an early day, settling at Cherry Grove. Both he and his wife lived to old age and here reared their family of two sons, Seth B. and Fred H. The former, born in Illinois, was reared in this county and became one of the early students in Lombard College when that institution was known as Liberal Institute. His education completed, he afterward devoted some time to the cultivation of his father's farm lying west of the city. Later he took up the grocery business in which he continued for several years and subsequently removed to Missouri, living in Carroll county, that state, for about fifteen years. Returning to Galesburg he entered business circles here as a lumber dealer under the firm name of Conger & Hinchcliff and subsequently was engaged in the hardware and implement business in Knoxville for four or five years. During the last year and a half of his life he lived retired in Bradentown, Florida, where he passed away in 1910. In early manhood he wedded Ella Olmsted, also a native of this state and a daughter of Silas and Emily (Ward) Olmsted, who were natives of New York. They became early residents at Olmsted's Mills, north of Monmouth, Illinois, where the maternal grandfather of our subject operated a flour mill and also carried on farming. At length he removed to Galesburg where he engaged in merchandising until his death, which occurred when he was past middle age. His wife long survived, reaching the advanced age of eighty-nine years. In their family were four children: Ophelia, the wife of Lyman West; Flora E., the wife of John T. Avery; Ella A.; and Professor Everett Ward Olmsted, now of Cornell University at Ithaca, New York. It was the daughter Ella who became the wife of Seth Conger and the mother of F. L. Conger of this review. She still survives her husband and is now living in Galesburg, where she has a wide acquaintance. She holds membership in the Universalist church of which Mr. Conger also was a member.

Frank L. Conger was only a year old when his parents removed from this city to Missouri where he spent the succeeding fifteen years of his life upon his father's farm. He then returned to his native city and entered Lombard University from which he was graduated with the class of 1895. He afterward worked for a year in the lumberyard owned by his father and then pursued a year's course of study in pharmacy in the University of Illinois, School of Pharmacy. Later he opened a drug store at the corner of Main and Seminary streets in Galesburg, continuing in active connection with mercantile interests until he sold out to enter the field of banking. In 1898 he became collector of the First National Bank and has been gradually promoted through intermediate positions until he has now filled the position of cashier for more than six years. He has thoroughly acquainted himself with the banking business in every particular and is therefore well qualified for the onerous and responsible duties that devolve upon him in this connection. He is regarded as a most courteous and obliging bank official and his policy as well as his business ability contribute to the success of the bank.

On the 13th of February, 1900, Mr. Conger was married to Miss Mabel Dow, a daughter of Andrew G. and Flora (Prindle) Dow, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Michigan. They became early residents of Galesburg where Mrs. Conger was born. Her father died in 1905 when more than sixty years of age and her mother is still living. They have two children, the younger daughter being Edna, now the wife of James Moir, of Burlington, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Conger have one daughter, Barbara Lois. They hold membership in the Universalist church and Mr. Conger also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, serving for one year as exalted ruler of the local lodge. He likewise holds membership in the Galesburg Business Men's Club and is not only interested in its social features but is also a cooperant factor in its work for the improvement and upbuilding of the city and the extension of its commercial relations. In politics he is a republican and filled out an unexpired term as city treasurer but has never been an aspirant for office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business interests which have been of constantly developing importance. He is a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of Knox county, his great-grandfather having settled here as a pioneer when the seeds of civilization were just being planted in this district. Like his forefathers before him he takes an active and helpful interest in all projects for the progress of city and county along material, intellectual, social and moral lines.

ALBERT J. CLINE.

Albert J. Cline, of the Cline & Shaw Fuel Company, of Galesburg, was born in Peoria county, Illinois, October 16, 1871. He is a son of Peter S. and Miranda E. (Matteson) Cline, natives of the state of New York, the father having been born in Oswego county, in 1831, while the mother's birthplace was Troy. Peter S. Cline came west locating on a farm in Radner township, Peoria county. There he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in October, 1882. He was a democrat in his politics and served for eight years as a supervisor in his township. Five children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cline, of whom our subject is the fourth in order of birth. The others are as follow: Alice C., the wife of E. E. Kendall, of Victoria, Illinois; Fred C., who is deceased; Arthur R., who is residing in Galesburg; and Jessie C., the wife of Edwin Thommasson of Lefbridge, Alberta county. The family always attended the Presbyterian church in which the mother held membership.

Reared on the farm where he was born Albert J. Cline first attended the common schools of Akron township, Peoria county. His education was later supplemented by study in the Chillicothe high school, and a course in Brown's Business College at Galesburg. Although he had early been trained in agricultural pursuits, when ready to select his life vocation he decided that he preferred a business career. His first position was in the office of I. R. Green, a well known coal dealer of Galesburg, by whom he was employed for a year. Later he became associated with R. N. Shaw in purchasing this business, which at that time only supplied the retail trade. Under their capable direction this enterprise flourished in a most gratifying manner and they later extended the scope of their activities by the addition of a wholesale department. Their offices are located in the Holmes building, suite 201 to 205, this city. They do a wholesale coal business and also handle sand, gravel and crushed rock. The business has increased in a most satisfactory manner and they now have a well established and constantly increasing patronage. They are incorporated for fifteen thousand dollars with Mr. Cline as president; A. R. Cline, vice president; and R. N. Shaw, secretary and treasurer.

On the 31st of October, 1900, Mr. Cline was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Brown, a daughter of James A. and Ellen (Spence) Brown, of Good Hope, Illinois. They were both natives of Pennsylvania, the father having been born in the vicinity of Pittsburg, and the mother at Sunbury. In the early years of their domestic life they came to Illinois, locating on a farm at Good Hope, to the further improvement of which the father devoted his energies until his death. The mother is still living and now makes her home at Macomb, Illinois. In religious faith Mr. Brown was a Presbyterian, and his widow still holds membership in that church. The birth of Mrs. Cline occurred on the old family homestead at Good Hope, on the 3d of September, 1877, and there she was reared to womanhood. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cline, Margaret A., whose birth occurred in Galesburg, on September 25, 1905.

Fraternally Mr. Cline is an Odd Fellow and both he and Mrs. Cline belong to the Presbyterian church, and politically he is a republican. He has never sought political honors, however, always preferring to give his undivided attention to the further development of his business.

LOUIS BECKER, M. D.

Dr. Louis Becker is not only rendering service of value to his fellow townsmen in the practice of medicine and surgery but is also filling the office of mayor of Knoxville. He was born in Clarksville, Tennessee, October 15, 1864, a son of Lothar and Mary (Smith) Becker. The father was born in the kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, and was a son of Franz Becker, who followed the milling business in the city of Hahnhofen, where he died when past middle life. Lothar Becker was one of a large family and was reared in his native country, until he participated in the war which sought to obtain greater liberties for the people of the fatherland. The revolutionists, as they were called, were not successful and, like Carl Schurz and many other eminent men of the country, he was obliged to leave Germany and accordingly sought the liberty of the new world. On coming to America he settled in the old town of Henderson, Knox county, Illinois, where he conducted a flouring mill in connection with Henry White under the firm name of White & Becker. There Mr. Becker continued until after the outbreak of the Civil war, when he offered his services to the government and commanded a company of Illinois artillery until the cessation of hostilities. He then returned to Knox county and for some years operated a flouring mill at Galesburg belonging to Judge Knowles. Subsequently he was owner and superintendent of the coal mines at Soperville and in 1876 he went to Galveston, Texas, where he conducted a flouring mill until his death. In early manhood he had wedded Mary Smith, a native of Vermont and a daughter of Loren and Eliza (Bemis) Smith. Her father was also born in the Green Mountain state, of English descent and a farmer by occupation. At an early day he came with his family to Galesburg, Illinois, where he died at the advanced age of eighty-five years, while his wife reached the age of eighty-four years. They had four daughters who grew to womanhood: Betsey, the wife of M. D. Cook; Laura, the wife of Henry White; Ursula, the wife of Charles Norton; and Mary, who became the wife of Lothar Becker. She has also departed this life. She was a member of the Universalist church, while her husband held membership in the Catholic church. In politics he was a republican and at one time served as alderman of Galesburg from the second ward.

Their children were four in number: Fred, deceased; Frank, now living in Galveston, Texas; Louis; and Pauline, the widow of Louis Weber, of Knoxville.

Dr. Becker, although born in Tennessee, has been a resident of Knox county since 1865, save for the period of three years spent in Galveston, Texas. He was only a year old when the family came to Knox county and was reared in Galesburg, pursuing his education in the public schools there and in Knox Academy and Knox College. A review of the various avenues of business to which an individual might direct his energies, led him to the determination to make the practice of medicine his life work and he at once began studying, spending a year in the medical department of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor and two years in the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago. He then began practicing in Knoxville in 1888 and has remained here continuously since. He is now doing private practice and is also physician at the County House and at St. Mary's and St. Martha's schools.

Dr. Becker was married October 11, 1888, to Miss Addie Rearick, a native of Beardstown, Illinois, and a daughter of Frank H. and Helen (Shaw) Rearick. Her father was born in Germany and her mother in Massachusetts and they were married in Beardstown, Illinois. Mr. Rearick is now engaged in the hardware business in Galesburg but his wife is deceased. They had a family of six children: Harry F.; Walter S.; Fannie, the wife of W. B. Barnes, of Fort Madison, Iowa; Mrs. Becker; Allen C., of New York city, who is an attorney; and Herbert C., deceased.

Dr. and Mrs. Becker are the parents of four children, Harry F., Frances Marjorie, Louis Dunster and Edwin Shaw. The parents are members of the Presbyterian church, in which Dr. Becker is serving as an elder. He holds membership in Pacific Lodge, No. 66, A. F. & A. M.; Raboni Chapter, R. A. M.; and Illinois Council, No. 1, R. & S. M. In politics he is a republican and in the spring of 1911 was elected to the office of mayor, so that he is now officially directing the affairs of the city. He was for many years a member of the school board. In strictly professional lines he is connected with the county and state medical societies and the American Medical Association. The greater part of his time and attention have been given to his professional duties, and yet he has found some opportunity for cooperation in public work.

ELMIRA F. HERTIG, M. D.

Upon the basis of a broad classical course in college Dr. Elmira F. Hertig built the superstructure of her professional knowledge and is today recognized as one of the well informed and capable members of the medical fraternity of Galesburg, her success being evidenced in the extensive practice now accorded her. She is a native of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and a daughter of John and Elizabeth Ann (Schowalter) Hertig. The father was a native of France and after coming to America engaged in teaching in Pennsylvania for a number of years. It was in that state that he was married, his wife being a native of Pennsylvania. There the family home was established and Dr. Hertig pursued her early education in the public schools of Fayette county and later continued her studies in Waynesburg College of Pennsylvania. Her professional training was received in Chicago where she entered the Woman's Hospital and Medical College, being graduated therefrom with the class of 1885. She received the A. M. degree from Waynesburg and her M. D. degree upon her graduation in Chicago. For two years she continued in practice in that city and in 1887 came to Galesburg, where she has since remained, successfully following her chosen life work here. She is familiar with the science of medicine in all of its branches and has remained a close student thereof, keeping in touch with the advanced thought of the profession and with all of the discoveries which are continuously promoting knowledge and adding to the efficiency of the practitioner. She belongs to the Knox County Medical Society and also the American Medical Association. Aside from any professional connection she is widely known and is a lady of innate culture and refinement, whose broad reading has made her familiar with the current topics and interests of the day.

PHILIP N. GRANVILLE.

The history of Galesburg in its financial connections would be incomplete and unsatisfactory, were there failure to make prominent reference to Philip N. Granville, who for more than twenty years has served as cashier of the Bank of Galesburg, which he aided in organizing in 1889. Throughout all the intervening period he has made a close study of the problems of finance and the questions which arise in connection with the conduct of banking institutions and his efficiency and ability have continually increased, while his labors have contributed in full measure to the success of the institution, with which he has so long been connected. He is numbered among the worthy native sons of Knox county, his birth having occurred in Abingdon on the 17th of July, 1855. His parents, John and Bothilda Granville, were born in County Kristianstad, Sweden. The paternal grandparents passed away in that country, but John Granville, the father, who was a shoemaker by trade, crossed the Atlantic to the United States about 1851 and came direct to Victoria, Knox county, Illinois. He subsequently located in Abingdon, where he worked at his trade, and in 1865 he took up his abode in Galesburg, where he established a shoe business in partnership with Olaf Johnson. He was afterward in partnership with Victor Velander until 1869, after which he conducted the business practically alone until about 1889, when he retired on account of failing health. He had won success during his many years of connection with the shoe trade and the last years of his life were spent in honorable retirement, his demise occurring November 17, 1893, when he had attained the age of sixty-eight years. During the period of his residence in this county, covering more than four decades, he had won an extensive circle of friends and his death was therefore the occasion of deep and widespread regret. His wife survived him for only one month, being seventy-seven years old when called to her final rest on the 12th of December, 1893. Both passed away in the faith of the Methodist church. They were the parents of five children, two of whom are yet living, namely: Philip N., of this review; and Emily C., the wife of C. T. Holmes, of Galesburg.

They were the parents of five children, two of whom are yet living, namely: Philip N., of this review; and Emily C., the wife of C. T. Holmes, of Galesburg.

P. N. Granville

Philip N. Granville has resided in Galesburg continuously since 1865 with the exception of about a year spent in Evanston. In the acquirement of an education he attended the public schools and Knox Academy and at intervals was employed in different dry-goods stores. At various periods he was in the service of O. T. Johnson and other dry-goods merchants as bookkeeper for a couple of years. After permanently putting aside his text-books he went to Evanston, where he entered the hardware establishment of Lindgren & Wigren, remaining there for nearly a year. He then returned to Galesburg and entered the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, first as clerk in the roundhouse and afterward in the roadmaster's office. Subsequently he was in the office of the master mechanic and still later, leaving the railroad company, became connected with the Covenant Mutual Benefit Association as cashier. He severed his connection with that company when elected city treasurer in 1887 for a term of two years. When about to retire from the office he was asked by J. R. Lindgren, by whom he had been employed while in Evanston and who had embarked in the banking business in Chicago in connection with Mr. Haugan, to establish a branch bank in Galesburg under the name of the Bank of Galesburg, Haugan & Lindgren, proprietors. Mr. Granville selected Axel Gabrielson, a bank officer of experience at that time connected with The Farmers & Mechanics Bank of Galesburg, to become cashier, while he assumed the duties of the assistant cashiership. He also selected H. E. Olson, an insurance man, to become bookkeeper and also take charge of the insurance department of the bank. The new institution opened its doors for business and entered upon a successful career. On the 3d of October, 1891, this bank was incorporated as a state bank with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, and the following officers were then elected: A. M. Craig, president; Peter Nelson, vice president; Axel Gabrielson, cashier; P. N. Granville, assistant cashier and director; with H. E. Olson as bookkeeper and P. N. Granville as secretary of the board of directors. In September, 1892, Mr. Gabrielson resigned and Mr. Granville then became cashier of the bank, which position he has since continued to occupy. The bank has grown continuously, its capital has been increased to one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars and its cash surplus has reached three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. It owns its bank building, which at present is being remodeled, being converted from a three-story to a five-story building, with more commodious rooms for its banking business. For two decades Mr. Granville has been cashier of the institution and has proved a most capable and popular official, whose labors in conjunction with those of the president, A. M. Craig, a far-sighted, conservative business man of substantial means, have been a potent factor in promoting and strengthening the bank and increasing its surplus and capital.

On the 1st of November, 1903, Mr. Granville was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Olson, a native of Galesburg, Illinois, and a daughter of Michael and Cecelia Olson, who were born in Bergen, Norway, and took up their abode among the early settlers of Galesburg. Mr. Olson is still living here but lost his wife on the 6th of May, 1911, when she had attained the age of eighty-four years. Three of their children still survive, as follows: Mrs. Granville; Anna C., the wife of George F. Eckstrand; and Dr. J. C. Olsen, a doctor of chemistry and an expert on foods, who is at present connected with the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, New York. He gave many lectures on the results of his researches and is the author of a book on "Pure Foods" and a volume entitled "Text-book of Quantitative Chemical Analysis." Mr. and Mrs. Granville have two children, John Philip and Elizabeth.

In politics Mr. Granville is a stanch republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. For two years he acted as alderman of the second ward. In Masonry he has attained high rank, being a member of the following organizations: Alpha Lodge, No. 155, F. & A. M., of which he is treasurer; Galesburg Chapter, No. 46, R. A. M.; Galesburg Commandery, No. 8, K. T., in which he is eminent commander; Illinois Council, No. 1, R. & S. M., being presiding officer of the council at Knoxville; Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine; and Peoria Consistory, S. P. R. S. He likewise belongs to the First Scandinavian Lodge, No. 46, I. O. O. F., and is identified with the encampment and the canton. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church, to which his wife also belongs. His genuine worth and his devotion to all that is right, just and elevating, make him a man whom to know is to respect and honor.

GEORGE J. EASTES.

Knox county has been signally favored in the class of men who have usually occupied her public offices. On the whole they have been called from among the best citizenship and with loyal and patriotic spirit have discharged the duties that have devolved upon them. In this connection George J. Eastes deserves mention, for at the present writing he is capably filling the position of county treasurer. He was born in Galesburg, on Christmas day of 1868, a son of Jabez and Maria S. (Porter) Eastes. The family is of English lineage and the paternal grandfather, John Watson Eastes, a native of England, was an old seaman and for many years a pilot on the English channel. He died in his native land at a venerable age and his wife also traveled far on life's journey before called to her final rest. They had a large family, including John, Samuel, Henry, Jabez, Richard, Alfred, Mary Ann and Cynthia. The maternal grandfather of George J. Eastes was Benjamin Porter, a native of Massachusetts, who devoted his life to farming. His wife died in early womanhood but he lived to a ripe old age. In their family were three children, George, Maria S. and Mary.

Jabez Eastes, father of our subject, was born in Kent county, England, while the mother was a native of Massachusetts. He spent his youthful days to the age of ninteen years in his native country and pursued his education there. Desirous of having better advantages than could be secured in the old world, he sailed for America and in 1849 became a resident of Galesburg, where he has since lived, being today one of the oldest residents of the city, having made his home within its borders for sixty-two years. He has, therefore, been a witness of its growth from early villagehood and is also cognizant with many events which have left deep impress upon the history of central Illinois. For many years he engaged in bookkeeping but some years ago retired from business life. He holds membership in the Congregational church, as did his wife, who died in 1873, when about thirty-eight years of age. They were the parents of six children who lived to maturity, John W., Edward P., Fannie M., Eliza B., George J. and Carrie A.

In taking up the personal history of George J. Eastes we present to our readers the life record of one who is widely and favorably known in Galesburg, where he has spent his entire life. His history stands in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for in the city of his nativity he has been called to positions of prominence, indicative of the confidence and trust reposed in him by his fellow townsmen, among whom he has always made his home. Entering the public schools at the usual age, he passed through consecutive grades until graduated from the high school with the class of 1887. He then turned his attention to railroading, being first connected with the service as a clerk, while later he was fireman for sixteen years and engineer for two years. He left the road in 1906, when called to the office of city treasurer, which he filled for two years. In the fall of 1910 he was elected county treasurer and is now serving in that capacity, promptly and systematically discharging the duties of the office that devolve upon him.

On the 21st of December, 1899, Mr. Eastes was married to Miss Ada Vinecke, a daughter of Christian J. and Catharine (Case) Vinecke. Mrs. Eastes was born in New York, near Buffalo, and her parents were also natives of that state. They became residents of Galesburg in 1888 and here Mrs. Vinecke is still living, but the father passed away in 1907, at the age of sixty-six years. Unto them were born five children, Elmer, Carrie J., Hattie, Ada, and Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Eastes have one son, George Vinecke. The parents hold membership in the Episcopal church and Mr. Eastes is well known in fraternal circles, being especially prominent in Masonry. His membership is in Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Iowa Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.; St. Omar Commandery, No. 15, K. T., of Burlington, Iowa; Zarephath Consistory, A. A. & S. R., of Davenport, Iowa; and Kaaba Temple of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also connected with Galesburg Lodge, No. 142, I. O. O. F., and with the Galesburg lodge of Elks. His political allegiance has always been given the republican party and he has been an earnest worker in its ranks. In office he is making a most creditable record, his work receiving the commendation of all who know aught of the actual labor that is connected with the position.

HON. HENRY McCALL SISSON.

During the years of his residence in Knox county Hon. Henry McCall Sisson was well known as an educator, farmer, breeder of fine stock and later as a retired citizen whose activity in former years well merited rest and prosperity which crowned the evening of his life. He was also prominent in public affairs and although many positions of trust and responsibility were accorded him, he never betrayed this trust in the slightest degree. He was born in Clinton, New York, September 29, 1829, and his parents, Pardon and Abba (McCall) Sis-son, were both natives of New England. They were married September 30, 1827, in Lebanon, Connecticut, and afterward removed to Oneida county, New York, where they resided for fifteen years prior to their arrival in Galesburg in 1842. The ancestral line on the maternal side has been traced back through thirty-seven generations to Egbert, who became king in the year 802 A. D., and was styled Rex Anglorum, or the King of the English. One of the great-grandfathers of Henry McCall Sisson was Captain Veach Williams, a man of considerable prominence in his day, who was born in Lebanon, Connecticut, April 23, 1727. He came of the same family as Ephraim Williams, the founder of Williams College, and of William Williams, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and speaker of the colonial congress.

Henry M. Sisson enjoyed the educational advantages offered by his native town and made wise use of his time and talents. He was a lad of thirteen years when the family came to Galesburg and after continuing his studies for a time in the district schools here he entered Knox Academy in the fall of 1843. He became very proficient in Latin and in mathematics was a particularly apt pupil. When only sixteen years of age he had made such advancement that he was chosen as teacher in the public schools, his broad intelligence well qualifying him for the position. For thirteen years he remained a resident of Galesburg but in 1855 removed to his farm in Henderson township and during the greater part of his life was connected with general agricultural pursuits.

In addition to tilling the fields Mr. Sisson engaged quite extensively in the raising of fine stock in which he was very successful. He was also an excellent judge of stock, his opinions being accepted as authority upon their value. His business affairs were most capably managed and the energy and industry, sound judgment and sagacity which he displayed constituted effective forces in winning for him the success which crowned his labors.

Mr. Sisson not only won for himself a creditable position in business circles but also enjoyed the confidence of his fellowmen in a large degree and by them was called to fill many positions of public trust. He was elected supervisor of Henderson township in 1869 and was again called to that office in 1876, at which time he remained in the position for three years. Again in 1885 he was chosen supervisor and served altogether for eleven years. After establishing his home in Galesburg he was elected to the office and continued therein for several terms. He was likewise school trustee, road commissioner and in other connections proved his loyalty to the best interests of the community. Moreover he was identified with many organizations for the advancement of progress along agricultural and other lines. He was a member of the farmers congress at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago and was a delegate to the farmers national convention held in Fort Worth, Texas, in 1898. He was president of the National Poland China Swine Association and for ten years was president of the American Poland China Record Company. He was president of the Knox County Farmers Institute and his labors constituted a potent force in advancing agricultural interests in this part of the state and in stimulating progress throughout the country. He held to the highest possible standards and believed that everything should be done for the improvement of conditions and methods.

On the 25th of December, 1860, Mr. Sisson was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Jane Miller, a daughter of John and Jane A. (Crane) Miller, who were residents of Chicago. In fact her father was one of the honored pioneers of that city, having served as one of the first trustees when Chicago was a village. The family have a facsimile of the resolutions adopted at that meeting. Mr. Miller had previously been engaged in business in La Porte, Indiana, and removed thence to Chicago where he acted as overseer in the building of houses. He made his home there from 1845 until three years before his death, which occurred in 1858, in Galesburg, Illinois. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Sisson are six children, as follows: Mrs. W. H. Cooper, of Denver, Colorado; Mrs. William J. Pringle, of Chicago; Mrs. A. H. Stephens, residing in New York city; Mrs. E. P. Robson, of Wataga, Illinois; and Mrs. E. R. Everett and Miss Anna Sisson, of Galesburg.

Mr. Sisson was ever a great reader and kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day and on all the topics of general interest. He was familiar with the history of his country and its politics and also thoroughly informed concerning the history of Illinois. At the time of his death he was the president of the Old Settlers Association of Knox county and not only was a witness of the important events which have here occurred but was an active participant in many. He long attended the Presbyterian church and possessed a nature free from dishonesty and equally free from ostentation and display. He was a lover of home and friends and it would be difficult to find one who had more warm friends in Knox county than Henry M. Sisson. His death occurred on the 29th of May, 1905. His life had been a useful one, well spent and fruitful of good results. He not only made continuous advancement himself but stimulated and inspired the progress of others and was particularly well known throughout the country in connection with stock-raising interests. No history of Knox county would be complete without a record of his life which constitutes a creditable chapter in the annals of this section.

JOHN Z. CARNS.

John Z. Carns, who for the past eleven years has been president of the Farmers' National Bank of Knoxville, has spent the entire period of his business career in this institution, where he was first employed in the capacity of assistant cashier. His birth occurred in Knoxville on September 8, 1858, and he is the only child born of the marriage of John W. and Sarah (Zook) Carns. The father was born in Staunton, Augusta county, Virginia, on the 22d of May, 1808, and there he lived until he was eight years of age. Jacksonville, Illinois, became his home in 1816, and there he completed his schooling and learned the tailor's trade, which he followed for some years. In 1836 he left Jacksonville and came to Knoxville where he became associated with John Eads in establishing a grocery and dry-goods store. This undertaking proved to be very successful and they later extended the scope of their activities by opening a clothing store. Their efforts met with increasing prosperity and Mr. Carns became one of the substantial citizens of the town. He was a man of unusual energy and ambition and continued to be identified with the commercial activities of Knoxville until 1879, when he retired. Mr. Carns was twice married, his first union having been with Miss Eleanor York, to whom he was united on October 8, 1834. She was born in Kentucky on the 28th of July, 1817, and passed away in Knoxville, on August 8, 1851. Unto them were born three children, two of whom are still living: Mary, the wife of John Brewer, of Monmouth; and Sarah Elizabeth, the widow of O. N. Barnhart, also of Monmouth. On the 7th of September, 1857, Mr. Carns was married to Miss Sarah Zook, who was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of March, 1819.

After the completion of his preliminary education John Z. Carns entered Knox College, at Galesburg. At the age of twenty-seven years, in 1885, he began his business career, and entered the bank, with which he has ever since been identified, in the capacity of assistant cashier. He attentively applied himself to the thorough mastery of his various duties, at the same time acquiring a broader knowledge of finance, thus qualifying himself for the responsibilities of a higher position. In 1887 he was promoted to the office of cashier in which he continued until 1899 when he was elected president. During the long period of his connection with the banking interests of Knox county, Mr. Carns has proven himself to be unusually well qualified for the position he now holds. His clear judgment, foresight and conservative policy well adapt him for the head of a financial institution, and the Farmers' National Bank of Knoxville is one of the strongest and best established banks of the county.

In Knoxville on September 10, 1890, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Carns and Miss Nellie Pierce. She is a daughter of Charles A. and Ellen P. Pierce. The father, who was a native of the state of New York, is now deceased, but the mother is still living. To Mr. and Mrs. Carns there has been born one daughter, Marie, whose birth occurred on October 26, 1892.

His political allegiance Mr. Carns gives to the republican party and the past twenty-five years he has been a member of the local school board, and he has also served in the capacity of city treasurer. He is one of the more progressive citizens of the town, and is always ready to give his cooperation or indorsement to any movement that is inaugurated for the purpose of promoting the community welfare, along all lines of general interest.

JOHN COOKE.

At the age of seventy-seven years John Cooke is still full of active interest in his work, being absorbed in the varied duties and responsibilities which devolve upon him in his capacity as superintendent of the Knox County Almshouse, at Knoxville. Born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, December 11, 1834, he is a son of Thomas and Eliza A. (Frazier) Cooke, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. The father was a miller by occupation and operated a mill in Fayette county for many years, continuing in this employment until his death. The family consisted of two sons and one daughter, of whom John Cooke is the only one now surviving. His sister died when she was thirteen months old and his brother, Frazier L. Cooke, passed away at the age of twenty-two years.

lowed in Pennsylvania until 1866. In that year he came to Knox county, Illinois, and engaged in farming, continuing in this pursuit until 1892, never residing more than two miles from Knoxville. He then retired, having received the appointment to the position of superintendent of the Knox County Almshouse on December 1, 1891, and has served in this capacity since that time. He is well fitted for this place, being ever merciful and possessing the utmost sympathy for those who have been less kindly dealt with by fortune, and is regarded with sincere loyalty by those who have come to find a home within his gates.

On October 2, 1856, the marriage of Mr. Cooke and Miss Martha M. Forrey was solemnized. She was born in Pennsylvania on January 17, 1836, a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Lenhart) Forrey, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania. They had thirteen children, of whom Mrs. Cooke and two others are now living.

Mr. and Mrs. Cooke hold membership in the Christian church, of which the former has been an elder for the past thirty-five years. In his fraternal relations he is connected with the Masonic brotherhood, being a member of Pacific Lodge No. 66, A. F. & A. M., in which he has occupied all but one of the chairs. Politically he is in sympathy with the principles of the republican party. Conscientious in the discharge of his duties, he believes and practices the Christian ideal of the Brotherhood of Man and has won the respect of all who know him.

FRANKLIN H. HOOKER.

Franklin H. Hooker is filling the office of deputy sheriff of Knox county and was formerly its sheriff. He makes his home in Galesburg at No. 337 South Cherry street and is a native of the county, his birth having occurred near Abingdon, May 1, 1865. His parents were William Chauncey and Rowena C. (Robinson) Hooker, both natives of Nicholas county, West Virginia. The former was a son of John L. Hooker who was likewise born in West Virginia and made the occupation of farming his life work. He came to Illinois some time in the '60s but afterward removed to Kansas and passed away at Smith Center that state, at an old age. His wife bore the maiden name of Nancy Bruffey and they were the parents of three sons and two daughters, William C., John H., Edward, Catharine and Elizabeth. The maternal grandfather of F. H. Hooker was also a native of West Virginia and devoted his life to farming and merchandising. He died in Summersville, that state, when about sixty-five years of age. Unto him and his wife were born eight children, Benjamin H., Rowena C., Betsey, Julia, Hammond, Joseph, Samuel H. and Lola.

After spending his youthful days in West Virginia William Hooker came to Knox county, Illinois, about 1862, settling about two miles northwest of Abingdon. He was a civil engineer and in this county devoted much time to inventions, bringing out a number of useful devices while at the same time he carried on his farm work. He died in Abingdon, in February, 1909, at the age of sixty-seven years, and his wife still survives him. Mrs. Hooker is a member of the Methodist church and is well known in her home locality. By her marriage to Mr. Hooker she became the mother of four children, all now living: Franklin H., of this review; Marguerite, of Abingdon; Nannie, the wife of Charles A. Reynolds, of Galesburg; and John L., of Abingdon.

Franklin H. Hooker was reared in this county and has spent practically his entire life in Abingdon up to the last eight years. He was a pupil in the public schools there and after putting aside his text-books began work at the carpenter's trade which he followed in the employ of others or as a contractor for ten or twelve years. He then turned his attention to merchandising, conducting a grocery store in Abingdon for four years. On the expiration of that period he came to Galesburg, being appointed deputy sheriff under C. F. Hurburgh, in which office he continued for four years. Later he became deputy under R. G. Matthews and filled the office until the death of the latter, when Mr. Hooker was elected sheriff in 1908, remaining as the incumbent of that position until the fall of 1910. He then became deputy sheriff under the newly elected sheriff, F. F. Seaman, and is thus numbered among Knox county's office-holders of the present day.

In February, 1895, Mr. Hooker was married to Miss Nellie Foreman, who was born south of Berwick in Warren county, Illinois, a daughter of Frank and Mary (Lewis) Foreman. Her father was of Canadian birth and her mother was born near Berwick but both are now deceased. They had two children, the younger being a son, Frank L. Foreman. Mr. and Mrs. Hooker hold membership in the Methodist church and are loyal to its teachings. Fraternally he is connected with Abingdon Lodge, No. 185, A. F. & A. M., and also with the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he has always been a republican and years ago served as city marshal of Abingdon while for two years he was collector of Cedar township. He has made a creditable record in business and in office and in the discharge of the duties of his present position has ever been faithful, fearless and loyal, a fact which is indicated by his long connection with the sheriff's office.

JAMES WILKS.

One of the enterprising men of Knox county and well known for the excellent character of his work is James Wilks, who is a painter, paper hanger and decorator and is also proficient in the brick and stone-mason's trade. He was born in Gloucestershire, England, April 17, 1845, his parents being George and Susan (Aston) Wilks, natives of the same locality. His father was for many years a gardener but later learned the stone-mason's trade. The mother, who was skilled in the use of roots and herbs, practiced her art of medicinal cures with much success throughout her life. In 1849 the family, which consisted of nine children, left their home in England and crossed the Atlantic, landing in Pottsville, Pennsylvania, after a tediously drawn-out journey of sixteen weeks. They remained in Pottsville for a brief period, removing thereupon to Mount Savage, Maryland, where they resided for four years. In 1853 the father came to Knox county, Illinois, and made a close survey of this locality with a view to settling and the following year brought his family from Maryland to their new home in Wataga. During their residence in that town Mr. Wilks and his two sons James and Thomas went to Iowa for a time and bought a tract of land in Jasper county, where they began the development of a coal bank. Later he traded this tract for land near Wataga and opened up the first coal bank that was ever operated in Knox county. The parents both passed away in Wataga, the father in 1887 and the mother in 1879. Only four children of the family survive, of whom Thomas is the eldest and possesses an interesting record of service during the Civil war. He enlisted from Wataga in Company K, of the Forty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, one of the leading regiments, and served all through the war, participating in about forty engagements. Among these was the siege of Vicksburg, in which he was one of the three that performed the daring deed of carrying the torches that ignited the fuse which blew up the city. He was severely wounded in this battle but continued his military service as soon as he recovered. James Wilks also has two sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Mallin, of Galesburg; and Hattie, of Canton, Illinois. His twin brothers, Job and John, are both deceased.

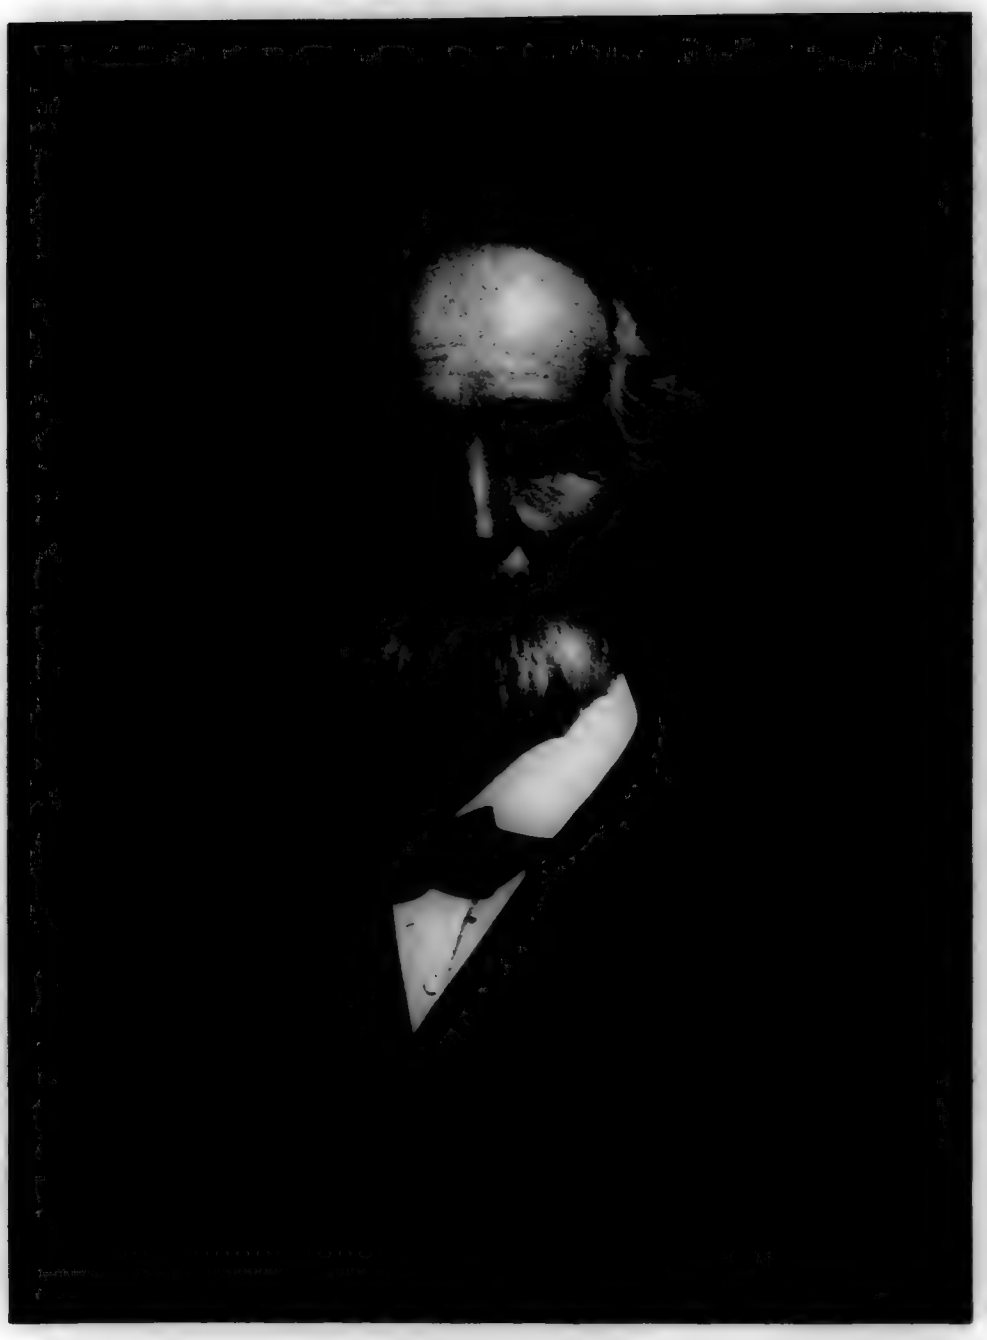
During the residence of the Wilks family in Maryland James Wilks began his education in the schools of Mount Savage and after their removal to Wataga, Illinois, completed his education. During the progress of the Civil war he enlisted for one hundred days from Wataga in Company B, One Hundred and thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was mustered in at Quincy, but not found old enough to go to the front. He reenlisted, however, and was mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, serving six months. At the close of the war he returned to his home in Wataga and learned the stone and brick-mason's trade, which he has followed ever since, making a specialty of building cisterns. He worked at his trade for a time in Abingdon and in Galesburg, coming to Knoxville twenty-six years ago. In addition to the trade which he originally learned, he mastered the methods employed in painting, paper-hanging and decorating, evincing great skill in these allied departments of the building trade. He has the distinction of being the first in Galesburg to decorate a room, having performed the contract for Henry Gart.

On October 20, 1868, Mr. Wilks was united in marriage to Miss Mary Isabel Laird, born in Pennsylvania in 1846. Her parents, Matthew and Isabel Laird, came to Illinois in 1855, their family being the first to settle in Woodhull, where her father followed the shoemaker's trade. Mr. and Mrs. Laird are now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilks five children were born, four daughters and a son. Charlotte is the wife of Wilson Hitchens, an engineer in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and resides in Manitou, Colorado. They are the parents of two daughters and a son, Maude, Earl and Ellen. Valetta, the second in order of birth in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Wilks and now deceased, was the wife of Charles Rogers. They were the parents of three children, Geneva, Charlotte and Forrest. Nellie, deceased, was the wife of Homer Jones. Martha, the wife of John Schwensen, an engineer in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad, lives in Kansas. Fred, living in Galesburg, where he is employed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, is married to Catherine Sikes and has one child, Richard.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilks are members of the Presbyterian church, to which they give their loyal and helpful support. Mr. Wilks is a member of Knoxville Post,



No. 239, G. A. R., of Knoxville, in which he has been past lieutenant commander. All those who know James Wilks—and his acquaintance is a wide one—hold him in high esteem for his honest, upright character and his industrious mode of life. He is still actively engaged in the pursuit of his calling and finds his greatest joy in doing well the tasks of each passing day.

DEAN C. HURLBUTT.

A native of New England, Dean C. Hurlbutt inherited from his New England ancestors those stern qualities of self-denial and unremitting industry which seldom fail to produce success and win the rewards that belong to honest toil. He is the owner of a tract of land comprising one thousand acres in Knox county and lives retired at his home in West Main street, Yates City, Illinois, where he devotes himself to the numerous business and financial interests which claim his attention. He was born in Coos county, New Hampshire, February 13, 1834, a son of Asa and Mary (Jones) Hurlbutt. The father was born, in 1800, in Waterford, Vermont, where he received his education in the common schools. He was married in New Hampshire, where Mary Jones was born in 1805, and lived in the east for a number of years. In 1853 he brought his family to Illinois, first settling in Truro township and later in Elba township, where he entered eighty acres from the government. He resided there until his death at the age of sixty years, being buried in Jones cemetery in Elba township, beside his wife, who preceded him in death at the age of forty-six years. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom all have died except Dean C. Hurlbutt and his sister, Mrs. Sarah E. Griffin, who resides in Linn county, Missouri. Mr. Asa Hurlbutt was a republican in politics but never sought for the honors of office. He and his family belonged to the Methodist Episcopal church.

Dean C. Hurlbutt was educated in the public schools of New Hampshire and early in life was trained in agricultural duties. He accompanied the family when his father came to Knox county, in 1853, and two years after engaged in farming for himself. He began by renting a piece of land for a year and then bought eighty acres on section 6 in Elba township, where he pursued general farming and the breeding of blooded stock. He improved the place greatly and erected two separate sets of buildings, but after some time removed to a farm which he bought on section 17 in Elba township, continuing his labors in the fields until 1907, when he retired and took up his residence in Yates City. He is by no means idle, however, since he is a director of the Farmer's Telephone Exchange of Yates City, the president of the company being O. B. West, the secretary and treasurer, William Faulds, and the manager, Fred Conover. It is a thriving company having installed thus far one hundred and twenty-five telephones in local homes and business places, and offers connected service with the Galesburg Union Telephone Company.

In 1855 Mr. Hurlbutt was united in marriage to Mrs. Elizabeth Ann (Lambert) Butts, a native of Indiana. She was a daughter of Isaac Lambert and the widow of Stuart Butts, by whom she had two children, Alvertis and Stuart

Dear C. Hulbert

M. Butts. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hurlbutt, but both are deceased. Mary, the older, became the wife of Guy Davis and had one son, Roy, and the younger, Julia A., was not married. Roy Davis, the grandson of Mr. Hurlbutt, and his namesake, Dean C. Hurlbutt, a nephew, were brought up by Mr. and Mrs. Hurlbutt and are now engaged in operating the home place. Roy Davis married Miss Eva Green and they have one child, Guy. Dean C. Hurlbutt, Jr., married Miss Percie Caldwell and they have two children, Dean C. and George S. His first wife having passed away, Dean C. Hurlbutt, our subject, was married, in 1907, to Mrs. Janet Pulver, a daughter of George Doty. Mrs. Hurlbutt was the mother of six children by her first marriage, namely, Chester H., Dora, Amy, Martha, Nettie and Bert Pulver.

Mr. Hurlbutt uses his ballot in support of the republican party. He is an energetic business man and in his dealings with others has gained an enviable reputation for being sincere and loyal to his friends.

FORREST F. COOKE.

Forrest F. Cooke, for thirty-nine years identified with the legal fraternity of Galesburg, was born in Plainfield, New Jersey, on the 4th of February, 1848. He is a son of the late Milo D. and Betsey B. (Smith) Cooke, natives of Vermont, where they were reared and married. The father's birth occurred in Cornwall, Addison county, on the 21st of June, 1819, and the mother's in the village of Monkton, that county, in 1824. They were married in 1846 and subsequently located in Plainfield, where the father, who was a lawyer, engaged in teaching until 1853. In the latter year together with his wife and family he came to Knox county, locating in Henderson. There he continued to teach for three years, then came to Galesburg. The following year, in 1857, he was made police magistrate at the first election held after the adoption of the city charter. He discharged the duties of this office with rare efficiency as is manifested by the length of his term, which was terminated by his death, on the 12th of May, 1889. Local politics always engaged much of his attention, and he was called to fill various public offices. His support was always given to the men and measures of the republican party, and for many years he served on the school board and also as a supervisor. The mother is still living and continues to make her home in Galesburg. She has always been an earnest Christian and holds membership in the Congregational church.

Forrest F. Cooke, who is the only child of his parents, was a lad of eight years when the family took up their residence in Galesburg. His early education was obtained in the public schools of this city, and in 1863 he entered Lombard University, where he remained until April of the following year. He then laid aside his text-books and responded to his country's call by enlisting as a private in Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He remained at the front for a year, being mustered out at Peoria, this state. Upon his return he resumed his studies, and in 1866 enrolled in Knox College, being graduated with the class of 1870. He then entered the office of Judge Lamphere and O. F. Price of this city, and for two years gave his undivided attention to the study of law. In 1872 he was admitted to the bar, and immediately thereafter established an office here, that he has ever since maintained. He is recognized as one of the most capable attorneys of Knox county, and during the long period of his connection with the profession has succeeded in building up a lucrative practice. Among his clients are represented many of the foremost business men and heads of some of the leading industries in the city. His conscientious devotion to the best interests of his clients, has won for him a reputation for trustworthiness and reliability, that has in all probability been his greatest asset. He has always been a close student and being the fortunate possessor of a wonderful memory is considered to be one of the best informed general practitioners in the local courts.

On the 17th of March, 1875, was celebrated the marriage of Forrest F. Cooke and Miss Sarah Louise Collins, a daughter of Bryan and Elizabeth Collins, of Ogdensburg, New York. Three children were born unto Mr. and Mrs. Cooke: Florence A., the widow of Charles Morenhaut, of Chicago; Chauncey L., who is a resident of Seattle; and Bessie, the wife of Frank Wentworth, of Chicago. Mrs. Cooke passed away on the 13th of October, 1908, at the age of fifty-seven years, her birth having occurred in Lewis county, New York, in 1851. On November 28, 1911, Mr. Cooke was married to Ella Tully, of Iowa Falls, Iowa.

Fraternally Mr. Cooke is an honored member of Post No. 45, G. A. R.; and he is also affiliated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In his political views he has ever been a stanch republican, and takes an active interest in all municipal questions. He was president of the board of education for six years and has served three terms as mayor of Galesburg, and for the past sixteen years he has been a member of the state board of education. Mr. Cooke is a man of high ideals and worthy motives, who always strives to fulfill his duties of citizenship by advancing the best interests of the community.

REV. NORMAN TAYLOR ALLEN.

No history of Knox county would be complete without reference to Rev. Norman Taylor Allen, who has been a lifelong resident of this section of the state and is numbered among the native sons of Galesburg. Early consecrating his life to church work, he has been an active force in the moral development of central Illinois and his example no less than his precepts has been a factor in the moral growth of the community. He is a man of scholarly attainment, because of wide reading and study, and he has ever kept in close touch with the discussion of the themes, that have ever been regarded as of vital interest in greater development and in the progress of civilization.

He was born in Galesburg, August 15, 1844, and is a representative of one of the old New England families. His paternal grandfather, Chester E. Allen, was born in Hartford or New Haven, Connecticut, and was a tailor by trade. He removed westward in 1855, settling in Knox county, Illinois, but was not long permitted to enjoy his new home for his death occurred March 4, 1859, when he was seventy-six years of age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Eunice Curtis, survived him for a short period. They reared quite a large family, the order of their births being as follows: Juliette, who died when eighteen years of age; Sheldon W.; Algenia; Adaline; Amanda; Homer J.; Sophia, who died when four or five years of age; Mary; and Asahel.

Of this family Sheldon W. Allen was born in the state of New York and was indebted to its public school system for the educational opportunities he received. He was married there on the 20th of January, 1835, to Miss Fidelia Leach, who was born in New York as was her father, Daniel Leach. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Allen began their domestic life in the Empire state but came to Galesburg with "the colony" in 1837, arriving here on the 20th of June. They went to Log City where Mr. Allen built a log cabin, a part of the colony having located there the previous year. He erected a double cabin and occupied it for exactly three years, when he removed to a new home on Mulberry street in Galesburg, where he continued to reside until his death. He lived to see notable changes in the county, owing to the transformation brought about through the earnest efforts and business activity of its progressive citizens. In the early days he hauled grain to Chicago by wagon and brought back provisions, sleeping under the wagon as he could not afford to pay hotel bills. There were no railroads at that day and to a large extent the prairies were wild land, especially in the more northerly parts of the state. All the conditions of pioneer life were to be met with and Mr. Allen, as did other early settlers, shared in the hardships and trials of establishing a home on the frontier. He passed away January 18, 1893, at the age of eighty-five years, being not only one of the most venerable citizens but also one of the oldest in years of continuous connection with Knox county. He was a strong abolitionist in the early days and made his home a station of the underground railroad, assisting many poor slaves on their way to freedom in the north. His wife had died of typhoid fever in 1855, when forty-three years of age. They were the parents of seven sons and a daughter: James S., who is living on East South street in Galesburg; Sheldon O., who died in 1902; Albert H., whose home is at No. 109 Allens avenue, Galesburg; Henry Alonzo, also of this city; Norman T., who makes his home at 216 Allens avenue; Chester E., of 704 Mulberry street, Galesburg; Mary Fidelia, deceased, who was the wife of John H. Wyckoff, of Canton, Illinois; and Dr. John S. Allen, of Keithsburg, Illinois.

Spending his youthful days in his native city, Rev. Norman T. Allen attended the public schools and also Knox College. Having determined to devote his life to the ministry, he then entered the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston and afterward joined the Central Illinois conference in 1869. His first appointment was as pastor of the Methodist church at Summit, now Douglas, Illinois, and therefrom he went to Biggsville. He also spent two years in pastoral work at Wataga and for three years was the Methodist minister at Roseville. For the past thirty years he has been the publisher of the Conference Minutes, a work of which he is justly proud; the publication appears once a year and is considered unexcelled as a work of that character. He has ever been most zealous in his advocacy of his church and in his support of all of the branches of its work, and his labors have been far reaching and beneficial as factors in its upbuilding.

On the 26th of May, 1867, Rev. Allen was married to Miss Amelia Kent, who was born in Java, New York, the adopted daughter of Rev. L. B. Kent, who was a worthy and honored Methodist minister. After a life of great usefulness he passed away, May 24, 1911. Five children have been born unto Mr. and Mrs. Allen, of whom the eldest, Willie Robinson, died at the age of eighteen months, while a daughter, Adah Elizabeth, passed away at the age of sixteen years. The others are Eva Amelia, Norman Cumming and Grace Fidelia. Eva A. is now the wife of Dr. A. N. Hughes, a veterinary surgeon of Peoria, and they have one daughter, Ruth Alberta. Norman C. Allen is train master of the Galesburg-Ottumwa division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy with headquarters at Burlington, Iowa. He married Miss Anna Ersfeldt and they have two children, Norman Anthony and Adah Louise. Grace Fidelia is the wife of Harry Dale Weaver and they reside in Galesburg, and have one child, Allen Dale.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen are members of the Methodist church as are also all of their children, and his parents were members of the old First church of this city. They were a very religious people, unfaltering in their devotion to the principles in which they believed and their teachings still remain as an ever growing influence for good in the world. Rev. Allen of this review is also prominent in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and at one time was grand chaplain of the grand lodge of Illinois. For many years he was also active in the Good Templars and for two years served as its grand counselor. He votes with the republican party but is a strong prohibitionist in sentiment and has always done everything in his power, to advance the cause of temperance and to bring people to a knowledge of the baneful influence brought about through the use of intoxicants. For sixteen years he has filled the office of justice of the peace, rendering decisions that are strictly fair and impartial and thus "winning golden honors from all sorts of people." For one term he was poormaster of Galesburg. In 1910 he was elected to the presidency of the Old Settlers' Association, which has been organized for about fifty years, and was reelected in 1911. For more than two-thirds of a century he has lived in Knox county and has been an interested witness of its growth and progress, his labors contributing in substantial measure to its moral development. All who know him, and his friends are many, speak of him as a man of kindly spirit, of charitable disposition and of high ideals. He is ever ready to extend a helping hand to a fellow traveler on life's journey and the worth of his work in the world is widely acknowledged.

CHESTER E. ALLEN.

Among the men whose capably managed business interests have brought to them a substantial measure of success, enabling them now to live retired, is numbered Chester E. Allen, of Galesburg, who is a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Knox county. He was born in this city, February 8, 1846, his parents being Sheldon W. and Fidelia (Leach) Allen, both of whom were natives of New York. His paternal grandfather, Chester E. Allen, was born in Hartford or New Haven, Connecticut, and was a tailor by trade. He removed westward in 1855, settling in Knox county, Illinois, but was not long permitted to enjoy his new home for his death occurred March 4, 1859, when he was seventy-six years of age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Eunice Curtis, survived him for a short period. They reared quite a large family, the order of their births being as follows: Juliette, who died when eighteen years of age; Sheldon W.; Algenia; Adaline; Amanda; Homer J.; Sophia, who died when four or five years of age; Mary; and Asahel. Of this family Sheldon W. Allen was born in the state of New York and was indebted to its public-school system for the educational opportunities he received. He was married there on the 20th of January, 1835, to Miss Fidelia Leach, who was born in New York as was her father, Daniel Leach. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Allen began their domestic life in the Empire state, but came to Galesburg with "the colony" in 1837, arriving here on the 20th of June. They went to Log City where Mr. Allen built a log cabin, a part of the colony having located there the previous year. He erected a double cabin and occupied it for exactly three years, when he removed to a new home on Mulberry street in Galesburg, where he continued to reside until his death. He lived to see notable changes in the county owing to the transformation brought about through the earnest efforts and business activity of its progressive citizens. In the early days he hauled grain to Chicago by wagon and brought back provisions, sleeping under the wagon as he could not afford to pay hotel bills. There were no railroads at that day and to a large extent the prairies were uncultivated, especially in the more northerly parts of the state. All the conditions of pioneer life were to be met with and Mr. Allen, as did other early settlers, shared in the hardships and trials of establishing a home on the frontier. He passed away January 18, 1893, at the age of eighty-five years, being not only one of the most venerable citizens, but also one of the oldest in years of continuous connection with Knox county. His wife had died of typhoid fever in 1855, when forty-three years of age. They were the parents of seven sons and a daughter: James S., who is living on East South street in Galesburg; Sheldon O., who died in 1902; Albert H., whose home is at No. 109 Allens avenue, Galesburg; Henry Alonzo, also of this city; Norma T., a Methodist minister residing at 704 Mulberry street, Galesburg; Chester E., of this review; Mary Fidelia, deceased, who was the wife of John H. Wyckoff, of Canton, Illinois; and Dr. John S. Allen, of Keithsburg, Illinois.

The youthful days of Chester E. Allen were passed in Galesburg where the work of the public schools and the pleasures of the playground occupied his attention and when he had put aside his text-books to master the more difficult lessons of the school of experience, he began learning the harness-maker's trade, which, however, he later abandoned to engage in the butchering business in connection with his brothers, James, Albert and Henry, conducting a market for a number of years. It is a brief period and without any spectacular phases, but those who read between the lines must know that the business was carefully, systematically and wisely conducted and that honorable dealing as well as unfaltering enterprise secured for them the large trade that in time made them well-to-do citizens of this section of the state. Since withdrawing from active connection with the butchering business Chester E. Allen has lived retired, enjoying in well earned rest the fruits of his former toil.

On the 27th of February, 1868, Mr. Allen was united in marriage to Miss Anna Fleming, who was born on Staten Island, New York. Unto this marriage has been born a daughter, Blanche, who became the wife of J. B. Hutchinson and died six weeks after the birth of their only child, Chester B. Hutchinson. Mrs. Allen passed away on May 10, 1900, at the age of forty-nine years, and her loss was as deeply regretted by many friends as by her immediate family. She held membership in the Universalist church and displayed many admirable traits of character that endeared her to all with whom she came in contact. Mr. Allen affiliates with the Universalist church and his political faith is that of the republican party. He has a right to wear the Grand Army button, for during the last year of the war, then a lad of eighteen years, he ran away from home and enlisted for service in the Union army as a member of Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Volunteer Infantry. He was a private and served for five and a half months, being mustered out at Peoria after the close of hostilities. His fraternal relations are with the Masonic Order, his membership being in Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M.; Galesburg Chapter, No. 46, R. A. M.; Galesburg Commandery, No. 8, K. T.; Illinois Council, No. 1, R. & S. M.; Peoria Consistory, A. A. S. R.; and Mohammed Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. Upon him has also been conferred the honorary thirty-third degree and he is one of the best known Masons in this state and the only man from Knox county who ever received the thirty-third degree in Masonry, having long taken an active and helpful part in the work of the order, while in his life he has exemplified the beneficent principles upon which the fraternity rests. His long residence in Knox county has made him widely known and he has a circle of friends almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintance.

JOHN HENRY LEWIS.

John Henry Lewis is an excellent example of the successful man of well balanced mind, who has pursued the path that leads to fortune and to fame. He has been a prominent citizen of Knox county for many years, residing in the city of Knoxville. A native of the state of New York, he was born in Tompkins county, July 21, 1830. His ancestry reaches back to the period when the times and events "tried men's souls." The name Lewis will ever be illustrious in the annals of American history. That charter of American liberty, the Declaration of Independence, was signed by Francis Lewis, from whom John Henry Lewis is descended. Francis Lewis was a native of Landaff, in the shire of Glamorgan, South Wales, and was born in March, 1713. The father was a clergyman and his mother the daughter of a clergyman, the Rev. Dr. Pettingal, who had charge of a parish in North Wales. Francis Lewis was an only child and was left an orphan when but five years old. He was left to the care of a maternal aunt and was sent to the Westminster School in London, where he soon became a thorough classical scholar. In the spring of 1735, when only twenty-one years of age, he came to New York with merchandise which he had purchased with his small fortune. His partner was Edward Annesly. Francis

J. H. Lewis

Lewis took a portion of the goods to Philadelphia, where he remained two years. He then returned to New York and married Elizabeth Annesly, his partner's sister. When the Continental Congress met in Philadelphia he was unanimously elected a member on April 22, 1775, and continued to hold the office until 1779. He was an uncompromising advocate of liberty and was one of the first to declare that the colonies could not live under the domination of Great Britain. For the cause of freedom and the inalienable rights of the colonies he spent his fortune and died poor in 1803, at the advanced age of ninety.

Henry Lewis, the father of John Henry Lewis, was a native of New Jersey, born in Sussex county, October 6, 1796. His kinsman, General Morgan Lewis, whose wife was of the noted Livingston family, was once its governor. The wife of Henry Lewis was Permelia M. Shaver, a native of New York state. They were married July 8, 1826, and removed to Illinois in the fall of 1836 with their two sons, George W. and John H. The day of railroads and steam had not yet dawned and they were compelled to make the trip in a two-horse wagon, loaded with implements that would be of service in their new settlement. At length after fifty-one days of extreme weariness and toil they reached their journey's end, October 15, 1836. They settled in Ellisville, Fulton county, where there were only a few deserted wigwams. Mr. Lewis erected the first frame house in that town and it was here that the hopes and plans of the little family were blasted by his death, September 25, 1837, within a year of his arrival. The mother bore up as bravely as she could under her sorrow and in the wilderness, without friends or home, battled nobly to sustain herself and her children until they could become self-supporting. George, the eldest son, left home while yet young and traveled in the eastern states and in Mexico, at last settling in southern California, where he died.

John H. Lewis remained with his mother until he was eleven years of age, attending school a few months each year and earning his living mostly by farm work. Then a contract for his services for a period of six years was made with a South Carolinan family under the following stipulations: good clothing; three months' schooling each year; a horse, saddle and bridle at the close of his apprenticeship. These conditions were almost wholly neglected. For the first five years he had but forty-one days' schooling, was poorly clad, was treated as a menial and at meals was not allowed to sit at the table with the family. His mother, learning of the situation, succeeded in removing him at once. He was placed for the winter in the family of William Kent, who lived near the present site of Yates City. In the spring he was employed on the farm of James Kent at seven dollars a month. In the fall of 1847 he went to Knoxville, doing chores for his board in the family of Judge R. L. Hannaman. There he remained for two years, enjoying at the proper season the advantages of a common school. In 1849 he was employed in the store of G. M. Ewing, of Knoxville, at a salary of fifty dollars a year and board. The second year his salary was raised to seventy-five dollars and the third year he was offered one hundred and fifty dollars but declined the offer, that he might obtain a more liberal education and thus fit himself for the higher duties of citizenship. He was next employed in the store of Alexander Ewing, of Knoxville, and by his trustworthiness and fidelity gained the confidence of his employer. Mr. Ewing entrusted him with a small bill of goods to sell on the road on a commission.

Mr. Lewis had neither horse nor wagon nor money to purchase an outfit, his cash capital being only twenty-two dollars, and of this twenty dollars was paid toward a horse and harness, purchased for forty dollars, and a sixty-day note for sixty dollars was given for a wagon. Thus equipped he started out on his new venture and so successful was he that the amount of his profits was sufficient to pay off his note before maturity. In 1852 he took a clerkship in the store of a Mr. Chesney at Abingdon, with whom he remained until his employer sold out in 1857.

Previously Mr. Lewis had been employed in the law office of Hannaman & Hale, making out abstracts of county records. It was there that he acquired a liking and taste for the law and having access to the library of A. J. King, a prominent lawyer at Abingdon, he availed himself of the privilege and studied at night while clerking in a dry-goods store. He was soon qualified for practice and was licensed by the supreme court, January 10, 1870, to practice in all the courts of the state.

In politics Mr. Lewis is a stalwart republican and as a member of that party has held many public offices, which he has always filled with marked ability. In his early years he was an abolitionist, sympathizing greatly with the colored race in their enslaved condition. He became a member of the republican party at its organization and voted for John C. Fremont, its first presidential nominee. In the exciting campaign of 1860 Mr. Lewis was elected clerk of the circuit court of Knox county, holding the office for four years. He then took a vacation for several months, visiting friends in the Union army. All this time his interest in politics was unabated and he kept thoroughly abreast of all national affairs. In 1868 he again entered the clerk's office as deputy, holding that position for six years. In 1874 he was appointed one of the trustees of the Institution for the Education of the Blind, which office he resigned when elected to the state legislature. His legislative record is highly commendable and for his judicious acts and votes there he has received the encomiums of his fellow citizens generally. One of his acts while a member of the legislature is especially deserving of notice. Having examined carefully into the penal institutions of the state and believing that their management was not for the good of the criminal and the best interests of the state, he framed and introduced a preamble and resolution that was read for information but, being objected to by a single member, was not allowed to be considered. It was published in the papers throughout the state and highly commended. Mr. Lewis urged that prisons, in a measure, should be reformatory and that criminals as such have rights which the state is bound to respect; that those bound by the ties of consanguinity and love should have a portion of the fruits of their labor. The resolution excited a great deal of comment and interest far and near and was probably the first introduced in this state on that subject. In 1880 Mr. Lewis was elected to congress by the republicans of the ninth congressional district of Illinois over his opponent, John S. Lee. In 1882 he was renominated but was defeated on account of his vote on the river and harbor bill.

The life of Mr. Lewis is proof of the fact that a man is the architect of his own fortune. Poverty in his youth had no power to control his ambition or smother his aspirations. In the distance he saw the fertile fields of promise and through the open gateway he was determined to enter. By his determined resolutions he hewed his way through the wilderness of doubt and uncertainty and won for himself riches and honor. As a citizen he is noted for his affability and urbanity of manner, for his kindness and sympathy to the unfortunate and his charity toward all. He is bound by no creed, is a member of no church, but believes in the gospel of good deeds. However, when a young man he joined the Masonic fraternity, to which he still belongs. He is also a member of the Commercial Club of Knoxville. While serving as circuit clerk of this county in the early '60s he commenced buying and selling land and has since devoted more or less attention to the real-estate business. He is now serving as one of the directors of the Farmers National Bank of Knoxville.

In December, 1857, Mr. Lewis was married, in Abingdon, to Miss Elizabeth S. Russell, a daughter of R. H. and Elizabeth Russell, of that city, who came to Illinois in the fall of 1837. They were Virginians by birth and left their native state on account of their hatred of slavery. To Mr. and Mrs. Lewis were born six children, four sons and two daughters, of whom only two are now living, namely: Ira J., who was born August 14, 1865, and is now married and living in Knoxville; and John H., who was born August 30, 1874, and is also married and makes his home in Knoxville. The latter is practicing law in Galesburg and is master in chancery.

JOHN S. TURNER.

Becoming a resident of Knox county in 1853, John S. Turner has been intimately associated with the development of this locality and has also been a witness of the interesting historical events which have occurred in Illinois since the middle of the nineteenth century. He was only a boy of twelve years when he heard the Lincoln-Douglas debate, but he still carries a vivid impression of that memorable incident and the exciting scenes of those stirring anti-bellum days. He was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, August 29, 1846, his parents being William B. and Eliza Turner, natives of Pennsylvania. The family is of German ancestry on the father's side and of Scotch-Irish on the mother's. William B. Turner learned the shoemaker's trade in Pennsylvania and conducted a shoemaking establishment there until he came to Illinois, in 1853, when his son, John S. Turner, was a lad of seven years. He purchased a farm in Orange township, Knox county, and operated this for many years until he retired to Knoxville in order to pass the last year's of his life in a peaceful manner in the enjoyment of leisure. The family consisted of ten children, six sons and four daughters, of whom five sons and three daughters are now living, namely: Mrs. Katherine Keller, of Orange township this county; Margaret, the wife of Isaac Eiker, of Orange township; Henry, who resides in Missouri; John S.; William, of Macon, Missouri; Libby and Israel both of whom are deceased; Stephen, of Knox township, this county; Stella, the wife of Michael Brown, of Knoxville; and Albert, who resides on the home place in Orange township.

John S. Turner obtained his early education in the rural schools of Orange township; he applied himself to the carpenter's trade, first in Red Oak, Iowa, where he remained until 1883, when he returned to Knoxville, where he has followed his trade ever since. He has met with much success in his work as a carpenter, builder and contractor and is well known throughout the county.

In 1887 occurred the marriage of Mr. Turner and Mrs. Clara Moray, a native of Knox county. In politics Mr. Turner holds to the principles and ideals of the democratic party. In 1864 he was elected collector of Orange township, serving in this capacity for nine years. In the exercise of his calling Mr. Turner has few rivals in the county, being recognized as a very thorough and reliable builder and contractor by those who are best able to judge of the excellent quality of his workmanship.

EVERETT E. HINCHLIFF.

Everett E. Hinchliff, president and manager of the Hinchliff Lumber Company and thus actively associated with the commercial interests of Galesburg, was born in Rio, this county, December 23, 1881, a son of James Edward and Ida M. (Woodman) Hinchliff. The father was also a native of Rio, born on the 17th of July, 1853, and the mother's birth there occurred on the 27th of April, 1858. James E. Hinchliff devoted his time and energies to the occupation of farming until he came to Galesburg in 1890, after which he engaged in the retail lumber business, opening a yard at No. 491 West Main street. He was thus identified with the lumber trade of this city until his death, which occurred March 28, 1909, and the record which he made in business circles was an enviable and creditable one. His widow still survives him and is now living on North Broad street in this city. In his political views Mr. Hinchliff was a republican, always giving stalwart support to the party, and he held membership in the Central Congregational church, of which he was a trustee. He took an active interest in the church work and at all times was loyal in his support of measures promoting material, intellectual, social and moral progress in his community. It was in Rio, on the 1st of January, 1880, that he wedded Ida M. Woodman and they became the parents of four children, as follows: Everett E., of this review; Lulu May, at home; Ray, associated with his brother in the lumber business; and Grace F., also at home.

In the public schools of Galesburg Everett E. Hinchliff pursued his education, being a lad of nine years when the family removed from Rio to this city. When his public-school course was completed, he entered Knox College and was graduated with the class of 1903. Immediately afterward he began assisting his father in the office and in 1906 was admitted to a partnership. The business was originally conducted as a partnership concern, under the name of Conger & Hinchliff, and later when James E. Hinchliff was sole proprietor his name stood at the head of the business. When Everett E. Hinchliff entered the firm the style of the Hinchliff Lumber Company was assumed and under that name papers of incorporation were taken out in January, 1910, with E. E. Hinchliff as president and manager and Ray Hinchliff as secretary and treasurer. They not only carry a large stock of lumber but also lime, sand, coal and general building materials. Their patronage is now extensive and their business methods are such as will bear the closest investigation and scrutiny.

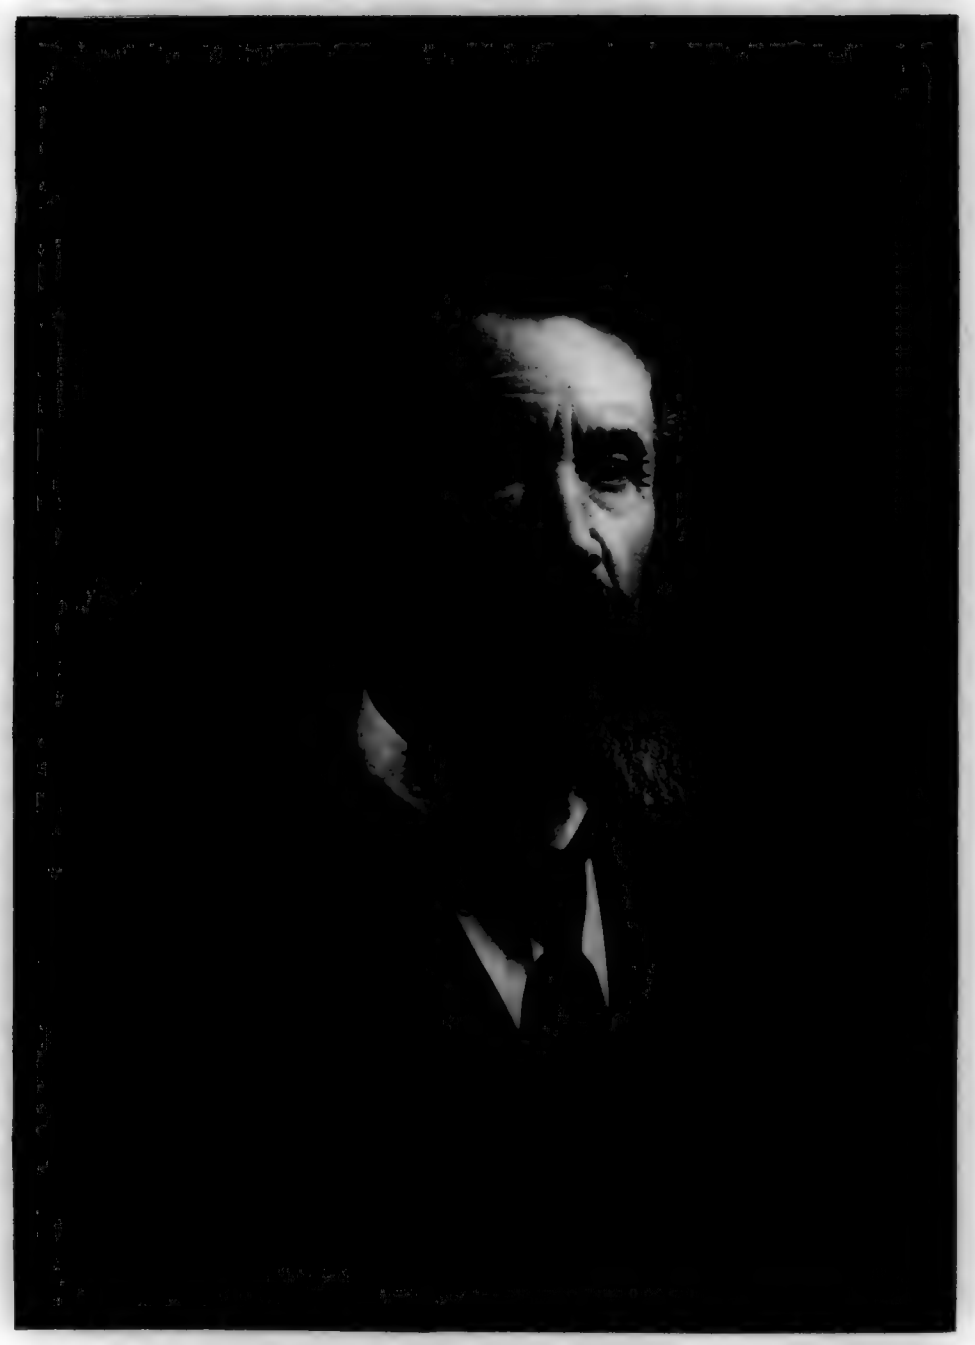
On the 15th of October, 1907, Mr. Hinchliff was married to Miss Nell Townsend, a daughter of Leon A. Townsend. She was born at Hermon, Illinois, November 21, 1881, and they now have one child, Christina Virginia, born in Galesburg, October 28, 1910. The parents are members of the Central Congregational church, being both soloists in the quartette and are prominent socially in this city, the hospitality of the best homes being freely accorded them. Mr. Hinchliff votes with the republican party, finding its principles coinciding most closely with his ideas of governmental policy. In his college days he became a member of the Phi Delta Theta and he now belongs to the Galesburg and the Soangetaha Clubs. He is yet a young man and, possessing a spirit of enterprise and determination, is steadily working his way upward in business circles and sustains the honorable record which has always been associated with the name of Hinchliff since his father became a factor in the business life of Galesburg.

RAY W. HINCHLIFF.

Ray W. Hinchliff, secretary and treasurer of the Hinchliff Lumber Company, was born in Rio, January 5, 1887, and is a brother of Everett E. Hinchliff, whose sketch is given above. To the public-school system of this city he is indebted for the early educational opportunities which he enjoyed and in Knox College he pursued a more advanced course, being graduated therefrom with the class of 1909. He became connected with the Hinchliff Lumber Company in 1910 and the two brothers are now at the head of a substantial and growing business, having one of the large lumberyards of this city, while their correct business methods and enterprise are factors in its continuous growth.

Ray W. Hinchliff makes his home with his mother. He belongs to the Phi Delta Theta fraternity and also the Galesburg and Soangetaha Clubs. He votes with the republican party and his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Central Congregational church. His social qualities render him popular and he has many friends in this city, where almost his entire life has been passed.

LOUIS PALMQUIST.



Louis Palmquist, who was for many years a prominent furniture dealer and undertaker in Knoxville, now lives retired, passing his declining years in the peaceful leisure which his long continued faithful labors enable him to enjoy. A native of Sweden, he was born October 2, 1834. Of his parents, who died when he was very young, he has scarcely any recollection save that his father's name was Charles Palmquist and that he was a cabinetmaker by occupation. Passing his childhood and youth in Sweden, he obtained his education in the common schools of his native locality, leaving his home at the age of twenty-three years, in order to seek the opportunities of the new world. He landed in New York harbor in 1857, after having passed through the most terrifying hardships and privations as the result of a shipwreck disaster, which occurred to their vessel on approaching the coast of Newfoundland in a heavy fog. Of those on board ship only the crew and five passengers of a total of sixty were saved. They were picked up by a fisherman and taken to St. Peter island, where the little band of survivors was taken on board an ocean liner and carried to New York. Even at this distant day it is difficult for Mr. Palmquist to contemplate without emotion the hair-raising incidents of that experience which befell him like an evil omen foreshadowing misfortune at the outset of his career. Undaunted, however, he renewed his courage and his high hopes, on finding himself safe in the country of which he had dreamed since the early days of his boyhood adventures. It was as if the pages of a book were unfolded before him and he himself was writing upon them the record of his own life. With a buoyancy of spirit which is the inalienable possession of youth, he found his way from New York across the Alleghanies to Knox county, Illinois, settling in Galesburg. He resided here four years, during which time he learned and followed the cabinetmaker's trade, and in 1861 came to Knoxville. Here he engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, conducting a prosperous establishment for forty-five years. He retired in 1906 and has since lived a quiet life, free from responsibility.

The marriage of Mr. Palmquist and Miss Carrie Nelson, a native of Sweden, was solemnized on September 29, 1860. Mrs. Palmquist's parents came to America and settled near Knoxville, where her father operated a farm throughout his life. They are now both deceased. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Palmquist there were eight children, of whom six are now living: Charles, operating his father's farm in Cedar township, east of Abingdon; Ada, the wife of J. M. Short, of Galesburg; William; Amanda, the wife of J. T. Parmenter, of Oskaloosa, Iowa; Hulda, the wife of C. C. Arms, of Knoxville; and Anna, the wife of Ralph Scott, of Galesburg. Mr. Palmquist and his wife hold membership in the English Lutheran church. In his political faith he is a republican and has served as alderman of Knoxville for two terms and also as a member of the school board. He is connected with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of Pacific Lodge, No. 66, A. F. & A. M.; of Raboni Chapter, No. 95, R. A. M.; and Illinois Council, No. 1, R. & S. M., being tyler in these three lodges. Practically penniless at the beginning of his career, Mr. Palmquist has worked himself up by steadfast application to the duties which lay within the scope of his activities and has met with a deserved reward and an ample competence.

A. C. BURNETT.

A. C. Burnett, the owner and manager of the Aqua Vitae Mineral Springs of Maquon, Illinois, has been a resident of Haw Creek township, Knox county, since the date of his birth, February 18, 1839. His parents were Josiah and Elizabeth (Housh) Burnett, the former a native of the east, the latter of Indiana. Josiah Burnett became a resident of Haw Creek township in 1835, settling on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on sections 29 and 30. He cleared and improved the land, of which a large part was timber, and devoted himself to the various departments of general farming and cattle raising. He lived there until 1848 when he bought the farm at present held in the family name and situated at no great distance from the former place. Adjacent to his farm was a mill in which he acquired one third interest by building a dam for the water power. Not long after that he bought out the other two thirds interest in the mill and became sole proprietor of it, running it in his own name for a brief period. He then gave his title to it to two of his sons who managed the mill for a while until they disposed of it for other interests. The father was a democrat in his political faith and held several township offices, and in his religious life followed the tenets of the Methodist Episcopal church to which he and his wife belonged. Living on the old homestead till the last, Josiah Burnett passed away at the age of seventy-seven and his wife at the age of sixty-four, both being buried in the cemetery at Maquon.

In spite of the limited education received in the schools of Haw Creek township and Maquon, A. C. Burnett possesses a large fund of general knowledge being a well informed man. After his school days were over he assisted on the farm and later assumed charge of a share of the management of the mill which his father entrusted to the responsibility of his brother John in partnership with him. The occupation of milling he followed for some years during which time John Burnett disposed of his interest in the management of the mill to his brother Josiah, who thereupon became his partner. At length the two young men traded the mill and the right to the dam for western land. On the site, where these were once familiar landmarks the dam has disappeared, the mill race is dried up and only the frame of the old gristmill, vacant and fallen into neglect, stands like a grim monitor of time defying the ravages of the elements.

As the next step in his life's career A. C. Burnett turned his attention to farming, buying for this purpose the land which he now owns, one hundred acres on section 34 and one hundred and sixty acres on section 35 in Haw Creek township. Here he tilled the fields for many years until one day he came, wholly by accident, upon a spring located in a hitherto unnoticed portion of a field in which he was digging. Upon chemical examination it was found that the spring contained minerals and was very valuable for medicinal purposes. Mr. Burnett, by no means slow to realize the immense financial possibilities growing out of the ownership and control of a natural resource so valuable as this, organized a company for bottling the water and shipping it for market use. The name under which the plant is operated is the Aqua Vitae Mineral Springs Company of Maquon, Illinois, and since the water was awarded second prize, a silver medal, at the St. Louis exposition, it has become widely known as one of the best brands of medicinal water on the market, good for stomach and intestinal troubles, for rheumatism, in short for cleansing the system of any poisonous accretions with which it may be clogged. The company ships extensively of its water from Maine to the coast of California and as far as the remote parts of Canada. On the land adjacent to the spring there is a sanitarium accommodating about twenty patients, who may come there and have a complete rest while availing themselves of the privilege of the unlimited use of the spring water. In season this is a favorite resort for week-end parties and for parties of dinner guests who come from the towns and country about. It is the owner's present plan to reorganize and form a corporation for developing the site on which the springs are located and ninety acres of the adjoining land. Such a company properly financed and under the efficient management of a man like A. C. Burnett will be of necessity a profitable undertaking. The farm is now being cultivated by a tenant.

The marriage of Mr. Burnett and Miss Mary Elizabeth Barlow occurred October 11, 1866. Born in 1848, a native of Warren county, Illinois, she was a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Kenton) Barlow, residents of Abingdon, where Mr. Barlow died. In the family of A. C. Burnett there were four children, of whom all are living but an infant son, who died at the age of four months. The names of the others are: Fred J., reared and educated in Knox county and Dixon, who is a telegraph operator and resides with his parents on the home farm; Margaret, the wife of G. M. Richey, who resides in Galesburg, Illinois, and is the mother of two children, Bernice and Madeline; and Samuel C., who is married to Miss Myrtle Garrett and has two children, Pauline and Elizabeth, residing on a farm adjacent to the father's property.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnett are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they take an active and helpful interest. At elections Mr. Burnett votes with the democrats although he is no active politician. His absorbing passion is the development of the land surrounding the spring, to make of this a health resort of modern comfort and equipment that may rival any place of its kind in the state. He has laid out an orchard which is already bearing abundant fruit for the refreshment and edification of the many guests who come from far and near to seek the bounty of his board.

JOHN C. GEER.

John C. Geer, who from the age of fourteen years has made his home in Knox county, where through a considerable period he has been identified with merchandising as proprietor of a grocery store, deserves much credit for what he has accomplished in life, his success being attributable to his energy, determination and successful management.

He was born in Connecticut, near Hartford, on the 17th of October, 1846, and was the second of the three sons of Luther and Abby (Hempstead) Geer. On the paternal side he traces his ancestry back to George Geer, who was one of three brothers to emigrate from England to the United States at an early day. He married Sarah Allen, a daughter of Captain Allen, and among their children was Isaac Geer, who was the father of Jacob Geer. Solomon Geer, the son of Jacob, married Anna Tiers, and to them was born a son, Luther Geer, Sr., February 14, 1773, in Connecticut. The last named was the grandfather of our subject. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for many years. With his family he came to Illinois, casting in his lot with the pioneer settlers of Stark county, where his wife died in early life, but he lived to be quite advanced in years. She bore the maiden name of Esther Whipple and to them were born six children, namely, Esther, Lucinda, Ophelia, Luther, Solomon and Hiram. The maternal grandparents of our subject were Avery and Lucy (Leeds) Hempstead, who were residents of Mystic, Connecticut, where they died at a ripe old age. Their children were Abby, Lucy, Nancy, Frederick and Courtland. Avery Hempstead was a son of Robert and Ann (Avery) Hempstead. The birth of his father occurred February 7, 1746, and his mother was born May 8, 1745. Robert Hempstead served as sergeant in William Stanton's Company, Eighth Regiment, Connecticut Militia, August 6, 1780.

Spending his youthful days in the Charter Oak state, Luther Geer, Jr., there learned the carpenter's trade. Prior to the Civil war he removed westward to Illinois, settling at Toulon, where he engaged in contracting and building. He also bought a farm and devoted considerable time to cultivating the fields which he improved with all modern equipment. He died there about 1880 when sixty-four years of age and was long survived by his wife, who passed away in 1906, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years and eleven months. Both were members of the Baptist church and were earnest Christian people at all times loyal to their professions. Of their children Avery, the eldest son, died at the age of fifty-five years and Courtland, the youngest, is now living in Stark county, Illinois.

John C. Geer, whose name introduces this record, was a small boy when he came to this state, and was a youth of fourteen years when he arrived in Knox county. He had obtained his education in Stark county and had scarcely started upon his teens when he took upon himself the task of providing for his own support. His life has been one of earnest and persistent toil, at length crowned with a substantial measure of success owing to his unfaltering industry and intelligently directed energy. He was first employed as a clerk in a grocery store in Galesburg and while working in that capacity saved his earnings until his industry and careful expenditure had brought him sufficient capital to enable him to engage in business on his own account. In 1887, therefore, he opened a grocery store and has since continued in this line of business, having for a long period conducted a store at No. 121 East Main street. He still continues in the grocery line, having a store at Knoxville.

Mr. Geer was married on the 1st of December, 1869, to Miss Delia Murphy, who was born in this county, February 12, 1848. Her parents came from Ireland and were early settlers here and afterward removed to Topeka county, where they died in old age. They had three sons and five daughters, Robert, John, Margaret, Josephine, Helen, Delia, Catharine and Mary. In 1883 Mr. Geer was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who passed away when thirty-five years of age. She was a faithful member of the Baptist church and a woman of many remarkable traits of character. She left three children: Cora, who is acting as her father's housekeeper; Abbie, at home; and George. The son is a blacksmith residing at Keokuk, Iowa. He married Blanche Ferguson and they have two children, Charles and Daisy.

Mr. Geer holds membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and also with the Grand Army of the Republic. His connection with the latter comes through the fact that in 1863 he enlisted for three months' service in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry as a member of Company D. His political support is given to the democracy and he is somewhat prominent and active in the party ranks, serving for twelve or fourteen years as county supervisor from Galesburg. He is also loyal to the best interests of the community and has long been regarded as a worthy citizen as well as progressive merchant. What he undertakes he accomplishes and the years of a well spent life have won him the kindly and merited regard of all with whom he has come in contact.

WILLIAM E. DOYLE.

William E. Doyle, one of Galesburg's enterprising young business men, was born in Woodhull, Henry county, Illinois, on the 9th of September, 1869. He is a son of James and Harriet (Mitchell) Doyle, the father a native of Toronto, Canada, his birth occurring December 20, 1836, and the mother of Farmington, Illinois, her natal day being the 23d of December, 1848. James Doyle was reared to agricultural pursuits in Canada, where he passed the first fourteen years of his life. In 1850 he came to the United States, locating in Vienna, Oneida county, New York, and he also resided in the vicinity of Rochester for a time. When he attained the age of nineteen years he went to California in search of his fortune, but after spending four years in the gold fields returned to New York. He located in the neighborhood of Buffalo, where he remained until 1860, when he again started westward, Illinois being his destination on this occasion. During the succeeding twenty years he devoted his entire time and attention to the operation of a farm near Woodhull. His farming exploits proved to be very lucrative, but deciding that commercial pursuits offered greater possibilities, in 1880 he engaged in the general mercantile business in Woodhull. He conducted his store with increasing success until 1887, when he disposed of his interests and removed to Knox county. Here he again turned his attention to agriculture and for two years cultivated a farm near Abingdon. In 1889 he came to Galesburg and purchased the second-hand store of J. C. Hollis, that he carried on for two years. During that period he enlarged the business and extended the scope of his activities until he had developed it into a general house-furnishing establishment. It was incorporated for thirty thousand dollars in 1907, under the firm name of the Doyle Furniture Company, with James Doyle, president; and W. E. Doyle, secretary and treasurer and also manager. This is one of the largest retail concerns in the city, and gives regular employment to twenty-five people. They have forty-five thousand square feet of floor space and carry a large and well assorted stock of furniture, carpets, rugs, stoves, china, cut glass, curtains, draperies, bedding, and all other articles that are usually found in an exclusive house-furnishing establishment. It is one of the flourishing retail stores of the city. Their goods are selected with a view to meeting the varied tastes and circumstances of their patrons; their prices are reasonable; and the personnel of their staff of employes is high. It is the policy of the firm to treat each visitor with courtesy, and every effort is made to accommodate all, thus they have built up a large permanent trade among a most desirable class of people.

The education of William E. Doyle was obtained in the common schools of Henry and Knox counties, and after laying aside his text-books he began his business training under the capable direction of his father. He has ever since been identified with him and in this capacity has been connected with the commercial activities of Galesburg for twenty-two years.

On the 15th of June, 1893, Mr. Doyle was united in marriage to Miss Ethelyn Scott, a daughter of Charles E. and Estella (Scudder) Scott of Galesburg. The father, who passed away on the 28th of February, 1911, was employed for several years on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad as a brakeman and conductor. He subsequently withdrew from this vocation and went into the transfer business, which he succcessfully followed for many years. When the call came for volunteers during the Civil war he responded by enlisting as a private in the Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His political allegiance was accorded to the democratic party, and fraternally he was affiliated with the local post of the G. A. R. and he was also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In matters of faith he was a Christian Scientist, as is also his widow, who continues to make her home in Galesburg. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Scott there were born four children: Ray E., who is living in Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Doyle, who was born in Galesburg, November 8, 1873; Edith M., the wife of Fred Secord, of Galesburg; and Ernest, who is also living in Galesburg. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle have one son, Forrest A., whose natal day was February 23, 1895.

Mr. Doyle has never allied himself with any political party, but always gives his support to such men and measures as he deems best qualified to subserve the interests of the majority. He is a trustee of the East Main Street Congregational church, in which Mrs. Doyle also holds membership, and he is affiliated with the Galesburg Club. He has always led a rather unobtrusive life, never having sought publicity in any form, but his influence is potent and is exercised in support of every worthy cause, noble impulse or high ideal.

HENRY N. MURPHY.

Henry N. Murphy is well known in the business circles of Galesburg as a member of the firm of Murphy Brothers & Anderson, dealers in house furnishings and hardware, and conducting as well a plumbing and heating establishment. Their business is located at No. 310 East Main street and Mr. Murphy resides at No. 794 North Kellogg street. He was born in Erie, Pennsylvania, September 16, 1850, and is a grandson of Edward and Matilda Murphy. The former, a native of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, devoted his life to shoemaking and farming save for the period when he served his country as a soldier in the war of 1812. Nathaniel Murphy, the father of Henry N. Murphy, was born in the Keystone state and was reared in Lancaster where he learned the tinner's trade. He afterward engaged in the hardware business in Erie, Pennsylvania, continuing for many years a valued and worthy citizen there. He married Elvira Hubbard, who was also born in Pennsylvania and was a daughter of John Hubbard. They became the parents of the following children: Henry N., of this review; Mary, the wife of A. H. Zoller, of Oak Park, Chicago; Charles H., of Galesburg, a partner of his brother Henry; Harley, of Erie, Pennsylvania; Etta, who married A. L. Piper, of Erie, Pennsylvania; William, also of Erie; Fred, associated with Harley at Erie, Pennsylvania; and Frank, who died in childhood. The father passed away in Erie, Pennsylvania, when sixty-one years of age but the mother still survives and makes her home there. She is a member of the Methodist church to which Mr. Murphy also belonged, and he was prominent in the local life of the community, holding various city offices including that of councilman.

Henry N. Murphy was reared in Erie, Pennsylvania, and attended the public schools, passing through consecutive grades to his graduation from the high school. He then entered his father's store in which he remained for a number of years, receiving thorough business training in that connection. He has been a resident of Galesburg since 1871, in which year he entered the employ of the Covenant Mutual Insurance Company. Later he spent six years in the hardware house of Babcock & Pierpont, but carefully saving his earnings he was at length enabled to engage in business on his own account, establishing his present enterprise in connection with his brother Charles and J. A. Anderson under the firm name of Murphy Brothers & Anderson. They opened with a full line of house furnishings and hardware, and their plumbing and heating department is also a profitable feature of their business.

In 1871 Mr. Murphy was united in marriage to Miss Ada S. Sawyer, who was born in Sycamore, Illinois, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Armory W. Sawyer, who are natives of Massachusetts and now reside in Chicago. Mrs. Murphy is their only child and has but one son, Harry Sawyer Murphy, who married Mildred Oldburg and is now a practicing dentist of Fremont, Nebraska. Mr. Murphy is a member of Veritas Lodge, I. O. O. F., and of Galesburg Lodge, No. 894, B. P. O. E. Of the latter he is now exalted ruler. He is sixty-one years of age yet looks to be no more than forty and possesses an alert, enterprising manner that shows him to be alive to the business conditions and situations of the present day. He has never feared to venture where favoring opportunity has led the way and his even-paced energy has carried him forward until a comfortable competence is now his.

CHAUNCY J. McMASTER.

Chauncy J. McMaster is one of the prominent farmers and stock dealers of Walnut Grove township, carrying on his business interests on an extensive scale. He does not hesitate to branch out along new lines, for his progressiveness is always guided by sound judgment and tempered by a safe conservatism. He is today the owner of the finest herd of thoroughbred Shorthorns in western Illinois and his farm is one of the largest and best improved in the northern part of Knox county.

He was born on the old McMaster homestead, May 19, 1862, and is a son of John McMaster, now a retired farmer living at Altona. He was born in Scotland, May 15, 1827, a son of John and Ann (Struthers) McMaster, who died at the ages of ninety-two and eighty-four years respectively. It was in 1850 that the father came with his wife and children to America, traveling by way of the canal from Chicago, thence by team to Peoria and across the country to Copley township, Knox county, where he built the first log house of that district. There he secured eighty acres of land and began the development of a farm. His last days were spent in the home of his son, John McMaster, in Walnut Grove township. John McMaster, the father of our subject, early started out in life on his own account. He saved his money until he had accumulated a sufficient sum to purchase a team of horses and after having assisted in making a home for his parents he began to provide for himself. He first purchased eighty acres of land in Walnut Grove township but after two years he sold out and later became the owner of one hundred and sixty acres in the same township, constituting the farm upon which he reared his family, although he added to his landed possessions from time to time. Since 1898 he has lived retired in Altona. His life history is given at length on another page of this volume.

After attending the common schools Chauncy J. McMaster became a pupil in the commercial college at Galesburg and then returned to the old home farm, whereon he engaged in general agricultural pursuits for five years. He next turned his attention to merchandising and was connected with the conduct of a grocery and hardware business at Altona for eleven years. During that time he served as postmaster of the town under appointment of Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt, filling the office altogether for eight years. He then resigned and built his present home. He is today regarded as one of the most progressive and prosperous agriculturists of the northern part of the county. He owns one of the largest stock farms and the largest herd of Shorthorn cattle in the county. In fact he has upon his place some of the finest stock to be found in western Illinois. His business is carried on very extensively and he has become widely known not only in this state but elsewhere among prominent stock-raisers. His farm is equipped with all modern improvements and accessories. His home is built in an attractive style of architecture, is very commodious and is fitted up in excellent taste. His barns and sheds, too, afford ample shelter for grain and stock, and everything is done to care for his stock in the most scientific manner. His labors are doing much to improve the grade of cattle raised in this part of the state and his example serves to stimulate and encourage others. In addition to his Knox county property he is also interested in a large farm in the Red River valley of Minnesota which is operated by the most modern machinery. There the plowing is done by steam plows and the other equipments are equally modern, showing him to be in keeping with the most advanced spirit of progress and enterprise.

On the 1st of January, 1889, Mr. McMaster was united in marriage to Miss Ida M. Stuckey, a daughter of S. S. and Carrie (Borden) Stuckey. On the 13th of August, 1890, Mrs. McMaster died at the age of twenty-four years, and on the 1st of September, 1892, Mr. McMaster was again married, his second union being with Ida E. Sawyer, who died July 12, 1897. On the 28th of March, 1901, he wedded Miss Frances A. Reed, who was born December 31, 1858, in the old Reed home near Wataga. She is a daughter of James D. Reed, who was born in Kentucky, June 27, 1825, and as a boy came to Knox county, settling in Henderson township with his parents, Jonathan and Polly (Newell) Reed, who spent the remainder of their days in that township. In early manhood James D. Reed took up the occupation of farming and after his marriage, which took place on the 27th of August, 1847, removed to Sparta township, settling on what became known as the old Reed farm near Wataga. He was of Scotch descent and was a worthy and highly respected resident of his community. He held membership in the Baptist church and gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. His death occurred December 8, 1882. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Martha A. Duval, was born in Kentucky, April 27, 1831, and was a daughter of Thomas C. Duval, who was born February 28, 1802, and was of French descent. His parents were James and Judith (Jennings) Duval, the former a native of Virginia and a soldier of the war of 1812. Thomas C. Duval was married April 2, 1822, to Miss Nancy Shumate, who was born in Virginia, August 19, 1802. She died March 2, 1888, while Thomas Duval passed away September 25, 1890. He was one of the earliest residents of Knox county, having settled in Henderson township in 1835. He at that time had one hundred dollars in cash, which he invested in land, and in 1869 he owned two thousand acres of land in Sparta and Henderson townships. His investments were most judiciously made and as he prospered, he added to his holdings until he was one of the most extensive landowners in this part of the county. In politics he was a republican and his religious faith was that of the Christian church.

Mrs. McMaster is therefore descended from one of the oldest and most prominent pioneer families of Knox county. She was one of ten children, of whom the following are living: Ellen, the wife of Henry Redfield, of Galesburg; Sarah, the wife of Robert Langloff, of Topeka, Kansas; Mrs. McMaster; Polly, the wife of Henry Slabaugh, of Warren, Ohio; Dora, the wife of Fred Corey, of Fort Dodge, Iowa; and Albert Reed, of Rockford, Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. McMaster hold membership in the Presbyterian church and he belongs to the Masonic fraternity. In politics he is a republican, active in his support of the party, and he has served in various local offices. As a business man, however, he is perhaps best known and he is one who contributes to Knox county's reputation as a leading stock-raising center. His business affairs have been so capably managed that he has won substantial success and the years have placed him in a prominent position among the farmers and stock-raisers of western Illinois.

JOHN F. HAMILTON.

John F. Hamilton, attorney at law practicing at the Galesburg bar and also serving as justice of the peace of this city, was born near Wenona, Illinois, February 3, 1867. He represents one of the old families of Ohio. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Hamilton, a descendant of Eli Hamilton, was a native of that state where he followed the occupation of farming as a life work. He there married Nancy McMorris who was a niece of Chief Justice John Marshall. Removing to Illinois they became early settlers of Marshall county where they died when well advanced in years. They had a large family, including: Celia, deceased who was the wife of Hiram Meyer, of Galesburg; William T.; Elizabeth, the wife of Josiah Miller, of Richwood, Ohio; John M., at one time governor of Illinois; Oscar, deceased; Frank Y., a resident of Bloomington; and Roa, the wife of Oliver Allen, of Wenona, Illinois. Through the period of their residence in Illinois the family has been prominent in promoting the general work of upbuilding and improvement.

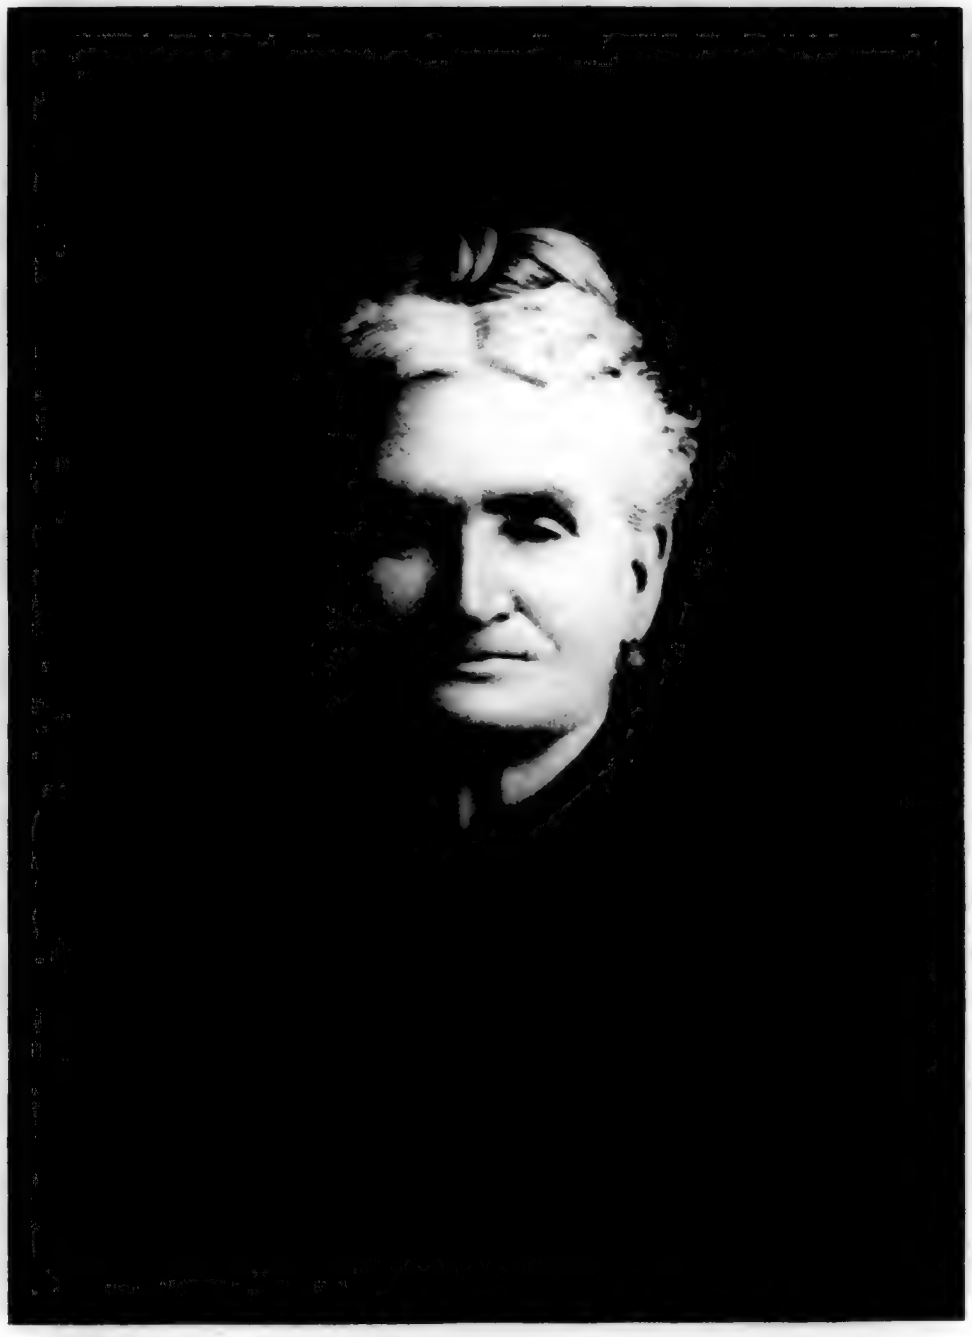
William T. Hamilton, father of John F. Hamilton, of this review, was born in Ohio and spent his youthful days in Union county, that state, near Richwood, there remaining until his parents brought their family to Illinois. In Marshall county, this state, he engaged in farming and later established his home in Wenona, where he lived until 1891 when he came to Galesburg and during the period of his residence in this city he was prominent in public affairs and served for two or three terms as alderman from the third ward. In 1904 he removed to Pomona, California, where his death occurred in 1911, when he had reached the age of seventy-one years. His wife died on the 27th of June of the same year at the age of sixty-nine years. They were both faithful and devoted members of the Presbyterian church and earnest Christian people throughout all their lives. The father served as an elder in the church in Galesburg and also after his removal to Pomona. He was at all times a public-spirited and patriotic citizen and was a stalwart champion of the Union cause during the Civil war, for which he organized two companies, but was himself rejected on account of physical disability, although he had been elected captain of the company. As he could not aid the army at the front he raised a third company and thus rendered excellent service to the cause at home. He married Susan Clifford, who was likewise a native of Ohio and was a daughter of Edward and Rebecca (Dunlap) Clifford, who were also born in the Hawkeye state. They, too, became residents of Marshall county, Illinois, making the journey overland across the country in wagons when Mrs. Susan Hamilton was quite young. Both lived to old age, Mrs. Clifford being ninety-six years old at the time of her death. They had a large family, namely: Sarah, now the wife of James Phillips, of Table Rock, Nebraska; Nancy, deceased; Jane, the wife of William Dunlap; Samuel and Margaret, both of whom have passed away; and Susan, who became the wife of William T. Hamilton. By her marriage she had four children who reached adult age: Luetta, now the wife of J. F. Evans, of Pomona, California; John F.; James E., who follows farming near Magnolia, Illinois; and Samuel O., living in Lordsburg, California.

John F. Hamilton was reared upon his father's farm near Wenona, Illinois, and after mastering the common branches of learning in the district schools attended the high school of Wenona. Subsequently he entered the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington. With broad literary learning to serve as the foundation for professional knowledge he took up the study of law and passed the examination before the Supreme court of Illinois, being admitted to the bar on the 1st of March, 1893. He then began practice in Galesburg where he still remains and in following his profession has won a good clientage.



On the 5th of June, 1895, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hamilton and Miss Anna Wright, a daughter of William and Sarah (Bellows) Wright, the former a native of New York and the latter of Hartford, Connecticut. Removing westward they settled in Indiana where their remaining days were passed. They were parents of four children, including Anna, who became Mrs. Hamilton. She was born in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, and by her marriage has become the mother of three children, William Wright, John Philip and Dorothy Luetta. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton hold membership in the Presbyterian church and in social circles occupy an enviable position by reason of that genuine worth which is always the passport to good society. Mr. Hamilton belongs to Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M., and also to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Tribe of Ben Hur, the Yeomen of America and the Knights and Ladies of Honor. He is likewise a member of the Sigma Chi, a college fraternity, and of the Country Club. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he is now capably serving for the fourth term as justice of the peace. His military experience covers service as captain of Battery B, Illinois National Guard, and he was inspector of rifle practice on Mayor Yeager's staff. He was also military instructor in St. Albans Academy at Knoxville for two years. His interests are broad and varied and he has led a busy and useful life, his activities touching the general interests of society whereby the welfare and the legal status of the community are upheld.

SAMUEL TUCKER.

The late Samuel Tucker, for more than fifty years actively engaged in agricultural pursuits in Knox county, was the most extensive landowner in Truro township at the time of his death, eighteen years ago. He was born on his father's farm in Ohio, on October 12, 1822, and there he spent the first twelve years of his life. In 1834 the family residence was changed to Peoria county, Illinois, where the father continued to follow farming during the remainder of his active life.

The education of Samuel Tucker was begun in the common schools of his native state and completed in Peoria county, Illinois, where he was reared to manhood. His youthful years were very similar, save in details, to those of other lads of the period and circumstances. At such times as he was not engaged with his studies in school he assisted with the work of the farm, and when little more than a child assumed the duties of a man in the operation of the fields. He remained with his people until his marriage at the age of twenty-seven years, when he began his independent agricultural career. Together with his bride he came to Knox county, settling on a small farm he had acquired in Elba township. He was a man of tireless energy, and industriously applied himself to the operation of his land. At the expiration of seven or eight years he removed to Truro township, where he resided until his death. Not the least of Mr. Tucker's many admirable traits was his patriotism, and when the nation's chief called for volunteers he responded, enlisting in Company H, One Hundred and Second Regiment. He entered the service in 1862 and remained at the front until July, 1865, when he was mustered out. Returning home he resumed his farming, in which he met with such lucrative returns that he was able to extend his holdings from time to time until he owned five hundred acres of most productive land. He assiduously applied himself to the further cultivation and improvement of this property until his death on May 8, 1893, at the age of seventy-one years. The prosperity that attended the efforts of Mr. Tucker must be attributed to his own personal endeavors, helpfully supplemented by Mrs. Tucker's capable management of the household affairs. He belonged to the type of men who set themselves a task, and disregarding all obstacles that may arise to thwart their plans, tenaciously adhere to their plan of action until they attain their ambition. Success would have attended his endeavors in any vocation he might have elected to follow, because he would never have accepted defeat, failure but serving to renew the energy by means of which he conquered. He located in Knox county at a period when pioneer conditions still existed, and farming was largely little more than drudgery, as it was prior to the advent of the modern agricultural implements. Hardships and privations, disappointments and misfortunes fell to his lot as to that of all pioneers, but he steadily persisted in his course and in the end won such feasible success that he owned at one time three thousand and forty acres of land.

Mrs. Mary Tucker

On February 29, 1849, Mr. Tucker was united in marriage to Miss Mary Mundy, who was born October 1, 1831, and was a daughter of James Mundy of Elba township, Knox county. Mr. Mundy was one of the pioneers, while Mrs. Mundy's father also was one of the first settlers in this section of the county. James Mundy engaged in farming in Elba township until his death, which occurred at the age of sixty-six years. He was one of the estimable citizens of his community and held membership in the Masonic fraternity. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Tucker there were born eleven children, of whom four sons and three daughters are living. In order of birth they are as follows: James; L. V.; Noah; Eugene; Catherine Elizabeth, the wife of A. D. Moon; Sarah Amanda, who married Charles H. Eastman; and Mary Evelyn, the wife of Dr. Ben D. Baird.

His political allegiance Mr. Tucker always accorded to the republican party, and he served as supervisor of his township for several terms, while he also acted as school director. His public duties were always discharged with the same competence and efficiency that marked his private undertakings, as he always considered that anything that was of sufficient importance to engage his attention was worthy of his best efforts. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Tucker left the farm, which she is now renting and removed to Williamsfield, where she continues to reside. She is a woman of many most estimable qualities and is held in high regard by her large circle of acquaintances.

GEORGE M. CLARK.

George M. Clark, chief clerk of the election commissioners for the city of Galesburg and at one time treasurer of Knox county, was born in Orange township, this county, on the 24th of April, 1872. The ancestral history declares the family to be of German origin although representatives of the name have long been residents of America. Abraham Clark, the grandfather of George M.

Clark, came from the state of New York and was a farmer by occupation. He married Anna Wise and at length removed westward, becoming one of the early farmers of this county. The land which he purchased he converted into rich and productive fields and he continued his residence upon the old homestead until his death, which occurred in Orange township when he had passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten. His wife reached the very remarkable old age of ninety-four years. Their family numbered three children, Nelson, Luther and Elizabeth, the last named becoming the wife of Cornelius King.

Luther Clark, the father of George M. Clark, was born in Tioga county, New York, July 1, 1829, and was fourteen years of age when the family came to Knox county, Illinois, in 1843, so that he attained his majority while living upon the old homestead in Orange township. He shared with the family in the hardships and experiences of pioneer life, early becoming familiar with the work of the fields from the time of early spring planting until after the crops were harvested in the late autumn. When he had attained man's estate he began farming on his own account, purchasing eighty acres of land. Not a furrow had been turned nor an improvement made upon the property when it came into his possession but with characteristic energy he began to break the sod and till the fields and in due time his land returned to him abundant crops. As he prospered in his undertaking he extended the boundaries of his property until at one time he owned two hundred acres. On the 3d of February, 1859, he married Sarah Yeager, who was born in Miami county, Ohio, April 5, 1839, and traced her ancestry back to Germany. To them were born six children: Anna E., the wife of Arthur S. Randall, of Orange township; Curtis A. and Frank N., both residents of Orange township; John A., of Galesburg; George M., of this review; and Mary, who married J. W. Wise, of Knoxville. The death of the father occurred February 3, 1900, and the mother passed away May 25, 1903. She was a devoted member of the Congregational church and her kindly spirit and many good traits of character won her the love of all who knew her. In politics Mr. Clark was a republican and served in several local offices, acting as township assessor and also as supervisor for a number of years.

George M. Clark spent his youthful days on his father's farm in Orange township, dividing his time between the work of the fields and the acquirement of an education in the district schools up to the time when he entered the Galesburg Business College. After completing his course in that institution he then returned to the farm and carried on general agricultural pursuits until 1907. He inherited a part of the old homestead and bought out the interests of the other heirs in that property, still owning the farm which comprises one hundred and forty acres of rich and productive land. A noted educator who has given much study to the sources of the country's wealth says that there is no better investment in all America than Illinois farm land and in his property Mr. Clark has a source of gratifying income. He left the farm and removed to Galesburg to assume the duties of county treasurer, having been appointed to the office in January, 1909, after which he was chosen for the position at a special election in June of that year. He served for about two years, filling out an unexpired term of O. N. Custer. He had formerly filled the office of supervisor for seven years and was township collector for three years. He has ever discharged his official duties with promptness and fidelity and the record he has made in this connection is a most creditable one. In his political views he has ever been a republican and for one term served as chairman of the republican county central committee. He was likewise chairman of the board of supervisors for two terms and resigned to enter upon the duties of the office of county treasurer.

The marriage of George M. Clark and Miss Elizabeth Krise was celebrated October 22, 1894. She was a daughter of George A. and Mary A. (Sheets) Krise, and by her marriage she became the mother of three children, Clare, Frances and Dorothy. Death called her March 18, 1900, and the family lost a devoted mother and the Congregational church a faithful member. Mr. Clark was married again, December 21, 1905, his second union being with Miss Susie D. Hartnell, who was born in England, of which country her parents, George and Mary (Dean) Hartnell, were also natives. They came to this country during the early girlhood of their daughter Susie. They now reside in Orange township, where Mr. Hartnell is yet following the occupation of farming. The children of the family are: Mary; Albert; Ethel and Edith, twins; John; Joseph; Susie; and a half-brother, William Aplin. Mr. and Mrs. Clark became parents of two children, Helen and Ruth Margaret, but the first born, Helen, died in infancy.

Mr. Clark belongs to the Modern Woodmen Camp of De Long, also the local lodge of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. He is supreme treasurer of the Fraternal Reserve Life Association of Peoria. Wherever known he is held in high esteem and most of all where he is best known. His life has been quietly passed and yet he has at all times been a faithful citizen and a reliable business man who is trustworthy in his friendships and true to every trust reposed in him.

EDWARD R. DRAKE.

Edward R. Drake, a member of the firm of Kellogg, Drake & Company, dealers in dry goods, cloaks and carpets, their large establishment extending from No. 227 to 235 East Main street, is one of the native sons of Galesburg, his birth having here occurred November 10, 1856. His great-grandfather in the paternal line was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, David Drake, was a native of New York and devoted his life to farming. When called to his final rest his remains were interred at Crown Point, that state. His family numbered several children, including: Lyman C., the father of Edward R. Drake; Amos, who remained a resident of the state of New York; Nathan B., who came to the middle west at an early day and took up his abode just across the street from his brother Lyman; Olive, the wife of Charles Needham, who removed from Galesburg to California in 1865, settling at Merced; and Mary, the wife of James Squire, of Galesburg.

Lyman C. Drake, a native of New York, was reared in Essex county of that state and, having arrived at years of maturity wedded Lucy Ann Hyde, a native of Vermont, who spent her girlhood days in Middlebury of the "Green Mountain" state. She was a granddaughter of Russell B. Hyde, who served throughout the Revolutionary war, retiring with the rank of major. He received from the government in recognition of his services a land grant of a township in Northern Vermont, which was named Hyde Park in his honor. Lucy Ann Hyde was a daughter of Jabez Perkins and Martha (Edgerton) Hyde, who removed to the Mississippi valley with their children and spent their last days in Galesburg, where they passed away at an advanced age. They had a large family, namely: George J., a resident of Davenport, Iowa; Andrew J., who in 1828 went with his brother George to Davenport, the remainder of their lives being passed in Scott county, Iowa; Martha, who married George W. G. Ferris, the youngest son of Sylvanus Ferris, who with George W. Gale and others founded the city of Galesburg; Lydia E., who became the wife of Albert Cline and removed to Peoria county; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Edward Ray, a soldier of the Civil war, and both are now deceased; Diadama, the wife of Horace B. Weeks, who died in early manhood in Galesburg and was laid to rest in Hope cemetery; and others. His family included Lucy Ann Hyde, who became the wife of Lyman C. Drake, and in the year 1843 they removed westward, settling just within the edge of Warren county, Illinois. where Mr. Drake engaged in farming for a number of years. In 1854 he brought his family to Galesburg where he lived retired. Here he died in 1887, at the age of eighty years, while his wife passed away in 1888, when seventy-four years of age. Both were members of the Baptist church and Mr. Drake was at one time a member of the New York State Militia and held a captain's commission. Unto him and his wife were born nine children, but only two are now living, the younger being Frederick S., a resident of Detroit, Michigan.

Edward R. Drake, born and reared in Galesburg, pursued his education in the public schools here and made his initial step in the business world as a clerk in a dry-goods store. Ambitious to enter business life on his own account, he availed himself of the opportunity which in 1888 came to him, of becoming a member of the firm of Kellogg, Drake & Company. This organization has since maintained a continuous existence and is regarded as one of the old reliable houses of the city, carrying a large and well selected line of dry goods, cloaks and carpets. The honorable business methods of the house and the unfaltering enterprise of the partners have enabled them to meet competition and win a fair share of the public patronage, so that the undertaking has been crowned with prosperity from the outset.

On the 29th of June, 1894, Mr. Drake was married to Miss Harriet E. Stone, the youngest daughter of Lester T. and Sallie (Ferris) Stone, who died in 1895; the former was a native of Vermont and the latter of Galesburg. L. T. Stone was a soldier of the Civil war, serving for nearly four years as an officer and died November 12, 1911. He was the son of C. D. Stone, at one time a resident of Galesburg, his remains now resting in Hope cemetery. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Drake was S. W. Ferris, a son of Sylvanus Ferris, native of New York. He married Currance Ann Winniger. The death of Mrs. Drake occurred November 15, 1896, and was the occasion of deep and widespread regret to her many friends.

The public interests of the community outside of business circles have benefited by the efforts of Mr. Drake who, never neglectful of the duties of citizenship and realizing the responsibility of the individual in community affairs, has done public work of a helpful nature. He has always given his political support to the republican party, but the offices he has filled have not been of a political character. For twenty-eight years, however, he has served on the library board and at this writing, in 1911, is its president. He was a charter member of the Galesburg Club and twice served as its president, and he holds membership in the Baptist church. Where the interests and welfare of the city are involved his influence and aid are always given on the side of progress and improvement.

PETER EPLEY.

The late Peter Epley, who for many years was a street commissioner in Knoxville, located here with his family in the '80s. His birth occurred on a farm in the vicinity of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, on the 23d of April, 1833, his parents being George and Harriet (Vance) Epley, also natives of the Keystone state. George Epley came to Knox county with his family during the pioneer days, and here both he and the mother passed away. Their family consisted of four sons and seven daughters of whom the following are living: John; William; Mrs. Sarah Lightner, of Knoxville; Mrs. Mary Pfeffer, of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Mattie Hoke, of Elk Creek, Nebraska; and Mrs. Amanda Korman, of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

In the acquirement of his education Peter Epley attended the common schools in the vicinity of his birthplace, at the same time assisting his father with the work of the farm. When the war broke out he was drafted from Gettysburg and went to the front where he remained for three months, to assume on his return the responsibilities of manhood and directed his energies thereafter along different lines of activity.

When twenty-one years of age, Mr. Epley married Miss Agnes Evelyn Currens, their marriage being celebrated in Gettysburg, on February 27, 1854. She is a daughter of Elijah and Mary Ann (Dix) Currens, natives of Maryland, in which state Mrs. Epley's birth occurred on the 23d of July, 1835. Her father was a shoemaker, and after following his trade for many years in his native state, he removed with his family to Pennsylvania, where he passed away at the age of ninety-six years. He was a veteran of the Revolutionary war. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Currens there were born five sons and five daughters, Mrs. Epley being the only one now living. In order of birth they were as follows: John; Mary Jane; Ann Eliza; Isabella; Sarah M.; Agnes; Jessie; Stephen; and two who died in infancy. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Epley numbered twelve, nine sons and three daughters. Calvin, who was the eldest, died in infancy. William, who conducts a restaurant at Elmwood, is married and has one son, Max. John, who is the next in order of birth, is deceased. Sarah R. married William Johns, at Gettysburg and has six children and one grandchild, as follows: Laura, who is married and has one child; and Mary, Ada, Walter, Howard and one child who died in infancy. Mary Ann, the wife of William Gross, is living in Boston, where both she and her husband are Christian science practitioners. Laura married Reuben H. Culp, an undertaker of Gettysburg, and has two children, Charles and Ethel. Frederick is deceased. Charles is conducting a restaurant in Knoxville. George, who is a resident of Elmwood, is married and has three children; Leo, Everett and a baby. Isaac is engaged in the operation of a farm near Maquon. Robert, a painter and decorator, is a resident of Knoxville. Curtis, the youngest member of the family, is conducting a flour and feed store at Norwick, Kansas. He is married and has one child, Harold.

Mr. Epley affiliated with the Lutheran faith, while his widow belongs to the Presbyterian church. He voted the democratic ticket, and was an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic. The residence now occupied by Mrs. Epley was erected by them more than twenty-seven years ago. In November, 1905, Mr. Epley passed away while on a visit in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

O. JOHN OBERHOLTZER.

By the intelligent and capable direction of his activities along agricultural lines O. John Oberholtzer met with such success that he became one of the extensive property owners of Elba township, spending the last years of a well rounded life in retirement in Williamsfield, his death occurring on November 11, 1911. He was born in the vicinity of Ashland, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 12th of May, 1846, a son of James and Ann (Tedrow) Oberholtzer, both of German extraction. The father was born and reared in Pennsylvania, but in his early manhood he located in Ohio, where he followed the blacksmith's trade until 1848, when with his wife and family he came to Knox county. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Oberholtzer there were born five children: Louisa J.; O. John; Elizabeth J., who is deceased; Homer W.; and Mary E., who has passed away.

The son of a pioneer farmer, O. John Oberholtzer was afforded but limited educational advantages, during which time he also assisted his father with the cultivation of the fields. At the age of eighteen years he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, going to the front on the 20th of January, 1865, where he remained until the close of hostilities. Upon receiving his discharge he returned home and again applied his energies to the cultivation of the farm, remaining with his people until he was twenty-two. He then began to make his own way in the world and the following year was married, immediately after which he and his bride settled on a quarter section of land he had purchased in Truro township. He assiduously applied himself to the further improvement of his property, during the succeeding five years, at the expiration of which time he disposed of it. The proceeds he invested in three hundred and twenty acres located in the same township, and there he lived until his retirement. Mr. Oberholtzer perseveringly devoted his energies to general farming and stock-raising and met with such excellent returns that he was able to increase his holdings until he had acquired five hundred and ninety acres. He erected good barns and substantial outbuildings as well as a comfortable residence on his homestead, which he further improved by the addition of many modern conveniences and comforts. The operation of his fields and the harvesting of his abundant crops was always conducted under the personal supervision of Mr. Oberholtzer, who is a man of practical ideas and progressive methods. To his capable supervision of every detail about his farm as well as his energy and the concentration of his powers must be attributed much of his success.

At Knoxville on the 21st of February, 1869, Mr. Oberholtzer was united in marriage to Miss Amelia A. Smith, a daughter of William H. and Mary (Almey) Smith, natives of New York. Six children have been born unto Mr. and Mrs. Oberholtzer, as follows: Clara E.; Emma A.; Nellie J.; Ida E.; Edward J., who is engaged in the practice of medicine, at Williamsfield; and Joseph W., who is deceased.

Mr. Oberholtzer was an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being commander of the local post, and his political support was given the republican party. In 1880 he served as assessor and four years later he was elected justice of the peace, while he also served as township supervisor for nine years. He has always taken an active part in local political affairs and up to the time of his death discharged the duties of justice of the peace. He received and fully warranted the high esteem of the community, in which he was widely known and left his family a comfortable competence and large property interests, a monument of diligence and persistent effort. His demise on November 11, 1911, caused deep sorrow to his family, to whom he had been a devoted husband and father, and wide regret among his many friends and acquaintances who reverently cherish his memory. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Williamsfield.

GENERAL F. C. SMITH.

General F. C. Smith, whose title came in recognition of the valiant services which he rendered to his country in the Civil war, made an equally creditable record in private life and, although all days were not equally bright when viewed from the financial standpoint, he ever maintained a high position in the honor and regard of his fellowmen, and in fostering railroad building and other business enterprises contributed much to the substantial development of the districts in which he lived. He was born in Portageville, New York, July 14, 1824. His father, Cyrus Smith, was a soldier of the war of 1812 and his example of military service and valor inspired the son, who later gave equal proof of his patriotism and loyalty to his country. General Smith spent his youthful days in Portageville and pursued his early education there. He also studied for a year in Hamilton University and afterward engaged in teaching school for a number of terms in his native town. He also added to his own knowledge by reading and study and therein laid the foundation of that broad general fund of information which always characterized him and which was ever ready at his command. He was only fourteen years of age when he lost his father so that from that time he was largely dependent upon his own resources. From the work of the schoolroom he turned his attention to contracting and gained prominence in that line in the state of New York. He was interested in the construction of the Geneseo canal and did extensive work on the Erie canal besides executing other large contracts. For this work he was splendidly qualified, possessing much natural mechanical ingenuity and talent in the line of civil engineering. He also studied law while a resident of New York and although he did not at that time enter upon active practice, he later depended upon his knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence and the success which he obtained in practice showed that he was well grounded in the fundamentals of the law.

In February, 1856, General Smith was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Gilbert, of Batavia, New York, and after residing for three years in the Empire state they came to the middle west in 1859, settling in Oneida, Knox county, Illinois. Some of the members of his family had preceded him and by reason of this he was induced to establish his home in the Mississippi valley. He was residing in Oneida when the Civil war broke out and his patriotic spirit was fired by the attempt of the south to overthrow the Union. He was among the first of this district to respond to the call to arms and he was connected with some of the most brilliant achievements of the war. He took an active part in organizing Companies A, B, D, F, H and I, of the One Hundred and Second Illinois Regiment, all of which were raised in this county while the other companies of the regiment were raised in Mercer, Warren and Rock Island counties. The One Hundred and Second Illinois was mustered into service, September 2, 1862, with F. C. Smith as lieutenant colonel, and it is said that this command was never known to retreat. He was promoted to the rank of colonel, October 24, 1862, following the resignation of Colonel William McMurtry, and remained in command of his regiment until the close of the war. It was successively connected with Gordon's Reserve Corps, the Eleventh Army Corps and the Twentieth Army Corps, and during the Atlanta campaign was a part of General Sherman's army. On the 16th of March, 1864, an order came attaching the regiment to the First Brigade of the Third Division of the Twentieth Corps and in consequence thereof General Smith participated in the campaign against Atlanta, followed by the celebrated march under Sheridan to the sea. In this campaign he and his regiment made a record of which his country may well be proud. They participated in the battle of Resaca, May 15, 1864, and took part in the daring charge made across a ravine against a rebel fort which they captured, Colonel Smith being one of the first to enter the fort. Subsequently the One Hundred and Second Illinois was in the engagement of New Hope Church and at Golgotha Church, and, on the 16th of June, 1864, at Pine Mountain, Georgia, their commander was severely wounded in the left leg above the knee. As soon as he was able to walk he returned to the command of his regiment, which was on the 10th of August, 1864. When General Benjamin Harrison was granted a furlough and returned home the command of the brigade fell upon General Smith and he led it on the great march through the wilderness to Savannah. After that he was granted a furlough and visited his family and home, but rejoined his regiment on the 13th of April, 1865, near Raleigh, and with the brigade under General Harrison marched on to Washington, participating in the grand review on the 24th of May, 1865, his regiment leading the brigade. They were mustered out in June and Colonel Smith was breveted brigadier general on account of his long and efficient service. The president treated him with great respect and paid him a high compliment because of the valorous aid which he had rendered his country.

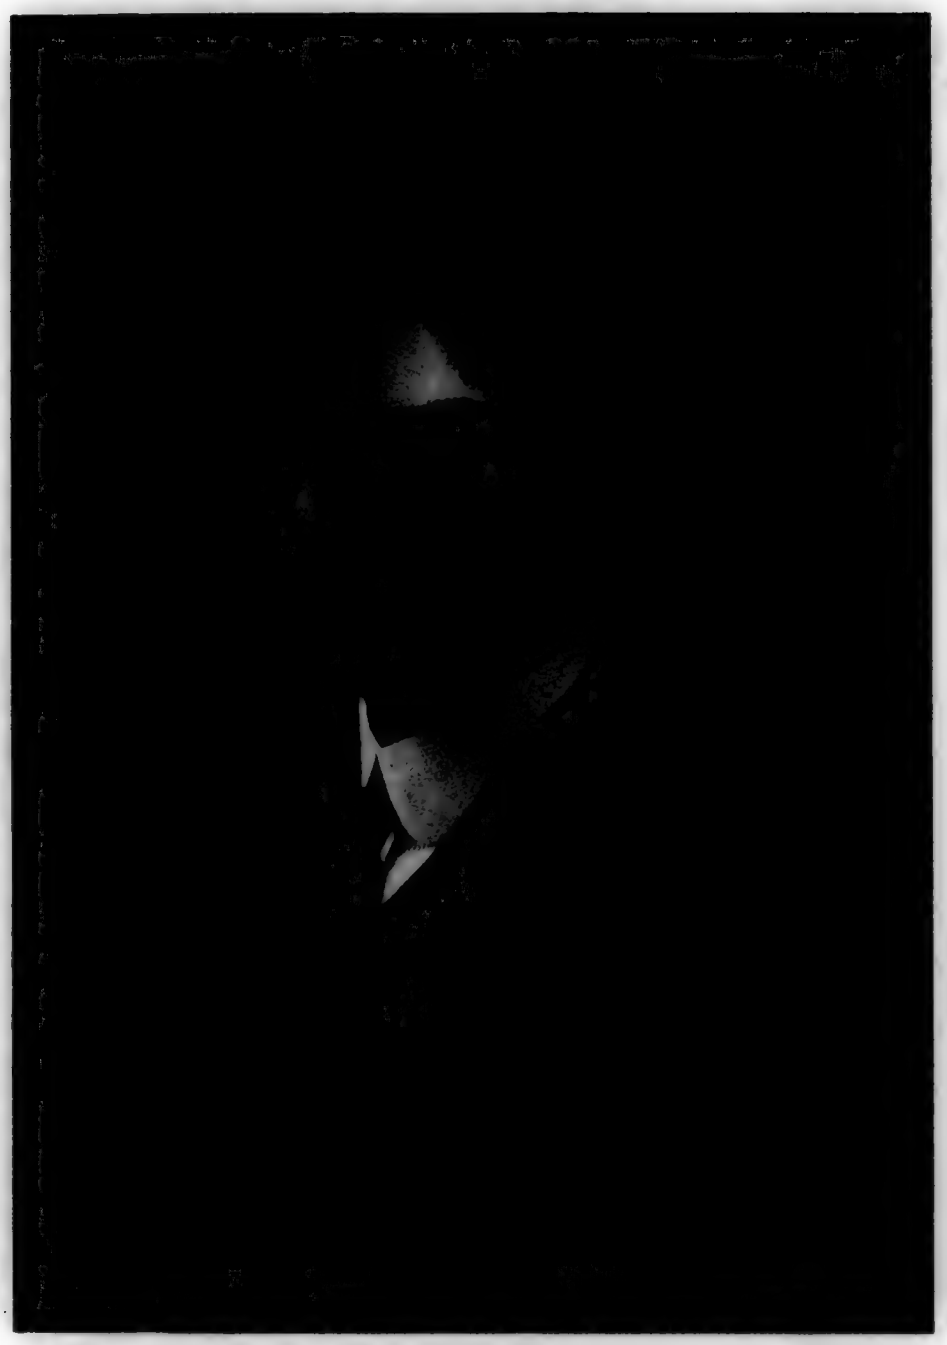
When the war was over General Smith returned to his home in Oneida and became prominently connected with the building of the Fort Scott & Western Railway. The failure of this road embarrassed him financially, for he had spent much of his private means to pay the men. About 1874 he removed to Galesburg. While living in New York he had studied law and was admitted to practice in the courts of Illinois about 1883. For ten or twelve years he occupied the same office as the Hon. J. C. Stewart and during 1877 and 1878, when Mr. Stewart was mayor of the city, General Smith served as city attorney. He followed his profession continuously for a number of years and his opinions upon law matters were regarded as models of clearness and perspicuity. General Smith also became one of the builders of the Central Illinois Railroad. During President Cleveland's administration he was connected with the revenue office at Peoria and from 1883 until 1885 served as superintendent of streets in Galesburg. He was ever loyal to the public trusts reposed in him and was equally faithful in the discharge of every private duty.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Smith there were born two children, but the younger, a daughter, Anna, is now deceased. The son, William, still resides in Galesburg as does his widowed mother, Mrs. Sarah Smith. The death of General Smith occurred in 1891. He belonged to Vester Lodge, No. 584, A. F. & A. M., and to the Royal Arch chapter, and his religious faith was indicated by his membership in the First Baptist church. His was an upright and honorable life, in consistent harmony with his professions, and at all times he was actuated by the spirit of progress that prompted his hearty cooperation in many movements for the material, intellectual, political and moral progress of his community.

WILFRED ARNOLD.

Wilfred Arnold, lawyer and legislator, who as a member of the firm of Arnold & Arnold, is practicing in the courts of Illinois, makes his home in Galesburg, his native city, where he was born June 24, 1871. His parents were Benjamin F. and Ella (Ferris) Arnold, natives of New York, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this volume.



Wilfred Arnold spent his youthful days in this city and in the acquirement of his education attended the public schools until graduated from the high school with the class of 1889. He afterward entered Knox College, therein completing his course in 1894. His law studies were pursued at Harvard and after two years' preparation he was admitted to the bar, on the 19th of November, 1896, and opened an office in Galesburg, where he has since followed his profession, practicing now as a member of the firm of Arnold & Arnold.

On the 18th of October, 1899, Mr. Arnold was married to Miss Nina May Lahann, who was born in Monmouth, Illinois, a daughter of Riemer and Katherine (Fongart) Lahann, who were natives of Germany, but now reside in Galesburg. Of their three children but two are living: Ida, now the wife of Fred Hayden, of Warren county, Illinois; and Nina May, who became Mrs. Arnold and is the mother of one child, Katherine. Mr. Arnold is a member of the Central Congregational church and his wife holds membership in the Episcopal church. He belongs also to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and gives his political support to the republican party. He has been somewhat prominent in political circles and has twice been called to represent his district in the state legislature, serving in the forty-third and forty-fourth general assemblies. While undoubtedly not without that honorable ambition which is so powerful and useful as an incentive to activity in public affairs, he regards the pursuits of private life as being in themselves abundantly worthy of his best efforts. He has never regarded a public office as a personal asset and in discharging his duties has ever subordinated personal ambition to public good. His energies, however, have been chiefly concentrated upon his professional duties.

WILLIAM HENRY MALEY, M. S., M. D.

Thorough training and recognition of the responsibilities which devolve upon him as a physician and surgeon, have won for Dr. William H. Maley an enviable place in the ranks of the medical fraternity of Galesburg. His record is in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for he has won signal success in this district, in which his entire life has been passed.

He was born in Galesburg township on the 27th of March, 1867, his parents being Michael and Ann (Ryan) Maley. The former was a son of John Maley, who died on the Emerald isle when a comparatively young man. He and his wife reared a large family, which included Owen, who became a resident of Troy, New York, while a brother went to Australia. Michael Maley was born in County Croom, Ireland, and spent his youth in his native land. In 1855 he determined to try his fortune in America and, empty-handed, sailed for the new world. He first settled in Lebanon, Ohio, and as his financial condition made it imperative that he obtain immediate employment, he began work as a farm hand and devoted the succeeding two years to that task. He then came to Galesburg and engaged as a farm hand with Len Conger but, desiring that his labors should more directly benefit himself, he afterward began farming on his own account by renting a tract of land southwest of the city. Later he was united in marriage to Miss Ann Ryan, who was born near Brimfield, Illinois, and was a daughter of Dennis and Johanna (Hennessey) Ryan. Her father was a farmer by occupation and followed that pursuit until his death. His wife long survived him, reaching the very advanced age of ninety-three years. They had two daughters, Ann and Mary, the former becoming the wife of Michael Maley. It was not long afterward that Mr. Maley purchased eighty acres of land in Galesburg township, bending every energy to the further development and improvement of his Thorough training and recognition of the responsibilities which devolve upon him as a physician and surgeon, have won for Dr. William H. Maley an enviable place in the ranks of the medical fraternity of Galesburg. His record is in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, for he has won signal success in this district, in which his entire life has been passed.

He was born in Galesburg township on the 27th of March, 1867, his parents being Michael and Ann (Ryan) Maley. The former was a son of John Maley, who died on the Emerald isle when a comparatively young man. He and his wife reared a large family, which included Owen, who became a resident of Troy, New York, while a brother went to Australia. Michael Maley was born in County Croom, Ireland, and spent his youth in his native land. In 1855 he determined to try his fortune in America and, empty-handed, sailed for the new world. He first settled in Lebanon, Ohio, and as his financial condition made it imperative that he obtain immediate employment, he began work as a farm hand and devoted the succeeding two years to that task. He then came to Galesburg and engaged as a farm hand with Len Conger but, desiring that his labors should more directly benefit himself, he afterward began farming on his own account by renting a tract of land southwest of the city. Later he was united in marriage to Miss Ann Ryan, who was born near Brimfield, Illinois, and was a daughter of Dennis and Johanna (Hennessey) Ryan. Her father was a farmer by occupation and followed that pursuit until his death. His wife long survived him, reaching the very advanced age of ninety-three years. They had two daughters, Ann and Mary, the former becoming the wife of Michael Maley. It was not long afterward that Mr. Maley purchased eighty acres of land in Galesburg township, bending every energy to the further development and improvement of his farm, to which he added from time to time until he became the owner of three hundred and twenty acres. Year by year he carefully tilled the soil until he had brought the entire place under a high state of cultivation, the rich and arable fields returning to him golden harvests. In 1899 he determined to put aside business cares and, leaving the farm, removed to Galesburg, where he purchased a residence that he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred July 9, 1901, when he was seventy-three years of age. His wife still survives him and, like her husband, holds membership in the Catholic church. He held many offices and positions of trust and at all times sought the progress and improvement of the community in which he made his home. He and his wife were among the stanch, unflinching pioneers of Knox county—public-spirited and progressive, firmly believing that knowledge is power. Accordingly they equipped their nine children with diplomas from the best schools and colleges of the city. In fact, Mrs. Maley will not have to wait long before seeing her grandsons, Charles Maley and George L. Burns, and her granddaughter, Estella M. Burns, all graduates of Knox College and St. Joseph's Academy. She is not only affectionately called grandmother of St. Joseph's Academy but the happy grandmother of all the children who know her. She is genial, jovial, young and spry as a girl, though an indefatigable worker, and is a great lover of children, flowers and gardens. She has just completed a handsome and spacious brick residence and her home is always filled with guests and friends who earnestly hope that she will continue to spread the rays of sunshine for many years to come.

To Mr. and Mrs. Michael Maley there were born nine children: Madge, now the wife of Charles H. Burns, of Galesburg; William H.; John E., a lawyer of this city; Mary E., who is teaching in the Galesburg city schools; Frank T., an electrician of New York city; Anna E., a teacher in Galesburg; Adele M., of Galesburg; George E., a practicing physician of this city; and Fred L., who is engaged in mercantile and journalistic work.

Dr. William H. Maley spent his youthful days on his father's farm and early became familiar with the labors incident to the development and cultivation of the fields. After attending the district schools he further pursued his studies in St. Joseph's Academy and was graduated from Brown's Business College in 1888. His more specifically literary education was acquired in Knox College, in which he completed his course with the class of 1894, and while in college he won many honors in oratory and was a winner of the Colton debate. His broad, general learning served as an excellent foundation upon which to build professional success and in preparation therefor he entered Rush Medical College of Chicago, from which he was graduated as valedictorian of the class of 1897. Returning at once to Galesburg, he here opened an office and in the intervening period of fifteen years, by faithful application to professional business and keeping abreast with the marvelous strides in medicine and surgery, he has succeeded in building up until he now enjoys a most successful and extensive practice, second to none in central Illinois. The assistance of a younger brother, Dr. George E. Maley, a promising young physician, is now necessary to enable him to handle his practice. He is very careful in the diagnosis of his cases and his judgment is seldom if ever at fault in foretelling the outcome of disease. He has pursued post-graduate work in the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, which he attended in 1899. His reading and research have been broad and have brought to him comprehensive knowledge of the great scientific principles which underly his chosen profession. In 1902 he went to Europe and pursued a course at Berlin and Heidelberg, Germany.

On the 30th of June, 1902, Dr. Maley was united in marriage to Miss Clara Augusta Forrester, a daughter of Edward and Mary Desire (Brown) Forrester. Her father was a native of County Roscommon, Ireland, and a son of James and Katherine (Moore) Forrester, whose family numbered nine children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of Thomas Forrester, who resides in Laporte, Indiana. The birth of Mrs. Edward Forrester occurred at Stonington, Illinois, and she was a daughter of John and Mary Ann (Desire) Brown, the former a prominent man and a teacher of North Stonington, Connecticut. The death of Edward Forrester occurred in 1909, when he had reached the age of seventy-four years. His wife is still living, a respected citizen of Taylorville, at the age of sixty-six years. Following the discovery of gold in California, he made a trip by wagon across the plains in 1849 and out of a party of thirty-five he was one of only three who survived the perilous journey. To him and his wife were born six children, of whom three reached adult age: Katherine, who became the wife of Jacob Corzine but is now deceased; James, an attorney of Taylorville; and Clara Augusta. Mrs. Augusta Forrester Maley, wife of the Doctor, was born in Taylorville, Illinois, September 24, 1877, and is a graduate of the Taylorville high school. For some time she also attended the State Normal at Normal, Illinois, developing a musical temperament, and later entered Knox Conservatory of Music at Galesburg, for further development, from which institution she was graduated in 1901. For three years she was organist of the Baptist church of Taylorville, at the same time conducting a studio at that place, and was subsequently called to fill the chair of musical director in the Montana Wesleyan College at Helena, Montana. She resigned that position in 1902 to become the bride of Dr. Maley and after their marriage they took an extended trip through Europe, visiting all the interesting points and places. Especially were they fortunate in having an audience with Pope Leo XIII. Mrs. Maley often sings for the benefit of church and charitable organizations and is a devoted mother and home maker. The marriage of Dr. and Mrs. Maley has been blessed with two sons, William Forrester and Robert Frederick.

The parents are members of the Catholic church and Dr. Maley also belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and to the Galesburg Club and the Soangetaha Country Club. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and for eight years he served as a member of the city council, exercising his official prerogative in support of many movements and measures for the general good. In strictly professional lines his membership is with the County and State Medical Societies, the American Medical Association and the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States. For ten years he was a member of the National Guard, serving with the rank of first lieutenant, and is at present a member of the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States army with the same rank. He is generous with his time, skill and money in behalf of charity and suffering humanity. His friends, and they are many, find him a genial, social gentleman and he is never remiss in the duties of citizenship, notwithstanding the fact that his professional duties are making a constantly greater and greater demand upon his time and energies. He is keenly interested in all that tends to bring to light the key to the complex mystery which we call life, and his studies have ever kept him thoroughly in touch with the onward march of the profession.

MADISON C. BATES.

Madison C. Bates, now living retired in Galesburg, well merits the rest which is his, because his life has been an active and useful one, characterized by earnest labor and by successful accomplishment along several lines. He was born in Morgan county, Illinois, in 1836, and is therefore today one of the oldest native residents of the state. His birth occurred near where the city of Jacksonville now stands. Six years before his father, Joseph H. Bates, had removed to that county from Tennessee and after residing in Morgan county for about sixteen years, he took his family to Adams county, settling near Camp Point, where he lived for a number of years, devoting his time and energies during that period to farming.

Madison C. Bates was educated in the public schools of Adams county and in Cherry Grove Commons. He received excellent home training which developed in him habits of industry, perseverance and determination. Following his marriage he purchased a farm in Cedar township and took up agricultural pursuits on his own account. He has resided continuously in Knox county since 1861 save for the period of eight years spent in Oberlin, Ohio, and several years in Toulon, Illinois. He has not confined his attention entirely to agricultural pursuits, for he was instrumental in organizing the First National Bank of Abingdon and became its first president, serving for five years. When he went to Ohio to live he disposed of his farm and since his return has lived retired in Galesburg.

It was on the 16th of May, 1861, that Mr. Bates was united in marriage to Miss Emma Lattimer, a daughter of George G. Lattimer, of Cedar township, Knox county, who came to this state from Tennessee. He was a son of Joseph Lattimer who brought the family from Tennessee in the fall of 1832, making the journey by wagon. That was the year of the Black Hawk war in which he served as a soldier, and in this section of the state there were many evidences of pioneer life at that early period, the family experiencing all of the hardships incident to residence on the frontier. In his family were eight children of whom five reached years of maturity. One of these, William D. Lattimer, attended Knox College and after his graduation there entered the Albany (New York) Law School, from which he was in due time graduated. He then enlisted in the Civil war, serving in the quartermaster's department, but while at the front was stricken with yellow fever and was buried at sea, off Fortress Monroe. The three surviving members of the family of George Lattimer are: Mrs. Emma Bates; Mrs. Mire E. Patten, of Enid, Oklahoma; and Mrs. D. B. Miller, of Abingdon.

George G. Lattimer, the father of Mrs. Bates, was a young man when he accompanied the family to Illinois. While en route, in Sangamon county, he met Miss Rebecca Drennan, his future wife, subsequently returning to that county where he married her. They made the journey to Knox county on horseback and here spent their remaining days, Mr. Lattimer following the occupation of farming. They provided their children with good educational privileges, making it possible for them to attend the seminary located near what is now Abingdon or, as it was known in an early day, Cherry Grove. Mr. Lattimer assisted in establishing that school and was very liberal in its support.

Unto the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bates there were born five children: George L., who is now in Africa; Mrs. Ula G. Lee, who was a missionary in Turkey for twenty years; Mary D., the wife of Dr. A. I. Sargent; Harriet B., the wife of W. E. Gould, of Kewanee, Illinois; and Madison C., professor of English in the State College at Brookings, South Dakota.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Bates hold membership in the Central Congregational church of Galesburg and in former years he was identified with the Masonic fraternity but has been demitted. His political allegiance has been given to the republican party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and while he has never been a politician in the sense of office-seeking he has always kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day and for seven years filled the office of supervisor from Cedar township. In 1911, he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding, on which occasion all of the family were united at a reunion.

HENRY F. ARNOLD.

Henry F. Arnold, engaged in the general insurance business, with offices in the Commercial block, has always been a resident of Galesburg and is, therefore, well known to its citizens. His parents were Benjamin F. and Ella (Ferris) Arnold, who are mentioned at length elsewhere in this work. The son spent his youthful days in his native city and at the usual age entered the public schools, mastering the different branches of learning that constitute the curriculum until graduated from the high school with the class of 1885. He then entered the classic walls of old Knox—a college that has never lowered its standards through all the years of its existence—and was graduated therefrom in 1890. The initial year of his business experience was spent in the general offices of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Galesburg and for five years thereafter he was connected with the Galesburg Electric Motor & Power Company as secretary and treasurer. Since 1897 he has been engaged in the insurance business and fourteen years' identification with this line stands as incontrovertible proof of the fact that success must have attended his efforts in this field, while careful analyzation of his career indicates that close application and indefatigable energy have been the salient features in his progress.

On the 27th of April, 1893, Mr. Arnold was married to Miss Anna Ward, of Springfield, a daughter of Henry and Pauline (Roth) Ward. Her father came from Ohio, while her mother was at one time a resident of Camp Point, Illinois. The latter died in Galesburg, April 6, 1908, at the age of fifty-nine years, while Mr. Ward had departed this life in Ohio many years before. Following his demise his widow became the wife of C. J. Owen, of Camp Point, and he, too, is now deceased. She was a daughter of John and Pauline (Schell) Roth, who were early settlers of Camp Point, where they reared their family of four children, Theodore, John, Pauline and Anna, the last named the wife of E. A. Rhea. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have become the parents of a daughter and son, Esther Pauline and Henry Ferris, Jr. The parents hold membership in the Central Congregational church and are allied with many movements that contribute to the material, intellectual, social and moral welfare of the community. His political views accord with the principles of the republican party and as city assessor for three years he proved himself a capable official, individual interests being at all times made subservient to the general good.

DAVID McWILLIAMS.

The late David McWilliams was one of the well known farmers of Knox county and he also served in a number of public offices, having acted as constable of Knoxville and Orange township for twenty-five years. He was born in Maquon township, this county, on the 7th of April, 1846, and was a son of Robert and Margaret (Thurman) McWilliams. The parents were natives of Ohio, whence they came in the pioneer days to Knox county, settling on a farm the father purchased in Maquon township. The cultivation of his land engaged his attention during the remainder of his active life and there they both passed away. Their family consisted of six sons and four daughters, of whom there are now living three sons and two daughters: John; Manson, who lives in Maquon township; Anson, also of Maquon township; Mandana, the wife of Frank Burtnett, of Galesburg; and Rosella, who married Edward Buck, now residing in the vicinity of Galesburg.

Reared under the paternal roof, in the acquirement of his education David McWilliams attended the district schools until he had mastered the common branches. He was early trained in the work of the fields and care of the stock, devoting his entire attention to agricultural pursuits from the time he left school until the opening of the war. Although he was only sixteen at the opening of hostilities he enlisted at Maquon in the Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, starting to the front from Peoria. He continued in the service until after Lee's surrender, participating in many of the notable battles of the war. After receiving his discharge he returned to Knox county and again took up farming.

On the 11th of January, 1866, Mr. McWilliams and Miss Mary E. Rambo were united in marriage. She was born in Gallia county, Ohio, on the 26th of June, 1846, and is a daughter of Harvey and Deborah (Faulkner) Rambo, also natives of Ohio, the father's birth having occurred in March, 1825. Mr. and Mrs. Rambo came to Knox county in the early days, settling on a farm he bought in Orange township. Here they spent the remainder of their lives, the mother's death occurring on the 25th of April, 1904. Unto them were born two sons and four daughters, four of whom are now living, Mrs. McWilliams, being the eldest of these. The others in order of birth are as follows: Emery, who lives near Maquon; Lodema, the wife of Thomas Painter, who also lives in the vicinity of Maquon; and Andrew. Levi Rambo, the grandfather of Mrs. McWilliams, was a veteran of the war of 1812. The family originally settled in Virginia, when they came to America, removing from there to Ohio, thence to Illinois. Unto Mr. and Mrs. McWilliams there were born five children, one of whom died in infancy. The eldest of the family is Flora, the wife of Leonard Stegall, who has one son, Floyd. Frank, who is a resident of Seattle, Washington, married Miss Ollie West, a native of this county, and they have two children, Alma and Lucy. Elmer married Miss Mertie Gearhart, of New Mexico, and they are now living in Canyon City, Colorado. Lodema, the next in order of birth, is deceased. Hattie married Andrew Peterson and they have four children: Forest, Isil L., Dorothy O. and Clara May.

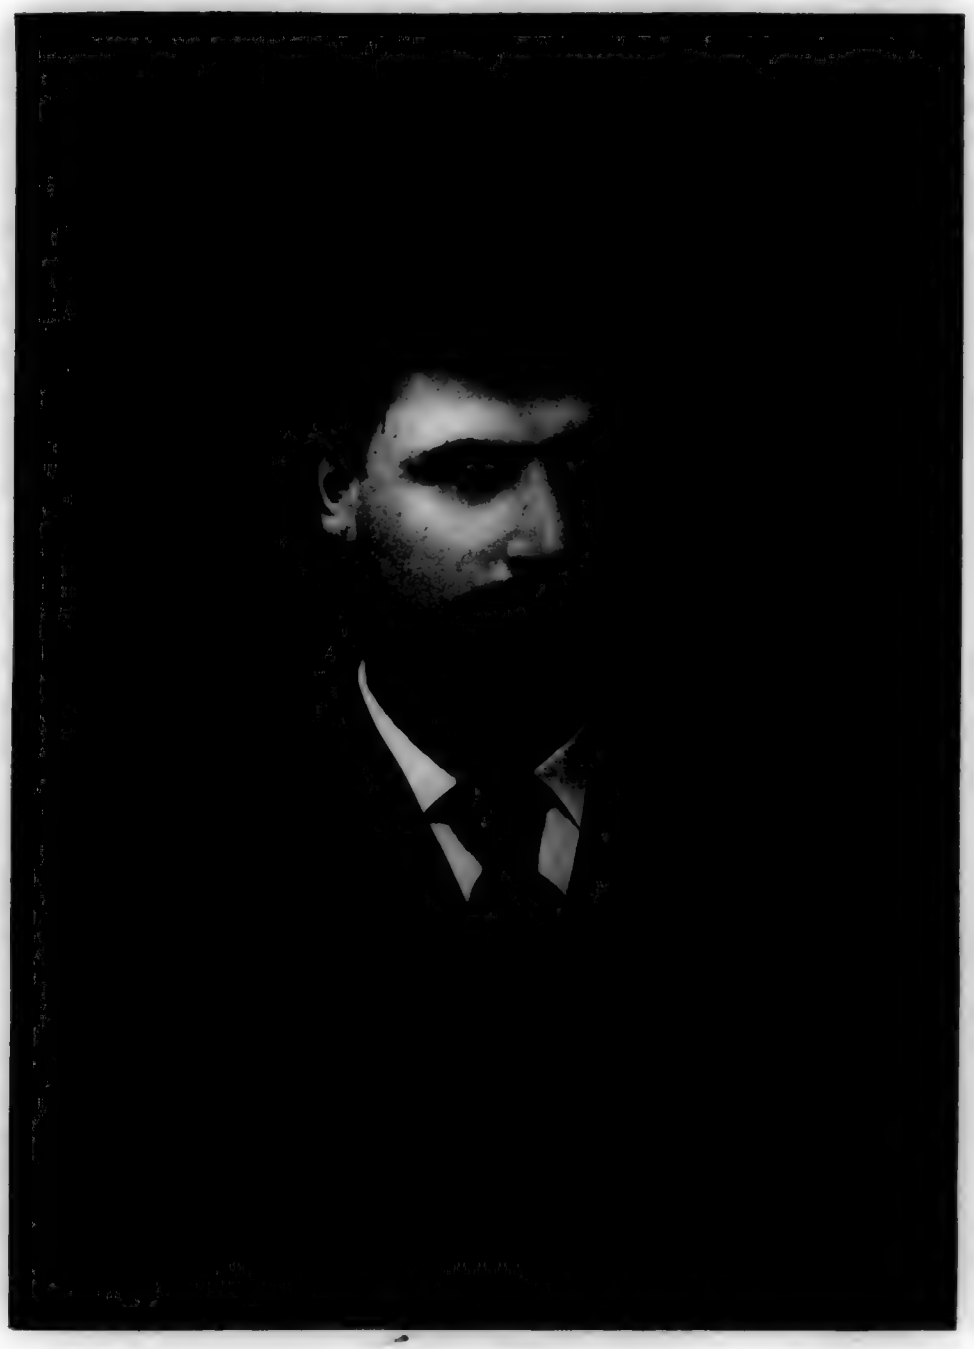
In matters of faith Mr. McWilliams was a Universalist, and his widow is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was always one of the honored members of the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic and Mrs. McWilliams is identified with the Women's Relief Corps. All matters of public interest engaged the attention of Mr. McWilliams, who served with efficiency as deputy sheriff and city marshal of Knoxville, while he also acted as school director. That he discharged the duties of the different offices he filled with a conscientious sense of his public responsibilities is manifested by the long period of his service.



MARK E. TUCKER.

The late Mark E. Tucker, who passed away on the 12th of November, 1907, was one of the highly successful agriculturists and stockmen of Truro township. He was born in Knox county in 1869, and was a son of Samuel and Mary Tucker, who are mentioned at greater length elsewhere in this work.

Having been reared on a farm, Mark E. Tucker obtained his education in the district schools, during which time he was laying the foundation for a successful agricultural career by assisting his father with the work of the fields and care of the stock. After leaving school he devoted his entire attention to farming, first at home under the capable supervision of his father, and later for himself. He was an indefatigable worker with practical and intelligent ideas, and so capably directed his endeavors that he met with a most gratifying degree of success. At the time of his death he owned four hundred acres of land, under high cultivation and well improved, that his widow is now operating. His fields were carefully tilled and devoted to such cereals as were best adapted to the soil, the greater portion of which he used in feeding. In connection with his general farming he also raised stock, and for several years prior to his death he extensively engaged in buying and shipping cattle and hogs.

For his wife Mr. Tucker chose Miss Nellie J. Oberholtzer, and to them were born three children: Mary Alina, who died at the age of one month; Edna Ida, who was born November 1, 1899; and Otto John, whose birth occurred on the 30th of December, 1905. The two latter are both in school.

average foresight and sagacity, he was recognized as one of the most successful citizens of the township. He was public-spirited and progressive in his ideas, and took a deep interest in promoting the development of the community, and gave his unqualified indorsement to every movement that he felt was at all likely to advance the welfare of the township. A member of one of the well known pioneer families, he was widely known and highly respected, possessing many substantial qualities that won him the esteem of all with whom he had transactions.

JAMES W. GRUBB.

James W. Grubb, secretary, treasurer and manager of the West Drug Company of Galesburg, was born in Atlanta, Georgia, July 15, 1868, his parents being Samuel W. and Jane A. (Wright) Grubb. The father was a native of Washington, D. C., born August 19, 1832, and the mother's birth occurred in Selma, Alabama, July 20, 1840. Samuel W. Grubb learned the printer's trade and when a young man went to Atlanta, Georgia, where he secured a position on the Atlantic Telegram, becoming superintendent of that paper. In 1872 he removed to Galesburg, purchasing the Republican and consolidating it with the Register. For thirty years he remained at the head of the Register and made it one of the leading papers of the state outside of the large Chicago dailies. He became recognized as one of the foremost journalists of Illinois. When his son, James W. Grubb, took over the stock the father retired and spent his remaining days in the enjoyment of well earned rest. He commanded the respect and honor of all with whom he came in contact and was recognized as an influential factor in the community, his paper being at all times recognized as a force and power for good along the lines of general advancement, reform and improvement. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and while residing in Atlanta he filled the office of alderman. He was also prominent in the Odd Fellows society and served as grand scribe of the grand lodge of the state of Georgia. In the Episcopal church, in which he long held membership, he filled the office of vestryman and at all times was a willing cooperant in its well defined lines of work for the moral progress and uplift of the community. He died on the 6th of September, 1909, and is still survived by his widow who is now a resident of Atlanta, Georgia. They were married November 28, 1867—Thanksgiving Day—at Atlanta, Georgia, and became the parents of three sons, but Lucien and William A. both died in infancy.

James W. Grubb, the eldest of the family, pursued his education in the Galesburg schools, having been brought to this city by his parents when a lad of four years. After completing his public-school course he attended Knox Academy and then worked in his father's newspaper office, of which he became foreman. Gradually as his experience increased and his business ability developed, he more and more largely assumed the management and control of the paper and following his father's retirement became secretary, treasurer and business manager. He was thus active in shaping the policy and molding the destiny of the paper until the 17th of April, 1909, when he disposed of his stock in the Republican-Register. He afterward engaged in dealing in real estate to a limited extent and on the 5th of June, 1911, again entered into active relations with the business interests of Galesburg as the secretary, treasurer and manager of the West Drug Company. They conduct a retail drug business and enjoy an extensive trade, the business policy of the house being such as to commend it to the confidence and support of the general public.

On the 14th of July, 1892, Mr. Grubb was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Parry, a daughter of Samuel J. and Martha (Scofield) Parry, of this city. Her father was born in Athens, Pennsylvania, January 1, 1825, and the mother's birth occurred in the state of New York, July 4, 1831. Samuel Parry was a contractor and on coming to the middle west settled in Canton, Illinois. He afterward lived in Viola, Mercer county, this state, before coming to Galesburg, where he continued in business as a contractor, becoming senior partner of the firm of Parry & Stevens. He was thus long associated with industrial interests in this city but is now living retired, his former enterprise and perseverance having brought to him the substantial competence that now enables him to enjoy rest from further labor. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he has served as school director but has never sought nor held political office. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Central Congregational church, and during the years of his residence in Galesburg his well spent life has ever commanded the confidence and good-will of those who know him. Unto him and his wife were born four children but the first two, Jeanette and Mary, are deceased. The others are Dr. H. E. Parry and Mrs. Grubb, who was born in Galesburg, July 7, 1873, and by her marriage has become the mother of two children: Samuel Parry, born in Galesburg, September 18, 1893; and Jeanette Parry, born in this city, July 11, 1901.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Grubb has voted with the republican party and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day. He is a member of Central Congregational church, is serving as one of its trustees and is interested in its various lines of work. He also belongs to the Odd Fellows lodge and to the Country Club, and those who know him—and his friends are many—find him a social, genial gentleman, always courteous and approachable. He has long since learned not to select the second best but to choose those things which count for greatest worth in business, in municipal affairs and in character development.

BENJAMIN F. ARNOLD.

During more than a half century Benjamin F. Arnold has figured conspicuously in the public life of Galesburg and Knox county, as a lawyer, a real-estate dealer and an agriculturist, and as a citizen whose interest in public affairs has prompted active and helpful cooperation in many measures for the general good. If a pen picture could accurately delineate his life such might be given in these words: A progressive spirit ruled by more than ordinary intelligence and good judgment; a deep earnestness impelled and fostered by indomitable perseverance; and a native justice expressing itself in correct principle and practice. He was born in Otsego county, New York, July 26, 1833. His father, Horace Arnold, was a native of Greene county, New York, and a son of the Rev. Horace Arnold, Sr., who was a soldier of the Revolutionary war. He became a minister of the Baptist church and, removing with his wife to Cairo, Dutchess county, New York, they there spent their remaining days, passing away at an advanced age. Their family numbered four or five sons, including Horace Arnold, who was reared in the Empire state and served his country as a soldier of the war of 1812. In early life he learned and followed the mason's trade. From Greene county he removed to Otsego county, New York, about 1817, and later became a resident of Delaware county, that state, where he resided for some time and there died in 1850, at the age of fifty-two years. In early manhood he had wedded Harriet Hine, who was born in Greene county, New York, and after his death came to Galesburg, to live with her son Benjamin F., with whom she remained for thirty years, passing away at the age of ninety-three years. She was of the Methodist faith, while her husband held to the Universalist faith. In their family were fifteen children, fourteen of whom reached years of maturity: Mortimer; Noble; Mrs. Hannah Wilbur; Martha, who became the wife of Ichabod Wilbur; Seymour; Elijah; Edward; George; Benjamin F.; Elida; Harriet, who married Hiram C. Smith; William; Julia, who also married; and Mary. The other member of the family died in early life.

Benjamin F. Arnold spent the greater part of his youthful days upon a farm in Delaware county, New York, pursuing his education in one of the old-time log schoolhouses, where the curriculum was limited, yet thorough instruction was given in the fundamental studies. Later he became a clerk in a hotel, following that pursuit in the winter months, while the summer seasons were devoted to agricultural pursuits. At length he came west to Galesburg in 1856 and has since made his home here, covering a period of fifty-five years. The first salary which he ever earned here was fifty cents per day. In the winter he took up the profession of teaching but later turned his attention to the real-estate business and while thus engaged began studying law in Galesburg under the direction of Judge Smith and E. P. Williams. In May, 1862, he was admitted to the bar and for about fifteen years continued in the practice of law, being associated for half of the time with Judge Douglass and during the remainder with Judge Kitchell. His business often took him to Springfield, where he made the office of Abraham Lincoln his headquarters. This was in 1857 and 1858. In 1860 he attended the democratic national convention at Baltimore. It was in that convention that he heard Ben Butler's famous speech. Mr. Arnold had been reared in the democratic faith but after spending some time in Missouri and Kansas and being a witness of the conditions that there existed he joined the ranks of the new republican party and has never faltered in his allegiance thereto since that time. Moreover, he has ever kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day, supporting his position by intelligent and comprehensive argument. For over a half century he has also been engaged in the real-estate business and his operations in that field have been unusually profitable, contributing at the same time to the welfare and progress of the community. He has laid out twelve additions to the city of Galesburg and has erected over two hundred houses, selling them on monthly payments. He has also carried on farming on an extensive scale, cultivating not less than a section of land for over forty years. In the summer of 1857 he purchased a quarter section of land and throughout that summer engaged in breaking prairie. This was the beginning of his connection with farming interests, with which he has since been identified, and the rich soil of the Prairie state has amply rewarded his efforts in this direction.

On the 26th of May, 1864, Mr. Arnold was married to Miss Ella Ferris, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Hudson) Ferris. Mrs. Arnold was born in Galesburg, while her parents were natives of New York, the birth of her father having occurred north of Utica, where her grandfather had settled at an early day. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ferris were early settlers of Galesburg, the former spending his first year in Knox county in a dugout. He was, indeed, one of the earliest settlers here and his labors constituted an element in the growth and progress of the community. His father, Sylvanus H. Ferris, was one of the first residents of Galesburg, sent out here to locate Knox College. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ferris there were born five children who reached adult age: Alfred, who was supposed to have been murdered by the Mormons when on his way to California; Harriet; Ella, who became Mrs. Arnold; Timothy; and Lilly C., the wife of Congressman Prince, of Galesburg. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold there were born nine children, Ella May, the eldest, became the wife of Edwin M. Williams but both are now deceased. They had two children, Dorothy and Edwin. Laura, the second daughter, is the wife of George A. Felt, of Galesburg, and they have two children, Eleanor and Rebecca. Henry, who is engaged in the insurance business in Galesburg, married Anna Ward, of Springfield, and has two children, Esther Pauline and Henry Ferris. Wilfred, a lawyer of Galesburg, wedded Nina Lahann, of Monmouth, Illinois, and has one daughter, Katherine. Frances is the wife of Frederick C. Wood, of Galesburg. Louis E., a dentist of Salt Lake City, Utah, wedded Marie Raymond, and they have one son, Raymond. Ray M. is a lawyer and also owns large tracts of land in this vicinity. Elizabeth H. is the wife of Dr. Charles H. Lowman, of Los Angeles, California, and Harriet is at home. The mother is a member of the Congregational church and Mr. Arnold is prominent in Masonry, holding membership in Vesper Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Galesburg Chapter, R. A. M., and Galesburg Commandery, K. T. Mr. Arnold has lived in the same house for forty-seven years, his home being at No. 759 East Main street. From time to time, however, he has added improvements to his place, ever keeping it one of the attractive and modern residences of the city. In public affairs he has ever been deeply and helpfully interested and his name has become inseparably interwoven with the history of this city. For fifteen successive years he served as a member of the city council, ever exercising his official prerogatives in support of measures for the general good. For one term he served as mayor of Galesburg and he has assisted in the execution of many public commissions. He was on the building committee for the erection of the Central Congregational church, also for the public library, the Brown Hotel, the Union Hotel, the Commercial block and the gymnasium of Knox College. For many years he has been one of the trustees of Knox College and at all times has been a friend and champion of education. Such in brief is the life history of Benjamin F. Arnold, who though he has now passed the age of seventy-eight years is still in a considerable measure an active factor in the business life and interests of his adopted county. His intellect early grasped the eternal truth that industry wins and industry became the beacon light of his life. He realized, too, the fact that opportunities slip away from the sluggard and tauntingly play before the dreamer but that they surrender to the individual with high purpose, undaunted courage and indefatigable determination. He has, therefore, employed those qualities in every relation of life and has today "the blessed accompaniments of age—honor, riches, troops of friends."

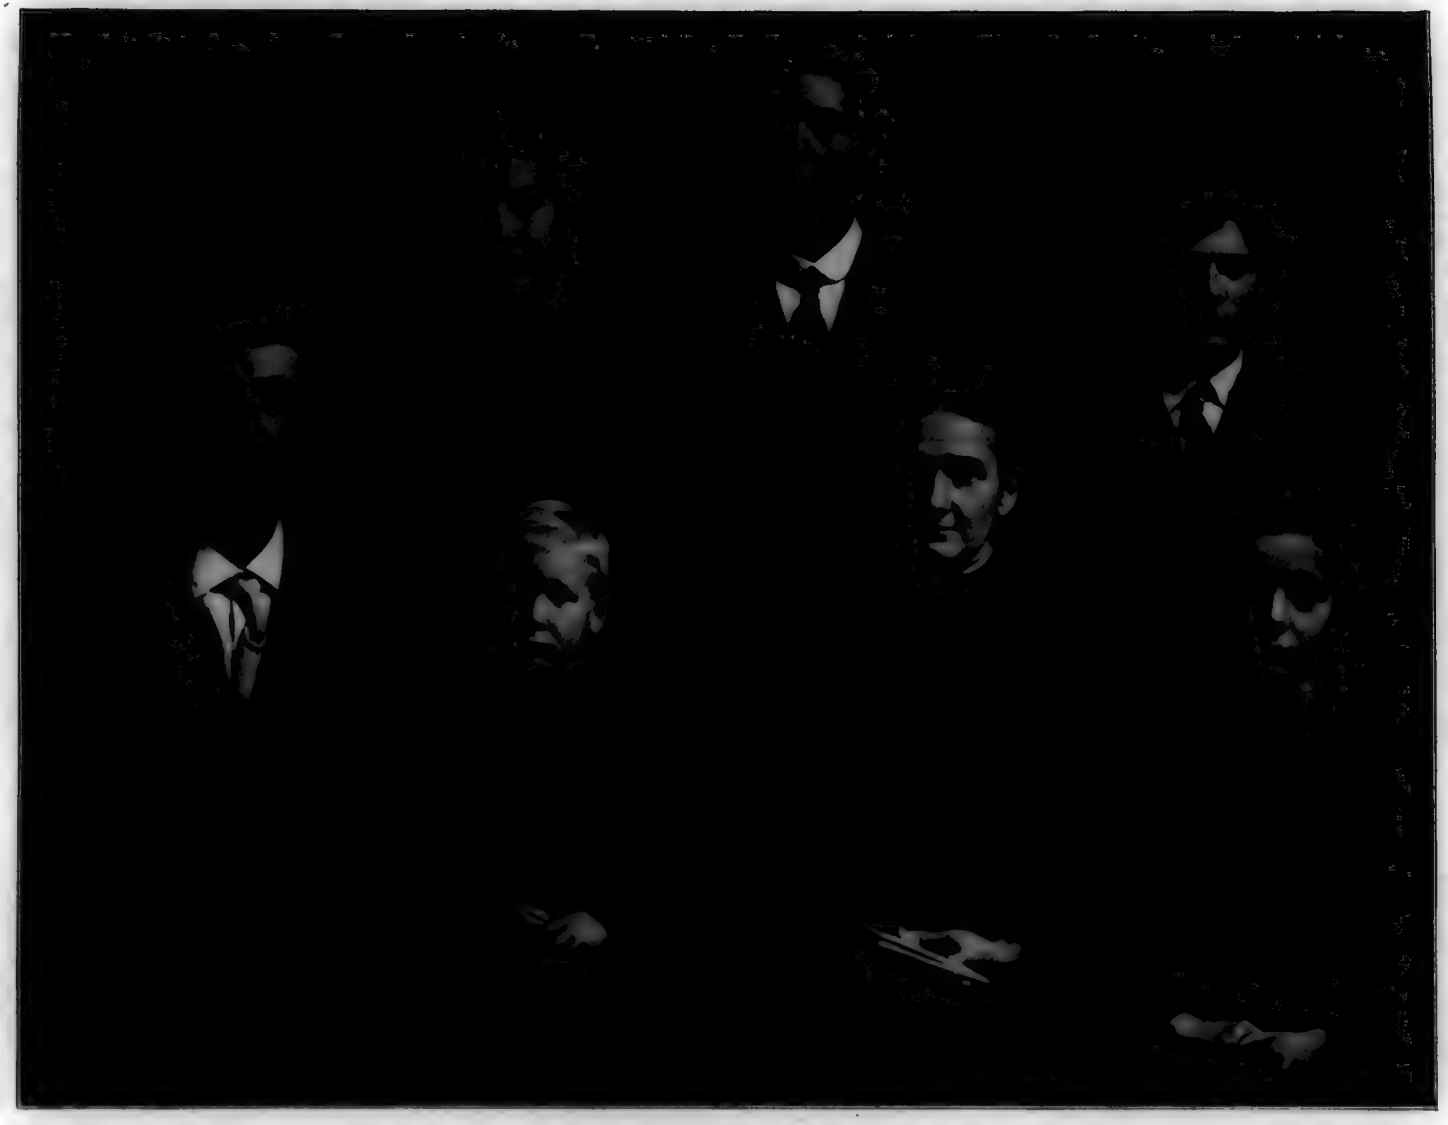
ROBERT GORDON SINCLAIR.

Realizing at the outset of his business career that success has its root in unfaltering diligence and determination, Robert Gordon Sinclair has employed those qualities in the attainment of the present enviable position which he occupies in business circles. He is now engaged in the manufacture of ice cream, ices and soft drinks, employing about eighteen people. He was born in Cambria county, Pennsylvania, October 9, 1866, and is a son of Alexander and Margaret (Griffith) Sinclair. The father's birth occurred in that county, August 24, 1839, but the mother was a native of Wales, her birth occurring in that little rock-ribbed country on the 10th of March, 1834. She was only four years of age when she was brought to the United States by her parents, who established their home near Ebensburg in Cambria county, Pennsylvania. Alexander Sinclair pursued his education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and in early manhood engaged for a time in teaching school, but eventually took up the occupation of farming and, on removing westward, in 1870, established his home near South Haven, in Van Buren county, Michigan. There he worked in a sawmill until the fall of 1876, when he removed to Livingston county, Illinois, where he followed farming until 1910. His well directed labors during all these years had brought him a substantial measure of success and thus with a handsome competence to meet his needs through his remaining days he retired to private life. In his political views he is a republican, always loyal to the party, yet never seeking nor desiring office. He has served as school director and the cause of education finds in him a warm friend. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and their lives have ever been in consistent harmony with their professions. They are the parents of five children, namely: Barbara E., at home; Robert Gordon, of this review; Evan Barker, of Galesburg; and Mary F. and Irwin A., both at home.



In the public schools of Michigan and of Livingston county, Illinois, Robert G. Sinclair pursued his education and in his youth worked upon his father's farm, early becoming familiar with the duties and labors incident to the development and cultivation of the fields. He was twenty-two years of age when he abandoned the plow in order to become connected with commercial interests, which he believed would prove more congenial and hoped would prove more profitable. For three years he was employed in a grocery store in Pontiac, Illinois, and then embarked in business on his own account, forming a partnership with S. W. Strong for the conduct of a grocery store in Pontiac. After two years he purchased his partner's interest and carried on the business alone until October, 1899, when he sold out and went upon the road as a traveling salesman. In the spring of 1901 he came to Galesburg and established an ice-cream business which he carried on independently for two years. He then sold a half interest to his brother, E. B. Sinclair, and in 1909 they removed from their old location at No. 471 East South street to the adjoining building, thus obtaining more commodious quarters. On selling his interest in the business to his brother, R. G. Sinclair removed to Pontiac where he engaged in the real-estate business for two years. He was also circuit clerk of Livingston county for four years and then returned to Galesburg where he again became interested in business, now employing from fifteen to eighteen people in the manufacture of ice cream, ices and soft drinks. His enterprise has assumed extensive proportions, its sales reaching a large annual figure, owing to the excellence of their output and their reliability and enterprising business methods.

On the 2d of October, 1895, Mr. Sinclair was united in marriage to Miss Maude Thompson, a daughter of Hugh and Frances (Ketcham) Thompson, of Pontiac. Their children are five in number, namely: Robert Elwood, born in Pontiac, Illinois, August 17, 1897; Clyde Evan, born in Pontiac, January 25, 1899; Maude Louise, whose birth occurred in that city on the 23d of February, 1903; William Gordon, born on the 25th of December, 1905, in Pontiac; and Margaret Frances, born there March 5, 1908. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair have a wide acquaintance in Galesburg and enjoy the high regard of their many friends. His political support is given to the republican party and he has always kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church and he is now acting as a trustee of the church to which he belongs. He is likewise a member of the Masonic fraternity, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Woodmen camp and the Galesburg Club. Those who know him, and he has a wide acquaintance, find him a social, genial gentleman, and his business associates speak in high terms of his enterprise, progressiveness and thorough reliability.

H. R. GRIFFITH.

H. R. Griffith, whose well cultivated farm forms one of the attractive features of Cedar township, was born on his father's homestead south of Galesburg, Knox county, Illinois, on the 8th of January, 1861. His father, Morris Griffith, was a native of Pennsylvania, his birth having there occurred on the 17th of February, 1836. When a lad of four years he removed with his parents to Ohio, where they resided until 1852, when they came to Illinois, settling in the vicinity of Galesburg. There Mr. Griffith continued to live until the year prior to his death, when he went to reside with a son living north of Galesburg, where he passed away on December 9, 1906, being laid to rest in the cemetery at Knoxville. His parents, Abel and Hannah (Gore) Griffith, also spent their latter days in Knox county. For his wife and helpmate Morris Griffith chose Miss Elizabeth Harmony, their marriage being celebrated on the 27th of December, 1859. Mrs. Griffith, who was born near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, died in Knox county on February 12, 1901, at the age of sixty-seven years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Griffith there were born seven children, of whom our subject was the eldest. Etta, the second in order of birth who was born on the 22d of May, 1862, was married on March 28, 1895, to G. C. Hutson, and is now living in the vicinity of Arkansas City, Kansas. William E., whose birth occurred on the 18th of January, 1864, married Mattie Brooks on January 27, 1892, and resides near Galesburg. Arthur, who was born on January 22, 1866, chose for his wife Ella Hutson, to whom he was married on March 17, 1898, now living near Galesburg. Frank M., born on the 24th of August, 1868, was married on the 20th of October, 1898, to Lennie Hutson and is living near Knoxville. Mary E., the next in order of birth, was born on the 21st of April, 1871, and died on the 21st of September, 1872, being laid to rest in the cemetery at Knoxville. Jessie A. was born on the 21st of June, 1877, and on December 27, 1900, married Marvin McGahey. The parents were earnest members of the Presbyterian church, while his political support Mr. Griffith accorded to the republican party. He took an active interest in all public affairs and held some of the township offices, the duties of which he discharged with efficiency.

Born and reared on a farm, Mr. Griffith has always been more or less actively identified with agricultural pursuits. His preliminary education was obtained in the public schools, after the completion of which he entered Knox College at Galesburg. He remained at home with his parents until he was thirty-two years of age, when he came to his present place on section 20, Cedar township. He owns eighty-seven and a half acres of land here upon which he has made most extensive improvements, having erected some fine buildings, planted an orchard and grove, in addition to effecting various minor changes. He has applied himself diligently and intelligently to the cultivation of this property, his efforts in this direction having been rewarded in a most substantial and gratifying manner. In addition to his fine home farm he owns one hundred and sixty acres of land in Dundy county, Nebraska, while his wife has forty acres in Orange township, this county.

On the 24th of August, 1893, Mr. Griffith was married to Miss Flora A. Parmenter, whose birth occurred in Orange township, Knox county, on the 1st of November, 1868. Her paternal grandparents were among the pioneer settlers of the county and here her father, John Parmenter, whose birth occurred January 18, 1842, was united in marriage on December 31, 1867, to Miss Anna Haynes, who was born December 10, 1842. Both parents passed away in the same year, the father on December 29, 1880, and the mother on August 29 of that year. Mrs. Griffith was the eldest of the four children born of this union. In order of birth the other three are as follows: Asa H., a resident of Galesburg, whose birth occurred on the 16th of June, 1870; Charles E., who was born on May 21, 1875, now living in Watertown, Illinois; and Lenna, whose birth occurred on the 18th of November, 1877, the wife of Henry Godfrey, of Kansas. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Griffith five children have been born: Jessie May, who was born on the 6th of November, 1894; Claude Russell, whose birth occurred on October 25, 1895; Harold O., born on the 19th of December. 1897; Mary L., born February 17, 1903; and John Herbert, who was born on the 18th of December, 1908.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffith after coming to their present location united with the Congregational church of Abingdon and are devoted members thereof. Mr. Griffith has now held for over six years the office of deacon, while his wife has for five years been assistant superintendent of the Sunday school. His political prerogatives Mr. Griffith exercises in support of the men and measures of the republican party and he has served in the capacity of school director and tax collector.

SIMEON B. DAVIS.

Death gives the perspective which enables one to judge of the real worth of an individual, placing him in proper relation with his contemporaries and those things which went to make up his life's contacts and experiences. Judged from the standpoint of success and of personal character, Simeon B. Davis measured up to the highest standard of manhood and of citizenship and was honored and respected by all who knew him. His life record covered the intervening period between the 7th of December, 1836, on which day his birth occurred in Ashland county, Ohio, and the first of March, 1909, when he passed away in Galesburg. His parents were Amos and Nancy (Crawford) Davis, both of whom were natives of Ohio, and the former was a daughter of Colonel Samuel Crawford, an officer of the war of 1812.

At the usual age Simeon B. Davis became a pupil in the public schools near his father's home and throughout his life he continued his reading and study, thus adding greatly to his knowledge and promoting his efficiency as a factor in the world's work. When eighteen years of age he became a resident of McDonough county, Illinois, where for eight years he followed the profession of teaching, being regarded as one of the most capable and successful educators in that part of the state. He then turned his attention to farming and stock-raising and in addition to the cultivation of his fields engaged in shipping stock to the Chicago market for a number of years. His farm constituted a fine tract of land in Hire township, McDonough county, and he brought his fields under a high state of cultivation and added many substantial improvements to the place in the way of good buildings, well kept fences and the latest improved machinery. At length he retired from the farm and removed to Macomb, the county seat of McDonough county, where he established a marble and granite business, developing one of the leading monument enterprises in this part of the state. There he carried on business until 1887, when he removed to Galesburg and opened a similar establishment, which he conducted with profit up to the time of his death. In all of his business life he was strictly honorable and upright, never taking advantage of the necessities of his fellowmen in any business transaction, and by reason of the excellent work which he did he won a very gratifying patronage.

In September, 1860, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Artimesa Stambaugh, a daughter of the Rev. Adam and Margaret (Shields) Stambaugh. Her father was a native of Pennsylvania and her mother was born in Indiana but was reared in Canton, Illinois. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Davis were born nine children, Emma, Eva, Margaret, Elsie A., Stewart A., Alice J., Louie May, James E. and Stella, but the last named is now deceased. Mr. Davis was ever devoted to the welfare and happiness of his family and found his greatest joy in ministering to their pleasure. Following his demise Mrs. Davis carried on the business until July 1, 1910, when she was obliged to give it up in order to look after the realty interests of the estate. The business, however, is still continued by her son under the style of the S. B. Davis Granite Company.

In his political views Mr. Davis was a stalwart republican, recognized as one of the leaders of the party in the central section of Illinois. He was a pleasing public speaker and took prominent part in many of the presidential campaigns, speaking throughout the state and doing good service for the organization. In 1880 public honors were conferred upon him in his election to the office of state representative from the district comprising Warren and McDonough counties. During the regular session of 1881 and the special session of 1882 he was a member of several important committees and rendered valuable and efficient service in those connections to the commonwealth. He was always much interested in local progress and improvement and while residing in Galesburg served for several terms as a member of the city council, in which connection he exercised his official prerogatives in support of various progressive and beneficial measures. Fraternally he was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and was ever a most loyal and helpful member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Following his demise the house of representatives of the Illinois legislature passed the following resolutions:

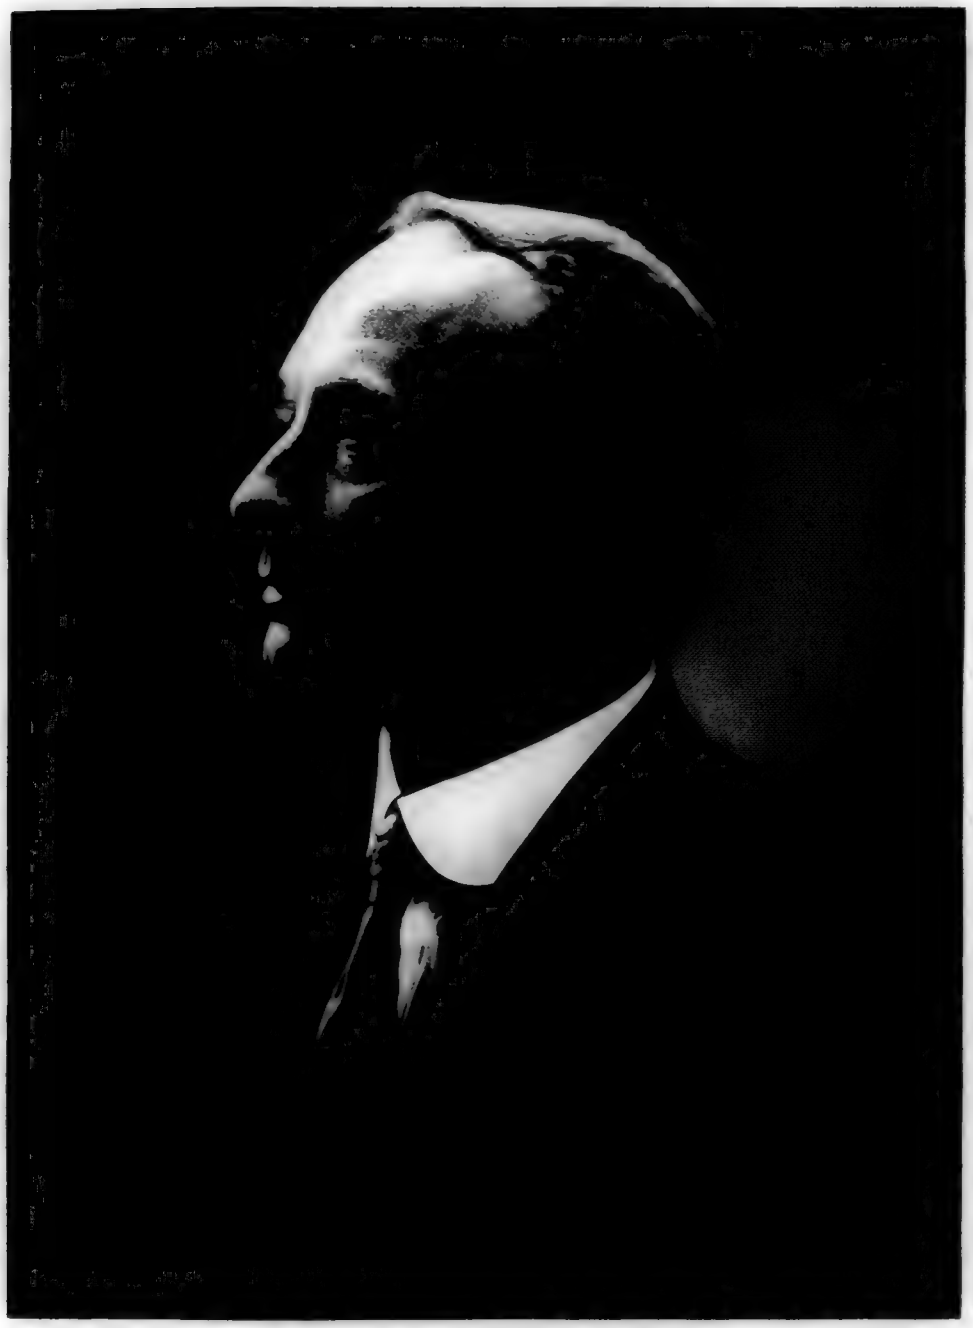
"Whereas, by reason of the promulgation of an unappealable infinite decree, the Hon. Simeon B. Davis rests to-day in his last sleep at Galesburg, Illinois, and

"Whereas, the said Simeon B. Davis was an honored and respected member of this house, having served his people with distinction in the thirty-second and thirty-third general assemblies, and

"Whereas, in the departing of Mr. Davis to obey such divine decree, his city and state have sacrificed an upright and patriotic citizen, his family a kind and affectionate father and husband and his associates a friend.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the house of representatives of the state of Illinois, in regular session assembled that we deeply deplore the death of Mr. Davis and as a mark of respect to his memory, this house do now adjourn, and be it further

"Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journal of this house and an engrossed copy be forwarded to the family of the deceased."



Mr. Davis was one of the most widely and favorably known of the residents of Galesburg and his influence was always found on the side of those activities which uplift mankind and promote general progress. He was a most earnest and helpful member of the church and the Methodist denomination in Galesburg owed much to his cooperation. In the funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Dr. Blodgett, of Cincinnati, who had formerly been his pastor, the minister said: "The deathlessness of the friendship existing between the man whose body lies before us and myself is evidence to me of the immortality of man." Later he said: "Mr. Davis was a man of virile blood. He came of good ancestry of a class of men that make nations. He was drilled in the school of poverty and by an inherent force made himself felt in the state and in the city. He was not a trimmer, but had a broad charity in his judgments of others, although very positive in his own convictions of the right. As a churchman he believed thoroughly in the book, basing his beliefs more on a personal experience of God than on any critical analysis. He believed that the church is a means to an end and, therefore, utilized all of its forces not only as an unlift for society but for his own personal benefit. As a citizen he believed in the highest integrity of the state. His home life was like a midsummer dream, to him his wife was the pearly gate always through which he entered into all of his joys. I tested his friendship at a time which was critical in the history of this church and he was one of the few men who through his belief in the right made it possible for the church to be rebuilt. It was well worth to know such a man and enter with him into the inner circle of his friendship." There was in all the life record of Simeon B. Davis only such qualities as won him honor and respect. While he gained success, it was not this which secured for him the regard of his fellowmen, but the sterling traits of character which he ever displayed, the honor, integrity, kindly spirit and the words of helpfulness and cheer which he spoke, and thus it is that those things which men learn to value more than gold and gems are the treasures of friendship and memory.

ADDISON JOSIAH BOUTELLE.

Addison Josiah Boutelle, states attorney for Galesburg since 1900, his twelve years' connection with the office standing as incontrovertible evidence of his ability in the field of his chosen profession, was born November 9, 1869, on a farm near Rutland, La Salle county, Illinois. His father, Josiah Boutelle, died in 1872 but the mother, Mrs. Ellen (Hastie) Boutelle, is still living. She is a daughter of James H. Hastie, one of the early settlers of Sparta township, Knox county. In her girlhood she heard the Lincoln and Douglas debate held in Galesburg and has written an interesting account of that historic event and the incidents that occurred on that memorable day.

During the boyhood of Addison Josiah Boutelle the family removed to Knox county and he pursued his education in the Galesburg schools, being graduated from the high school with the class of 1887. He afterward entered Knox College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in the class of 1891. He was a member of the Gnothautii Literary Society in Knox and was honored with its presidency. In debate he won the Colton prize for oratory. Nature endowed him with gifts that constituted an excellent foundation upon which to build his success at the bar for which he early made preparation by reading law in the office of the late J. J. Tunnicliff, former states attorney of Knox county. He was admitted to practice in 1893 and has since been continuously engaged in the work of his profession in this city. His constantly developing ability brought to him a growing clientage, his work increasing in volume and in importance as the years passed by. In 1897 he was elected city attorney of Galesburg and was reelected in 1899, serving continuously for four years. In 1900 he was chosen states attorney, which office he has held to the present time, carefully safeguarding the interests of the district in the faithful and prompt discharge of his duties in that position.

Mr. Boutelle has always given his support to the republican party since age conferred upon him the right of franchise, and has done considerable campaign work under the direction of the state central committee in various cities of the state. Fraternally he is a Knight Templar and in his life exemplifies many of the high principles of Masonry. He is also connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and he belongs to the Galesburg Business Men's Club.

On the 17th of October, 1899, in Galesburg, Mr. Boutelle was married to Miss Elizabeth Lee Switzer, a daughter of Charles E. and Mary B. Switzer. They have one child, Mary Elizabeth. Mr. and Mrs. Boutelle are well known socially in this city where they have long resided and where he has so directed his efforts that he is today classed with the leading lawyers, representative men and progressive and respected citizens.

HARLEY F. DRURY.

In the establishment and conduct of the florist's business Harley F. Drury has displayed an aptitude for successful management, combined with unfaltering determination and industry, that have brought him to a prominent position among the prosperous business men of Galesburg. This city has drawn a considerable quota of its citizens from New England and Mr. Drury is a representative of this class, having been born in Essex, Vermont, June 13, 1855. His parents were Jacob and Caroline (Bascom) Drury, also natives of the Green Mountain state. The former was a son of Isaac and Sallie (Herrick) Drury. They became the parents of seven children, Betsey, Annie, Daniel, Hannah, Jacob, Harriet and Mary Ann. The maternal grandfather of Harley F. Drury was a Vermont farmer and both he and his wife died at an old age after rearing a large family.

Jacob Drury, father of our subject, spent his youthful days in Vermont and was reared to the occupation of farming, which he chose as his life work, but after tilling the soil for a number of years he took up the business of manufacturing brick. He not only figured actively and prominently in business circles but also in connection with public affairs, holding a number of local offices and also representing his district in the state legislature. Both he and his wife were members of the Methodist church and were earnest, consistent Christian people. He died in Essex, Vermont, in 1889, at the age of eighty-one years, having for three years survived his wife, whose death occurred in 1886, when she was sixty-eight years of age. They were the parents of seven children: Hannah M., widow of the late Byron A. Stevens, of Galesburg; George B., now a resident of Essex, Vermont; Jannette, widow of the late C. C. Field, of Essex; Charles K., also living in Essex; Edwin I., deceased; Harley F.; and Homer D., likewise living in Essex, Vermont.

In the place of his nativity Harley F. Drury spent his youthful days and attended the public schools, afterward pursuing his studies in the Vermont Methodist Seminary at Montpelier, from which he was graduated in 1875. Later he remained at home for two years, during which period he assisted his father in the office of the brickyard. His residence in Galesburg dates from 1878, at which time he entered the employ of Lake W. Sanborn as a clerk in his insurance office, there remaining for about two years. He next became connected with the grocery trade, spending two and one-half years in the employ of C. E. Landstrum. On the expiration of that period he established a grocery store on his own account, conducting it successfully for eighteen years, during which period he ever maintained an honorable position in commercial circles. He then sold out and turned his attention to the cultivation of flowers, establishing greenhouses which are situated on Broad, Sanborn and Cherry streets and which contain forty-five thousand square feet. Here he raises almost every variety of flowers and the business has grown rapidly until now his sales reach a large annual figure. He is likewise a director of the Farmers & Mechanics' Bank.

On the 28th of March, 1883, Mr. Drury was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Trask, a native of Ohio, as were her parents, Homer and Belinda (Lane) Trask, who emigrated to Galesburg about forty-five or fifty years ago, both having now passed away. They were survived by three daughters, Nellie, Kitty and May, while a son had died in early childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Drury have but one child, Louise, who is now attending the high school. The parents are members of the Christian Science church, and in politics Mr. Drury is a republican who has been somewhat active in local politics, serving for one term as alderman from the fifth ward. His position upon any vital question is never an equivocal one and he seeks always to aid the measures and movements for the general good. He is well known socially, holding membership in the Elks Club and in the Soangetaha Country Club and the Galesburg Club, being now president of the latter. For a third of a century he has been a resident of this city and the sterling traits of character which he has manifested throughout the entire period have gained for him the unqualified regard and good-will of his fellow men.

SETH CRUMP.

Seth Crump was a lifelong resident of Knox county and had a wide acquaintance, while his many sterling traits of character gained for him a position in public regard that made his death the occasion of deep and widespread regret. He was born near Hermon, in this county, November 24, 1842, a son of Madison and Rebecca (Massey) Crump, who were early settlers of this county. The father was both a farmer and carpenter. He followed these occupations for some time and also conducted a hotel in Knoxville during the early days, his hostelry being known as the Virginia Hotel. Both he and his wife remained worthy and respected residents of Knoxville until called to their final rest.

Seth Crump spent his youthful days under the parental roof and in his boyhood acquired his education in the public schools, which he attended through the winter seasons, while the summer months were devoted to farm labor. After putting aside his text-books he gave all of his attention to farm work until the outbreak of the Civil war, when his patriotic spirit was aroused and he offered his services to the government, enlisting from Knox county as a member of Company E, Eighty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served throughout the Civil war, participating in many important engagements. After the close of hostilities, in all of which he bore himself with signal credit and honor, he returned to Knoxville and here remained until his death, which occurred on the 10th of December, 1908, when he had reached the age of sixty-six years.

Mr. Crump had been married on the 15th of August, 1870, to Miss Henrietta Woolsey, of Knoxville, who was born here on the 23d of December, 1853, a daughter of William and Margaret Woolsey, who were natives of Pennsylvania and at an early period in the development of this part of the state came to Knox county, where they resided until called to their final home. In their family were eleven children, namely: Frederick, now deceased; James, who served as a soldier of Company E, Eighty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and is now a resident of Iowa; Henry, who also served in the Civil war and is now living in Atlantic, Iowa; John, who valiantly espoused the cause of the Union on southern battlefields and also makes his home in Atlantic; Byram, now deceased; Wright, who has also passed away; Henrietta, now Mrs. Crump; Kate, the wife of William Meecham, of Knoxville; Clayton, a resident of Atlantic, Iowa; William, of Atlantic, Iowa, and Fayette, deceased. The father of Mrs. Crump was also a soldier in the Union army and died from wounds while in the service—and thus the family made a splendid record for loyalty and bravery.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Crump were born three children, the elder being Mina L., wife of Claude Vangilder, now deceased; Catherine, the wife of William Venell, of St. Joseph, Missouri; and Valda, a son, living at home with his mother. Mr. Crump always maintained pleasant relations with his old army comrades through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. He was also interested in local affairs and at one time served as city marshal of Knoxville. His aid and cooperation could ever be counted upon to further progressive public movements and he was accounted a valued citizen, upright and honorable, his sterling worth winning for him the confidence and good-will of all who knew him. He had a wide acquaintance in Knox county, where his entire life was passed, and many of the comrades of his youth remained the friends of his manhood, indicating that his life record was ever a creditable one.

JAMES C. SIMPSON.

There have been many theories advanced concerning success, but careful analysis of the lives of many men, who have risen from comparative obscurity in business to a position of prominence, indicates the fact that all honorable success has had its root in straightforward dealing, indefatigable industry and persistent purpose. Such has been the record of the senior partner and manager of the firm of James C. Simpson & Company, operating country lumberyards, and president of the Simpson, McClure Lumber Company of Galesburg.

James C. Simpson was born in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, April 13, 1864, and his parents, William E. and Sarah Ann (Means) Simpson, were also natives of that state. The former was a son of John H. and Eliza (Lewis) Simpson. John H. Simpson, born in Virginia, was a farmer by occupation. His family included William, Jane, Ann, David, Thomas, Irwin, Caroline, Theodosia and Harry. Of these David and Thomas were killed while serving as soldiers in the Union army. The maternal grandfather of James C. Simpson was Edward Means, a native of Pennsylvania, who engaged in both merchandising and farming. He married a Miss Hopkins, who died at a comparatively early age, while Mr. Means lived to the age of seventy-seven years. Their children were Sarah Ann, Jane, Dr. William A. Means, the Rev. Theodore Means, Mary, Charlotte, Thompson, Milton and Thomas. The last two died while serving in the Union army during the Civil war.

William E. Simpson, father of James C. Simpson, was reared in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, pursued his education there and became a public-school teacher and farmer. He served as a soldier in the Civil war for one year, acting as assistant to the surgeon and doing duty on a federal hospital boat on the James river. He passed away at Punxsutawney in 1906, at the age of sixty-five years. His first wife, Sarah Ann Means, had died in 1873, at the age of thirty years. Both were members of the Presbyterian church and were consistent Christian people. For his second wife William E. Simpson married Miss Anna North. There were six children born of the first marriage, of whom three are now living: James C.; Mrs. Etta Farrand, of Chicago; and Wade M., of Galesburg. Frank, Clayton, and Ida died at an early age. The children of the second marriage were also six in number: Blanche, the wife of Lex N. Mitchell, of Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania; Burt, living in Kewanee, Missouri; Blaine, a resident of Oregon; Mrs. Catharine Lindsay, of Portland, Oregon; Vere, living in Punxsutawney; and Raymond, whose home is in Lawrenceville, Illinois.

The youthful days of James C. Simpson were spent on a farm in the vicinity of Punxsutawney. He attended the district school, while later he became a student of the Covode (Pa.) Academy and in J. C. Duncan's Business College of Davenport, Iowa. He came to the middle west in 1884, making his headquarters first at Albany, Illinois. He had previously engaged in teaching through three winter terms in the country schools of his native state, and also followed that profession for three terms in Whiteside county, Illinois. During the first five years of his residence in this state he was also employed during the summer months as a clerk on a Mississippi river steamboat, and later as a traveling salesman for a wholesale lumber house, which he represented for six years. In the winter of 1894 he became a resident of Galesburg, where he has since made his home. Unfaltering industry and careful expenditure enabled him here to embark in business on his own account. He purchased the lumberyard owned by O. Hawkinson & Company and conducted the business under the name of J. C. Simpson & Company. This yard was afterward incorporated under the name of the Simpson, McClure Lumber Company. During the seventeen years of his residence in Galesburg he has made for himself a creditable position in its business circles. Promptness, reliability and persistency of purpose have been the factors employed in the attainment of success and have gained for him an enviable position among Galesburg's leading citizens.

On the 17th of February, 1897, Mr. Simpson was united in marriage to Miss Harriette H. Post, a daughter of General Philip Sidney and Cornelia A. (Post) Post, natives of New York. Mrs. Simpson's father served in the Civil war and was afterward made consul at Vienna. Subsequently he served as congressman, from 1887 until his death in January, 1895. His wife passed away in 1908. They were the parents of three children, Harriette H., Philip S., and William S. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have five children, Sidney, Cornelia, William, Harriet and Mary. The family reside at No. 516 North Prairie street and theirs is one of the hospitable homes of the city. In his political views Mr. Simpson is a republican and, while never seeking nor desiring office, has always kept well informed on the general issues and questions of the day. He holds membership in the Galesburg and Elk Clubs and of the former is a director. He is also one of the trustees of Galesburg Hospital and the present chairman of its board. In all his life, duty and honor have been his watchwords and justice has been one of his strong characteristics. In his business career he is prominent as a man whose constantly expanding powers have taken him from humble surroundings to the field of large enterprise and continually broadening opportunities.

THOMAS KEEFE.

The United States has become peopled by the native sons of every country and among the worthy residents that the green isle of Erin has furnished to Galesburg is numbered Thomas Keefe, now one of the prosperous lumber merchants of this city. He is a self-made man, starting out in life empty-handed and depending upon industry, perseverance and diligence for his success. He still continues active in trade circles although he is now seventy-two years of age. He was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, April 22, 1839, a son of Thomas and Catherine (Farrell) Keefe, who were also natives of the same place. There they were reared and married and in the early '50s they came to the United States, settling in Delaware county, New York, where the father secured employment in a tannery. He worked in that way for six or seven years and then began farming, which he followed in Delaware county until his death. His wife passed away in the same locality. They were members of the Roman Catholic church and Mr. Keefe gave his political allegiance to the democratic party. In their family were the following children: Patrick, John and Maria, all now deceased; Thomas, of this review; Luke and Margaret, who have also passed away; Catherine, the wife of James W. Tucker, of Cooperstown, New York; and Michael, deceased.

Thomas Keefe was a lad in his teens when he accompanied his parents on the long voyage across the Atlantic to the United States. His education, which had been begun in the schools of his native country, was continued in the public schools of New York, and for a time he gave his attention to farm work in the Empire state, but in 1861 he came to the middle west, settling in Henderson township, this county, where he entered the employ of Henry and Will Sisson, working on a farm for three years. He was afterward employed for a year by Captain Grant and spent a similar period on the Potter farm. Twenty years were passed in the employ of G. W. Barnett in the grain business and during the last seven years of that period he was in partnership with Mr. Barnett in the grain trade at St. Augustine, Illinois. At the time the Santa Fe Railroad was being built he came to Galesburg and established a lumber business at his present location. During the years of his connection with the business interests of this city he has made steady progress, has a well equipped lumberyard and enjoys a good patronage.

On the 22d of December, 1864, Mr. Keefe was united in marriage to Miss Winifred O'Hare, a daughter of Simon O'Hare, of Tuam, Galway County, Ireland. The children of this marriage are: John, now living in Sioux City, Iowa; Winifred, who is the wife of John Scanlon, of Chicago, and has four children; Marie, Genevieve, John and George; Frank, living in San Francisco, California; Ursula and Teresa, both at home; Ita, who is the wife of T. H. Kevlin, of Chicago, and has one child, Marion; Anastasia, living in Chicago; and Regina, at home. The wife and mother died July 18, 1907, at the age of sixty-three years, her death having occurred at her home in Galesburg.

In politics Mr. Keefe is independent, voting as his judgment dictates rather than by the promptings of party rule. He is a member of the Corpus Christi Catholic church and also holds membership with the Knights of Columbus. He may truly be called a self-made man and as the architect of his own fortune has builded wisely and well. He has never allowed obstacles or difficulties to discourage him and his persistency of purpose and energy have opened for him the way to success.

ISAAC FRANK COLE.

For the past thirty-one years Isaac Frank Cole has been successfully engaged in general farming and stock-raising on a hundred and twenty acres of land, located two miles south of Williamsfield. His birth occurred two miles east of here in Brimfield township, Peoria county, on the 21st of December, 1851. He is of English extraction in the paternal line, his grandparents having come from Yorkshire, while his father, William F. Cole, was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania on the 18th of July, 1818. Upon their arrival in this country the family located in Pennsylvania in the vicinity of Pittsburg. In his early manhood William F. Cole came west, settling in Brimfield township, Peoria county, in the spring of 1844. There he engaged in farming until 1854, when he removed with his family to Millbrook township, where he acquired one hundred and twenty acres of land that he cultivated until his death on December 23, 1883. For his wife Mr. Cole chose Miss Mary Ann Cutter, who was born in the vicinity of Ashland, Richland county, Ohio, on the 29th of July, 1829. As a child of four years she accompanied her people on their removal to Peoria county in 1833, and there she was reared to womanhood and married on the 16th of April, 1846. She survived her husband for a number of years, her death occurring on March 15, 1894. Thirteen children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cole, as follows: John, a veteran of the Civil war, who is a physician in Williamsfield; one, who died in infancy; William H., who is farming in the vicinity of Joplin, Missouri; Isaac Frank, our subject; Charles, a farmer near Iota, Allen county, Kansas; Sarah, the wife of G. L. Doubet; Lucy, who married George Nelson, of Elmwood; Minnie, who died at the age of thirteen; Lemuel, who is a farmer of Canada; Marge, who died on the 11th of May, 1903, the wife of Samuel M. Parker; Fred G., who lives in Truro township; Job, who resides in Williamsfield; and Newton J., residing a half mile south of Williamsfield, who is a rural mail carrier.

There were no particular events in the early life of Isaac Frank Cole to differentiate it from those of other lads reared in the rural communities at that period. He attended the district schools until he had mastered the common branches of English learning, and during that time he was also laying the foundation of a future agricultural career by assisting his father with the work of the fields and care of the stock. Laying aside his school books, he gave his entire time and attention to agricultural pursuits in Peoria county until he had attained the age of twenty-five years. On the 16th of April, 1877, he came to Knox county, settling on a rented farm for three years, whence, in 1880, he removed onto the place where he has ever since lived. He has one hundred and twenty acres of land here that he has brought under high cultivation during the long period of his ownership. Mr. Cole has prospered in both his general farming and stock-raising, and from year to year has made such improvements in his property as his circumstances would warrant. All of the buildings now standing on the place have been erected since he bought it. His barns are large and commodious, affording ample shelter for his stock and grain, and he also has substantial outbuildings for the protection of farming implements and a very comfortable farm house. He has always given his undivided attention to the plowing, sowing and harvesting of his fields, and to his painstaking application is probably attributable much of his success. His land is very productive and he annually realizes a goodly dividend on his summer's labor.

On the 11th of January, 1877, Mr. Cole was united in marriage to Miss Martha Ann Nelson, whose natal day was the 14th of September, 1854. Mrs. Cole is a daughter of Josiah and Margaret (King) Nelson, the father a native of Pennsylvania, his birth occurring in the vicinity of Altoona in 1816. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have been the parents of eight children: John, who was born November 27, 1877, and died at the age of eleven months; Mary Ann, whose birth occurred on the 5th of March, 1879: Maude, born on November 18, 1880; Lemuel J., whose natal day was the 11th of February, 1884; Marge who was born on May 6, 1886; Sarah, who was born May 13, 1888, and died on the 25th of February, 1889; Martha, who was born September 16, 1889; and F. H., who was born on the 23rd of August, 1891. Maude, who is the third in order of birth, married Harry F. Blank and they have four children: Wilbur; Grace, who died at the age of six weeks: Dwayne; and Edna. Lemuel J., the eldest living son, married Mary A. Lagergren, and they have two daughters, Marie and Ann. Marge, the next in order of birth, became the wife of Alfred H. Lamboley, and they had two children: Jeannette; and Charles who died November, 20, 1911.

The fraternal relations of Mr. Cole are confined to his membership in the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias. In his political views he has always been a stanch republican, but has never had either the time or inclination to enter public life, all his energies finding ample scope in the development of his personal interests, in which he has met with success.

FRANK E. WOOLSEY.

The late Frank E. Woolsey, for many years engaged in the harness and saddlery business in Knoxville, was born here, on the 30th of August, 1851, and was a son of Edwin and Mary (Tingle) Woolsey. The father was a native of the state of New York, where he engaged in farming until 1848 when he came to Knoxville. Soon after his arrival here he engaged in business, continuing to be identified with the commercial activities of the town until his retirement. He had resided here but a short time when he was married to Miss Tingle, a native of Ohio, and they became the parents of six sons and two daughters, as follows: Frank E., our subject, who was the eldest; James E., who is engaged in the wholesale grocery business in Chicago; Charles, who is living near La Junta, Colorado; Hattie, who died at the age of eighteen years; Ida; George, who is also deceased; Arthur, a brick mason of Knoxville; and Leroy, who is deceased. The mother passed away in 1907, at the age of seventy-nine, while the father was eighty-four years of age when he died in 1910. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted and gone to the front from Knoxville, when hostilities first broke out, continuing in the service for three years.

Frank E. Woolsey was educated in the common schools of Knoxville, and when old enough to commence preparations for his life work, learned the harness-maker's trade. He followed this for a time in his native town, when he went to Moline and subsequently took a position on the road. Withdrawing he returned to Knoxville and established a harness and saddlery business that he conducted until his death, which occurred on May 30, 1895. The business was continued for about a year thereafter under the supervision of his widow, who then disposed of it.

Rock Island, Illinois, was the scene of the marriage of Mr. Woolsey, on the 19th of March, 1882, to Miss Hannah Arabella Simpson. She was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, and is a daughter of Jesse Swan and Eliza (Gunnell) Simpson. Her father was also a native of Westmoreland county, his birth occurring in Hempfield township, on the 18th of November, 1815, his parents being James and Hannah (Steinmetz) Simpson. James Simpson was born and reared in Scotland, whence he emigrated to America in the very early days, locating in Pennsylvania before the war of 1812, in which he participated. His wife was a native of Germany and a daughter of John and Mary Steinmetz, who were also among the early settlers of Westmoreland county. Mrs. Woolsey was born on the old homestead in Pennsylvania, where her grandfather Simpson lived and died. In the maternal line Mrs. Woolsey is of French extraction, her great-grandfather having emigrated to America from France in the early days of the last century and settled in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania. The grandfather, Corbin Gunnell resided there until 1862, when he removed to Moline, Illinois, where he for many years was engaged in the dry-goods business, but he was living retired at the time of his death, which occurred in Moline. His parents were Jonathan and Parmelia Gunnell, the father a veteran of the Revolution having served under General Washington. Jesse Swan Simpson, Mrs. Woolsey's father, came to Rock Island, Illinois, in 1869, locating in Coe township, where he bought a farm that he operated until his death on the 30th of June, 1903, in his eighty-seventh year. Her mother, who died very suddenly from heart failure on October 4, 1908, at the age of eighty-six, was born in Pennsylvania, on the 11th of May, 1823. Of their marriage there were born six sons and five daughters, as follows: Benjamin F., who is now deceased, a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted from Pennsylvania; Maria C., the wife of Joseph Askew, of Cordova township, Rock Island county; Mary Jane, who died when she was twenty-four; Silas M., who resides near Hillsdale, Rock Island county; Jesse L. and Almira, twins, the latter the wife of William Aldridge of Port Byron, and the former also a resident of Rock Island county; Mrs. Woolsey; Emma C., the wife of John Groom, editor of the Aurora Daily Beacon, of Aurora Illinois; Curtis, who is living in St. Louis; Elmer E., a farmer of North Dakota; and Ulysses Grant, who is a resident of Rock Island, so named from General Grant, a cousin of Mr. Simpson. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Woolsey there was born one son, Jesse Francis, a manufacturing chemist connected with the firm of Strong, Cobb & Company of Cleveland. He married Miss Maude Belle Johnston, a native of Indiana, and they have one son, Robert J. Woolsey.

Mr. Woolsey was a member of the Presbyterian church, as is also his widow and son, and fraternally he was connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He belonged to the Sons of Veterans and his political support he gave to the republican party. Mrs. Woolsey has continued to live in Knoxville ever since the death of her husband, where she owns a very pleasant residence and has many friends, by whom she is held in high esteem.

LUCIAN P. STEEPLETON.

Lucian P. Steepleton, who is conducting a grocery and meat market on North Cherry street, is one of the enterprising and progressive merchants of Galesburg. He was born on a farm in the vicinity of Gilson, Knox county, on the 17th of September, 1867, and is a son of Harrison and Ellen (Parkins) Steepleton. The father was a native of Indiana, his birth occurring in the vicinity of Harrisburg, on August 16, 1831, while the mother was born in Illinois, in November, 1841. Harrison Steepleton, who was an agriculturist, came to Illinois in his early manhood, locating at North Henderson, this county. There he engaged in farming for a while but subsequently removed to the vicinity of Gilson, where he was later married. Agricultural pursuits engaged his energies during the entire period of his active life, but he has now withdrawn from the work of the fields and is living retired in Gilson. He has always taken much interest in public affairs, although he was never an office seeker, and gives his political support to the republican party. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Steepleton numbered nine, as follows: Lorena, who is deceased; Winfield Scott, who is a resident of Gilson; and Melissa, Ella and Dorrance, all of whom are deceased; Lucian P., our subject; Vesta, the wife of Charles I. Butt, who resides five miles east of Knoxville; Jennie, the wife of Edward Hiler of Knoxsville; and Ed, who is also a resident of Gilson.

The public schools of Gilson provided Lucian P. Steepleton with an education, and after he was graduated from the high school, he taught for two years in one of the near-by districts. At the expiration of that time he applied himself to learning telegraphy and when he had mastered the key, he was appointed assistant agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Oneida. He remained in the service of this company for ten years, withdrawing from their employ at the end of that time to become superintendent of the Galesburg & Great Eastern. When their coal fields were exhausted he gave up railroading in order to engage in mercantile pursuits. He first embarked in the grocery business at Wataga, where he conducted a store for eighteen months. At the end of that time he went to Oneida, where he operated a similar enterprise for three years. Disposing of his store, he withdrew from commercial activities and for ten years gave his entire time and attention to the fraternal insurance business in Galesburg. During that period he was also secretary for the Knox County Farmers' Mutual Fire & Lightning Insurance Company for four years. He subsequently returned to mercantile pursuits and is now conducting a grocery and meat market on North Cherry street. Enterprising and progressive in whatever he undertakes, Mr. Steepleton is meeting with success in his undertaking. He carries a comprehensive assortment of staple and fancy groceries that are attractively displayed, and in his market can be found a choice line of fresh and cured meats, fish, vegetables, fruits and dairy products. Care and discretion is always displayed in the selection of all brands he offers to his customers, it being his desire to provide the best the market affords for the price. Courtesy and consideration are shown to all who accord him their patronage and he exerts every effort to be accommodating. He is thoroughly modern in all of his ideas and believes that the best interests of both patrons and merchants are protected through the organization of the latter, whose effort it is to promote all of the public utilities. At the present time he is secretary of the Retail Merchants Association, having entered upon his duties in May, 1911, and enthusiastically champions its endeavors to advance the development of the community.

On the 11th of May, 1892, Mr. Steepleton was united in marriage to Miss Susan Wiles, a daughter of John and Margaret Wiles of Wataga, and they have become the parents of one child, Wyllys, whose birth occurred on the 30th of October, 1907. John Wiles was a native of England and there he passed the first eighteen years of his life. Believing that better advantages were afforded energetic and thrifty young men in America, at the end of that time he took passage for the United States, coming directly to Illinois. He first located in Peoria, where for many years he was employed in the coal mines. He subsequently retired to Wataga, where he passed away as did also the mother, and there Mrs. Steepleton was born on the 11th of April, 1870. Mr. Wiles was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his political support he gave to the democratic party.

The religious views of Mr. and Mrs. Steepleton are manifested through their membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. They take an active and helpful interest in the work of its various societies and departments, and for many years he has been teaching a Bible class, and he is also a member of the official board of stewards. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and he votes the prohibition ticket, thus voicing his views on the liquor traffic. Mr. Steepleton represents the class of citizens who can successfully conduct their personal interests and yet find time to fulfill their duties to society by giving assistance in advancing the welfare of the community along those lines that redound to the benefit of humanity at large.

JOHN C. TOLER, M. D.

While Dr. John C. Toler's degree indicates that he is qualified for the practice of medicine and in fact he devoted his attention to the profession for a number of years, he is now connected with commercial interests, having for some time been traveling representative for the Peru (Indiana) Refrigerator Company in eight of the central states. He was born in Astoria, Fulton county, Illinois, in 1860, a son of William T. Toler, a native of Virginia, whose father at one time was professor of Greek and Latin in a university at Winchester, Kentucky. William T. read medicine at an early age and when a young man went to Astoria, Illinois, where he engaged in the practice of medicine successfully for more than forty years. He was also interested in a general store and in a drug store there and was an active, public-spirited man whose influence was always found on the side of progress and improvement. He was regarded as one of the most prominent, valued and honored citizens of his adopted town. He married Sarah A. Morrow, a representative of one of the pioneer families of Bath, Mason county, Illinois. Her death occurred December 13, 1911, in Astoria, at the advanced age of eighty years. In their family were four children of whom three are living: Temple E., who is a business man of Astoria; Allie E., a widow, living in that place; and Dr. Toler, of this review.

The last named, stimulated by the example and success of his father, took up the study of medicine following the acquirement of his early education in the public schools, and was graduated from the Missouri Medical College of St. Louis with the class of 1881. For five years he practiced in his native town, where he still has business interests, and in 1889 became a resident of Galesburg, where he became associated with Dr. Cowan in the drug business. After two years he purchased his partner's interests and conducted the store alone for a year. He then sold out and purchased the stock of Van Shack & Bellows Hardware Company, after which he conducted that business successfully for seven years, or until his health failed him and he was obliged to sell out. He then went to California where he spent two years and upon his recovery he returned to Galesburg, since which time he has represented the Peru Refrigerator Company as traveling salesman in eight of the central states. In this connection he became widely known and is regarded as a business man of marked ability and enterprise, building up an excellent trade for the company which he represents, and because of the faithfulness and efficiency of his service gaining an excellent remuneration for his labors.

Dr. Toler was married in Fulton county, Illinois, in 1882, to Miss Eva Kost, and unto them have been born two children: Mrs. Henry W. Lass, of Galesburg, and Ethelyn, at home. In his political views Dr. Toler is a democrat but without desire for office. He belongs to the Galesburg Club and to the Methodist church and his interests are always along those lines which represent the best things of life and which promote the material, intellectual, social and moral progress of his city.

ROBERT WEIR COLVILLE.

Robert Weir Colville, deceased, was for many years well known as a representative of industrial interests in Galesburg, becoming master mechanic for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad in this city in 1878. In that position he continued until his death and the record which he made was at all times a creditable one—a record of industry, diligence and faithfulness.

He was born March 31, 1839, in Glasgow, Scotland. His father was Robert Colville, who is remembered by his many friends as a genial, generous and honorable man whom all admired because of his many sterling qualities. At the time of his death he had almost completed his second term's service in the office of city treasurer of this city, having performed the duties of that responsible position to the satisfaction of all concerned. He was a native of Scotland who had emigrated to the United States in early manhood. For many years he carried on the business of bookbinding in Galesburg, but in the spring of 1869 was elected to the office of city treasurer and continued therein until his life's labors were ended in death. He was ever a courteous, polished gentleman whom it was a pleasure to meet, and his conversation was enriched by allusions to literary subjects with which he was thoroughly familiar. At his death he left a wife and four sons to mourn the loss of a loving husband and devoted father, and his demise was also the occasion of deep regret to many friends. His first wife, who bore the maiden name of Anna Maxwell, died in 1861, and he subsequently married Sarah Crocker, by whom he had one son.

His son, Robert Weir Colville, was a youth of twelve years when, in 1851, the family crossed the Atlantic to the new world. In early life he learned the bookbinder's trade and was connected therewith in Chicago from 1851 until 1856, when the family came to Galesburg. Here Robert W. Colville made his home until his death, on December 28, 1909, with the exception of a few years spent in Aurora, Illinois, in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. At the time of the Civil war, however, he put aside all business and personal considerations that he might aid in the struggle to preserve the Union, enlisting in Company E of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He continued at the front until 1863, when he mustered out on account of failing health that rendered him unfit for field duty. He was present at the battle of Fort Donelson and also took part in the hotly contested battles of Shiloh.

R. Mb. Colville.

After being honorably discharged, Mr. Colville returned to Galesburg and, having but little liking for the trade of bookbinding in which he had been assisting his father, he entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company in the capacity of fireman. His faithfulness and ability later won him promotion to the position of engineer and from 1863 until his death he was in the employ of the railroad company, being advanced through various positions, including that of foreman of the local roundhouse and foreman of the roundhouse at Aurora until 1878, when he was made master mechanic at Galesburg, continuing in that position until he met an accidental death under an engine.

On the 4th of March, 1866, Mr. Colville had been married in Galesburg to Miss Edith Wilbur Cole, the daughter of George W. Cole, who came to this city from Sheldon, Vermont, in 1856, and was engaged in the harness and saddlery business. Mrs. Colville is justly proud of a most distinguished ancestry, including patriots of the Revolutionary period, governors and men of note during the colonial epoch and several who were passengers on the Mayflower, including Governor Bradford. George W. Cole, her father, was one of the prominent early merchants of this city but retired fifteen years prior to his death in 1902. He married Almira Holcomb, of the state of New York, and their daughter, Edith, became the wife of Mr. Colville. Three children were born of this marriage, namely: Alma B., the wife of Victor E. Bender, owner of the Springfield News; Nita M., the wife of Nevin C. Lescher, a brick dealer of Galesburg; and Robert Rex, who married Jessie Ayre of Galesburg, and is in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

In his fraternal relations, Mr. Colville was a Mason and exemplified in his life the beneficent spirit of the craft. He was also a member of the Elks lodge of Galesburg and a charter member of the Galesburg Club, and had many friends in those organizations as well as among his business associates and those whom he met in social circles. The greater part of his life was passed in this city and those who knew him recognized in him the sterling traits of character which in every land and clime win confidence and regard. He was for several years a member of the board of education of Galesburg, was a democrat in politics but in the latter years of his life voted for the man instead of the party.

GEORGE BOARDMAN CHURCHILL.

The steps in the orderly progression of George Boardman Churchill are easily discernible. He has gradually worked his way upward until he is now at the head of the Churchill Hardware Company, one of the largest commercial enterprises of Galesburg. He is also recognized as a man of marked public spirit, whose interest in the general welfare has never been a perfunctory one. His active and helpful cooperation in public movements has been the manifestation of a deep interest in all that pertains to the progress, upbuilding and prosperity of the community and his work of a public nature has always been fruitful of substantial results. Galesburg numbers him among her native sons, his birth having here occurred August 16, 1865. He represents one of the oldest families of the city. His paternal grandfather was Norman Churchill, a native of New York, who served as a soldier in the war of 1812, while his father was one of the heroes of the Revolutionary war. Norman Churchill became a pioneer of Galesburg and is said to have made the first trade consummated here. He took a very active and helpful part in the development and progress of this section of the state and was also connected with many interests and projects of a public nature outside of the field of business. He became one of the conductors on the famous underground railroad, for his anti-slavery views prompted him to assist many a negro on his way to freedom in the north. Both he and his wife remained residents of Galesburg until called to their final rest. Their children were: Wilberforce, who was killed while serving in the Civil war; Emily; Belle; Elvira; Norman; Julia; and George.

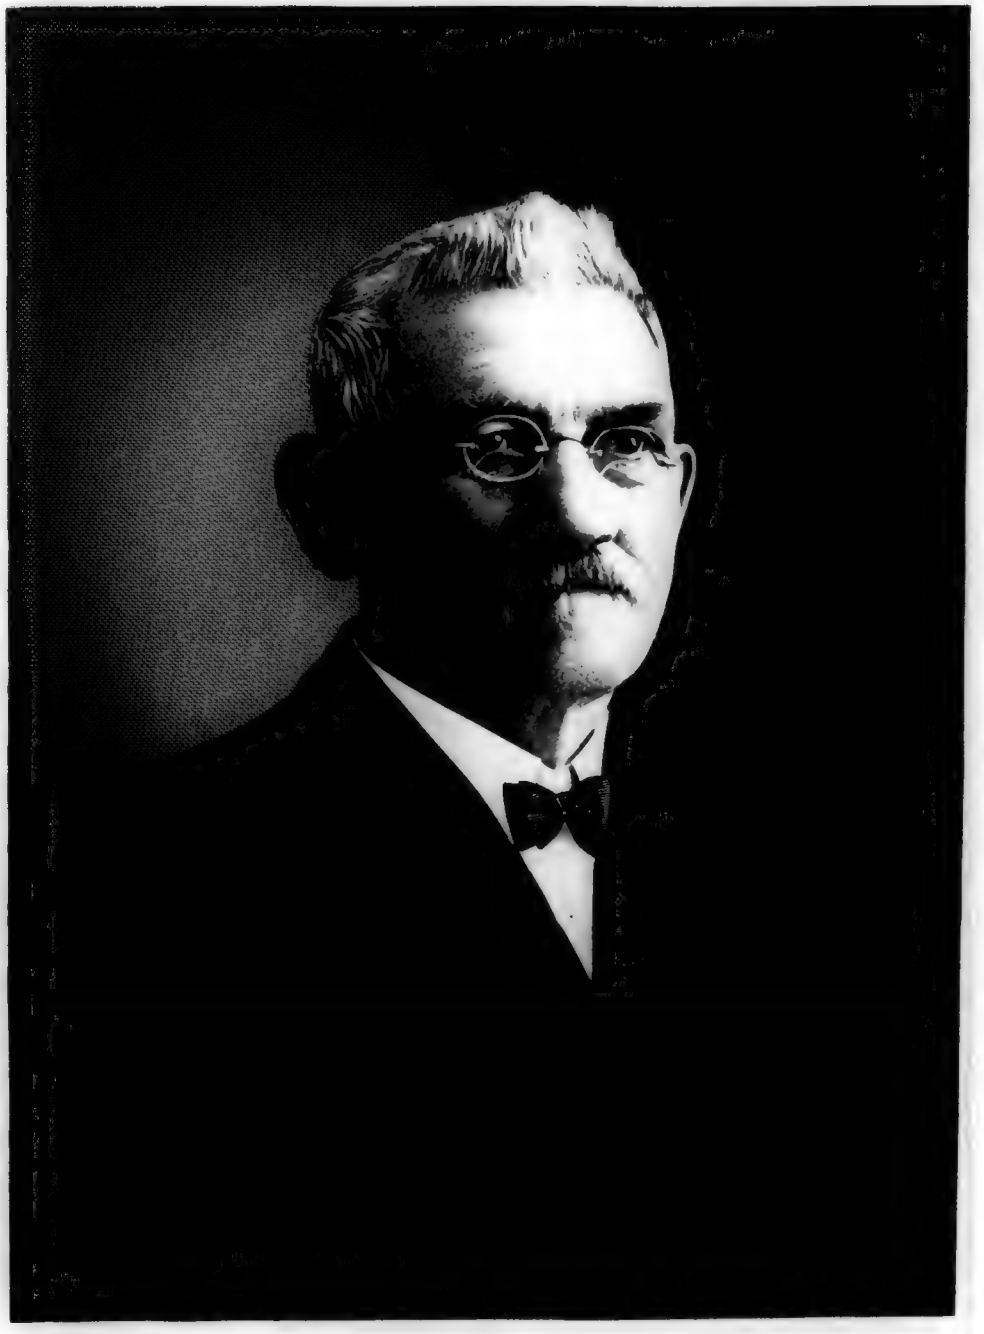
The last named was the father of George Boardman Churchill, and was a native of New York. He was brought to Galesburg in 1839, when but ten years of age, was here reared to manhood and devoted his entire life to the profession of teaching. For forty-seven years he was one of the professors in Knox College and his labors did much to place that institution in the high and honored position which it has always held as one of the educational centers of the state. He was also the founder of the public-school system of Galesburg and for many years served on the board of education, his labors constituting a practical and forceful element in the establishment of the schools and their conduct along lines, rendering them of practical worth to the young as a preparation for life's work. Professor Churchill also served for many years on the library board, was city engineer for thirty years and was one of the first surveyors of the Military Tract Railroad, which became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He long filled the position of alderman and exercised his official prerogatives in support of every plan and project for the general good. His entire life was actuated by the high and honorable principles which have their root in Christian faith and he was long a devoted member of the Central Congregational church, serving as superintendent of its Sunday school for a quarter of a century. He was twice married, his first wife being Clara Hurd, a relative of the Gale family, who were the founders of Galesburg. They had one son, Milton E. Churchill. After losing his first wife Professor Churchill wedded Ada Hayes, a native of Vermont. She was a second cousin of ex-President Hayes, while Professor Churchill was a second cousin of Samuel J. Tilden, the two men who were rival candidates for the presidency in 1876. Mrs. Churchill was a daughter of the Rev. Gordon Hayes, whose father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Gordon Hayes was a native of Vermont and a minister of the Congregational church. He married a Miss Fassett and on removing westward settled in Muscatine, Iowa, where both he and his wife passed away, his death occurring when he was more than ninety years of age, while his wife died at the age of eighty-nine. They had a large family: Mary, a missionary to China, who was the wife of William Jones, an editor of the Old Curiosity Shop, a department of the Chicago Inter-Ocean; Lilly, the wife of Walter Waugh; Ed.; Charles; Daniel; John; and Ada. It was the last named who became the wife of Professor Churchill, and unto them were born three children: Charles Edward, now living in Montclair, New Jersey; George Boardman; and Mary, who was accidentally shot when three years old. The mother also met her death by accident in April, 1869, after which Professor Churchill married Ellen Sanborn Watkins.

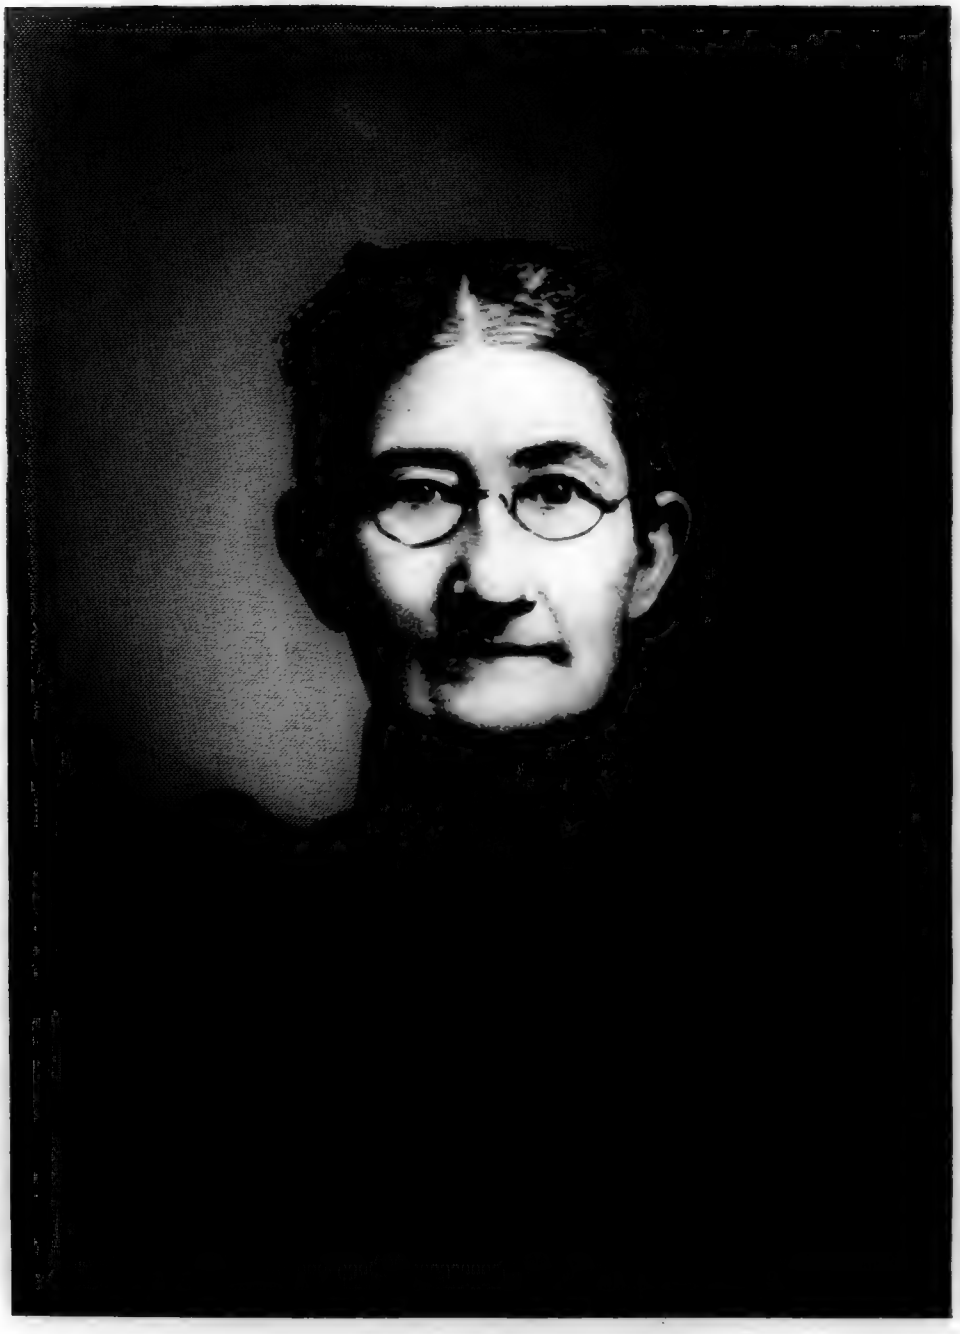
He died in Galesburg in 1899, at the age of seventy years, the city thereby losing one of its most honored and representative residents—a man whose worth to the communty as a factor in its intellectual progress and its stability and prosperity cannot be overestimated.

George B. Churchill has been a lifelong resident of Knox county, spending the entire period in Galesburg save for three years, during which he resided in Abingdon. He was a pupil in the public schools and in Knox College and following the completion of his education engaged in clerking for five months in the hardware store of Main, Foltz & Givens. This sufficed to convince him that it was a congenial occupation and he then entered into partnership with W. B. Main, spending two and a half years in that relation in Abingdon. This terminated the three years' period of his absence from Galesburg, after which he returned to his native city and purchased the hardware store of O. T. Duvon, admitting his brother-in-law H. F. Wetherbee to a partnership under the firm style of Churchill & Wetherbee. This connection was continued until 1894, when he purchased his partner's interest and conducted the business under the name of the G. B. Churchill Company. For the past eleven years it has been carried on under the style of the Churchill Hardware Company and is one of the most extensive mercantile enterprises of the city, a large stock of goods finding ready sale because of the excellent line which he carries and his thorough reliability in all business transactions. In addition to his hardware enterprise Mr. Churchill has been closely associated with many business interests and activities of a semi-public character, which have proved potent forces in the city's growth and development. He was instrumental in securing the building of the switch between the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Santa Fe Railroads. He was also chairman for many years of the new enterprise committee of the Commercial Club, which instituted organized efforts for the public good. He is likewise president of the Galesburg Union Telephone Company, which is the largest independent telephone plant outside of Chicago in the state, and for many years he was a director of the Coulter-Disc Manufacturing Company, his labors being largely responsible for the location of this plant in Galesburg. He was likewise one of the original ten men who built the street car line from Galesburg to Abingdon and thus his work at all times has been a feature in the business development and public improvement of the city. Mr. Churchill was a member of the committee on city buildings and as such instrumental in erecting the fire department building, the city hall, the jail and patrol station, and also served on the committee that bought the city park.



Mr. Churchill was married, January 17, 1894, to Miss Matie O'Connor, a daughter of James and Mary (Ryan) O'Connor, but she died in the fall of the same year. On the 12th of February, 1896, he wedded Clara Scott Babcock, who was born in Detroit, Michigan, a daughter of Charles M. and Maggie (McChesney) Babcock. Her father was a native of New York, while her mother was one of the first children born in Galesburg. She is now living in Los Angeles, California, but Mr. Babcock passed away in this city when about sixty-five years of age. In their family were four children, O. Frank, George M., Mabel E., and Clara. Mr. Babcock's father was a native of Oneida county, New York, and his mother belonged to the Sherman family. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Churchill was an early settler of Galesburg and married a Miss Scott. Unto

Mr. and Mrs. Churchill have been born three children, Lake George, Marjorie, and William. The family residence is at No. 1042 North Cedar street and the members of the household are prominent in the social circles of the city. Mr. Churchill belongs to Veritas Lodge, No. 478, I. O. O. F., and to the Galesburg Club, of which he was one of the founders. Any project or movement which has its root in a desire to prove of public benefit receives his indorsement and co-operation, for he is widely known as a public-spirited citizen, whose work has been a resultant factor for good. His business interests and connections have largely been of a character that has contributed to general progress and prosperity and his labors have been a most potent factor in stimulating trade relations.



JOHN MOSSER.

John Mosser is a self-made man of prominence, attaining to his present position as president of the First State & Savings Bank of Abingdon by reason of a well defined purpose and unfaltering effort and determination in its achievement. He was born January 1, 1832, in Preston county, West Virginia, his parents being John and Susan (Frankhauser) Mosser, natives of Maryland and Virginia respectively. The father was a farmer by occupation and removed from Maryland to West Virginia, where he passed away when almost eighty-eight years of age. He had purchased a farm in that state, cleared and developed it and it is still in possession of the family, being now the property of Daniel Mosser, the brother of John Mosser. The father was a soldier of the War of 1812 and his political support was given the democratic party. He came of one of the old families of Maryland.

John Mosser, spending his youthful days in his native county, pursued his education in select schools, where he spent only a few weeks each winter. The little temple of learning was a log building supplied with slab benches and other primitive furnishings. The remainder of the year was devoted to work upon his father's farm in West Virginia and experience early impressed upon his mind the lessons of industry and perseverance. Like many another young man, he felt that better opportunities might be afforded him elsewhere than in his home district and on attaining his majority he started out to make his way in the world. His choice of a destination was a wise one, for in 1855 he arrived in Illinois. For a time he worked on a farm near Industry, this state, and then went to the west, starting on the overland trip for Pike's Peak in 1859 to dig gold. After getting well into Kansas he turned around and came back to Illinois, resolved that he would dig his gold from the fertile fields of the Prairie state. He then formed a partnership with his brother, Jacob F., for the conduct of a blacksmith shop in Industry, where he remained until 1864. He then removed to Abingdon, bringing with him the little capital which had accrued from his earnest labor and his careful expenditure. Here he purchased the general store of Swarts & Quinby and has since been allied with the business activities of this place. He built a two-story brick building and occupied both floors in the conduct of a mercantile enterprise which prospered year by year. In 1895, however, he withdrew from commercial pursuits and established a private bank under the name of John Mosser & Company. Again success attended him and on March 11, 1902, he organized the First State & Savings Bank of Abingdon, of which he became the president. He has continuously filled that position and has made his bank one of the strong financial institutions of this part of the state. In business matters his advice has always been sound and is frequently sought. He has ever been conservative and this quality has given strength to his banking career.

In 1860 Mr. Mosser was united in marriage to Miss Mary Carroll, a daughter of William and Sarah (Conaway) Carroll, natives of Pennsylvania and Maryland respectively. The father was a farmer by occupation and they were married in the Keystone state, after which they removed westward in 1858, settling in McDonough county, Illinois, where their remaining days were passed. Their daughter Mary, who became Mrs. Mosser, died October 21, 1866, and in November, 1867, Mr. Mosser married her sister, Sarah J. Carroll. She was born in Pennsylvania in 1849 and was therefore a little maiden of nine summers when the family came to this state. By the first marriage there were two children: Samuel T., who wedded Kate Newell; and Ida L., the wife of John Reed. The three children of the second marriage are: Corliss G., who married Elizabeth Snedaker; Stacy C.; and Lloyd L.

Mr. Mosser is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. His political allegiance is given to the prohibition party, for he has ever been a strong temperance man and believes this to be one of the dominant issues before the country. For eighteen years he served as school director of the Abingdon school district and the cause of education has ever found in him a stalwart champion. He filled the office of city treasurer of Abingdon in 1871-2, has been supervisor of Cedar township and was mayor of the city from 1879 until 1881 and again from 1888 until 1891. His long service as chief executive indicates his high standing as a citizen and the confidence reposed in him by his fellow townsmen. He has ever reared his family in the belief that honesty is the best policy and trained his children to live within their means, saying that if an individual spends less than he makes he will never see hard times. In a word, Mr. Mosser stands for everything that is safe, sound, conservative and upright in the commercial world and for all that is trustworthy and progressive in the individual.

EDWIN F. HOLMES.

Edwin F. Holmes, who resides on his farm in Ontario township, is a member of a family which has been identified with the agricultural interests of the township for nearly forty years. His birth occurred October 3, 1884, his parents being John and Aledo (Olson) Holm, the former a native of Sweden, having been born in West Morland, July 18, 1850. The father was the son of Nels and Anna

Holm, both lifelong residents of Sweden, where the former lived to be ninety-two years of age. John Holm received a common-school education in Sweden and emigrated to this country in 1869, coming direct to Galesburg, where he entered the employ of the Charles Johnson Brick Company for a short time and then accepted a position on a railroad at North Henderson before returning to Galesburg in 1870. Since that time he has resided in Knox county continuously. Coming to Ontario township in 1872 he purchased the land which was the nucleus of his present three hundred and twenty acre farm, upon which he has lived retired for the last fifteen years, his two sons, Fred L. and Edwin F., working the farm on shares and devoting it to raising cattle and hogs. Mr. Holm has been twice married. His first union was with Miss Olson, of Henry county, whose death occurred in 1892 and his second marriage was to Helen Erickson, the daughter of Eric Erickson, of Knox county. In politics Mr. Holm gives his support to the republican party, and in religious faith he is a Congregationalist, holding membership in the Congregational church of Oneida. He is also a school director.

Edwin F. Holmes acquired his education in the common schools of Ontario township and since laying aside his text-books has devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits on the home place. Until 1905 he assisted his father with the general farm duties but during the last six years has been farming on his own account, engaging in general farming and also in raising cattle and hogs for the western markets.

On May 2, 1906, Mr. Holmes was married to Ruth Sturgeon, the daughter of Sheldon and Rosa (Lowry) Sturgeon, of Henry county. The father was actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until a few years prior to his death, in 1908, and the mother is residing at Woodhull, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Holmes two children, Willard V. and Harriet Ruth, have been born.

In politics Mr. Holmes gives his support to the men and measures of the republican party, and he is a member of the Congregational church of Oneida, and of Camp, No. 555, M. W. A. Although still a young man he has already won a creditable measure of success in the pursuit to which he has faithfully devoted his entire energy thus far, and because of his intelligent and industrious labor he is regarded as a man of sterling worth to the industrial development of the township.

LOWRY J. EDGAR.

Dating his residence in Knox county from 1854, Lowry J. Edgar has been for more than four decades one of the important factors in aiding the agricultural advancement for which this section of the country is noted. His birth occurred in Hart county, Kentucky, November 19, 1827, and he was a son of James and Sarah (Trowbridge) Edgar, whose childhood days belong to that period in history when our country was in its tenderest infancy, the former being born in Iredell county, North Carolina, June 5, 1781, the latter in Essex county, New Jersey, April 10, 1787. They were married in Kentucky in 1807 and had eleven children, of whom Lowry J. Edgar was next to the youngest.

Equipped with the meager educational advantages which were offered by the district schools of Kentucky as of other states in that day, Lowry J. Edgar lent his assistance to the maintenance of the family by working on the farm as soon as he was old enough. In 1849, during the exciting days of the gold boom in California, he followed the multitude drawn thither, making his way by New Orleans and the isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. After four and a half years spent in the far west, during which time he became richer in experience than in the acquisition of gold, he returned to the region east of the Mississippi, settling in Knox county, Illinois. He began to farm on his present place which he has named "The Old Homestead," the tract of land which he cultivated for a continuous period of forty-two years, pursuing the various departments of general farming and stock-raising. Fifteen years ago he retired from active interest in the place, which comprises one hundred and eighty acres of rich and productive land, now being operated by his sons.

The marriage of Lowry J. Edgar and Miss Martha A. Brown of Hart county, Kentucky, occurred March 6, 1859, her parents being Armsted and Sarah (Ferguson) Brown, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Brown was born December 18, 1808, and his wife November 23, 1808, their marriage occurring in Kentucky March 3, 1830. Five years later they left their native state and settled in Knox county, Illinois, where their six children were reared. Mr. Brown was a democrat in politics and with his family worshiped in the Baptist church. He died December 17, 1851, twenty-three years before his wife, who passed away February 25, 1874.

In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar were four children, of whom two are deceased: Willett S., born December 27, 1859, who died in 1890; Lillian J., born December 23, 1861, who died in 1880. Two sons are living, Frank L., born August 30, 1865, and Charles, both of whom are living on the home farm which they manage. Mrs. Edgar passed away on May 8, 1911, at an advanced age.

Politically Mr. Edgar has always been a loyal supporter of the democratic party and has voted for the men and measures which he felt would contribute to the welfare of his community, his state and his nation. He is a member of the Baptist church and throughout his life has been faithful in the observance of its lofty principles of moral rectitude. Although in his eighty-fifth year he is still in the possession of good health and hearty spirits enjoying that peace of mind which is the crowning glory of a long life, well spent.

FRANK L. EDGAR.

Frank L. Edgar, born August 30, 1865, is the son of Lowry J. and Martha A. (Brown) Edgar. After a common school education in this locality, where he has lived from the time of his birth, he engaged in agriculture on his father's farm, assisting in the management until his father retired fifteen years ago when he, in company with his brother, assumed full charge.

Mr. Edgar was united in marriage to Miss Adeline Paul of Galesburg, Illinois, June 27, 1894. Her parents, Andrew and Lavina (Taylor) Paul, were both natives of Canada and never came to the United States. They are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Edgar are the parents of four children, of whom three are living at home and one is deceased. The living are: Lillian Merle, Lavina Pauline and Martha Elise.

Mr. Edgar is a democrat in politics but has never sought for the honor of public office. He is a successful farmer and a good citizen who subordinates petty self-interest for the good of the community at large.

FRED L. HOLMES.

Fred L. Holmes, who resides on his father's farm in Ontario township, has been engaged in agricultural pursuits since he completed his high school education. He was born May 23, 1886, in Ontario township, his parents being John and Aledo (Olson) Holm, both natives of Sweden, and he is the grandson of Nels and Anna Holm. The grandmother died in Sweden when her son was very young, but the grandfather came to America after he gave up his farm in Sweden and lived retired with his son until he passed away at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

John Holm acquired his education in the common schools of his native country and emigrated to America in 1869, when he was eighteen years of age. He located at once in Galesburg, where he remained for a short time, being in the employ of the Charles Johnson Brick Company, but later he worked on a railroad for a few months and then returned to Galesburg in 1870. Since that time he has been a resident of Knox county and since 1872 he has resided upon his farm in Ontario township, which he cultivated until fifteen years ago. This farm consists of three hundred and twenty acres and has been devoted to general farming and stock-raising. Mr. Holm was twice married. His first marriage occurred September 12, 1873, to Miss Olson, of Henry county, who died in 1892, and his second marriage February 7, 1893, to Helen Erickson, a resident of Knox county, who is the daughter of Eric Erickson, a lifelong resident of Sweden. Mr. Holm is a republican and for several years served as school director. He also holds membership in the Congregational church.

Fred L. Holmes began his independent career at the age of nineteen years, when he rented the one hundred and forty acres of land which he now cultivates. Although he is one of the youngest agriculturists in Ontario township, he has already met with success in his work and his large crops attest to his ability. His chief attention thus far has been given to general farming but he has specialized somewhat in hog-raising.

On December 9, 1909, occurred the marriage of Mr. Holmes to Esther Olson, of Rio township. To this union one child, Karl Frederick, has been born. Mrs. Holmes is the daughter of Charles W. and Emma (Selberg) Olson, who have resided in Rio township for many years. Mr. Olson was born in Sweden, December 23, 1846, and is the son of Ole and Betty (Anderson) Person. They spent their entire lives in Sweden, Mr. Person being a carpenter by trade. The son, Charles W. Olson, received a common-school education and then engaged as carpenter until he came to America in 1871. After a three months' stay in Chicago he went to Wisconsin for a short time before coming to Knox county, where he accepted employment on farms in Ontario and Rio townships during the winter. He then removed to Clover township, Henry county, and for about twenty years rented a farm there before purchasing his present farm. This farm consisted of one hundred and sixty acres but at the present time Mr. Olson is cultivating four hundred acres of land in Knox county, engaging in general farming and cattle and hog-raising. In politics he is a republican and during his nine years' service as road commissioner did much to further the development of his township. He is a stockholder in the Oneida Elevator Company and is a member of the Swedish Lutheran church of Woodhull. On March 18, 1883, Mr. Olson was united in marriage to Miss Emma Selberg, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Selberg, who was a lifelong resident of Kansas, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. To Mr. and Mrs. Olson seven children were born, namely: Emil; Herman; Minnie; Esther, who is the wife of Fred L. Holmes; Hilmer; Hartwig; and Walter.

In politics Mr. Holmes gives his support to the republican party in the firm belief that republican principles are most effective for good government. He is also a member of the Illinois Banker's Life Association. In all his relations he is conscientious and honorable and because of his unusual amount of energy and foresight he is meeting with success in his agricultural pursuits.

LOUIS L. STEELE.

Louis L. Steele, a factor in the business circles of Knox county, is now serving as secretary and treasurer of the Churchill Hardware Company at Galesburg. His birth occurred in Dover, Illinois, on the 18th of May, 1863, his parents being Andrew and Susan (Zearing) Steele, who were natives of New York and Pennsylvania respectively. The paternal grandfather, a gentleman of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in Vermont and died in the east in middle life. His widow, Mrs. Lydia (Abel) Steele, came west with her son Andrew and passed away at Dover, Illinois, when sixty-five years of age. Their children were three in number, namely: Henry P., Andrew L. and Leonora. Martin Zearing, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Pennsylvania and came of German descent. In 1835 he removed to Dover, Illinois, there following general agricultural pursuits throughout the remainder of his life. To him and his wife, Mrs. Sarah Zearing, were born the following children: Martin; Louis; David; John; Henry, who was killed in the Civil war; Carolina; Elizabeth; Sarah; Mary; and Susan.

Andrew Steele, the father of Louis L. Steele, was reared near Buffalo, New York, and became a very early settler of Bureau county, Illinois. For about thirty-five years he was successfully engaged in general merchandising at Dover, while his demise occurred at Princeton, Illinois, in January, 1910, when he had attained the age of eighty-two years. He gave his political allegiance to the republican party and held various town offices. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His widow still resides at Princeton and is now eighty-three years of age. She is well known and highly esteemed throughout the town, having made her home near there for seventy-five years. In religious faith she is a Baptist. By her marriage she became the mother of six sons and one daughter, as follows: Charles D., who is a resident of Chicago; George, living in Dover, Illinois; John, of Gunnison, Colorado; Dick, who makes his home at Springfield, Illinois; Louis L., of this review; Harry, of Princeton, Illinois; and Lottie, the deceased wife of W. J. Bailey, formerly of Princeton, Illinois.

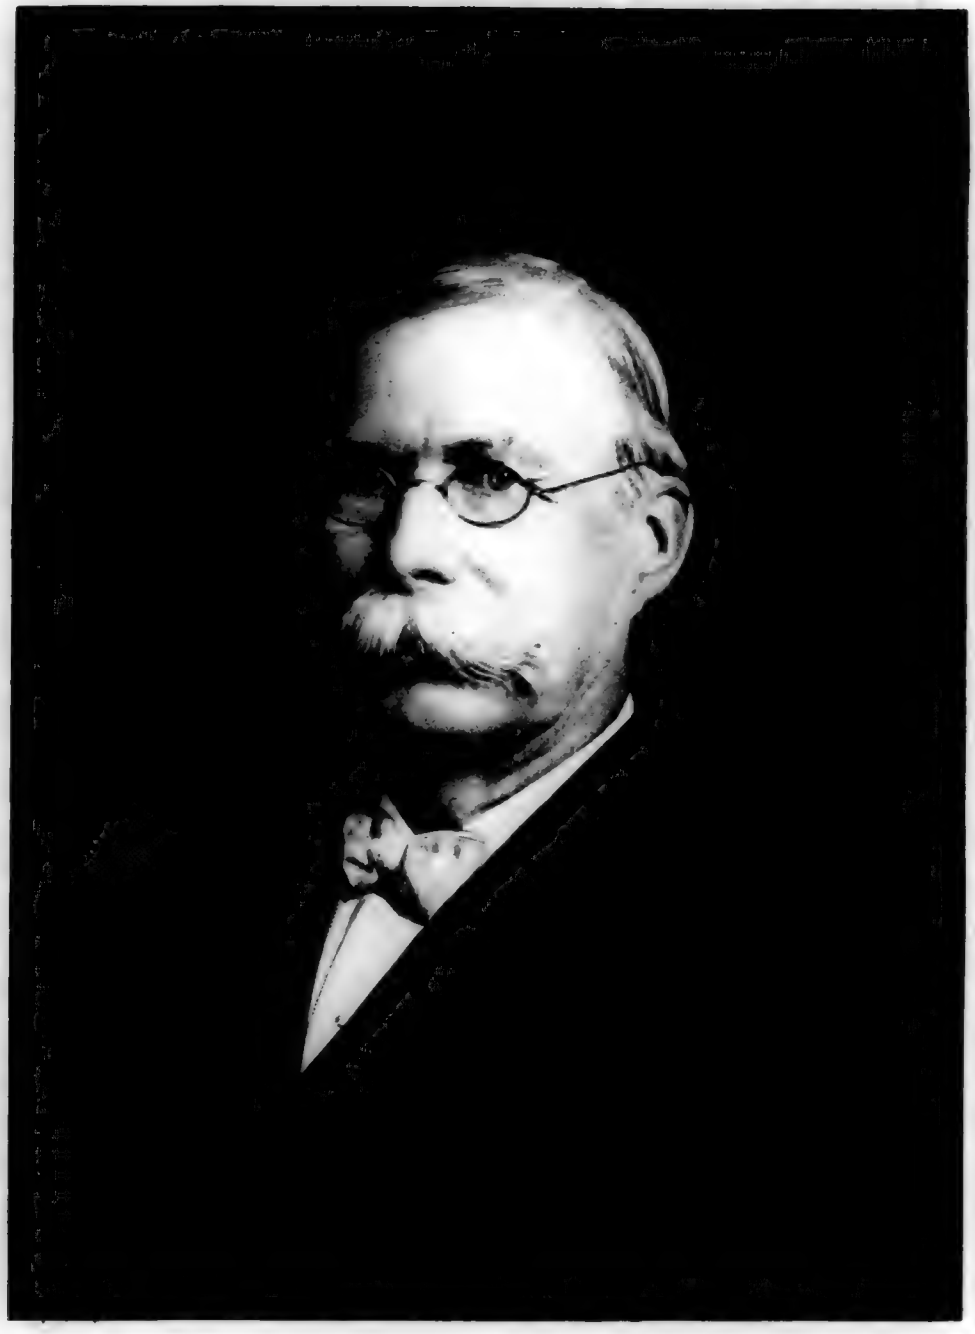
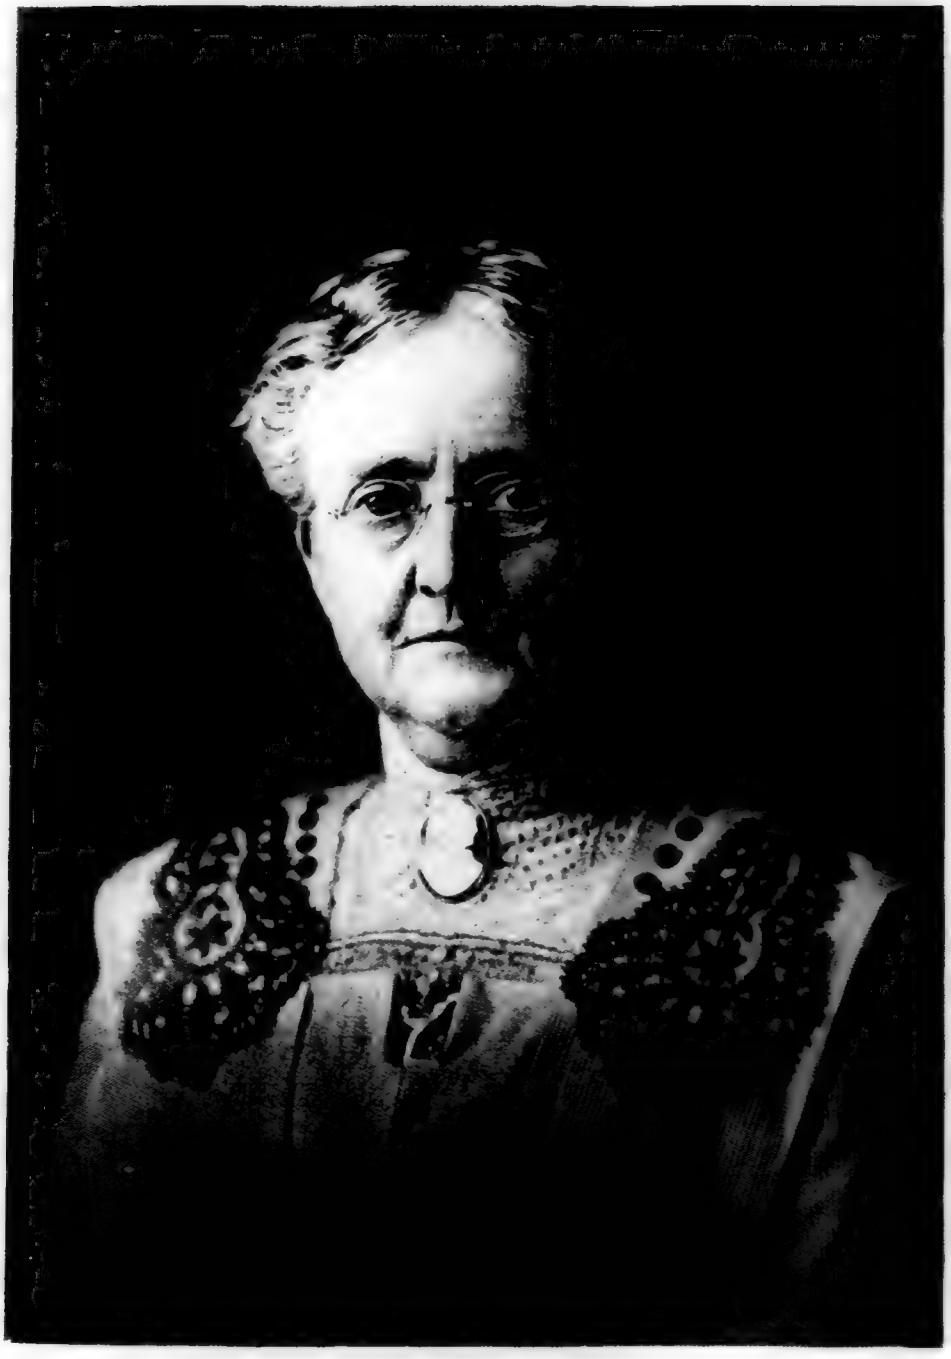
Louis L. Steele was reared in Dover and obtained his education in the public schools and an academy of that town. Subsequently he followed the profession of teaching for two terms. He was next engaged in general merchandising at Alden, Iowa, for five years and on the expiration of that period removed to Buda, Illinois, where for eleven years he was identified with business interests as a hardware merchant. Coming to Galesburg, he became associated with the Churchill Hardware Company as secretary and treasurer and in those capacities has largely contributed to the continued growth and success of the concern. He is a man of excellent executive ability and sound judgment, carrying forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.



On the 14th of February, 1889, Mr. Steele was united in marriage to Miss Alice R. Carter, a native of Dover and a daughter of George F. and Emily (Parsons) Carter, both of whom were born in Maine and became early settlers of Dover, Illinois. The father, whose natal year was 1833, passed away at Dover in March, 1911, when seventy-eight years of age. The mother still survives. Mrs. Steele is one of a family of three children, the others being Charles E. and Edwin P. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Steele was born in Maine, in which state both he and his wife passed away. They had three children, namely: George F., Mrs. Ruth Plummer and Lyman. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Steele was likewise a native of Maine.

Mr. and Mrs. Steele have two daughters, Lottie and Mildred. They are devoted and consistent members of the Central Congregational church, taking an active and helpful part in its work. Mr. Steele is a man of many sterling traits of character, enterprising in business, progressive in citizenship and at all times trustworthy and reliable.



JOHN MILLER McKIE.

John Miller McKie is one of the most prominent citizens and active business men of the northern part of Knox county. Honored and respected by all, he occupies an enviable position in financial circles not alone by reason of the success he has achieved but also owing to the straightforward and progressive business methods that he has ever followed. He has been a lifelong resident of the county and therefore has a wide acquaintance.

His birth occurred in Copley township, June 4, 1844, his parents being William and Margaret (Miller) McKie. The father was born in Scotland and in his boyhood days became familiar with farm work. In 1840 he accompanied his parents on their removal to America, at which time the family home was established in Copley township, this county. There he continued his residence throughout his remaining days. He married Margaret Miller and they became the parents of two children, the sister of John M. McKie being Jeanette, now the widow of William H. Leighton, a farmer of Copley township. After losing her first husband Mrs. McKie became the wife of Peter McClymont.

In his boyhood days John M. McKie remained at home with his parents, continuing with them until he had attained his majority, when he took up the occupation of farming on his own account. He largely followed that pursuit until 1876, when he came to Altona, where he turned his attention to commercial pursuits, becoming proprietor of a dry-goods house. He was quite successful in the management of his store and enjoyed a gratifying trade for a number of years. At length, however, he became a factor in financial circles. In 1890 he was associated with Judge Craig in the establishment of a private bank in Altona, and such was the success of the institution that on the 3d of October, 1891, the bank was reorganized under a state charter as the Bank of Altona. Mr. McKie then became assistant cashier and so continued until 1895, when he succeeded George H. Craig as cashier of the bank, which office he continued to fill until the 29th of September, 1911, when, following the death of Mr. Craig, he was elected to the presidency of the institution and is now its chief executive officer, bending his energies to administrative control. He has furthermore become known as a factor in banking circles in other connections, for he is also the president of the State Bank of Victoria. He has important business interests, being connected with a number of leading enterprises in the northern part of the county, and he is also extensively engaged in farming and stock-raising. His judgment is sound, his discrimination keen and whatever he undertakes he accomplishes because of his ready adaptability and his enterprising spirit. A confidence reposed in him has never been misplaced and he has been called upon to settle many estates, about thirty in the last twenty years. One of these amounted to one hundred thousand dollars, the heirs living in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Liverpool, England. In settling up another Mr. McKie had to give bonds to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars, which shows the vastness of the property involved.

On the 22d of February, 1872, Mr. McKie was united in marriage to Miss Janet G. McDowell, a native of Copley township, and they are well known in this part of the state, where they have an extensive circle of warm friends. They hold membership in the Presbyterian church of Altona and labor consistently and effectively for its upbuilding and for the advancement of all those causes which lift man to a higher plane.

Politically Mr. McKie is a republican and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, have several times called him to local offices, the duties of which he has discharged with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. For many years he served as an officer on the school board of Walnut Grove township and in 1894 he was elected to the position of county treasurer, which he filled for four years or until 1898. He made an excellent record as the custodian of public funds and is equally loyal in guarding the private interests entrusted to his care as a banker. He has ever recognized the fact that the bank which most carefully safeguards the interests of depositors is most worthy of credit, and in his bank management his progressiveness is tempered by a conservatism that has made the Bank of Altona a synonym for reliability to those who are acquainted with the policy pursued. Mr. McKie is deserving of much credit for what he has accomplished, for he has never allowed difficulties nor obstacles to deter him. On the contrary when such have arisen they have seemed to call forth renewed effort and his persistency of purpose and capable management have constituted the foundation of an honorable success.

DANIEL WAINRIGHT.

A long life of activity and enterprise devoted to agricultural pursuits gained for Daniel Wainright the financial independence that now enables him to live retired. For more than forty years he was successfully identified with the farming interests of Chestnut township, and was a prominent factor in promoting its development along the various lines of public utility. He is a native of Ohio, his birth occurring in Claremont, on the 4th of May, 1829, and a son of Vincent and Nancy (Hall) Wainright. His father was born in New Jersey, in 1793, while the mother was a native of the state of Ohio. The paternal grandfather, Daniel Wainright, was likewise born and reared in New Jersey, from which state he joined the Continental ranks during the Revolution. In the maternal line, Daniel Wainright is of English extraction, his grandfather, Jeremiah Hall having emigrated from the mother country to the United States in the early years of the last century. He was a carpenter and millwright by trade, but subsequently withdrew from this vocation and took up farming, locating on a tract of land in Claremont county, Ohio, that he cultivated until his death in 1844. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Wainright there were born nine children, five sons and four daughters, as follows: Jonathan and Jeremiah, both of whom are deceased; Daniel, our subject; Catherine and Delia Ann, who subsequently became Mrs. Tuttle, both of whom are deceased; Rachel M., the wife of a Mr. Barr, William Henry and Hannah Lucinda, who are also deceased; and Wesley, who is living near Springfield.

The early years of Daniel Wainright's life were spent on his father's farm, in the work of which he assisted while pursuing his education in the district schools. In common with most country youths at that period his text-books were early laid aside and his attention devoted to the work of the fields and care of the stock. He was married at the age of twenty years and for some time following continued to engage in agricultural pursuits in his native state. Later deciding that better opportunities awaited him in what at that time was termed the west, he and his wife with their two children crossed the prairies to Illinois. Knox county was his destination and upon his arrival he purchased some land on section 3, Chestnut township, and there he continued to reside until 1901. Upon this worthy young couple devolved all of the hardships and discouragements that are incident to frontier life, but they were enterprising and hopeful and their determination never faltered. He applied himself intelligently and persistently to the cultivation of his fields, improving his place as his means warranted from time to time, and ultimately became one of the substantial agriculturists of the county. With prosperity came the respect and esteem as well as friendship of his many acquaintances, who recognized and appreciated the many fine qualities that made him a successful man and estimable citizen. Ten years ago, at the age of seventy-two years, Mr. Wainright decided to withdraw from active work and he and his wife left the farm and took up their residence in Knoxville, where they continue to live.

Twelve years ago Mr. and Mrs. Wainright celebrated their golden wedding, their marriage having occurred on the 13th of December, 1849. The maiden name of Mrs. Wainright was Eliza Jane Cramer, and she, too, is a native of Claremont county, Ohio, her birth occurring on the 10th of November, 1830. She is a daughter of William and Sarah Ann (Shoats) Cramer, the father a native of Germany and the mother of English extraction. She was an only child and was left an orphan at an early age, but she had a half-brother, Joseph Heritage. To Mr. and Mrs. Wainwright were born six children, two of whom are deceased, Benedict, who was the fourth in order of birth, and Loretta, the next younger, who died in infancy. Vincent, the eldest, whose birth occurred in Ohio, married Miss Frances Hauk, a native of Illinois, and they have two children Ernest and Ena. McGuire, also a native of Ohio, married Miss Arenia Coe, of Missouri, and they have two children, Clara, who is married; and Jennie, Joseph married Arenia Mallory, who was born in Kansas, and they have the following children: Arthur, Edith, Bertha, Mildred and Lloyd. Sarah Eliza, is the wife of Bert Eikey, a farmer of Orange township, and their children are: Louis, Bert, Ross and Henrietta.

Mr. and Mrs. Wainright have always been active members of the Methodist Episcopal church and for forty years he was superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is a Mason, being affiliated with Pacific Lodge, No. 66, A. F. & A. M. He always recognized the obligation of citizenship by assuming his share of the governmental responsibilities in his township. For three terms he discharged the duties of supervisor and for three years he acted as road commissioner, while for one term he served as school trustee and as school director for twenty-eight years. A man of high principles and keen judgment, Mr. Wainright's views were always valued in the community where he resided, his foresight and powers of discernment giving weight to any opinion he might advance relative to the public welfare. During a residence in the county that has covered a period of more than half a century he has not only won many friends, but has established for himself a reputation that will be to his children a valued heritage.

FRANK G. MATTESON.

In the history of Galesburg's commercial and industrial development it is imperative that mention be made of Frank G. Matteson because of his close connection with one of the most important productive enterprises of the city, he being now president of the Purington Paving Brick Company, the plant being located in East Galesburg. He was born in Macomb, Illinois, August 24, 1867, his parents being Asa A. and Helen M. (Gardner) Matteson. The father was born in Berwick, Illinois, in 1837, and the mother's birth occurred in Knoxville, this state. In his boyhood days Asa A. Matteson came to Galesburg, pursued his education here and engaged in farming for a time. He afterward practiced law in Macomb, Illinois, for a period and in 1874 again came to this city where he entered financial circles as the vice president of the First National Bank, with which he was connected until his death. He also became prominent in the establishment and development of the business now conducted under the name of the Purington Paving Brick Company and was associated with that important undertaking to the time of his demise, which occurred January 2, 1895. His widow still survives and now makes her home in Webster Groves, Missouri. Mr. Matteson gave his political support to the republican party, held membership in the Odd Fellows lodge and in the Galesburg Club. They were married in this city and unto them were born four children: Frank G., of this review; Fred C., who is a resident of Aurora, Illinois; Grace M., the wife of R. W. Willis, of Webster Groves, Missouri; and Ralph, living in Rockford, Illinois.

Frank G. Matteson was educated in the public schools and after leaving the high school secured a position in the First National Bank, spending two or three years as collector. He afterward devoted four years to service as order clerk in the postoffice and next entered the office of the Purington Paving Brick Company as general office boy. His advancement since that day has been continuous. The business was established in East Galesburg in 1890 by D. V. Purington and Asa A. Matteson and was incorporated at that time with D. V. Purington as president, W. S. Purington as vice president and Asa A. Matteson as secretary and treasurer. The business was incorporated with a capital stock of two hundred thousand dollars and was thus continued until 1892. The St. Louis Paving Brick Company was organized in that year with a capital stock of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars and No. 2 plant was built at East Galesburg. In 1893 the companies were merged under the name of the Purington Paving Brick Company and the capital stock was increased to five hundred thousand dollars. At that time D. V. Purington became president; W. S. Purington, vice president and general manager; Asa A. Matteson, treasurer; and Charles H. Chamberlain, secretary. These gentlemen constituted the board of directors together with George C. Prussing, S. S. Kimball, A. W. Vanderveer and William E. Phillips. The business has increased from year to year, enjoying a steady and continuous growth, the output for the first year being fifteen million bricks, while the present output has reached more than one hundred million. Their plant at first contained but one kiln and from that small beginning they have increased their capacity until they now have sixty-four kilns, theirs being the largest plant of the kind in the United States. Their business extends to all parts of the country, their brick being used in paving in Panama; in Memphis, Tennessee; Deadwood, South Dakota; and Duluth and Superior, Wisconsin. The present officers are: F. G. Matteson, president; George C. Prussing, first vice president; C. D. B. Howell, second vice president; C. H. Chamberlain, treasurer; William H. Terwilliger, secretary; W. W. Porter, assistant secretary; W. G. D. Orr, general manager; and E. L. Swett, general superintendent; with D. V. Purington as chairman of the board of directors, which board includes also Messrs. Prussing, Howell, Matteson, Charles H. Chamberlain, William E. Phillips and P. T. Walsh. They handle fifteen thousand car loads of freight in a year, use eighteen car loads of coal per day, employ six hundred men and have two hundred acres in their plant. The United States government has standardized the shale used by this company and the business has grown in volume and importance until it exceeds all other paving brick enterprises of the United States.

On the 19th of October, 1892, occurred the marriage of Mr. Matteson and Miss Daisy L. Lamoreaux, a daughter of Dr. J. M. Lamoreaux, of Galesburg, and their children are: Amy, whose birth occurred at Galesburg on the 22d of December, 1897; Helen, whose natal day was December 27, 1901; and Asa Gardner, who was born May 26, 1911.

Mr. Matteson is a republican in his political views, but the demands of his business have left him no time for office seeking or office holding. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Elks Club, the Loyal Legion, the Galesburg Club and the Country Club. His life is proof of the fact that there is an impossibility of placing fictitious values upon industry, determination and perseverance, but when these qualities are arrayed against competition and the usual obstacles of business life they eventually win success. The experience of Mr. Matteson has been of wide range, as he has progressed from the position of office boy to the presidency of the largest paving-brick manufacturing enterprise of the country.

JOHN HOLAHAN.

John Holahan, who has been engaged in the real-estate business in Galesburg for the past six years, was born in Waukon, Iowa, on the 18th of September, 1871. He is a son of James and Catherine (Fenelon) Holahan, both natives of Ireland, whence they emigrated to the United States during childhood. The father was reared in Connecticut, where he later learned sign and carriage painting. In 1859 he came to Iowa, locating in Waukon, where he met the lady who subsequently became his wife. Here he engaged in the implement business with which he continued to be identified until his death on the 6th of March, 1902, at the age of sixty-four years. He was a communicant of the Roman Catholic church, as is also the mother who still resides in Waukon, and he voted the republican ticket. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Holahan numbered nine, our subject being the third in order of birth. The others are as follows: William J., who was born on June 12, 1868, residing at Mason City, Iowa; Nellie M., the wife of William S. Hart, of Waukon; Maurice F., who was born on the 3d of July, 1873, now residing at Atlanta, Georgia; Thomas J., born March 28, 1875, who is living at Dixon, Illinois; James, born October 11, 1880, who is a resident of Victoria; Anna, who was born June 16, 1884, still at home; Mayme, a Sister in St. Xavier's Convent, Chicago, born July 27, 1886, and Gretta, born March 20, 1894, who is also at home.

Reared at home John Holahan attended the public and Presentation Convent Catholic schools at Waukon in the acquirement of an education. His school days were terminated at the age of sixteen years, when he laid aside his textbooks and entered his father's office, where during the succeeding five years he applied himself intelligently and industriously to acquiring a thorough business training under the capable supervision of his father. Upon attaining his majority it was considered that he was fully qualified to begin working for himself, so he went to Guttenberg, Iowa, and embarked in the implement business. He continued in this at that point for nine years, when he withdrew from commercial activities and went to Cuba, where he remained four years, traveling and dealing in lands. At the end of that time he returned to the United States and in April 1906, he came to Galesburg and engaged in the real-estate business. He was associated with his brother, Thomas J., until 1909, when the latter withdrew from the firm and Mr. Holahan has ever since been alone. In addition to local properties, both city and country, he has large tracts of land for sale in Cuba and also the northwest. Since locating here he has met with good success and now is well established and doing a gratifying amount of business.

Bayfield, Wisconsin, was the scene of the marriage of Mr. Holahan and Miss Lucille Boutin, on the 4th of October, 1905. She was born in Bayfield, on the 25th of July, 1884, and is a daughter of Frank and Louise (Kintz) Boutin, who still reside there. Mrs. Holahan has four sisters and four brothers, and their names and birthdays are as follows: Allan, March 24, 1888; Francis, March 13, 1890; Meta, July 22, 1892; Anna, March 13, 1895; Hiller, November 15, 1898; Dorothy, November 20, 1899; Ruth, February 26, 1902; and Herbert, November 25, 1904. In the paternal line Mrs. Holahan is of French extraction. Her father, however, was born and reared in Montreal, Canada, while the mother was born in Antwerp, Belgium. He came to Bayfield during his early manhood and engaged in the lumber business and he also owned and operated a number of tugs on Lake Superior. He is a man of considerable prominence in his community, giving his political support to the republican party, and has served for two terms as treasurer of the county. Both he and his wife are communicants of the Roman Catholic church, and he also belongs to the Knights of Columbus and the Lumbermen's Association. Mrs. Holahan was reared in Bayfield, but completed her education at St. Mary's school in Prairie du Chien.

The political views of Mr. Holahan coincide with the principles of the republican party, and in matters of faith both he and Mrs. Holahan are Roman Catholics and belong to Corpus Christi parish. He also holds membership in the Knights of Columbus of SS. Vincent and Paul, the Galesburg Club and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Holahan has won favorable recognition in both a business and social way during his residence in Galesburg, and now numbers among its citizens many stanch friends.

JAMES EDWARD HINCHLIFF.

For seventeen years James Edward Hinchliff was well known as a prominent, enterprising and reliable representative of commercial interests in Galesburg, where he conducted a retail lumber business. Moreover, he had a wide acquaintance throughout the county of which he was one of the native sons, his birth having occurred in Rio, July 17, 1853. He came of English ancestry, for both of his parents, James and Betsey Hinchliff, were natives of England, whence they emigrated to America in early life. They were married in the state of New York and in 1852 removed to Illinois, settling in Knox county.

James C. Winchiff

The public schools of this county afforded James E. Hinchliff his early opportunities for acquiring an education and later he continued his studies in Lombard College. He was reared to the occupation of farming and continued to follow it during the early years of his manhood or until 1891, when, believing that he would find a commercial career more congenial and hoping also to find it more profitable, he removed to Galesburg, where the following year he opened a retail lumberyard, continuing that business to the time of his death, which occurred March 28, 1909. In that period he had built up a satisfactory business, his reliable methods, his enterprise and his unfaltering energy being the qualities which served as the foundation for his success.

On the 1st of January, 1880, in Rio, this county, Mr. Hinchliff was united in marriage to Miss Ida M. Woodman, a daughter of David B. and Lourena Woodman. The children born of this marriage are: Everett E., who married Nell Townsend on the 15th of October, 1907; Lulu M., who on the 20th of September, 1911, became the wife of Roy C. Ingersoll; and Ray W. and Grace F., both yet at home with their mother.

Mr. Hinchliff was devoted to his family, his interests centering in his own home, where he was a devoted husband and father and a genial and hospitable host. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and his study of the questions and issues of the day confirmed him in the belief that its principles contained the best elements of good government, but he neither sought nor desired public office as a reward for party fealty. His religious faith was evidenced by the fact that he was a member of the Central Congregational church, to the teachings of which he was ever loyal and devoted, making his a manhood that measured up to the highest standards and won for him the admiration, high regard and trust of all with whom he came in contact.

RANSOM C. HUNT.

Ransom C. Hunt is actively connected with a profession which has important bearing upon the progress and stable prosperity of the community and in the practice of law, where advancement depends entirely upon individual merit and ability, he has made continuous progress, his careful preparation of his cases and his thorough knowledge of the law giving him a power in the courts that enables him to win many favorable verdicts.

Mr. Hunt was born on a farm two and a half miles southwest of Burlington, Iowa, January 24, 1844, his parents being John B. and Mary (Love) Hunt, natives of Illinois and Virginia respectively. The former was a son of John Beal Hunt, who was born in Maryland and made farming his life occupation. He married a Miss Bartlett and they removed from Tennessee to Illinois, establishing their home within the borders of this state ere it was admitted to the Union. For a time they were residents of Bond county and afterward removed to McDonough county. In 1833 they went to the territory of Iowa, where Mr. Hunt secured a tract of wild land in the central part of the state and his five sons, Charles W., Jesse, Samuel, Clayborn and John B., all had land around him so that the family took active and prominent part in the agricultural development of that section. There were six daughters in the family, Martha, Lydia, Mary Ann, Esther, Louisa and Sarah. The maternal grandfather of Ransom C. Hunt was David Love, a native of Virginia, who also made farming his life work. Removing westward with his family, they became pioneer residents of a district, southwest of Burlington, Iowa, where they spent their remaining days, Mr. Love passing away at the age of eighty-five and his wife when eighty-eight years of age. Their children were Wesley, Rodney, Joshua, James, Mary and Elizabeth.

John B. Hunt, father of Ransom C. Hunt, was a young lad when he accompanied his parents to Iowa. He was reared to the occupation of farming and continued to engage in tilling the soil until 1849, when, attracted by the discovery of gold in California, he crossed the plains to the Pacific coast. Not winning the fortune which he had hoped to gain, he returned in 1851 and again took up his abode on the farm in Des Moines county, Iowa, which he had left when he started for the west. There he engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1856, when he removed to Bushnell, Illinois, where he conducted a lumber business until 1863 and likewise filled the position of postmaster. He next removed to Macomb, Illinois, where he engaged in the grain business until June, 1865. At that time the family came to Galesburg, where he died November 14, 1904, at the age of eighty-four years and six months, while his wife's death occurred in 1887, when she was sixty-five years of age. She was a faithful member of the Methodist church. Their family numbered a son and two daughters: Ransom C.; Clara, the deceased wife of W. T. Jelliff; and Lois V., the deceased wife of Jesse Pickerell.

Ransom C. Hunt is the only surviving member of the family. He was reared on his father's farm in Iowa and during that period attended the district schools and also the public schools of Burlington and the old Denmark (Ia.) Academy. He went with his father to Bushnell in 1856 and there worked in the lumberyard and also attended school. Subsequently he became a student in the Lombard University of Galesburg. He continued with his father in the lumber trade in Bushnell until the father removed to Macomb, when he became a student in the law office of Hon. J. C. Thompson. In the fall of 1863 the family removed to Galesburg but Ransom C. Hunt and his father remained in Macomb until 1865, when they joined the others in Galesburg, and the subject of this review entered the law office of the Hon. A. C. Mason, who directed his reading until his admission to the bar in June, 1866. In 1869 he formed a partnership with the latter preceptor but for the past twenty years has engaged in practice alone. He has ever been devotedly attached to his profession, systematic and methodical in habit, sober and discreet in judgment, diligent in research and conscientious in the discharge of every duty—qualities which have enabled him to take high rank among the representatives of the Galesburg bar.

On the 1st of May, 1879, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hunt and Miss Irene Johnson, a native of St. Paul, Minnesota, and a daughter of S. F. and Hannah (Neeley) Johnson, who were originally from New York and became early residents of Galesburg. Later they removed to St. Paul, where the father conducted a shoe business, and for two years he was also a resident of Grinnell, Iowa. They then returned to Galesburg, where they still reside. In their family were seven children, Irene, Mary, Harry M., Guy B., Charles N., Mabel F. and Blanche. The daughter Mabel is now the widow of E. A. Davis. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Hunt were James and Sabrina Neeley, who were among "the colony" that settled Galesburg. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have become the parents of two daughters and two sons: Beulah M., the wife of Harold M. Holland, of Galesburg; Albert V., who was educated in Lombard College; Harry C., who is in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company; and Florence I., who is attending school. The parents are members of the Central Congregational church and in its work take deep and helpful interest. Mr. Hunt gives his political allegiance to the democratic party but the only office that he has ever held was that of police magistrate, in which position he served from 1889 until 1896. He has always preferred to concentrate his energies upon his profession and few lawyers have made a more lasting impression upon the bar of the county both for legal ability of a high order and for the individuality of a personal character which impresses itself upon a community.

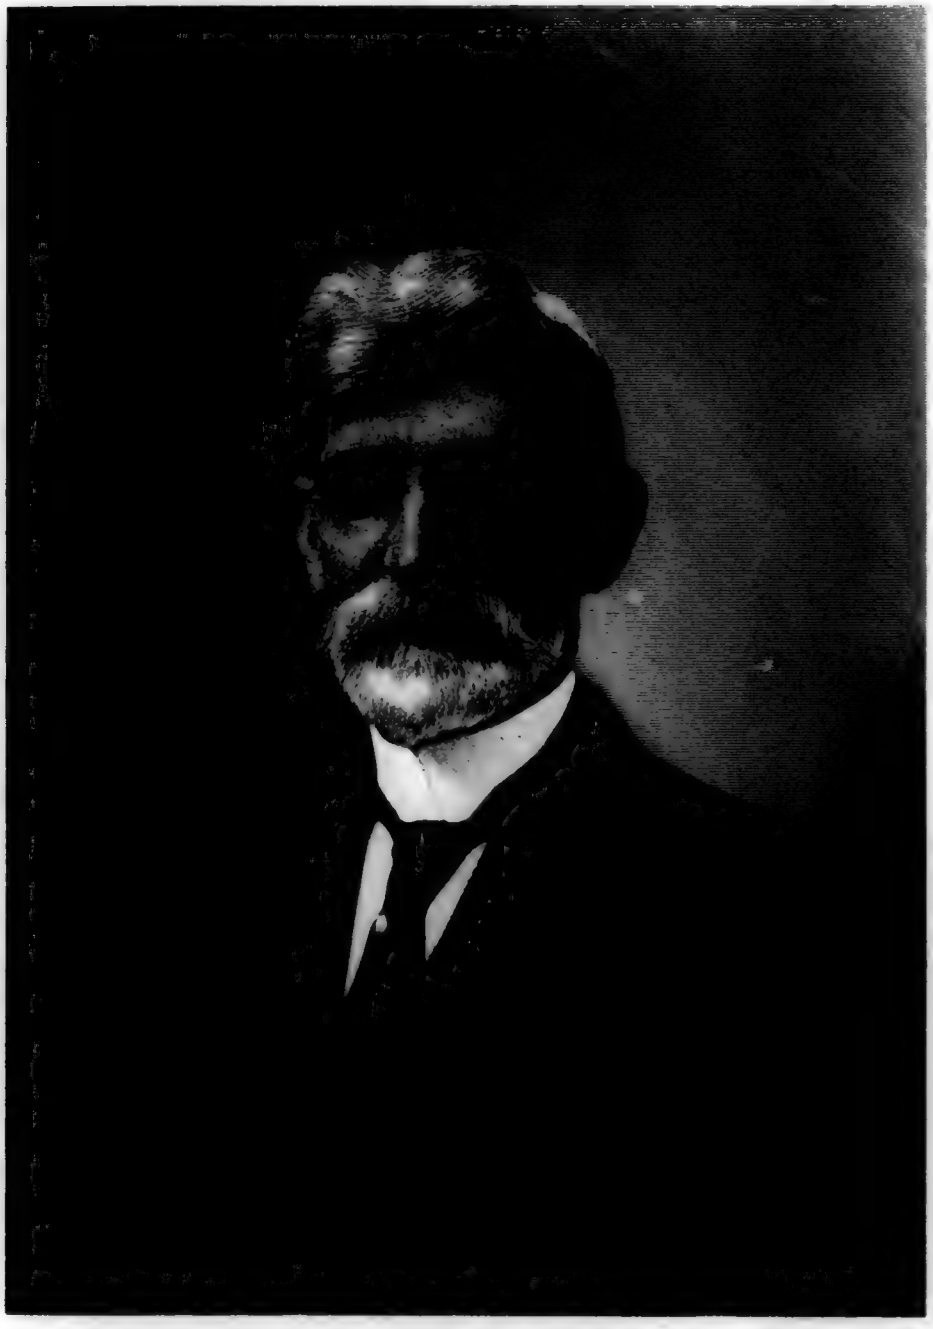
IRA S. CALLENDER.

Ira S. Callender, president of the Glenwood Ice & Coal Company and thus prominent in the business circles of the city as head of one of the important industrial projects here, was born in Peoria, Illinois, July 31, 1857, a son of Isaac and Sarah A. (Smith) Callender. His father was born in Henry county, Kentucky, September 10, 1833, and for many years followed farming in Illinois but at length retired from active life and removed to Galesburg, where he passed away September 10, 1907. He always voted with the republican party and filled the office of county supervisor, the duties of which he discharged with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He held membership in the Central Congregational church, to which his widow still belongs. She was born April 13, 1833, and yet makes her home in Galesburg. In their family were eight children: Ira S., of this review; James J., who is a resident of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Albert B., living at Matehuala, Mexico; William H., of Galesburg; Adella, the wife of Dr. T. F. Clark, of Kansas City, Missouri; Lilly Belle and Frank Edwin, both residing in Galesburg, Illinois; and Mary Catherine, who is the wife of A. E. Wells, of Galesburg.

Ira S. Callender, whose name introduces this record, pursued his education in the public schools of Geneseo, Illinois, and remained upon his father's farm until twenty-one years of age. He made good progress in his studies and when a young man began teaching school, which profession he successfully followed for a time, displaying ability in imparting readily and clearly to others the knowledge which he had acquired. In 1880 he went to Nebraska, where he divided his time between general agricultural pursuits and teaching school for three years. On the expiration of that period he returned to Galesburg in December, 1883, and purchased an interest in the ice business with which he has since been connected. The business was established in 1885 under the name of the Glenwood Ice Company handling ice only, when in 1891 the scope of the business was extended to include the sale of coal as well. In 1907 the present firm style of the Glenwood Ice & Coal Company was assumed and the business was reincorporated. The officers in 1892 were: John Robson, president; A. D. Shults, treasurer; and Ira S. Callender, secretary. At the present writing Mr.



Callender is president, A. E. Wells, secretary and C. S. Burnside, treasurer. The business is incorporated with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars and the company owns well equipped ice houses on the lakes east of Galesburg and at New Boston and Moline, Illinois. The coal trade is also an important branch of the business, coal being sold at retail. The enterprise has had a continuous, steady and gratifying growth, as is indicated by the fact that in the first year of its existence its sales amounted to twenty-five hundred tons of ice, while at the present writing the sales have reached fifty thousand tons of ice annually. In the first year but two wagons were used in delivery, while in the present year eleven wagons were used and forty men are employed outside of the office in Knox county, ten of the number being at New Boston. A large part of the ice harvested is furnished to dealers in other towns surrounding Galesburg, and to the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The company also handles wood, kindling and oil, and the business is a most gratifying and profitable one. Its success is undoubtedly due in large measure to the honorable, straightforward business policy that is ever followed as well as to the progressive methods instituted by the president and his associate officers.

On the 2d of February, 1882, Mr. Callender was united in marriage to Miss Alice Bassford, a daughter of Samuel and Mary Antoinette (Lane) Bassford, of Brooklyn, New York. Their children are: Ira I., now deceased; Wallace V., who is living in Pasadena, California; Alice B., who is the wife of Archer Laurence, of Plainfield, New Jersey; Ida E., the wife of Hans John Von Hangen, of Matehuala, Mexico; Gladys M. and Ruth S., both at home.

While Mr. Callender has never been an active party worker, he does not fail to make his way to the polls and cast a ballot in support of the principles of the republican party, for he regards this as the duty as well as the privilege of every American citizen. He is prominent in the Elks lodge of Galesburg and is serving as one of its trustees but his position is preeminently that of an active, enterprising business man who is ever alert and determined and who brooks no obstacles in the path to success that can be overcome by persistent effort and indefatigable energy.

LAURENCE R. RYAN, M. D.

Laurence R. Ryan was born in Pontiac, Michigan, February 27, 1858. He is descended from old Irish stock. His father was Bernard Ryan and his mother Maria C. Kelly. Both parents were born near Boyle, in County Roscommon, Ireland. They came to this country in the same ship and were married in 1848, in Detroit, Michigan. Twelve children were born to them and Dr. Ryan was the seventh. Bernard Ryan was a boiler maker by trade and held the responsible position of foreman at the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad shops in Galesburg for many years. He died in Galesburg, April 20, 1883, at the age of sixty-one. The mother was a devout Catholic and a home-loving woman. She lived for the church and her family. She died twenty-five years after her husband in the consciousness of having spent an absolutely pure Christian life, and in the eighty-sixth year of her age.

Dr. Ryan attended the public schools in Aurora and Galesburg until he was thirteen years of age, at which time he was apprenticed to the boiler-maker trade under his father in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy shops. He worked at the trade almost continuously and for ten years, rising from the position of rivet heater to that of foreman before he was twenty-five years of age.

During the time he was working in the shops he realized the necessity of securing an education, so he attended the business college and night school, which was then held in the Churchill school building. Having the ambition to rise higher than the position of boiler-maker foreman, but seeing no possibility of advancement along the lines he had started, he finally gave up the shop work and entered Knox College, determined to graduate and finally to enter his chosen profession, the practice of medicine. Because of the large family, the father had to support, he was forced to rely on his own resources and finance himself. This he did by working during the summer at his trade and had the pleasure of going through Knox College and Jefferson College without receiving a gratuity from anyone. While in college he entered into all the activities and besides having a high grade in scholarship, was active in athletics and on two occasions received prizes for excellence in gymnastic work. He graduated in 1886 and had the honor of being one of the commencement speakers.

Two years before his graduation in Knox College, he registered for the study of medicine in the office of Drs. Aldrich and Wilson, so that by the time he graduated, he was well equipped for entering the medical school. He entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1886 and after a severe course had the honor of securing the first prize of one hundred dollars for excellence of scholarship and best theses, graduating April 5, 1888.

Immediately after graduation he returned to Galesburg and entered into the practice of medicine with Drs. Aldrich and Wilson, securing a lucrative practice from the start. After a year in general practice he was tendered the position of medical examiner for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with control of the whole Galesburg division, which then comprised five hundred miles. This position he accepted and held for three years. With the ambition to do better still spurring him on, he left the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy after a service of three years and went to Europe to study his chosen specialty, the eye, ear, nose and throat. He was a student in the Berlin University, besides having private instruction, and also took a course in England, graduating from the London Post Graduate School in 1892. Since his return from Europe in 1892, Dr. Ryan has devoted himself exclusively to the practice of his specialty in Galesburg.

For the last twenty years Dr. Ryan has enjoyed a most excellent practice, drawing patronage from a radius of fifty miles, and has done much to further the interests of medicine. He is a great believer in medical organization and cooperation for the good of the profession and, therefor, belongs to numerous medical societies and attends many conventions. He was one of the organizers of the first Galesburg Medical Society and was its first secretary. He was also one of the organizers of the Knox County Medical Society and became its president in 1903. He filled at different times every official position in the Military Tract Medical Society and was also the president of that society. He has prepared and read many scientific papers in the various societies from the city to the American Medical Association. He was regular and special pension examining surgeon for many years and is now the official oculist for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He served on the staff of the Galesburg Cottage Hospital for several years.

Dr. Ryan is at present a member of the Galesburg Medical Society, Knox County Medical Society, Military Tract Medical Society, Tri State Society, Chicago Ophthalmological Society, Illinois State Medical Society, American Academy of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology, and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Ryan has never courted political honors, but was a candidate for elector on the gold democratic ticket in 1896. He has never devoted much time to society or social affairs, secret societies or clubs. His interest has all been along the line of scientific study and travel. He has, however, for many years been a member of the Galesburg Business Men's Club, and was a director for six years, from 1900 to 1906. He has been a member of the Elk's organization since 1904. He has travelled extensively. Besides visiting all parts of the United States and Mexico, in 1898 he took a trip around the world, going an unusual way. On this journey he visited Australia, New Zealand, Samoa and the Sandwich Islands. Recently he has taken another extended trip from Galesburg to New York city, thence by steamer to Colon, across the isthmus to the city of Panama by rail, and finally up the coast of Central America and Mexico to San Francisco by steamer. On this trip he took occasion to examine carefully the excavations and locks of the Panama Canal which is reaching completion.

Dr. Ryan was married in 1889 to Margaret S. McChesney, also a graduate of Knox College. Seven children were born to them, five of whom still survive, namely: Helen Margaret Ryan, Marion Cecilia Ryan, Robert Laurence Ryan, Harriet Ewing Ryan and Dorrance Bernard Ryan. The first three are students in Knox College, while the other two are in the public schools of Galesburg, and all are unusually capable.

DE FORREST SEACORD.

De Forrest Seacord needs no introduction to the readers of this volume for he has been a lifelong resident of Knox county and his important business interests have made him widely known. He was born in Oneida in 1862 and after attending the public schools became a student in Knox College and afterward attended college at Racine, Wisconsin. Regarding his education complete, he then turned his attention to the business of importing Norman horses and owned and conducted extensive stables in Galesburg for a number of years. Later he turned his attention to street-railway interests of which he was superintendent for nine years or until the company sold out to the McKinley interests. At that time Mr. Seacord went to Springfield, Illinois, and was superintendent of construction for the McKinley lines in the building of the electric road from Springfield to St. Louis, a mammoth and important undertaking which he successfully executed. He then returned to Galesburg and later engaged in the sale of motor cars. He has secured an extensive business in this connection, selling a large number of cars annually.

On the 15th of October, 1884, De Forrest Seacord was married to Miss Alice Updyke, and unto them were born two children, Marie and Wilkins, the latter being now associated with his father in business. The family is prominent socially and their own home is justly celebrated for its attractive hospitality. Mr. Seacord belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and is a charter member of the Country Club. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and as a public-spirited citizen he is widely known, his aid and cooperation being a tangible factor for success in the conduct of many important public enterprises. In his business he has so promoted his interests as to gain for him a prominent position among the substantial residents of Galesburg.

PROFESSOR LOREN R. WITHERELL.

Unquestionably one of the most versatile and highly cultured residents of Knoxville is Professor Loren R. Witherell, who is not only a scholar and writer of more than local reputation, but an able attorney and a successful lecturer, in addition to which he has taken out patents on twenty-five different articles, all of which are in common use. He was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, on the 10th of May, 1843, and is a son of Ephraim H. and Rebecca (Donaldson) Witherell. The father was born in Vermont, on May 1, 1816, his parents being Asaph and Johanna (White) Witherell, natives of Massachusetts. Asaph Witherell was the first manufacturer in America of the cut nail, in the making of which he engaged in his native state for many years. Together with his wife and family in 1818 he started westward to Pennsylvania. They made the journey in the winter, and as Lake Erie was frozen they started to go from New York to Pennsylvania on the ice, but as it was thin in places they deemed the crossing unsafe, and returned to the shore. When they reached the northwest corner of Pennsylvania, they went south for about fifteen miles to the vicinity of Wattsburg, spending the night at the home of James Donaldson. Ephraim Witherell at that time was a lad of two years, while his future wife was a babe of one day. As his parents located in the vicinity, Ephraim Witherell there grew to manhood and learned the carpenter's trade. At the age of twenty-six years with his family he removed to Washington county, Indiana, where he engaged in contracting and building for five years. At the end of that time they crossed the prairies in a wagon to Peoria county, Illinois, residing there until the spring of 1851, when they came to Knoxville. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania, on the 5th of March, 1818, her parents being James and Mary (Moore) Donaldson, who were also natives of the Keystone state. In both the paternal and maternal lines Professor Witherell is descended from old colonial families, both of his grandfathers being veterans of the war of 1812, while some of his mother's ancestors located in this country more than two hundred and fifty years ago. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Witherell numbered seven, the four eldest having been born before they located in Knox county. In order of birth they are as follows: Ursula, who died at the age of twenty years; Loren R., our subject; George, who is a farmer, residing a mile south of Knoxville; and Eri A., who is in the lecture field on a western circuit and is also engaged in teaching; Willard W., who engages in the real-estate business and also in building and contracting in Visalia, California; Silas, who is secretary and treasurer of a manufacturing company in Springfield, Missouri; and Oscar C., who was engaged in the drug business in Knoxville, but has now passed away, his demise occurring at the age of thirty-eight years.

Professor Witherell received his introduction to the elements of English learning in the common schools of Peoria county, which he attended for one year. His education was continued in the public schools of Knoxville until he was eighteen years of age when he was sent to a private school in Erie county, Pennsylvania, where he studied for two winters. He was a brilliant student, possessing the retentive mind, strong powers of concentration and rapid reasoning faculties that mark the natural scholar. Study was to him not a hardship, but a joy and he applied himself so attentively to his work that he made the best record of any pupil in the school, standing at the head of his classes in every subject. Upon the completion of his course he returned to his Illinois home and subsequently entered Lombard College. He matriculated in the latter institution in 1864, and there pursued special studies for three years, making a most creditable record. Having decided to take up the study of law, at the expiration of that time he entered the office of Willoughby and Grant in Galesburg, where for three years he diligently applied himself to the mastery of the principles of jurisprudence. He was admitted to the bar in 1871, and immediately thereafter opened an office in Rock Island county, where he engaged in practice for several years. He was meeting with most excellent success and was building up a very good clientage when trouble with his eyes compelled him to abandon his profession. In order to restore his sight and improve his health generally he turned his attention to fruit-raising and for thirty years devoted his summers to this occupation. In the winters he lectured on astronomy, geology and natural history in different schools, colleges and societies of the northwest, addressing more than a thousand different audiences. Although he still occasionally delivers a lecture, he has not followed the work regularly for about ten years, having withdrawn from it in 1901. Much of his time now is devoted to writing for the current magazines, while he also contributes editorials to various newspapers in both Iowa and Illinois. He has had more than one hundred of his poems published in papers throughout the country and in 1877 he published a history of John Brown in the Davenport Gazette. Not only does Professor Witherell possess unusual literary ability, but rare mechanical skill and he has always devoted much of his time to perfecting various contrivances upon which he holds patents. His first invention was a sugar-cane stripper, which he patented in 1865, when he was only twenty-two years of age. Later he patented a spiral gate and door spring, that is now used all over the world, while to him must be given the credit for the rubber stamp and printing wheels, which were placed on the market in 1866. He also invented the first computing postal scale, and he likewise holds the patent on a dusting brush and window fastener, as well as a clothes wringer and corn popper, and a number of other useful articles.

On the 5th of March, 1868, Professor Witherell was united in marriage to Miss Lottie A. Anderson, the ceremony being performed in Knoxville. Mrs. Witherell was born in Sweden, in 1852, and is a daughter of Swan and Mary Anderson, who emigrated to the United States and located in Knoxville during the early days. The parents are now both deceased and Mrs. Witherell passed away, on March 13, 1909. None of the children born of this marriage lived and Professor and Mrs. Witherell adopted two children, Arthur L. and Augusta. The former is now married and residing in Seattle, Washington, where he is superintendent of a large printing and publishing company. Augusta is the wife of Robert McCall of Davenport, Iowa. Professor Witherell has resided in the house he now occupies for fourteen years, the place being known as "Shady Hill," because it contains the largest and oldest tree in Knox county, which stands in the front yard. The kitchen of this house was built by Professor Witherell and it is a most interesting room. It is constructed from wood taken from a number of historical houses in Knoxville, the old Hebbard House providing the door. This was taken from the room that was occupied by Abraham Lincoln, on the night of October 6, 1858, the time he and Douglas held their memorable debate.

In addition to all of his other talents, Professor Witherell is endowed with considerable musical ability and he has devised a number of clever musical instruments of real artistic value from squashes, gourds and other vegetables. Professor Witherell has been an ardent curio collector for over fifty years, and has an immense and beautiful collection, handsomely arranged in cases, which he has named "The Old Curiosity Shop" and which he will locate permanently in some public park, where it will be a permanent attraction and of great value to the public for years to come. He has always been too deeply engrossed in the pursuit of his various personal interests to devote much attention to outside affairs, so has very few public connections. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to the Knoxville camp, one of the oldest in the county, which is his only fraternal connection. Professor Witherell has a wide and favorable acquaintance among the citizens of Knox county, where he has spent practically his entire life and is recognized as a man of rare worth and ability.

WILLIAM D. FLEHARTY.

Among the worthy citizens of Galesburg death has claimed, yet whose memory is enshrined in the hearts of those who knew them, is numbered William D. Fleharty. His was a noble character and his high ideals and lofty principles were manifest in the active part which he bore in church work and his unselfish devotion thereto. He was the first white child born in North Henderson township, Mercer county, Illinois, his natal day being October 4, 1834. His parents, Govert S. and Margaret H. Fleharty, were pioneer settlers of the state, casting in their lot with the early residents of Mercer county, when its settlements were few and when the work of development and progress seemed scarcely begun. The family lived upon a farm and it was on the old homestead that William D. Fleharty spent his youthful days, experiencing many of the hardships and privations of pioneer life, yet finding in these conditions the things which tested the mettle of his own character and constituted the foundation of his later successful career and nobility. Throughout the period of his minority he assisted in developing the home farm and in 1860 he started out in life independently at the time of his marriage to Miss Mary C. Petrie, a daughter of William Petrie, of New Windsor, Illinois. They began their domestic life upon a farm in Henry county, Illinois, near Alpha, and there lived for about nine years, when, in 1869, they removed to New Windsor, where Mr. Fleharty turned his attention to the grain trade, meeting with success in that business during the twenty years which he devoted to the work. After the death of his wife he removed to Galesburg and in 1890 was again married, his second union being with Emma A. Gordon, a daughter of William H. and Martha Gordon, pioneers of Mercer county, Pennsylvania, who had also become a resident of Galesburg in 1890. There was one daughter by his first marriage, Anne.

Mr. Fleharty's influence was always found on the side of progress and improvement, especially along intellectual and moral lines. He was an active supporter of the schools of New Windsor and served in official connection therewith. In politics he was a stanch republican and filled the office of supervisor in Mercer county. He became one of the charter members of the New Windsor Congregational church, was superintendent of its Sunday school for a number of years and for a long time carried almost the entire work of the church on his shoulders. After removing to Galesburg he placed his membership in the Old First church, which later became the Central church, and continued equally faithful to its interests and active in its support and work. Men came to know that what William D. Fleharty promised he would do, that his word was as good as any bond solemnized by signature or seal and that in every relation of life he sought to follow the Golden Rule. "Not the good that comes to us but the good that comes to the world through us" is the measure of our success, and judged by this standard the life of William D. Fleharty was a most successful one.

BOANNERGES ELY.

Boannerges Ely, a resident of Knox county since 1846, was for many years successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and is now living retired at his home in Wataga. He was born December 21, 1821, in Cumberland Gap, Claiborne county, Tennessee. His father, Solomon Ely, came in 1834, at the close of the Black Hawk war, to DeWitt county, Illinois, where he farmed until his death in 1865, when sixty-nine years old. He was an elder in the Christian church and in his politics was a stanch democrat until the time of Lincoln, when he joined the ranks of the republican party and remained a loyal member till the last. He was married to Rachel Turner, whose death occurred in 1848 at the age of forty-five. There were ten children in the family. The living are: Susanna, the wife of James Stewart, residing in Kansas; and Boannerges, the subject of this sketch, who was the youngest of the family. The grandparents on the father's side were Isaac and Katherine Ely, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Germany. The grandparents on the mother's side were William and Susan Turner, both natives of Virginia.

When a boy, Boannerges Ely attended the district school and after school helped his father about the farm, beginning his apprenticeship at farming at the tender age of seven. When old enough to do a man's share of work he farmed in the employ of others, working for eight dollars a month. At the age of twenty-one he began to farm on his own account and in 1846 came to Knox county and bought land in Sparta township. Beginning with one hundred and twenty acres, he increased his holdings by additional purchases until he now owns three hundred and ninety acres. He was very successful both in general farming and in stock-raising through progressive methods, and the handsome farm which he improved and operated for many years proves his efficiency of management. He retired some years ago, renting his land from which he enjoys a comfortable income.

The marriage of Mr. Ely and Miss Mary Duvall, who was born in Kentucky, July 7, 1834, occurred November 3, 1850. Her father, Thomas Duvall, was a native of Bath county, Kentucky, born February 28, 1802, a son of James and Judith (Jennings) Duvall. His father was a soldier in the War of 1812. Thomas Duvall became a resident of Illinois in 1835, settling in Warren county. The following year he removed to Henderson township, Knox county, where he engaged in farming on a large scale, owning at one time two thousand acres of land. On the 22d of April, 1822, he was married to Miss Nancy Shumate, a native of Virginia, born August 19, 1804. Mr. Duvall died in the fall of 1890, on September 25, and his wife passed away March 2, 1888. Mrs. Ely was one of ten children, of whom five are still living. There were three children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Boannerges Ely: Nancy, the widow of John Deming, who lives at Wataga, Illinois; William, who married Belle McGinnis, and is a farmer in North Dakota; and Ella, deceased, who was the wife of Samuel Temple and the mother of two children.

Mr. and Mrs. Ely are devout members of the Christian church at Wataga, of which Mr. Ely was one of the charter members. He is a republican and has held office on the town board for eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Ely have led a happy, peaceful life. Being among the oldest residents of this section of the country, they are well known to many people and have a host of friends. Mrs. Ely still passes an occasional hour at her old spinning wheel that she used when a girl and in the still silence broken only by her rythmic tread she lives over again events that happened in the days of long ago when Knox county was a region of prairie land and neighbors lived many miles apart.

GUSTAVE WENZELMANN.

The name of Gustave Wenzelmann figures prominently in connection with the industrial and manufacturing interests of Galesburg, in which city he took up his abode in 1904. He now has an extensive manufacturing plant, which stands in the midst of sixteen acres of ground, affording him excellent shipping facilities over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and Santa Fe Railroads. In business management he displays all those requirements which are essential to success and has gradually worked his way upward to a creditable and gratifying position.

Mr. Wenzelmann was born in Neunkhausen, Germany, on the 8th of March, 1867, a son of Ludwig and Rosina (Schneider) Wenzelmann, who were also natives of Neunkhausen, the father having been born on the 7th of January, 1838, and the mother on the 10th of October of the same year. Ludwig Wenzelmann was a cabinetmaker and sawmill owner and continued in business in his native country until 1882, when he came to the United States, settling in Kankakee, Illinois, where he followed his trade. He lived a life of usefulness and activity, his labors being terminated only in death, on the 17th of May, 1910. For a considerable period he had survived his wife, who died in 1886. Both were members of the German Evangelical church and his political allegiance was given the democratic party. In their family were three children: Alwina and Bertha, both now deceased; and Gustave.

The last named pursued his education in Germany, becoming a gymnasium student, and in the high school of Kankakee he continued his studies following the arrival of the family in America. After putting aside his text-books he secured employment in a lumberyard and store at Kankakee in the capacity of bookkeeper and later he utilized his earnings in establishing a general merchandise store at Missal, Illinois, embarking in business there on his own account in 1884. From the beginning he enjoyed a good trade and continued in active connection with this commercial interest for a considerable period, also serving as postmaster. In 1895, however, he disposed of his store and removed to Streator, Illinois, where he turned his attention to manufacturing, being thus active in the business affairs of that place until 1904, when he came to Galesburg and built the plant which he is now operating. He manufactures portable elevators, hardware specialties, power wash machines, vacuum cleaning plants, electric light outfits for farm houses and general labor-saving devices as well as gas engines and he also has a small piano factory. There is also a well equipped chemical laboratory connected with the establishment. The business is conducted under the name of the Wenzelmann Manufacturing Company and was incorporated in 1899, with Gustave Wenzelmann as the president, Mrs. Wenzelmann as vice president and E. H. Overholt as secretary and treasurer. Employment is furnished for many people and the company owns sixteen acres of ground adjoining the tracks of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and Santa Fe Railroads. The building covers eighty-three thousand square feet of floor space and is splendidly equipped for the different lines of manufacture there conducted. All departments of the business are well organized and, keeping in close touch with the trade, Mr. Wenzelmann understands the demands of the public and the needs of the times and so conducts his business as to meet these.

Mr. Wenzelmann has been married twice. In the spring of 1892 he wedded Miss Florence Esther Powell, a daughter of Rev. A. B. and Mary (Haffner) Powell, of Missal, Illinois. They became the parents of four children, Rosa, Naomi, Jessie and Maxwell, all at home. The wife and mother passed away June 22, 1907, and on the 12th of August, 1908, Mr. Wenzelmann wedded Miss Marion Rees, a daughter of David and Mary Ann Rees, of Galesburg. There is one child of this marriage, Ann. Both wives of Mr. Wenzelmann were successful schoolteachers prior to their marriage. In politics he is a republican and has served as school director of the first ward but has never sought nor desired office in recognition of his party fealty. He belongs to the Galesburg

Club and to Grace Episcopal church, of which he is a vestryman. While he is winning success in his business undertakings, his interests are not confined by his manufacturing activities but extend beyond to the broader and more general interests of life, he being ever recognized as a progressive citizen whose cooperation in public affairs marks him as a valued resident of Galesburg.

CHARLES MILLER.

Charles Miller, a prominent contractor and builder residing at No. 1007 North Cedar street in Galesburg, has made his home in this city since coming to the United States in 1887. He has been continuously identified with building interests for the past third of a century and many of the most important structures of Galesburg stand as monuments to his skill and ability. His birth occurred in Kent county, England, on the 3d of November, 1862, his parents being William John George and Emma Sarah (King) Miller, who were likewise natives of that country. The paternal grandfather was also born in England. Both he and his wife attained a ripe old age and reared a large family of children, including the following named: William John George, Edward and Susie. George King, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was likewise a native of the Merrie Isle. Both he and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Emma Allen, were well advanced in years when called to their final rest. Their children were as follows: Emma Sarah, Anna, M. H., Susanna, George and Charles.

William J. G. Miller, the father of Charles Miller, was a job master and liveryman in Walmer, England. His demise occurred in 1903, when he had attained the age of sixty-four years, while his wife was called to her final rest in 1907 at the age of sixty-eight. They were faithful members of the Church of England. Unto them were born seven sons and four daughters, as follows: Emma Mary Ann, who is a resident of Walmer, Kent, England; John William George, also living at that place; Charles, of this review; James, who makes his home in St. Louis; George Allen, who is deceased; Herbert Edward, of London, England; Percy, residing in Australia; Frederick, of Kent; Susanna Frances, the wife of James Grew, of Croydon, England; and two daughters, who died in infancy.

Charles Miller was reared and educated in his native county. When a youth of fourteen he put aside his text-books and was bound out to a lawyer that he might learn the trade of a builder, which he has followed continuously since 1877. In 1887 he emigrated to the United States and took up his abode in Galesburg, Illinois, where he has remained to the present time. Many of the prominent structures of the city were erected by him, among them being the public library; the Young Men's Christian Association, the building of which he superintended; the First National Bank; the People's Trust & Savings Bank; the Holmes building; the quarters of the Lass & Larson Company and the O. T. Johnson Company; and the power house of the People's Traction Company. He has likewise erected hundreds of residences and is frequently called in consultation by other builders. In addition to his extensive and important interests as a contractor and builder he is a stockholder in the Lass & Larson Wall Paper Company. Mr. Miller carries forward to completion whatever he undertakes, having a resolute spirit and strong determination that enables him to overcome all difficulties and obstacles and make steady progress toward the goal of prosperity.

On the 2d of October, 1884, Mr. Miller was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Lass Spinner, a native of Deal, Kent county, England, and a daughter of Henry Clement and Elizabeth Ann (Lass) Spinner, who were also born in that country. The father passed away at the early age of thirty-two years, while the mother died at the age of fifty-six. Henry C. Spinner was a dairy merchant. Unto him and his wife were born six children, namely: William H., Ellen, Elizabeth, Fannie M., and two who died in early life. Richard Spinner, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Miller, was a gentleman farmer. To him and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Stokes, were born the following children: Henry, Susan, Fannie, Mary Ann and Jennie. William and Sarah (Eastes) Lass, the maternal grandparents of Mrs. Miller, had thirteen children, of whom the following are known: Frank, Elizabeth, Nora, Grove, Ebenezer, William, Loremia, John, Thomas, Mary and Sarah. Charles Miller, our subject, and Mrs. Miller were the parents of nine children, as follows: Harry William, a builder and farmer of Canada; Clarence and George, who died in infancy; Herbert L., a student; Ethel, at home; Clement, who is deceased; Ruth and Elizabeth, who are under the parental roof; and Emory G., who has passed away.

In politics Mr. Miller is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party. At the present time he is serving as alderman of the first precinct in the third ward. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Alpha Lodge, No. 155, A. F. & A. M.; Galesburg Chapter, R. A. M.; Galesburg Commandery, No. 8, K. T.; Knoxville Council, R. & S. M.; and Mohammed Temple of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Galesburg lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He belongs to the Galesburg Club and made the second subscription for the erection of a club building. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Central Congregational church, to which his wife likewise belongs. The circle of their friends is almost coextensive with the circle of their acquaintances and all who know them entertain for them the warmest esteem and regard.

EDGAR J. LOCKWOOD.

Edgar J. Lockwood, who is living in Knoxville at the age of eighty-eight years, has devoted the greater part of his life to spreading the gospel as a minister of the Baptist church. He was born in Plattsburg, New York, on June 30, 1823, and is a son of Sheldon and Parthenia (Clark) Lockwood. His father was a native of New Milford, Connecticut, his birth occurring on the 20th of November, 1789, while his mother was born in Hartford, New York, on the 1st of September, 1795. Left an orphan in his early childhood at the age of seven years Sheldon Lockwood was bound out to a hatter in Connecticut. He also learned the furrier's trade, continuing to follow both occupations in his native state until 1812, when he enlisted in the army for seven years' service and participated in the second war with Great Britain. After the close of hostilities he located in Plattsburg, New York, where he established a furrier shop and also engaged in the manufacture of hats until 1825. Disposing of his business he then came west with his family, stopping for a time in Chicago, but later went to Ottawa, whence he subsequently removed to Lewiston. He resided there for several years then went to Warren county, purchasing some land in the vicinity of Berwick, that he cultivated for many years. There he passed away on the 21st of May, 1851, but the mother survived until January 21, 1889, her death occurring in Galesburg, and was laid to rest beside her husband in the cemetery at Berwick, Warren county. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood numbered the following children, all of whom are deceased with the exception of our subject. In order of birth they are as follows: Melissa, who married Erskine Wilbur; Edgar J., our subject; Rachel, the wife of Daniel Belden; Catherine; Emily E., who for nineteen years was a teacher in the public schools of Galesburg; Alva C.; Ira W. and Mason M., who were twins; Henrietta; Jane E., the wife of S. P. Phelps, of Monmouth; and Mary Louisa.

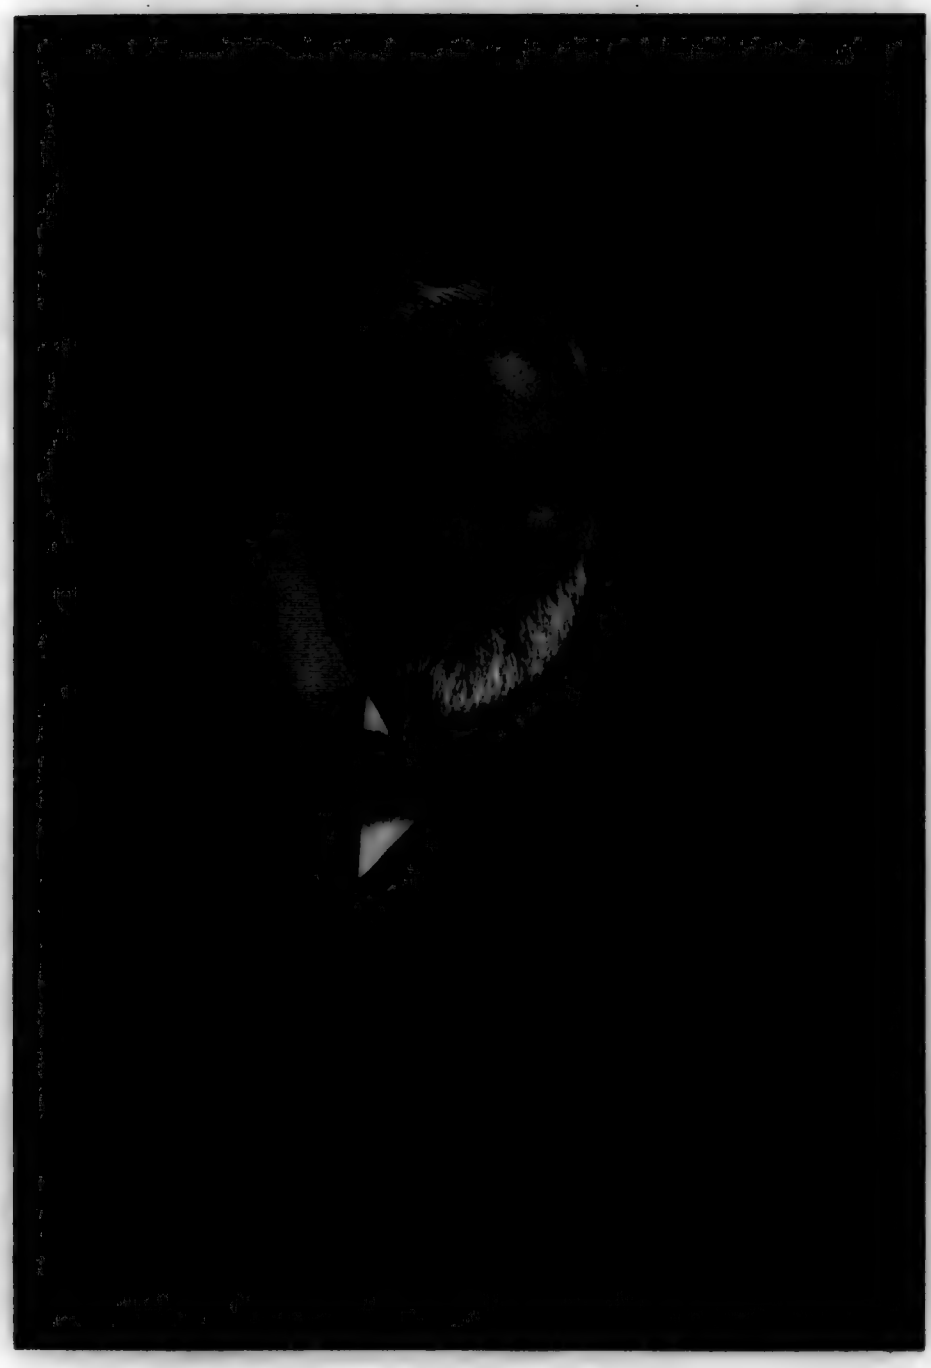
The greater part of the education of Edgar J. Lockwood was acquired through reading and study after attaining maturity, his early advantages being confined to the brief and irregular sessions of the district school. Being the eldest son of a large family he was early compelled to assume the duties of manhood and at the age of nine years was entrusted to plow the fields. He was an ambitious youth, however, and longed to devote his life to a noble purpose, feeling deeply drawn to the ministry where he recognized great opportunities for usefulness. While little more than a lad he determined to devote his life to the spreading of the Gospel and with this purpose in view devoted every moment he was not occupied in the fields in reading and study. Ultimately he attained his ambition and was admitted to the ministry of the Baptist church. His first pastorate was in the vicinity of Prairie City, Illinois, where he remained for four years, at the expiration of that period being transferred to the church in Prairie City. Some of his charges were very small, and his duties being light, he also engaged in farming. From Illinois he went to Iowa, his first church in the latter state being at Bedford, whence he removed to Emerson. After leaving there he located on a farm in the vicinity of Bedford and in connection with the cultivation of this he also held the ministry of a country church. He next went to Kansas, locating in the vicinity of Emporia, where he preached for a time, going from there to West Plains, Missouri, where he resided for twenty years and had charge of a church. At the expiration of that time he withdrew from the ministry and coming to Galesburg lived with a daughter until the 1st of September, 1908, when he came to Knoxville. Although he has not held a charge for more than fifteen years, and seldom occupies a pulpit any more, Mr. Lockwood takes an active interest in all church work, and never misses a religious service unless the condition of his health prevents his attendance. He has always been a zealous and conscientious worker, and despite the many trials and hardships that confront every man who devotes his life to public service he has ever been sustained by the faith that is the comfort and solace of his age. He has never faltered but has faithfully discharged every duty in accordance with what to him seemed best.

In Henry county, Illinois, on the 21st of June, 1849, Mr. Lockwood was united in marriage to Miss Mandana A. Jones, whose birth occurred in Canada, on the 2d of January, 1831. She is a daughter of Daniel and Atlanta (Bartlett) Jones, the father also a native of Canada, his birth occurring on February 22, 1808, while the mother was born in Vermont, on the 2d of January, 1810. They were among the pioneer settlers of Illinois, first locating in Mercer county, where the father engaged in farming, but later took up his residence in Galesburg, and there both he and the mother passed away. They were the parents of seven children, of whom Mrs. Lockwood was the eldest. The others were as follows: Louisa, the widow of Leonidas Anderson, of Oklahoma; Orson, a veteran of the Civil war, now deceased; Harriet, also deceased, who is buried in the cemetery at Knoxville; Granville, who is a resident of Galesburg; Norvel, also of Galesburg; and Corwin, who lives in Shenandoah, Iowa. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood there were born two daughters: Alice Irene, the deceased wife of Elisha White, by whom she had one son, Walter, now living in Chicago; and Effie Louise, who married Marshall Goodsill of Galesburg, and is the mother of four children: Ruth, Claire, Inez and Max.

Despite his advanced years, Mr. Lockwood is still in full possession of his faculties and takes an active interest in all matters pertaining to the public welfare, particularly of a religious nature.



EDWARD PAYSON WILLIAMS.

It is a difficult matter during the life of any one, to render a satisfactory tribute to his character, especially when the man concerned is of a disposition so retiring and unobtrusive as E. P. Williams. He was born at Russia, New York, in the year 1833, and moved to Galesburg with his parents in the year 1836.

It seems most fitting and appropriate that he should be mentioned in this volume in the History of Knox County, of which he has been so important a factor for many years. In the absence of a personal biography, we copy by permission from the "Bench and Bar of Illinois," edited by the late John M. Palmer of Springfield, Illinois, former governor and former senator from Illinois, the following historical sketch of Mr. Williams:

"Edward Payson Williams has resided in Galesburg for more than fifty years, and for the past twenty-five years has been the recognized leader of the Knox county bar. His modest and unassuming nature has kept him from the public gaze, but the strength, clearness and accuracy of his judgment, coupled with an unflecked purity and integrity of life, have made him known and respected and loved by all who have been either his clients or his friends.

"His father, Sherman Williams, was one of the early abolitionists, and first settled in Missouri; but his views on the slavery question were not accepted there and he was driven from the state by the pro-slavery element, fleeing by night with his wife and young children. His mother, Sally (Bradley) Williams, was a woman of very remarkable intellectual power, an omnivorous reader, with a genius and love for guiding and instructing youthful minds.

E. Williams

"Mr. Williams' early life was spent on a farm, and, excepting portions of a few years which were spent in the district school and in Knox College, he did the hard and exacting work of the farm until he had passed his twenty-fifth year. An injury which he then received disabled him from continuing in that calling, and he took up with indomitable purpose his preparation for the practice of the law. After two years of study, he was admitted to the bar of Illinois on an examination conducted in person by the late Judge Corydon Beckwith. From the very beginning of his practice, he took rank as a lawyer who knew the law and could present it clearly, who prepared his cases with thoroughness and who tried them both skillfully and honorably; who gave the same high service to the small cause and to the poor client that the largest interests could command; and it was soon known to all that he would neither take a retainer because the professional rewards were to be large if the cause did not commend itself to his judgment and conscience, nor refuse a cause that seemed to him meritorious though no reward were promised and its advocacy was unpopular.

"His name will be found as counsel in nearly every volume of the reports of the supreme court of Illinois from the forty-eighth to the present time. Upon important or intricate questions of law, no better briefs than his have been filed in that court. They have furnished the basis for the opinions of the supreme court in many leading cases; notably, in the celebrated county seat fight between Knoxville and Galesburg, settling the right of citizens by a bill in equity to purge poll books and election returns of the illegal votes cast, and to have the court determine the result of the legal votes at such election. Knox County versus Davis, Illinois Reports, volume 63, page 405. In Stowell versus Bair, Illinois Appellate Reports, volume 5, page 104, he filed a masterly brief on the question of the priority of lien upon growing crops between the landlord and the mortgagee. In Patterson versus McKinney, Illinois Reports, volume 97, page 41, his brief upon the proposition that conveyances to one's family made while heavily indebted and engaged in speculations can be set aside in equity as fraudulent, is preserved in the report. In Kiernan versus C., S. F. & C. Railway Company, Illinois Reports, volume 123, page 188, the court sustained his splendid set of instructions as to weight of evidence in condemnation cases.

"During his long career at the bar he has met in professional contests nearly every prominent lawyer of the Military Tract, and has won his full share of victories. In the early days his practice was not confined to Knox county, but extended to all the counties of the circuit. In Fulton county he practiced with Hon. William C. Goudy, who afterward became a well known lawyer in Chicago, and Hon. S. P. Shope, afterward justice of the supreme court and now in active practice in Chicago. He was often retained with or against Hon. Thomas G. Frost, afterward of Frost & Miller, of Chicago; Hon. A. M. Craig, now one of the justices of the supreme court; Hon. Charles B. Lawrence, afterward justice of the supreme court, and then one of the leaders of the Chicago bar, and many others. He was an early friend of John P. Wilson, Esq., and of Judge Blodgett, of Chicago. All who have met him in the courts or have in other ways come to know him, esteem him for his fidelity as a friend and his integrity as a citizen, and warmly admire the ability and conscience which have characterized every act of his professional life. But his best work and highest title to distinction does not lie in his purely professional work. His greatest influence has been wielded as a man of honor and moral bravery, and through the many men who have gained their professional ideals and inspiration while students in his office.

"From the day he entered a law office until now, he has placed the obligations of a lawyer before his rewards and has always cared more to settle strife and protect rights by fair compromise than to encourage litigation or imperil his clients' interests in the hope of professional reward or distinction.

"He has not drawn the line merely against dishonest claims or methods, but against causes and courses that while entirely honest might prove hardships to the party, though beneficial to the attorney. For example, a mortgage for over twenty thousand dollars was sent him with instructions to begin foreclosure proceedings. The mortgagor was in default and a foreclosure proceeding would have brought an attorney's fee of an unusual size and of which, on account of the large number of persons dependent upon him, he was in real need. Yet because the mortgagee was honest and would, in his judgment, be able to pay the larger portion of the defaulted interest within the next six months, he made the unasked recommendation of a postponement of the foreclosure proceedings. The result was that the mortgagor saved his land and the mortgagee secured his debt, and Mr. Williams received but a nominal fee. And examples of this sort might be multiplied. The golden rule controls him both as a lawyer and as a man.

"Students from his office are found in the upper ranks of the profession from New York to Seattle, Washington, and all hold him both as a lawyer and citizen in the highest regard and affection.

"He is a republican in politics, as was natural from his early experiences, but he has never sought public office. In the early days of his practice he was city attorney of Galesburg for one term, and master in chancery of the circuit court for a short time. His friends have long desired to place him upon the circuit bench, where his profound knowledge of the law, tempered by his fine sense of justice, would have been so valuable to litigants; but he has been unwilling to make any canvass for the place or to undergo the strife of a political campaign. He has neither the temperament nor the natural gifts of an advocate, though in cases appealing strongly to his feelings he has made some very notable and effective arguments to juries. His conspicuous preeminence, however, is as a wise counselor who always sought and rarely missed 'the right of the matter.' Though past three-score years, he is still in active practice in the full possession of his ripened powers, and has associated with him in the practice two sons—Messrs. Edwin N. and G. P. Williams—who are rendering him strong and efficient aid in conducting the litigation in which the firm is retained." The Bench and Bar of Illinois, pages 452 to 454.

Since this biography was published, Mr. Williams has continued in the successful practice of his profession at Galesburg, Illinois, with a constantly increasing reputation. His life has been filled with deepest sorrows. His wife, for fifty years his constant and loving companion, assistant and adviser, has passed away, and two of his sons who were associated with him in the practice of law have also passed to the beyond. Perhaps no better idea can be given of the estimate in which Mr. Williams is held by the bar of Knox county, than to quote a resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of the bar association of Knox county, held for the purpose of adopting resolutions upon the life and services of the late Justice Alfred M. Craig, in January, 1912.

"The Bar Association of Knox county assembled for the purpose of paying its respects and tribute to the memory of a distinguished member, who has passed away, are reminded of the fact that we have still with us, in active practice, the Nestor of this bar, whose seventy-ninth birthday will soon be here. While paying our tribute to the deceased, it is fitting that we remember the living who is still with us to guide and to inspire, and to extend to him our felicitations upon his approaching anniversary. Edward Payson Williams, by a long and distinguished career at the bar, has brought distinction, not only to himself, but the bar of which he is the acknowledged leader. By his unselfish public service, he has well served his day and generation. His unfailing kindness has endeared him to us all and his integrity and moral worth is an example to us. May his sorrows be tempered to him and his remaining years be filled with joy."

We cannot close this brief sketch without mentioning one of the greatest honors that ever came to Mr. Williams, or in fact, to any other attorney of this state, and it must always stand as a most beautiful and substantial tribute to his memory and legal attainments.

In the year 1899 the legislature of the state of Illinois passed a resolution creating a "Practice Commission" for the purpose of making a thorough examination of the Practice Act and to suggest needed reforms and commission seem to be necessary and conducive to the improvement in court procedure. Two members were to be appointed from Cook county, one by the Cook County Bar Association, one by the appellate court of the First district, and of the remaining three, one by the State Bar Association, one by the governor of the state and one by the supreme court of the state of Illinois. Mr. Williams, of all the attorneys of this state, was selected by the supreme court to act upon that commission, thus signifying the full confidence of that august body in him as being qualified in every way to represent it in all the questions that might come before the commission. His appointment bears date September 15, 1899.

MAX J. MACK.

Max J. Mack, who for more than a third of a century has been actively identified with the business interests of Galesburg as a clothing merchant, has since 1895 been a member of the firm of Jacobi Brothers & Mack. His birth occurred in Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 6th of August, 1854, his parents being Jacob L. and Amelia (Thurnauer) Mack, both of whom were natives of Bavaria, Germany. The paternal grandfather was also born there. Jacob L. Mack, the father of our subject, emigrated to America half a century ago and settled in Cincinnati, where he embarked in business as a wholesale clothier. His demise there occurred when he had attained the age of seventy years. His wife, surviving him, was seventy-two years old when called to her final rest. Their children were six in number, namely: Edward J., who is deceased; Leopold J., a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio; Herman, who has also passed away; Carrie, living in Cincinnati; Max J., of this review; and Samuel J., who makes his home in Anderson, Indiana.

Max J. Mack was reared to manhood in his native city and attended the public schools in the acquirement of an education, being graduated from the high school in 1872. Subsequently he attended a night law school for a time. Later he secured employment as bookkeeper in a wholesale house, holding that position until he left Cincinnati and came to Galesburg in 1875. Here he embarked in the clothing business on his own account and at the end of a year became a partner of his father-in-law, Abraham Jacobi, the business being conducted under the firm style of Jacobi & Mack until 1895. For the past sixteen years the establishment has borne the name of Jacobi Brothers & Mack. The partners now enjoy an extensive business and are very successful in its conduct.

On the 3d of May, 1876, Mr. Mack was united in marriage to Miss Fanny Jacobi, a native of Knoxville, Illinois, and a daughter of Abraham and Clara (Schriesheimer) Jacobi, both of whom were born at Mannheim, Germany. They emigrated to the United States in 1848, first settling in Knoxville, Illinois, and later coming to Galesburg. Here Abraham Jacobi passed away in 1909, when eighty-five years of age. His widow, who still survives him, has now attained the age of eighty-two years. To Mr. and Mrs. Mack were born two children, Hattie C. and Julian J., both at home. The wife and mother was called to her final rest in 1904, when forty-nine years of age, her death being the occasion of sincere regret in the county in which she had spent her entire life.

Mr. Mack, a stanch republican in politics, acted as alderman of the first ward for eighteen years. He is now a member of the library board and served as its president for two years. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, being a valued member of Vesper Lodge. His life has been one of well directed effort and enterprise, resulting in the attainment of a creditable and gratifying measure of success. In all his relations he has enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellowmen because he is honest, upright, persistent and determined.

HERBERT W. WOOD.

Herbert W. Wood is now living retired in Galesburg but in former years was identified with general merchandising, with the grain trade and financial enterprises. The success which he achieved while still an active factor in business circles brought him a handsome competence that now relieves him from the necessity of further labor, save for the supervision which he gives to his invested interests. He was born in Westford, Vermont, April 24, 1844, a son of William S. and Phylena (Smith) Wood. The father was also a native of Westford and the mother's birth occurred in Braintree, Orange county, Vermont. William S. Wood followed merchandising in his native town and also conducted a tannery, after which he removed to Burlington, Vermont, where he filled the office of deputy sheriff. In the spring of 1859, he came to the middle west settling in Wataga, Knox county, Illinois, where he carried on general merchandising and also engaged in the grain trade for a number of years. He likewise conducted a banking and loan business at a later date and carried forward to successful completion whatever he undertook. He was ever watchful of any opportunity and in its improvement steadily advanced toward success. In 1884 he went to Elgin, Illinois, where he resided for three or four years living retired during that period. In 1888, he came to Galesburg, where he also lived retired up to the time of his death, which occurred February 3, 1897. For more than three years he had survived his wife who died in this city, September 21, 1893. In his political views William S. Wood was a republican and served in some local offices, acting as justice of the peace and as treasurer of his town. His life was upright and honorable and both he and his wife were members of the Congregational church in which he served as a trustee. They were married in Braintree, Vermont, and unto them were born four children, of whom Herbert W., is the eldest, the others are: Ella J., the widow of George F. Niles of Hartford, Connecticut; Clarence E., who was born July 1, 1850, and died April 29, 1852, and Carrie M., the widow of Albert T. Lewis of Elgin, Illinois.

Herbert W. Wood was educated in the schools of Westford and in the Burlington high school, after which he attended Knox College in Galesburg during the year 1863-4. His education completed, he entered his father's store as a clerk and received thorough training in commercial methods as applied especially to general mercantile interests. In 1868 he became his father's successor in business and formed a partnership with his uncle, H. P. Wood, which connection continued until 1880. They carried on the same line of business and also engaged in general banking. Throughout that period they conducted a prosperous business carrying a large and well selected line of goods for which they found a ready sale. The growth of their trade brought them an excellent annual income which in time afforded Mr. Wood a competence sufficient to enable him to retire from active life. He came to Galesburg in 1888, and has since retired from further labor save for the supervision which he gives to his invested interests. He is now a stockholder in the First National Bank and has important realty holdings. He served as town clerk and in many other local offices, being corporation clerk at Wataga for a time.

On the 21st of January, 1904, Mr. Wood was united in marriage to Mrs. Emma Walton, a daughter of Joseph and Orlena A. (Kirk) Woods of Plymouth, Illinois. Her father was born near Mt. Sterling, this state, May 10, 1829, of German parentage and died June 30, 1905. He was a soldier of the Mexican war, serving for a year and one-half after which he was honorably discharged. He followed the occupation of farming, owning and cultivating a tract of land until the time of his death. He was also an ordained minister of the Baptist church and his life was ever a helpful one, his time being largely spent in efforts to uplift and benefit humanity. In his political faith he was a democrat and he served as school director, but never sought political office. His wife died July 19, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wood, in Galesburg. There were seventeen children in their family, of whom Mrs. Wood was the seventh in order of birth. Her early education was acquired in the schools of Providence, Illinois, and later she spent three years in Eureka College. She was also an art and music pupil in Chicago, studying under Seabeck and Liebling for three years. She afterward engaged in teaching music in Macomb, Camp Point and Augusta—three towns of central Illinois.

She is a member of the First Christian Church, Galesburg, Ill., Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Woman's Relief Corps and the Round Table Club. A lady of broad intelligence and wide reading, she is prominent in the social circles of the city and shares with her husband a popularity that has brought him many friends.

REV. JOSEPH COSTA.

Rev. Joseph Costa, O. C., R. D. C., who for more than a third of a century has labored with untiring and consecrated zeal for the development of Catholicity in Galesburg, is the pastor of Corpus Christi church and also a dean of the Peoria diocese. He was born October 18, 1823, in Pettinengo, province of Biella, Italy, about thirty miles northeast of Turin, his parents being Antonio and Angela Maria (Facio) Costa. The father was occupied in land industries and also conducted a tailoring establishment. Joseph was the youngest of four brothers and the only one who entered the ministry. The records of the family, dating back for more than six hundred years, show members of it belonging to the priesthood.

Father Costa received his early instruction in letters and music in the schools of his native town. Subsequently he entered the college named Banchette and began the study of Latin under Rev. Professor W. Scaglia. Later he pursued his studies in classics in the city of Biella, and after an interval of two years of rest began his philosophical course in the College Melerio Rosmini in the city of Domodossola, remaining a student under Professor Parma for two years. Having passed his examination in philosophy and being a member of the Order of Charity, he applied himself, under able professors, to the study of divinity in the Rosminan Institute at Stresa on the borders of Lago Maggiore. In 1851, as a member of the order, he was sent by the General, the Rev. Antonio Rosmini, to the English missions belonging to the same order. In that country he reviewed his theology under Professor Caccia and prepared for the reception of holy orders. On February 18, 1853, he was examined and ordained priest in the church of Oscott College by the Rt. Rev. Bernard Ullathorne, bishop of Birmingham. As a priest he labored in Great Britain for eleven years, doing parish work, preaching at missions or teaching in college.

In 1864, at the request of Dr. Yunker, bishop at Alton, Illinois, Father Costa was sent by the general of his order to work in that bishop's diocese. In the United States the field of his labors was chiefly Illinois—Springfield, Jacksonville, El Paso and Lincoln. Finally, in 1877, he was sent to Galesburg by Dr. John L. Spalding, first bishop of Peoria, for the special purpose of establishing parochial schools. From that time to the present he has worked earnestly and faithfully for the upbuilding of the Catholic church. In the spring of 1878 was begun the erection of St. Joseph's Academy, which was opened for use in the autumn of 1879, with ten teachers and four hundred pupils. Stevens & Parry of Galesburg built the structure, which, including heating apparatus and excluding furniture, cost sixteen thousand, eight hundred and fifty-eight dollars and thirteen cents. The convent adjoining the academy was partly erected by Jacob Westfall of Peoria, who failed to complete the contract and the building was finished under the direction of Father Costa. The work, which was commenced in 1880 and finished in 1881, engendered an expenditure of eleven thousand, three hundred and eighty-eight dollars and fifty-two cents. The ground upon which Corpus Christi church stands cost four thousand, eight hundred and eighty-five dollars. The contract for the building was given to Matthias Schnell, of Rock Island, and its cost, including heater, seats, bell, etc., was thirty-eight thousand, six hundred and eleven dollars and forty-three cents. Corpus Christi rectory, including heating apparatus, cost five thousand, five hundred dollars. The lot of St. Mary's primary, on the corner of Fourth and Seminary streets, cost twenty-five hundred dollars and the new building sixteen thousand dollars. The lot on which Corpus Christi lyceum stands was purchased for five thousand dollars, while the building and furniture cost about forty-two thousand dollars. Its erection was begun in 1891 and completed in 1894. This edifice is private property of the Order of Charity in the United States. Father Costa has done much in the erection of buildings in Galesburg, expending more than one hundred and forty thousand dollars for that purpose and the benefit of his church. He has now passed the eighty-ninth milestone on life's journey, and his long years of unselfish ministrations and activities have been a potent factor for good and his personal characteristics are such as have endeared him to his parishioners and fellowmen.

JOHN BECKETT.

The late John Beckett, a well known civil engineer, of Knoxville, was born in the vicinity of Oxford, Ohio, on the 1st of February, 1845, his parents being William and Sarah Beckett. His father was born and reared in Virginia, but in his early manhood he removed to Indiana, where he resided for some years, subsequently becoming a citizen of Ohio. There he engaged in farming, continuing to follow that occupation until his death, which occurred on his homestead near Oxford. The family of Mr. and Mrs. William Beckett consisted of five sons: Prestley, who died at the age of sixteen years; John, our subject; Arthur, who is living in Ohio; Zacharias, who is deceased; and Edward.

The education of John Beckett was obtained in the common schools, during that period much of his time being devoted to assisting with the work of the farm. Although he was only sixteen years of age when the war broke out he enlisted in the Eighty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and went to the front for three months. At the close of his term he reenlisted, remaining in the service until the close of hostilities. He participated in many battles during that period but the greater part of the time he was stationed at Cumberland Gap. Upon receiving his discharge he returned to his home and entered a tailor shop, where he learned the trade. This vocation did not prove entirely to his liking, however, and he did not follow it after leaving Ohio in 1871. In the latter year he came to Illinois, settling in Monmouth, where he took up civil engineering. He enjoyed the work very much and continued to follow it the remainder of his life, meeting with good success. His development was marked by rapid progress and he became connected with some of the important surveys of the state, having had the distinction of driving the first stake for the Iowa Central Railroad from Peoria to Keithsburg, Illinois. Mr. Beckett was a capable engineer and a good business man, but had hardly reached the zenith of his powers when death terminated his career on the 21st of August, 1889.

On the 6th of March, 1882, he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Downard, who was born in Clinton county, Ohio, on the 14th of May, 1846, and is a daughter of Jesse and Sallie (Showalter) Downard. The birth of the father occurred near Uniontown, Pennsylvania, while the mother was a native of Westmoreland county, that state. In the early years of their domestic life they came to Ohio, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father was a shoemaker by trade and having been given the advantages of a good education he also taught school for a time, but his latter years were devoted to farming. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Downard numbered thirteen, seven sons and six daughters: William Wallace, who was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted from Indiana, now deceased; Edwin, also a veteran of the war, now a resident of Oklahoma; Mary, the deceased wife of Robert Harland; Benjamin, a veteran of the Civil war, now living at London Mills; and Lafayette and William, who were also in the Union service, now deceased; Stephen, who was killed during the war; Jennie, the wife of Scott Snedeker of Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. Beckett; Emma, the wife of William Tyner, of Elk City, Kansas; Amanda, who is the deceased wife of Nelson Kennedy; Alice, also deceased; and Phineas, who lives in Iowa. Mr. Downard was one of the prominent citizens of Logan county, Ohio, where for several years he held the office of county surveyor. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Beckett there were born three children: Jesse, who is deceased; Frank, who is living in Knoxville; and Lysle, the wife of Stephen Smith, formerly of Knoxville but now Palm Beach, Florida, by whom she has had three children, Thomas, Matthew and Stephena.

Mr. Beckett gave his political support to the Republican party. He was not identified with any religious denomination but always attended the Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Beckett was a member. The early years of their domestic life they spent in Abingdon, but they subsequently removed to London Mills, where they resided until 1886 when they came to Knoxville, purchasing the residence, which has ever since been the family home. Mrs. Beckett is well known here and has many friends, whose esteem has been won through her many estimable qualities of both heart and mind.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SEATON.

Benjamin Franklin Seaton came to Galesburg in the evening of life, but while he was never connected with business affairs here he brought with him the record of active and honorable service in business in his earlier years, and during the period of his connection with Galesburg, he won the respect and good-will of all with whom he came in contact. He was born in Port Hope, Ontario, Canada, on the 11th of November, 1820, his parents being William and Mary (Adams) Seaton, the latter a cousin of John Quincy Adams, at one time president of the United States. The family is of Scotch descent, and in his life Benjamin F. Seaton displayed many of the sterling characteristics of his

Scotch ancestry. His education was acquired in the schools of his native town and in the state of New York, whither he accompanied his parents on their removal to the vicinity of Winchester. Later he went to Massillon, Ohio, and became closely associated with the commercial interests of that place as a wholesale dealer in furniture. His next change of residence took him to Marion, Iowa, where he engaged in the live-stock business for ten years, and on the expiration of that period established an agricultural implement business. He was not only prominent in the commercial circles of the city, but also as a factor in public life and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, called him to a number of offices. For five years he served as sheriff of Linn county and was also mayor of Marion for several terms, giving to the city a business-like and progressive administration that resulted in bringing about many needed reforms and improvements. At one time he was superintendent of the waterworks there and his influence was always a potent element for the benefit of the town. In 1903 he came to Galesburg and here made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Norman E. Ives. He spent the last twenty years of his life in retirement and passed away April 27, 1911, at the advanced age of ninety years. For ten years he had survived his wife, who passed away at Marion, Iowa, March 2, 1901.

It was on the 14th of December, 1852, that Benjamin F. Seaton was united in marriage, in Ashtabula, Ohio, to Miss Ruth M. Hurlburt, who was born in Winchester, Connecticut, July 1, 1833. They were both loyal and devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal church and their well spent lives won for them the high regard and confidence of all who knew them. Mr. Seaton served as a trustee of the church for many years and did all in his power to promote its growth and extend its influence. He voted with the republican party and always kept well informed on the questions and issues of the day. While he came to Galesburg in his later years, he won many friends during the period of his residence here and received the respect and veneration which should always be given one who has traveled far on life's journey and whose record has ever been honorable and upright.

In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Seaton there were seven children: Carrie E., now deceased; May G., who became the wife of L. M. Lillis and has also passed away; Anna and Grace, both deceased; Fannie, the wife of Norman E. Ives, of Galesburg; Frank Hurlburt, deceased; and Grace Lillian, the wife of Leslie C. Bolton, of Missoula, Montana.

Of this family Mrs. Ives, to whom we are indebted for the history of her father, was born at Marion, Iowa, and supplemented her public-school education by a course in Cornell College at Mt. Vernon, that state. On the 9th of September, 1885, she gave her hand in marriage to Norman E. Ives, of Marion, who was born there on the 2d of April, 1853, and is a son of Norman and Hannah (Gray) Ives. His father was a native of Connecticut, born July 30, 1819, and his mother's birth occurred in Kentucky, October 1, 1823. They were married October 12, 1843, in Marion, Iowa, the father, who was a farmer by occupation, having come to the west from Connecticut in 1841, at which time he settled in Linn county, Iowa, where he carried on general agricultural pursuits until his death on the 1st of March, 1890. His wife survived him for about twelve years, her death occurring March 23, 1902. Both were members of the Baptist church, in the work of which they were actively and helpfully interested, Mr. Ives serving as a deacon for several years. He voted with the democratic party and kept well informed on the questions of the day. Unto him and his wife were born seven children: Lucy A., now the wife of Morgan Bunting, of Marion, Iowa; Rachel B., who is the wife of John Booth, of Marion; Mary L., the wife of Joseph Lake, of Marion; Norman E.; John J., also of Marion; and Isadore and Isabel, twins, both deceased.

Of this family, Norman E. Ives was educated in the public schools of Marion and after leaving the high school, entered Cornell College at Mt. Vernon. He studied law and after careful preparation was admitted to the bar. For several years while living in Linn county, he served as deputy sheriff and was also postmaster of Marion under President Cleveland during his first administration. After filling the office for two years, however, he resigned, and passing a civil service examination, was appointed special pension examiner, filling that office at Cleveland, Ohio, for a time, and later at Fort Wayne, Indiana; St. Joseph, Missouri; Springfield, Missouri; and Chicago, Illinois, where he continued for eight years. He also spent three years in the pension department at Washington, D. C., and in September, 1902, came to Galesburg, where he has since been located.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Ives have been born two children: Haroldine C., who is a graduate of Knox College of the class of 1911, married December 14, 1911, to Lewis C. Hazen, of Galesburg, Illinois; and Norman Seaton, who is now attending high school. Mr. Ives has always been an advocate of democratic principles and is a member of the Baptist church, in which he has served as deacon. Mrs. Ives and her children are members of the First Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. and Mrs. Ives have been cordially received into the best social circles of the city and wherever known are highly esteemed. Mr. Ives has made a most creditable record as an official of the pension office, his capability being evenly balanced by his loyalty and trustworthiness.

JUDGE ALFRED M. CRAIG.

The life history of Judge Alfred M. Craig forms a connecting link between the primitive past and the progressive present and with the advancing years he ever remained a potent force in the progress that has brought the state to its present position in the galaxy of the nation. Fame came to him and honors were multiplied unto him yet he bore all with becoming modesty. However, he left the impress of his individuality in large measure upon the judicial history of Illinois and his activity in business fields as well constituted a factor in the progress and prosperity of Knox county and surrounding districts. His last illness was of short duration and therefore he remained an active factor in the world's work almost to the end, preserving the precious prize of keen mentality to the last. No history of Knox county would be complete without extended reference to Judge Craig who entered actively upon the work of development here when this was still a pioneer region and ever thereafter gave impetus to the labors that made this in time one of the richest sections of the Mississippi valley.

JUDGE ALFRED M. CRAIG.

The life history of Judge Alfred M. Craig forms a connecting link between the primitive past and the progressive present and with the advancing years he ever remained a potent force in the progress that has brought the state to its present position in the galaxy of the nation. Fame came to him and honors were multiplied unto him yet he bore all with becoming modesty. However, he left the impress of his individuality in large measure upon the judicial history of Illinois and his activity in business fields as well constituted a factor in the progress and prosperity of Knox county and surrounding districts. His last illness was of short duration and therefore he remained an active factor in the world's work almost to the end, preserving the precious prize of keen mentality to the last. No history of Knox county would be complete without extended reference to Judge Craig who entered actively upon the work of development here when this was still a pioneer region and ever thereafter gave impetus to the labors that made this in time one of the richest sections of the Mississippi valley.

A. M. Ormié

Mr. Craig was born in Paris, Edgar county, Illinois, January 15, 1831. The family comes of Scotch-Irish ancestry and the grandfather of the Judge was Thomas Craig, who came from the north of Ireland to America, settling in Pennsylvania where David Craig, the father of the Judge, was born. Having arrived at years of maturity he married Minta Ramey, who was a native of Kentucky and a daughter of Sinnet Ramey, who was born in Virginia and became one of the pioneer residents of Kentucky, associated to some extent with Daniel Boone in the work of exploration in what became known as the dark and bloody ground. Sinnet Ramey devoted his energies to farming in the Blue Grass state for a period and afterward became one of the pioneer settlers of Illinois, taking up his abode in Fulton county where he again carried on general agricultural pursuits until he passed away when well advanced in years. His daughter Minta was his only child. David Craig, however, was one of several children including two brothers, James and Joseph Craig. When a young man David Craig removed to Kentucky and it was in that state that he was married. He was a millwright and that trade in connection with farming fully occupied his attention throughout his life. Like hundreds of other Kentucky citizens who did not depend upon the institution of slavery as a source of revenue he removed from Kentucky to Illinois and for a brief period was a resident of Edgar county, during which time his son, Judge Craig, was born. From that district they removed to the Military tract, settling in Fulton county, near Canton, and David Craig became a prosperous farmer as prosperity was rated at that day. As a millwright he erected many of the old mills along the Spoon river to provide the flour and feed for the early settlers. It was in 1832, the year of their arrival in Fulton county, that the Black Hawk war broke out and the women and children sought refuge and protection in a blockhouse pending the settlement of the war while the men of the neighborhood aided in fighting the Indians. The history of David Craig's family was like that of many other pioneer families living on the Illinois frontier. He there died when about sixty-five years of age, having for a few years survived his wife, who was also sixty-five years of age at the time of her demise. She was a devoted member of the Methodist church and Mr. Craig attended its services with her. His political allegiance in an early day was given to the whig party and he was a warm admirer of Henry Clay. In his family were ten children but only one is now living.; Mrs. Harriet Barnwell, of Los Angeles, California. The others were: Nancy, who became the wife of Perry Crosthwait; Madison; Margaret, the wife of Enoch Crosthwait; Sinnet; Thomas, who died when twelve or fourteen years of age; Alfred M.; Mrs. J. L. Miller; Mrs. Sarah Ash; and Mrs. Marilda Randolph.

Judge Craig was reared upon his father's farm in Fulton county, meeting every experience and hardship which fell to the lot of the early settler. His educational privileges were very limited in early youth but later he had the opportunity of pursuing a course in Knox College, becoming a member of the preparatory class in the fall of 1848, while in June, 1849, he was admitted to the freshman class and in June, 1853, won his degree. Thinking to find the practice of law a congenial profession he began studying with that end in view, his preceptor being William C. Goudy, of Lewiston. A year later he was admitted to practice in the courts of Illinois and opened a law office in Knoxville which was then the county seat.

By close application and determination he built up a large practice in a few years' time, riding the circuit as was customary in those days in company with the judge, who held court in various places in the circuit. Lincoln, Douglas and scores of other pioneer lawyers of Illinois visited Knox county in this manner and were acquaintances and colleagues of Judge Craig, who frequently related most interesting experiences of those early days. It was not unusual for him to make the trip on horseback and on reaching Spoon river he would have to swim that stream astride his mount. In 1856 he was appointed state's attorney by Governor Mattison, the circuit then comprising the counties of Mercer, Henderson, Warren, Knox and Fulton. This appointment was for the unexpired term caused by the resignation of W. C. Goudy and in November, 1861, he was elected to the office of county judge, serving on the bench for four years. In 1869 he was elected to represent Knox county in the constitutional convention of 1870 which formulated the present organic law of the state. It was he who devised the present township organization plan whereby counties are governed by a combination of the old Virginia system and the New England town-meeting system, providing for a board of supervisors as the legislative body. Throughout the years of his private practice his clientage was large and of a very important character. He was employed to assist the late J. J. Tunnicliff, then state's attorney, in the prosecution of Osborn who was tried for the murder of Mrs. Mathews near Yates City, the trial resulting in conviction leading to the only reported legal execution in Knox county. He was also one of the lawyers for the defendant in the case of DeHague in a political murder case which was brought to Knox county on a change of venue and secured the acquittal of his client. He was likewise counsel in the county seat trials and such was his recognized ability that his practice not only covered Knox but also many adjoining counties. Many judicial honors were also conferred upon him—in fact he filled every judicial office in the state with the exception of circuit judge, nor was his fame confined to Illinois for he was favorably mentioned in connection with the position of chief justice of the United States in 1888, President Cleveland considering him as a candidate for the honor which was finally conferred upon Melville W. Fuller. At different times he was also mentioned in connection with the democratic nomination for the vice presidency. However, he continued in the strict path of his profession and the record which he made as one of the supreme court judges of Illinois made him the peer of the ablest members who have sat upon the bench of this court of last resort.

Judge Craig was first elected to the office in 1873 and was again elected in 1882 and 1891, his reelections coming to him as the expression of popular approval of his previous course as supreme court judge. From the time that he took his seat on the bench until he left it he was known for his fidelity to the interests of the people. In several of his decisions he rendered not only the people of Illinois but the nation as well a conspicuous service. His decision in the case of the people of the state of Illinois against the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railroad Company was particularly notable. At that time the Granger element was a strong one in the state and the farmers were complaining of the discrimination in railroad rates. The case in question came in 1882 from Ford county, resulting from a railroad charge of sixty-five dollars for the shipment of a carload of grain from Gilman to New York, whereas the charge on a carload from Peoria to New York, a longer distance, was but thirty-nine dollars. In the trial the railroad company demurred on the ground that the law did not apply to it as it was incorporated in another state and Illinois had no jurisdiction over the rates. The question came before the supreme court on a writ of error and it fell to Justice Craig to write the clear and forceful opinion that gave him national fame. In this opinion, in which all but one of the judges concurred, it was set forth that the law did apply to rate fixed by companies incorporated outside the state but doing business over their lines in that state. The law was held not to be limited to home companies but to all with whom the people had relations inside Illinois. Judge Craig laid down the principle that a state has the right to regulate that part of interstate commerce directly affecting its citizens. The case was taken by the railroad company to the United States supreme court where Judge Craig's decision was upheld and the rule was firmly established that a state has power over the traffic inside of its borders even though carried on by an outside corporation. This important principle has since then been expanded to cover other than railroad companies. In the discussions in congress over the amendments to the interstate commerce bill much was said of this decision and its bearing on commerce inside states and on the decision of the United States supreme court the right of congress in the premises found substantial footing. Another noted case was that of the Illinois Central Railroad Company in 1898 against the city of Chicago. At that time Chicago was trying to prevent the railroad company from using the submerged land of the lake for railroad purposes. The company sought to enjoin the city from interfering, claiming its right to the submerged land under the provisions of its charter. The lower court overruled the application for an injunction and the company appealed to the supreme court. Justice Craig wrote the opinion, holding that the submerged land belonged to the state and that the state could not part with it for the purpose named but must conserve the interests of the public. Justice Craig maintained that the sole purpose of the company was to take the land for railroad purposes and that it had no right even as a riparian owner to fill up the lake. This great decision saved the lake for Chicago and kept it from being filled with roundhouses and other railroad structures and its announcement was hailed in Chicago with great pleasure. On this decision also rests the investigation now in progress with the view of restoring to the state filled-in lands taken by private persons without the knowledge or consent of the state. Judge Craig made a special study of land titles about which in those days there was much ambiguity, and his decisions along this line removed these doubts and established ownership, much to the relief of thousands of property owners in this state. Moreover, in one of his decisions he upset the contention of companies that employes were responsible for defects in equipment and machinery and that it was their business to ascertain whether these defects existed. Judge Craig held that it was the business of the companies to know about the condition of their equipment and keep the same in good repair. This decision has been the means of protecting multitudes of lives and has made companies responsible for damages in such cases. Judge Craig held railroad companies responsible for obstruction along the right-of-way that were a menace to the public; forced them to give viaducts a proper height and to provide necessary precautions to protect life; and in other ways while not hostile to the companies made them shoulder their responsibility in these matters. Another thing that is remembered here kindly is his attitude toward the case in which was involved the rights of colored pupils to attend the public schools. In this case he upheld this right.

The last public work in which Judge Craig engaged was in connection with the state tax commission appointed by the governor. His business career was as notable in this way as its connection with the supreme court of the state which covered twenty-seven years. At the outset of his carer he was a poor man but as opportunity offered he made investments in farm land, predicting that the prairies of this section would one day be worth two hundred dollars per acre—a prediction which he lived to see realized. He was also the owner of large realty in Galesburg and erected a number of its leading business blocks. The present Bank of Galesburg building was purchased by him for the bank and for a considerable period he figured prominently in financial circles in this state, being at the time of his death president of the Bank of Galesburg, the Bank of Altona, the Farmers State Bank of Alpha, the Bank of North Henderson and the Bank of Prairie City, the two last named being private banking institutions. He has also been a director and heavily interested in the Farmers National Bank of Knoxville and the State Bank of Victoria. Those who have been associated with him in the local banks speak highly of his sound judgment in matters of a financial nature.

Judge Craig was twice married. He first wedded Elizabeth P. Harvey, a daughter of Curtis K. and Hannah K. (King) Harvey. They became parents of four children: Carrie, who married William Bradford but both are now deceased; Harvey A., now a physician of Galesburg, who was engaged in the drug business here for a number of years; Charles C., a well known attorney of this city; and George H., deceased. He was a graduate of Notre Dame University of South Bend, Indiana, and then entered the banking business and became teller in the Bank of Galesburg. The death of Mrs. Craig occurred in 1901 and therein the Presbyterian church lost a faithful member, her family a devoted wife and mother, and her acquaintances a loyal friend. She was born in Knoxville, while her parents were natives of Vermont who became pioneer residents of Knox county, Illinois, where their remaining days were passed, her father there practicing law. Their children were: Curtis K.; Mrs. Sanborn; and Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Craig. Judge Craig was again married in 1908 when he wedded Miss Mary Davis, a native of Galesburg where her parents, who were natives of Ireland, settled at an early period in the development of this city. Her father passed away but her mother is still living. Their children were Mary, Kate and Ellen. Mrs. Craig is a member of the Episcopal church and is widely known in Galesburg, where her entire life has been passed.

Judge Craig was a charter member of Pacific Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Knoxville, but cared little for attractions other than his home offered. For ten or twelve years he served as a trustee of Knox College and at the time of his death was also serving on the executive committee of the board. From that college he had received the degree of Doctor of Laws. It was after a brief illness with pneumonia that Judge Craig passed away at his home in Galesburg, September 6, 1911. Throughout the period of his long service on the supreme bench he had continued to make this city his place of residence and there was none perhaps in all Galesburg who was better known or more highly respected. The public service of few men has continued over a more extended period and none has been more faultless in manner, fearless in conduct or stainless in reputation. Colonel

Clark E. Carr, himself a veteran member of the Galesburg bar and long a colleague of Judge Craig said: "I knew him when he was a boy in Knox College. He was an earnest student and it was understood then that he intended to become a lawyer. He was, as every good lawyer is, rooted and grounded in the statutes. He was not what would be called a brilliant lawyer but was thorough and safe and no other Galesburg attorney was so successful in practice. As a member of the constitutional convention he proposed and carried into effect some of its best provisions. While there were other more scholarly men on the supreme bench scarcely any other jurist has left a greater impress upon their jurisprudence, and the opinions of scarcely any other judge are more often quoted and followed. Three times, although a democrat, he was elected in a republican district. When an enterprise commended itself to his judgment few men were more public-spirited, a fact indicated by his liberal donation of ten thousand dollars to Knox College when that institution needed money more than ever before in all her history."

Judge J. D. Welsh said: "Judge Craig was noted for applying common sense to the legal problems that came before the court and was a great judge." Said Congressman Prince: "Judge Craig as a lawyer of the bar in Knox county was one of the most successful men that ever practiced here. As a judge on the supreme bench he took rank among the ablest judges in the United States. His decisions on real estate ranked unusually high and were commented on in the law schools like Harvard and Columbia. When there was a vacancy on the supreme bench of the United States his name was given careful and long consideration by President Cleveland before Chief Justice Fuller was appointed. The mere fact that the name of a judge or lawyer is considered by the executive of the nation for the exalted position of chief justice puts for all time such a judge or lawyer in the front rank of jurists." Others bore testimony of his fairness in business transaction, naming him as the soul of honor, and still others attested to his kindness to the younger members of the bar. In fact in all the relations of life Judge Craig measured up to the highest standards of manhood and citizenship in the wise and able use which he made of his time and talents, in his recognition of his obligations to his fellowmen and of his duties as a citizen in his relations to the state and nation.

REV. GEORGE PRESTON DOUBLEDAY.

Rev. George Preston Doubleday, whose labors have been a potent factor in the moral and educational development of Knox county, is now serving as president of Corpus Christi College at Galesburg. His birth occurred in Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa, on the 23d of June, 1869, his parents being George and Mary (Curry) Doubleday, who were natives of England and Ireland respectively. The father passed away in London, in 1902, when sixty-two years of age. His wife also lived to attain the age of sixty-two, being called to her final rest in 1897. Both were faithful communicants of the Catholic church. Their children were five in number, as follows: Rev. Arthur Doubleday, rector of the seminary in Guildford, England; Rev. George Preston, of this review;

Charles Edward, living in London, England; Mary, a nun in Streatham, London; and one who died in infancy.

Rev. George P. Doubleday was two years of age when taken to England by his parents, who settled in Canterbury, where he received his common and classical education. In 1889 he entered the Order of Charity at Wadhurst, England, where he studied for three years, later spending five and a half years at Domodossola, Italy, in preparation for the priesthood. In November, 1898, he was ordained at Novara, Italy, and on the 24th of December of the same year arrived in America, making his way direct to Galesburg, Illinois. Here he acted as assistant to Rev. Father Costa for two years and then became pastor of St. Patrick's church, thus officiating for seven years. On the expiration of that period he became president of Corpus Christi College and has remained in that capacity to the present time. The institution has an attendance of one hundred and three boys, who are under the instruction of four professors, namely: Rev. Doubleday, Rev. John Phelan, Rev. James Lyons and Rev. Francis Baines.

CHARLES F. HURBURGH.

Charles F. Hurburgh, state senator from Knox county and recognized as one of those who is close to the present administration, in an effort to secure the passage of meritorious measures and prevent the corruption and graft which have been entirely too prominent in the political history of the state, was born January 10, 1872, in Smaland, Sweden, a son of Gustav and Susanna (Johnson) Hurburgh, the latter a daughter of Yngakarin Johnson. The father died in Sweden in 1885, at the age of fifty-five years, and the mother passed away in 1909, when nearly seventy years of age. There were two children in the family but the elder, a sister, died in infancy. Charles F. Hurburgh was a little lad of four years when, owing to the illness of his mother, he went to live with his uncle, A. J. Johnson, who was born in Sweden, November 18, 1842, and came to America in 1868. He first located in Plymouth, Indiana, and in 1873 he married Mrs. Louisa Christina Anderson, the widow of Swan Anderson. She also bore the maiden name of Anderson and was born in Sweden, May 18, 1830, a daughter of Samuel and Analine (Hansen) Anderson. She came to the new world when twenty-four years of age, making her way to Laporte, Indiana, where she lived until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson established their home in Knox county and his energies were devoted to farming up to the time of his death, which occurred about 1907. His widow still resides upon the home farm. Her only child was David Anderson, who was born February 8, 1875, and is now a farmer of Walnut Grove township. He married Hannah Linderholm, a daughter of John and Hedda Linderholm, her father a merchant of Galesburg.

Spending his youthful days in the home of his uncle, Mr. Johnson, Charles F. Hurburgh, whose Swedish name was Frederick Carl Hurburgh but who adopted the simpler American name of Charles F. pursued his education in the district schools and afterward in the Swedish Lutheran school. He also attended the high school of Altona, from which he was graduated, and for a time was a student in the Abingdon normal school, in which he completed a course in 1892. He afterward entered Knox College and is numbered among its alumni of 1895. Taking up the profession of teaching, he was principal of the Maquon school from 1895 until 1900. During that period he took up the study of law in Galesburg, devoting his leisure hours to the mastery of the principles of jurisprudence. All through his boyhood days he had worked when opportunity offered and had thus largely supplied the means for meeting the expenses of his education. At different times he worked at farm labor in the home neighborhood and assisted in threshing until an accident finally prevented his further work in that direction. His entire life has been one of unfaltering activity and his intelligently directed labors have constituted forceful factors in the accomplishment of what he has undertaken. In 1900 he withdrew from educational work to accept the position of deputy sheriff under R. G. Mathews and after two years' service in that capacity was elected sheriff of Knox county, which position he filled until 1906, when he was elected to the state senate.

Charles F. Hurburgh has made an excellent record as one of the Illinois legislators. He found the senate in the grip of a powerful combine and united with other men of high principles holding to high ideals of government to break the force of this combine and wrest the state from machine rule. History records the success of their efforts and indorsement of his course was given him in his reelection. When he entered upon his second term he was recognized as one of the senate leaders and all through the regular and special session was in close association with the governor in urging the passage of meritorious measures. His efforts were an effective force in promoting the passage of the two-cent-passenger-fare bill and he was made chairman of the committee on appropriations, one of the most important of the senate, doing much to keep the demands made upon the state treasury within the limit. His work on that committee disclosed his large grasp of details and his broad understanding of a multitude of situations which came up for discussion. When the facts developed regarding the scandal attached to the election of a United States senator Mr. Hurburgh, who had respected the vote of his district on the senatorship, was one of the foremost in the senate to urge an investigation and as the result of his position and that of a number of his colleagues a committee was named that brought out many facts relating to the case and helped purge the legislature. In all this he disclosed himself a foe to graft.

In his home town of Galesburg and throughout the county, where he is very widely known, Mr. Hurburgh is popular. He is a member of the Trinity Lutheran church and his influence is always on the side of progress, reform and improvement. As a republican leader in Illinois he is today prominently before the state and his fellow citizens are strongly urging his candidacy for governor. In a recent meeting held in Galesburg the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

We, citizens and residents of Galesburg and of Knox county, friends and neighbors of Charles F. Hurburgh, one of our leading citizens, distinguished member of the state senate of Illinois, having noted with a great deal of pride the favorable comment upon the announcement of his candidacy for the republican nomination for the governorship at the April primaries, Resolve that,

Whereas, Charles F. Hurburgh has grown up among us and in all his life has walked on the high plane of good citizenship, never swerving from right conduct, actuated by lofty motives, and has been untiring in his efforts to promote the material and moral welfare of this city and county in all its enterprises, and has been a public-spirited citizen whose aid has always been freely given to worthy undertakings; and,

Whereas, both as county officer and state senator he has by his wisdom and courageous course reflected honor upon himself and credit upon the city and county and district; and,

Whereas, while a member of the senate, Charles F. Hurburgh has been one of the chief supporters and advocates on the people's side of legislative questions, always a foe to the spoils and to corrupt practices of all kinds, and in general always identified with all that is best in legislation; and,

Whereas, he has shown himself in all his official acts a true believer in progressivism in the sense that progressivism means the doing away with special privilege, the defeat and extinction of spoils politics, the conservation and development of natural resources and the restoration to the people of the essential powers of government;

Therefore, Be It Resolved, that as citizens vitally interested in the future welfare of this city and community and of this state, we hereby express the utmost confidence in Charles F. Hurburgh as a candidate for governor of Illinois and recommend his candidacy to the people of the state; that we aid his candidacy in every possible way and tender him our heartiest support in his efforts to secure the nomination at the primaries and to this end we pledge our loyal and active support and resolve that we will individually exhaust every honorable means to bring about the nomination and election of Charles F. Hurburgh as governor of Illinois.

Whether elected to office or not, there is no question in the minds of his friends that Charles F. Hurburgh will ever stand, as he does today, for clean government and for the exercise of party strength in behalf of the entire people and not for the benefit of a coterie of politicians.

JOSHUA R. CROUCH.

The late Joshua R. Crouch, who for sixteen years prior to his death had followed the brick-mason's trade in Knox county, was born in Rising Sun, Indiana, on the 7th of April, 1828. His parents were Nehemiah and Mary (Clark) Crouch, the father a native of Pennsylvania and the mother of Rising Sun. The former passed away when our subject was a child of two years, but the mother lived to attain the venerable age of eighty-three years, spending her entire life in her native town. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Crouch there were born two sons, both of whom are now deceased. The younger was Nathaniel C., who fought in the Indian wars with General Custer.

Joshua R. Crouch attended the common schools of his native town until he had mastered the common branches and then began working at the mason's trade, first in Rising Sun and later in Covington, Kentucky. He continued to follow this occupation until the Civil war broke out, when he offered his services to his country. He enlisted at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, in Company C, Eighty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and spent the three succeeding years on the battlefields of the south. He took part in many of the notable battles and was present at the siege of Vicksburg and was with Sherman when he made his famous march. He was mustered out at Washington, D. C., and returning to Rising Sun he joined a party of gold seekers, who were going to California. In 1892 Mr. Crouch with his wife and family came to Rio, this county, where for nine years he followed his trade and also did general contracting. At the expiration of that time they became residents of Knoxville, purchasing the property still owned and occupied by Mrs. Crouch. Here he continued to engage in brick masonry until the week before his death, which occurred on the 16th of August, 1908.

Mr. Crouch was married in Switzerland county, Indiana, on the 27th of August, 1873, to Miss Mary J. Wilson, a native of that county, her birth having occurred on the 8th of July, 1843. She is a daughter of Alfred and Jane (Monroe) Wilson, the father a native of Kentucky, and the mother of Indiana. Mr. Wilson was an agriculturist and for many years engaged in farming in Switzerland county, and he also ran a flatboat from Lawrenceburg to New Orleans, conveying produce to the various markets along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. Later he and his family, consisting of his wife and two daughters, removed to Kansas, where the parents both died, their last days being spent in Hutchinson, that state. They had each reached the age of seventy-four years at the time of their demise. Their other daughter, Mrs. Maggie Geary, has for many years been a resident of Hutchinson, Kansas. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Crouch there were born three daughters and one son. Maggie, who is the eldest, married James S. Hemphill, of Rising Sun, and they have two children, Joseph and Mills. Clara is the wife of LaVerne Bloomfield, of Galesburg, and they have two children, Verna and Leona. Bessie married Clifton Weedin, a blacksmith of Burns, Missouri, and they have five children, Lyman, Nina, Flora, Joshua and Marion. Nathaniel W., who is the youngest of the family, resides in Knoxville and makes his home with his mother.

Mr. Crouch was an honored member of the Grand Army of the Republic, having joined the post at Rising Sun after leaving the army, while at the time of his death he belonged to the one at Knoxville. His political allegiance he accorded to the republican party and in matters of faith he was a Methodist, holding membership in the church at Knoxville, with which his widow is still identified.

LUCIEN F. SENNETT.

Lucien F. Sennett, superintendent and headmaster of St. Alban's School at Knoxville, was born in Syracuse, New York, August 6, 1868, a son of Lucien and Elizabeth (Frank) Sennett. The father's birth occurred near Syracuse, while the mother was born in Schenectady, New York. The Sennett family comes of Irish lineage, the first American ancestors leaving Dublin preparatory to emigrating to the new world, and at a very early period the family was founded at Syracuse, New York, where the death of Lucien Sennett occurred in 1869. His widow still survives and now makes her home in Knoxville with her son Lucien.

Professor Sennett of this review was only about a year old at the time of his father's demise. He spent his youthful days with his mother, who carefully reared him and stimulated in him that love of learning which has been the foundation for the successful work he has done as an educator. His youthful days were spent in Auburn, New York, where he pursued his education until graduated from the high school of that city. He afterward attended Trinity College of Hartford, Connecticut, and was graduated therefrom with the class of 1889, winning the degree of Bachelor of Arts, while three years later the Master of Arts degree was conferred upon him by his alma mater. Determining to devote his life to educational work, he became master of St. Mark's School near Boston, Massachusetts, where he did excellent work for nine years. He then accepted a position at the head of the Pomfret School in Pomfret, Connecticut, where the succeeding four years were passed, after which he went to Lake Forest, Illinois, and was connected with the academy at that place for two years. On coming to Knoxville he accepted the position of superintendent and headmaster of St. Alban's School and under his guidance the institution has made continuous and substantial progress, promoting its standards of teaching and of scholarship. Professor Sennett holds to high ideals in his work and is never content until he has accomplished the task to which he has set himself. He belongs to two college fraternities, the Phi Beta Kappa and the Alpha Delta Phi, and is a member of the Episcopal church.

JOHN B. COLTON.

When the history of Galesburg and her prominent men shall have been written its pages will bear no name better known than that of Colton, which has long been a potent factor in the activities and resultant prosperity of the city. It is not only compatible, but absolutely imperative, that mention be made of the Colton family if a true history to commemorate and perpetuate the lives of those men whose records have been intimately connected with the growth of Galesburg is to be made. He whose name introduces this review is today the eldest descendant of the family which has left its impress upon the progress and civilization of two states.

He was born August 11, 1831, in the state of Maine. Quarter Master George Colton, who was the first of the family to settle in America, emigrated from Sutton, Coldfield, England, about 1640, settling at Long Meadow, Massachusetts. The family was especially prominent during the Revolutionary war, and Captain Thomas Colton, a son of George Colton, had previously been very active in the Indian wars. Since 1714 the name of Colton has frequently occurred in the civil list of representatives in the town of Long Meadow and in the Massachusetts legislature. The family traces its lineage from Quarter Master George Colton through the eldest sons down to the present time as follows: Quarter Master

He whose name introduces this review is today the eldest descendant of the family which has left its impress upon the progress and civilization of two states.

He was born August 11, 1831, in the state of Maine. Quarter Master George Colton, who was the first of the family to settle in America, emigrated from Sutton, Coldfield, England, about 1640, settling at Long Meadow, Massachusetts. The family was especially prominent during the Revolutionary war, and Captain Thomas Colton, a son of George Colton, had previously been very active in the Indian wars. Since 1714 the name of Colton has frequently occurred in the civil list of representatives in the town of Long Meadow and in the Massachusetts legislature. The family traces its lineage from Quarter Master George Colton through the eldest sons down to the present time as follows: Quarter Master

George, Captain Simon, Captain Gad, Justin, Chauncey Sill, and John Burt, who is the subject of this sketch.

On the prairies of Knox county, John B. Colton was reared to manhood under the parental roof. He acquired such education as the common schools and academy afforded, but his interest was always in the pioneer life, which was ever present before him. When a mere boy, he would lie in the high grass along the little creek which then ran through what is now the public square and always held his bow and arrow ready to shoot the deer or wolf that came across the prairie at sunset. At the age of eighteen years, after he had completed his education and while the spirit of adventure was still strong within him, he joined a train of '49ers, setting out for California. He spent five years in the camps in that state and on the trails in search for adventure and gold. His reminiscences of those days if they could be reproduced minutely would of themselves give a valuable account of the interesting experiences that the pioneers encountered in those early days on the frontier. He became personally acquainted with many of the most prominent western characters, such as Kit Carson, Jim Baker, and Jim Bridger, the latter of whom he was a personal friend. He assisted in building a monument to him at Kansas City and was one of his friends to exhume his body on December 4, 1904, when they removed the remains from the grave near Dallas, Missouri. At the present time, Mr. Colton has in his possession several small pieces of the old casket in which his friend was buried. Mr. J. B. Colton is one of the four surviving members of a party of thirty-six who undertook to shorten their journey to the mines by crossing the desert country between Little Salt Lake to the head of the San Joaquin valley. They were lost for three months, fifty-two days of which they were without provisions except their starved cattle and going at times five days without water, undergoing great suffering, four of the party died in the desert; they discovered Death Valley and arrived at a ranch on the Pacific coast, February 4, 1850. He returned to Galesburg in 1854 and was still residing here when the Civil war broke out. He assisted General Harding in raising the Eighty-third Regiment of Illinois Infantry and was an officer in this regiment. Later he was on the staff of General Grant. Although later in life he resided in Kansas City for several years, he has always maintained his interest in Illinios politically and otherwise. He is an extensive property owner of the state of Nebraska and his ranch is one of the most highly cultivated in the state. He is at present residing on North Broad street, Galesburg, Illinois, where he is surrounded by the comforts and luxuries which are the fitting rewards of the useful and industrious life which he has led.

Mr. Colton has been twice married. His first union occurred in Chicago, where he was married on the 30th of March, 1857, to Miss Elizabeth McClure, whose birth occurred in Philadelphia on the 16th of September, 1835. To this union two children were born, both of whom are now deceased, Chauncey McClure and Elizabeth. The mother's death occurred in Galesburg on the 19th of January, 1861. "Col." Colton was again married on the 1st of December, 1868, at Galesburg, his second union being with Miss Mary A. Thomas, who was born May 8, 1849, at Homer, New York. To this union three children were born, John B., Jr., Chauncey S. and Edward T.

A resident of Galesburg through much of the time during a period of over seventy-five years, his fellow townsmen have come to know him as a man of honor and worth and give him that tribute of respect and admiration which the world instinctively pays to him who uses his talents for the benefit of the community as well as for individual gain.

FRED L. REED.

Fred L. Reed, a member of the firm of E. S. Willard & Company, with which he has been connected since 1910, was born in Knoxville, this county, on 1876. He is the eldest son of William and Mary A. (Heagy) Reed, the father a native of Monmouth, Illinois, and the mother of this county. In his early manhood, William Reed came to Knoxville and opened a meat market, which he successfully conducted for some years. He was living at Monmouth at the time of his death, however, which occurred when he was forty-two years of age. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Reed there were born three children, two sons and one daughter. The latter, Eva V., died at the age of four years, and the other son, William, is a resident of Boise City, Idaho.

Knox county has always been the home of Fred L. Reed, who received his education in the public schools of Knoxville, terminating his student days upon his graduation from the high school. He subsequently turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, taking a position on a farm in Copley township. When he had become familiar with the practical methods of plowing, sowing and caring for the crops, as well as the other tasks connected with general farming, he purchased some land, which he operated on his own behalf. He continued to follow this occupation until 1910, and being a man of practical ideas and progressive methods he prospered in his undertakings. In the latter year he disposed of his farm, deciding that he preferred commercial to agricultural pursuits and, coming to Williamsfield, he bought the interest of the late E. T. Merry in the firm of E. S. Willard & Company. Financially this has proven to be a very successful undertaking, as the business has increased in a most gratifying manner during the two years he has been connected with it, and is steadily developing. This is the only company of furniture dealers in the town, and they also have a very good assortment of crockery, hardware, wall paper, musical instruments and carpets. Besides their varied stock of house furnishings, they have an undertaking department, which is unquestionably equal or superior to any maintained by a town of similar size in the state. They are located on Main street and have a very attractive store, every department of which is flourishing. They have an unusually good assortment of merchandise for a town of this size, which they offer at reasonable prices, the quality of their wares in every instance being fully commensurate with the amount charged.

For his wife Mr. Reed chose Miss Doris A. Harmison and unto them has been born one child, Harold S.

Mr. and Mrs. Reed both hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, while his political support he gives to the republican party. As he has spent his entire life in Knox county Mr. Reed is widely known in the vicinity of Williamsfield, where he has a large circle of friends who accord him the esteem and respect his honorable business methods well merit.

N. E. OLSON.

N. E. Olson is the owner of a valuable farm of eighty acres on section 22, Galesburg township, the rich prairie land of central Illinois returning to him a substantial income for the care and labor which he bestows upon the fields. He has resided in this county continuously for more than a third of a century and during that period has become widely known as a representative of agricultural interests here. He was born in Broby, in the southern part of Sweden, November 7, 1857, his parents being Ola and Karna (Benson) Nelson, both of whom were natives of Sweden. The father was a farmer and brewer and built the first brewery in Sweden outside of the large cities. He devoted some time to general agricultural pursuits but brewing was his principal occupation and he continued in business at Broby up to the time of his death. He was well educated in music and was a man of liberal culture as well of good business ability. His widow still lives in Sweden and has now reached the advanced age of eighty-two years.

N. E. Olson was the eldest of a family of three children and in the acquirement of his education attended the common and high schools of his native town, after which he took up the profession of teaching but was also employed by an uncle in business there. At the age of nineteen years, however, he bade adieu to friends and native country and sailed for the new world, making his way at once to Knox county. He arrived in Galesburg in 1877 and afterward went to Alexis, Illinois, but soon returned to Knox county where he has since lived. For five years he was connected with a second-hand store in Galesburg and then embarked in business on his own account, conducting a house-furnishing-goods establishment in which he continued until 1897. At length he withdrew from commercial pursuits to turn his attention to general agricultural pursuits and purchased his present farm of eighty acres, which is situated on section 22, Galesburg township. The land is unusually rich and productive, and the progressive methods which he follows in its cultivation enables him to annually gather substantial harvests. In addition to general farming he is engaged in feeding hogs and thus adds in considerable measure to his income.

In February, 1889, Mr. Olson was united in marriage to Miss Helen Behringer, a daughter of Michael Behringer, and they have two children, Edna and Florence, the former a pupil of Knox College. Mr. Olson is a republican in his political views and keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but has never sought nor desired public office. He has served, however, as school clerk of his district and is a stalwart champion of a high standard of education. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity in Galesburg and finds pleasant relations with his brethren of the craft. He has always lived a busy, active and useful life and his energy, determination and honorable dealing have been the basic elements of success which has crowned his efforts.

CHARLES A. WHITE.

Charles A. White, who has been engaged in the real-estate and insurance business at Galesburg since 1890, has built up an extensive clientage in these connections. His birth occurred in Greenville, Illinois, on the 26th of February, 1860, his parents being Richard and Nancy (McAdow) White, both of whom were natives of Bond county, Illinois. The paternal grandfather, Wesley White, was born in North Carolina and became an early settler of Bond county, Illinois. He was an agriculturist by occupation and lived to attain the age of about eighty-seven years. He was three times married and reared a large family of children. Judge Samuel McAdow, the maternal grandfather of our subject, served at one time as county judge of Bond county. He was a native of North Carolina, followed farming as a life work and lived to attain a ripe old age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Paisley, died when still a comparatively young woman. To them were born four daughters and two sons, namely: John, William, Emily, Elizabeth, Lucy and Nancy.

Richard White, the father of Charles A. White, was a contractor and builder on an extensive scale. He erected the courthouse at Greenville, where his demise occurred in 1886, when he had attained the age of fifty years and five months. His first wife died when our subject was but two years of age, and for his second wife he chose Miss America Moss, by whom he had four children, as follows: Anna, who married a Mr. Kelly; Frank; Sarah; and Elsie.

Charles A. White was reared on a farm at Elm Point, Bond county, Illinois, and obtained his early education in the country schools. Subsequently he attended the public schools at Newton, Kansas, and later pursued a course of study in a business college at Keokuk, Iowa. After putting aside his text-books he started out as an agriculturist on his own account, following farming near Greenville, Bond county, until 1882, when he removed to Newton, Kansas. In 1890 he came to Galesburg and embarked in the real-estate and insurance business, in which he has been successfully engaged to the present time, enjoying a large clientage. He has thoroughly informed himself concerning realty values and its appreciation or diminution in price and is thus enabled to assist his clients in making judicious investments and profitable sales. He owns farm lands in Morgan county, Missouri.

On the 20th of October, 1886, Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Keziah McCulla, a native of Cincinnati and a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Abernathy) McCulla. The father passed away at Birmingham, Missouri, when about seventy-five years of age, but the mother is still living at the age of eighty-six and makes her home in Greenville, Illinois. They were the parents of four daughters and one son, as follows: Lillian, Harriet, Addie, Keziah and Thomas A. Mr. and Mrs. White had four children, namely: Edna B., Ruby

M., Frances and one who died in infancy. The family residence is at No. 752 North Cherry street.

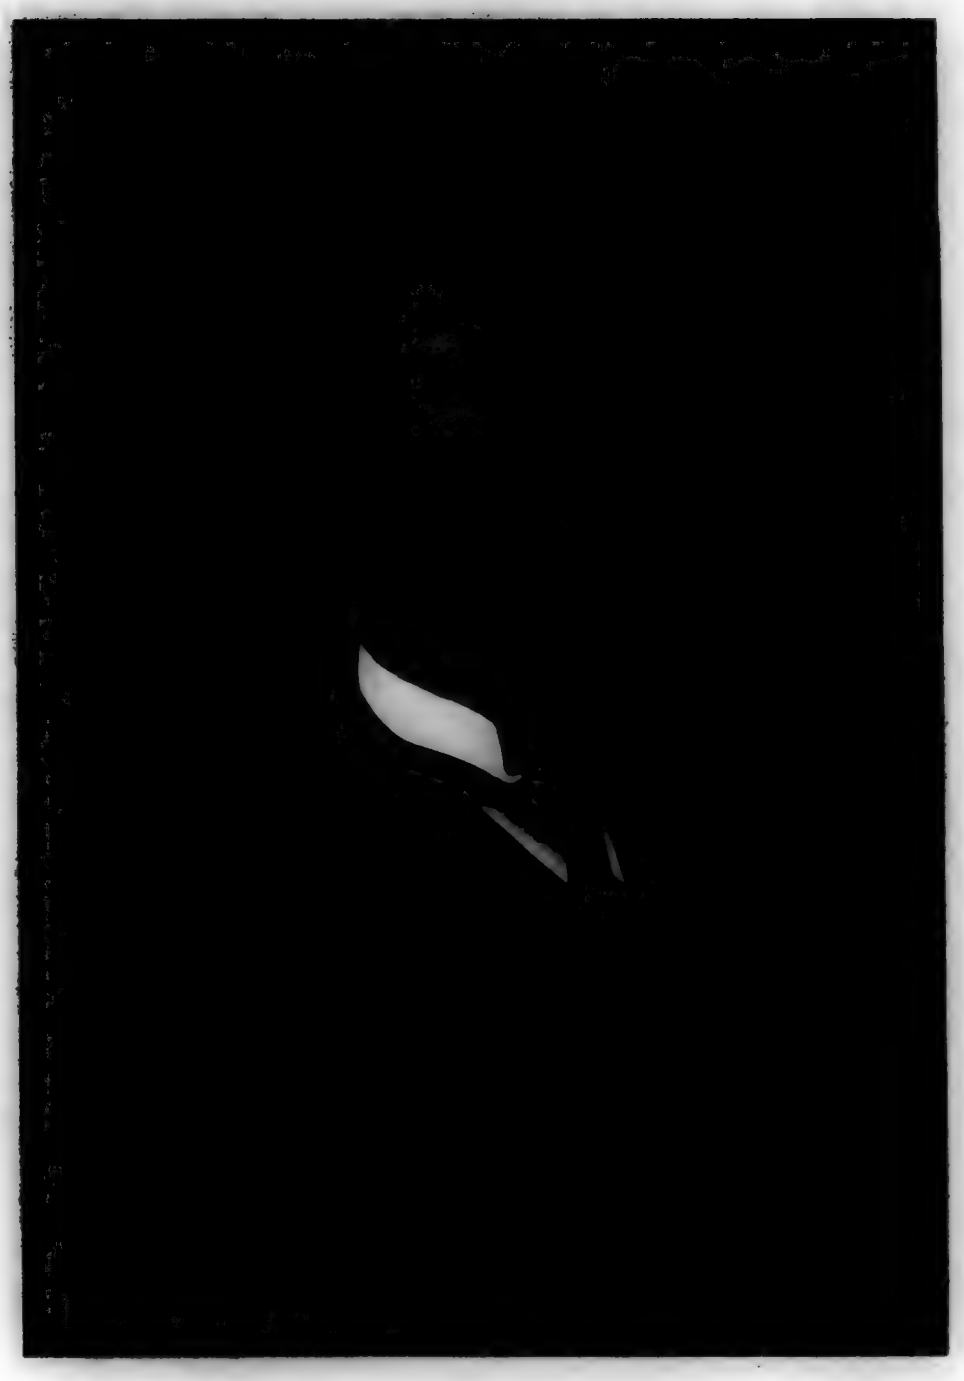
In politics Mr. White is a republican, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Presbyterian church, to which his wife and daughters all belong. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Vesper Lodge, No. 584, A. F. & A. M.; also Council No. 1, at Knoxville; and Galesburg Chapter, No. 46, R. A. M. He is likewise a member of the Court of Honor and the Illinois Commercial Men's Association. He is alert and enterprising, possessing the progressive spirit of the times and accomplishing in business circles what he undertakes, while his geniality and deference for the opinions of others have made his circle of friends almost coextensive with the circle of his acquaintances.

DANIEL JUDSON GRISWOLD, D. D. S.

Dentistry may be said to be almost unique among occupations, as it is at once a profession, a trade and a business. Such being the case, it follows that in order to attain the highest success in it one must be thoroughly conversant with the theory of the art, must be expert with the many tools and appliances incidental to the practice of modern dentistry and must possess business qualifications adequate to dealing with the financial side of the profession. In all of these particulars Dr. Griswold is well qualified and therefore has attained prestige among the able representatives of dentistry in Galesburg, where he has practiced for the past seventeen years. His birth occurred in Jasper county, Indiana, on the 29th of September, 1865, his parents being Ames A. and Elizabeth (Adams) Griswold, who are natives of Vermont and Indiana respectively. The paternal grandfather was also born in the Green Mountain state and was a gentleman of English descent. He died when past middle life, while his wife lived to attain the age of about seventy years. Their children were four in number, namely: Ames A.; Abner; Mrs. Letitia Hall; and Abbie, the wife of Charles Long. The maternal grandfather of our subject was an agriculturist by occupation and both he and his wife passed away in Jasper county, Indiana, at an old age. Their children were as follows: William, Joseph, Marion, Henry, Mrs. Ann Hoover, Mrs. Milton Beal and Mrs. Elizabeth Griswold.

Ames A. Griswold, the father of Daniel J. Griswold, was successfully identified with farming interests throughout practically his entire business career. He became an early settler of Marshall county, Illinois, and there resided for many years or until the time of his retirement, when he removed to Washburn, Illinois, where he now makes his home. In 1852 he made an overland trip to California and engaged in mining for a short time. Both he and his wife are Baptists in religious faith. Unto them were born twelve children, eight of whom still survive, namely: Ida, who is the widow of Thomas Lee Goodell and resides in Washburn, Illinois; Marcia, the wife of J. W. Rains, of Minnesota; Lillie, the wife of A. L. Kuhn, of Chicago; Daniel Judson, of this review; Florence, who gave her hand in marriage to L. L. Hester and now lives near Minonk, Illinois; Della, who is the wife of Basil Tustin and lives near Washburn, Illinois;

Nora Bell, who is the wife of Byron Stitt, of El Paso, Illinois; and Cora Bell, twin sister of Nora Bell, who is the wife of George Stauter and lives near Washburn, Illinois.



Dr. Daniel J. Griswold was reared on his father's farm in Marshall county, Illinois, and obtained his early education in the district schools. He was graduated from the Washburn high school in 1885 and subsequently spent almost four years in Knox College, while later he prepared for the practice of his chosen profession by a three-years' course in the Philadelphia Dental College, being graduated from that institution in 1894. On the 19th of March of that year he opened an office at Galesburg, which city has since remained the scene of his professional labors and where he has been accorded an extensive and remunerative practice. Dr. Griswold has extensive property holdings, owning one thousand acres of land in the province of Alberta, Canada; farm lands in Finney county, Kansas; and also property in Lee and Van Buren counties, Iowa; Meade county, South Dakota; Otsego county, Michigan; and Iola, Kansas, as well as a house and lot in Galesburg. He likewise owns fruit land in Colorado and has mining interests in Gilpin county, that state.

On the 12th of September, 1899, Dr. Griswold was united in marriage to Miss Grace Agnes Ballard, a native of La Crosse, Wisconsin, and a daughter of Dr. J. A. and Henrietta (Sutor) Ballard, who were born in Maine and Canada respectively. They became early settlers of La Crosse, Wisconsin, and are now residents of Galesburg. Dr. J. A. Ballard served as a soldier of the Civil war. Dr. and Mrs. Griswold had three children: John Ballard, who died in infancy; Frederick Anthony, who passed away at the age of two years; and William Ballard.

In his political views Dr. Griswold is a republican, while fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Veritas Lodge, No. 478; he also holds membership in the Galesburg Club and the Young Men's Christian Association. Both he and his wife are devoted and consistent members of the Central Congregational church. His personal characteristics render him popular with many friends and he is much esteemed in social and professional circles of Galesburg.

AUGUST WERNER BERGGREN.

The name of August Werner Berggren is closely interwoven with the history of the industrial, commercial and financial enterprise in Galesburg and also with the political history of county and state, for he has been called to various positions of public honor and trust. At the present time, however, (1912) he is living retired, having with the incoming of the twentieth century given up all active business associations save for the supervision of his interests in property and investments. He was born August 17, 1840, in Amots Bruk, Ockelbo Socken, Sweden, his parents being Johan and Karin (Hanson) Berggren. The father was the third in a family of six children whose parents were Jan and Stina (Person) Larson, who were married in 1787. The latter was a daughter of Anders and Maria (Hanson) Person and they were married in 1759. Johan Berggren was born in 1793 and he and two of his brothers adopted the surname of Berggren, which he afterward bore. It was in 1828 that he wedded Karin Hanson, who was born in 1800. He was a self-educated man and won his way to success by his shrewdness and native ability. He read broadly but learned his most valuable lessons in the school of experience. At different times he held minor offices and looked after cases in court, also administered estates and did other public service of similar character. For thirteen years he operated a flouring mill and afterward purchased a farm, on which he resided until he emigrated to America in 1856. His death occurred February 1, 1863, while his wife passed away in Sweden, February 24, 1845.

August W. Berggren was a pupil in the village schools of Sweden until fourteen years of age, during which time he lived on the home farm. He also later attended the public schools of Galesburg for a short time, when not employed at his trade. In his fourteenth year, he was apprenticed in his native land to learn the tailor's trade, the contract, drawn by his father, providing that for the first three years he should work for his master without remuneration and for the fourth year he was to receive thirty-five riksdaler and for the fifth forty riksdaler, each coin of that denomination being equal to about twenty-seven cents in American money. His father was also to furnish the cloth for the tailor to make the apprentice's clothing. In case of the death of the boy during the first year of his apprenticeship, the father should pay the tailor fifteen riksdaler, and when Johan Berggren decided to emigrate to this country he was obliged to pay the master tailor fifty riksdaler for the release of his son.

The family home was established in Knox county, and at Victoria August W. Berggren first found employment in the tailoring establishment of Jonas Hallstrom at eight dollars per month, in addition to which he was to receive his board and laundry for a year. In 1857 he came to Galesburg, where he followed his trade as opportunity offered and in 1860 he went to Monmouth, Warren county, where he was employed by Captain Denman, a merchant tailor of that place. Before the close of the war he returned to Galesburg and became a solicitor of life insurance. During that period he devoted considerable attention to music, playing the violin and acting as leader of string bands in both Galesburg and Monmouth and arranging the music for these bands. For many years after the war his time and energies were largely devoted to public service and eventually he became closely associated with the important business interests of Knox county as an investor in the Galesburg Stoneware Company, the National Perefoyd Company, the Galesburg Paving Brick Company, the Galesburg National Bank, the Bank of Galesburg and the firm of Berggren & Lundeen, which was succeeded by the J. A. Lundeen Company and still later by the Berggren Clothing Company. In 1884 he was one of the petitioners for the charter of the Galesburg National Bank and has since been a member of its directory, while for several years he has served as its vice president, in which connection he still continues.

Mr. Berggren's military experience had its beginning at the first call for volunteers to put down the Rebellion, at which time he went to Knoxville and joined the Swedish company commanded by Captain Holmberg. Two companies were there—one composed of Americans, the other Swedes—and the former was mustered into the service, while the latter was disbanded. He then went back to Monmouth, where he remained until returning to Galesburg in 1864. It was five years later that he was elected justice of the peace and while serving in that office he was appointed one of the supervisors for the city. His efficiency and fidelity in each position which he filled recommended him for other official service. In 1872 he received the republican nomination and was elected sheriff of the county, to which office he was reelected in 1874, 1876 and 1878. In 1880, while still the incumbent in that position, he was nominated and elected senator from the twenty-second district, composed of Knox and Mercer counties. Four years later he was reelected from the new district composed of Knox and Fulton counties, and when the senate was organized in 1887 he was chosen president pro tempore of that body. On the 1st of May, 1889, there came to him the appointment of warden of the Illinois state penitentiary at Joliet, which position he resigned in March, 1891, to take active supervision of the Covenant Mutual Life Association of Illinois, with principal offices in Galesburg. He had been president of the company from its organization and during the last three years prior to its consolidation with the Northwestern Masonic Association of Chicago, W. H. Smollinger served as its president, with Mr. Berggren as treasurer of the association.

On the 8th of March, 1866, at Knoxville, Illinois, Mr. Berggren was married to Miss Christina Anderson, a daughter of Olof and Brita Anderson, who with six of their seven children emigrated to this country in 1854, joining the Bishop Hill colony. Mr. and Mrs. Berggren became the parents of six children: Capitola Maud, the wife of the Rev. Franklin E. Jeffery; Guy Werner, who married Minnie Flanders of New York; Ralph Augustus, who was run over by a train of cars and killed in 1887; and Claus Eugene, a bachelor, Jay Valentine, who married Bessie Sears, and Earl Hugo, who married Margaret Newton, all of Chicago.

In politics Mr. Berggren has always been a republican and was for a long period a recognized leader in the ranks of his party in this county. He is an Odd Fellow and a Mason, having joined the former order in 1868 and the latter in 1869. He is now affiliated with the several Masonic bodies in Galesburg and in the Odd Fellows society has taken a very active interest, filling every office in the subordinate bodies and the principal offices of the grand lodge. He was grand master and presided over the deliberations of the grand lodge at Danville, Illinois, in 1880, and represented the grand lodge in the sovereign grand lodge at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1885. Through his influence the First Scandinavian Lodge, No. 446, of Galesburg, was organized in 1871. It was the first Odd Fellows lodge in the world composed exclusively of Scandinavians, as its name indicates. Mr. Berggren has also been a member of the Galesburg Club from an early period in its existence. He was confirmed in the Lutheran church in Sweden the year in which he emigrated to America and since coming to this country has affiliated with the Swedish Methodist church, in the work of which he has taken an active and helpful interest. He served as a lay delegate to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1880.

Mr. Berggren has also been interested in educational matters and has on different occasions contributed liberally to Knox College when calls for aid have been urgent.

Thus his interests and activities have been broad and varied, his influence being always found on the side of progress, reform, improvement and advancement. In business his well formulated plans have brought him success, and his energy and determination have carried him into important relations, enabling him at length to put aside all business cares and enter upon a well earned rest. His official record, too, is most commendable, for over the record there falls no shadow of wrong or suspicion of evil. All through his life he has been actuated by high and honorable purposes and his labors, whether for the benefit of himself or for the community, have been fruitful of good results.

MARCUS T. PERRIN.

Marcus T. Perrin is a self-made man who as the architect of his own fortunes has builded wisely and well. His record is another proof of the fact that it is only under the stimulus of necessity and of opposition that the best and strongest in men is brought out and developed. From the age of sixteen years he has been dependent upon his own resources and his advancement marks the wise use of his time, talents and opportunities. He was born in Southbridge, Massachusetts, June 29, 1832, a son of Horace and Theresa (Richardson) Perrin, both of whom were natives of Massachusetts, the father engaging in business in Lee, that state, as a woolen manufacturer. He continued in that connection with the business circles of Lee until his death and his wife passed away in the same city, in August, 1890. Horace Perrin had given his early political allegiance to the democratic party but when Lincoln and Douglas became candidates for the presidency he supported the former and was ever afterward a stanch republican. He held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and both he and his wife were members of the Congregational church. They had but two children, the younger being a daughter, Lucinda Josephine, who is now the widow of Manson P. Shaler and resides in Lee, Massachusetts.

Marcus T. Perrin pursued his education in the district schools and in the Lee Academy, which he attended for one term. At the age of sixteen years he was apprenticed to a woolen manufacturer for a term of three years and followed that business until twenty-two years of age, when he came west to Illinois, traveling by rail to Rock Island, which was the terminus of the line and thence walking to Mercer county. He made his way to the home of an aunt about twelve miles east of Keithsburg, Illinois, but after a brief time left there and entered the employ of George W. Brown as a traveling salesman, spending five years upon the road. He next began farming in Warren county, where he carried on agricultural pursuits for six years, after which he sold his land and in the winter of 1871 engaged in dealing in corn. He was for a time connected with a corn-planter works and for a period of six years was identified with a bank in Creston, Iowa. On the expiration of that period he returned to Galesburg, where he was superintendent of the corn-planter works for several years, after which he was elected to the presidency of the company and continued as its chief executive head until his retirement from active business in 1904.

On the 27th of June, 1858, Mr. Perrin wedded Miss Elizabeth A. Brown, a daughter of George W. and Maria (Terpening) Brown, of Galesburg, who were natives of Saratoga county, New York, where they were reared and married. The father was a carpenter by trade and in 1833 made his way westward, settling in Warren county, Illinois, about seven miles from Galesburg, when the entire district was largely a wild and undeveloped region. He at once began the occupation of farming and later followed carpentering. Realizing the necessity of improved farm machinery, he called his inventive genius into play with the result that his skill and ingenuity brought forth a corn planter which he began to manufacture in Galesburg. The new machine filled a much felt want and he continued in its manufacture until five or six years prior to his death, when he retired. His life work was of value to the community as well as a source of profit to himself. It greatly facilitated the work of the farmer and his manufactory in Galesburg furnished employment to many workmen. He also figured prominently in many public connections, serving for one term as mayor of Galesburg. His political allegiance was given to the republican party and he was ever loyal and unfaltering in his devotion to its principles. Both he and his wife were lifelong members of the Methodist Episcopal church and he served on the official board of stewards for about half a century. He died on the 5th of June, 1895, a man honored and respected wherever known and most of all where he was best known. His life was indeed of worth to the community in which he lived, as a factor in its material, political, social and moral progress. He made wise use of his time and opportunities and of his native talents and his well directed energies brought to him the material reward of his labor and the respect of his fellowmen as well. His daughter, Mrs. Perrin, was born March 21, 1839, in Warren county, and by her marriage became the mother of four children: George, who died April 1, 1901, at the age of forty years; Arthur E., of Chicago; Myra Theresa, the wife of Clarence A. Hurlburt, of Galesburg; and Genevieve Josephine, the wife of Herbert A. Smith, of this city. Both Mr. and Mrs. Perrin hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which he has taken an active and helpful part, serving for many years on the board of stewards and cooperating in all of the projects to promote the growth and extend the influence of the church. His political indorsement is given to the republican party. A well spent life has brought him the merited reward of labor and the respect and good-will of his fellowmen.

HERBERT ARNOLD SMITH.

Herbert Arnold Smith, who has remained a resident of Galesburg from his birth to the present time, is well known as an extensive dealer in lands and also devotes considerable attention to the insurance business. His natal day was August 12, 1871, his parents being Hiram C. and Harriet (Arnold) Smith, both of whom were natives of the state of New York. The paternal grandfather was likewise born in the Empire state and both he and his wife lived to a ripe old age. They reared a large family of children, including John, William and Hiram C.

The last named, who became the father of our subject, was reared in New York and took up his abode among the early settlers of Galesburg, Illinois. Here he was successfully engaged in the nursery business for a number of years or until his health failed. Subsequently he served as constable for about twenty years. His demise occurred at Galesburg in 1905, when he had reached the age of seventy-nine years. His widow still survives and is now seventy-five years old. In religious faith she is a Methodist. Her children were three in number, namely: Minnie L., a Latin teacher in the Galesburg high school; Herbert A., of this review; and Lillian, who died in infancy.

Herbert Arnold Smith was reared in the city of his nativity and completed the high-school course by graduation in 1889. He then worked in the offices of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company and subsequently secured a position as stenographer in the law offices of Williams, Lawrence & Bancroft. In 1893 he embarked in the real-estate business in partnership with his uncle, Seymour Arnold, the relationship being maintained for two years. For the past sixteen years, however, he has been in business alone, handling large land deals in the Saskatchewan country of Canada, where he also owns several farms. He is a stockholder and director in the Hope Abbey Mausoleum and likewise a director in the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association. In all of his business affairs his judgment is sound, his sagacity keen and his enterprise unfaltering.

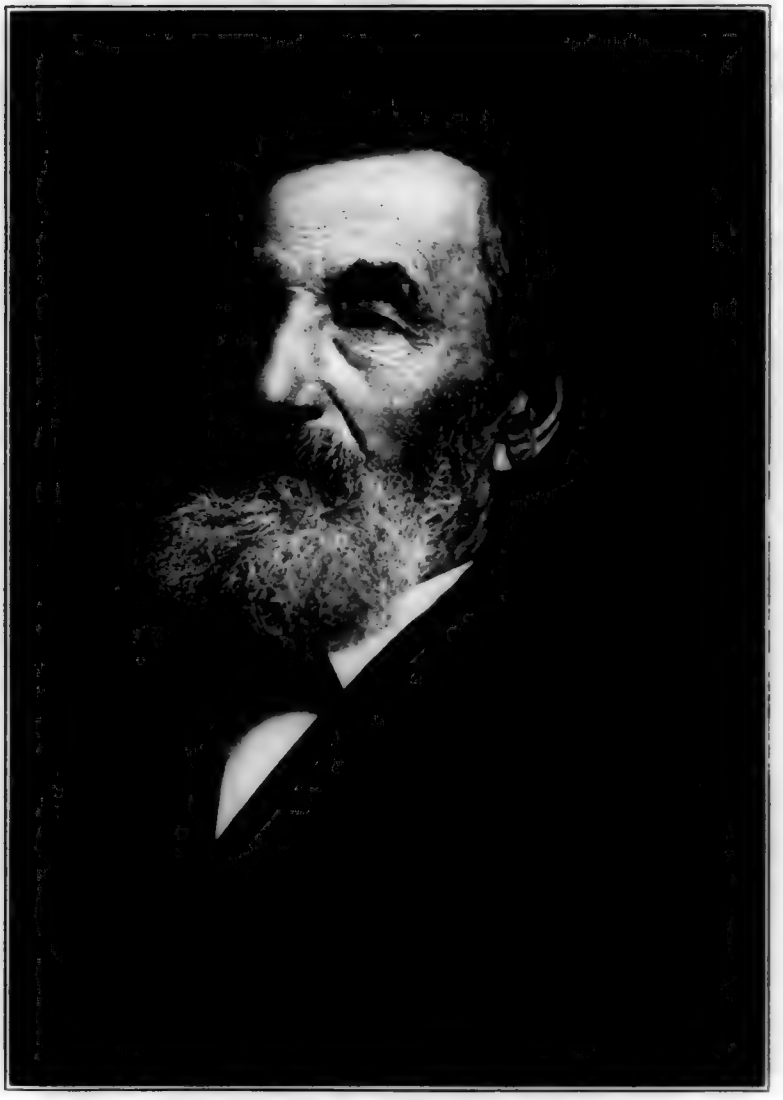
On the 8th of December, 1903, Mr. Smith was united in marriage to Miss Genevieve Perrin, a native of Galesburg and a daughter of Marcus T. and Elizabeth (Brown) Perrin, who were born in Connecticut and Illinois respectively. They have remained residents of Galesburg since their marriage, which was here celebrated fifty-three years ago. Mr. Perrin was connected with the corn-planter works conducted by G. W. Brown until the business was closed out. To him and his wife were born six children, four of whom reached mature years, namely: George, who passed away in 1902; Arthur; Myra; and Genevieve. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Smith were George W. and Maria (Turpening) Brown. Our subject and his wife have one daughter, Harriet Elizabeth. The family residence is at No. 474 North Academy street.

Mr. Smith gives his political allegiance to the republican party, believing that its principles are most conducive to good government. Both he and his wife are devoted and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He likewise belongs to the Country Club and is a director in the Galesburg Club. In the city where they have spent their entire lives both Mr. and Mrs. Smith are well and favorably known, the circle of their friends being coextensive with the circle of their acquaintances.

JOSEPH GROSS.

During the thirteen years of his residence in Galesburg, Joseph Gross has won recognition as a resourceful and enterprising business man and his manufacturing interests have constituted an important element in the commercial activity of the city. As a member of the firm of Gross Brothers he is now conducting a successful overall manufactory which was established in 1901.

He has wisely used his time and opportunities and the splendid business concern which he has built up is a monument to his labors, his enterprise and his ability. He was born in Russia, March 16, 1866, a son of Isaac and Rachel Gross. As a boy he came to the United States, first settling in Omaha, Nebraska. He started in business by making a house to house canvass as a peddler in the sale of merchandise at Creston, Iowa, and in 1892 he opened a second-hand store in Creston. Four years later, in 1896, he established a branch business at Burlington and in 1898 sold out in Creston. In that year he removed from Burlington to Galesburg, disposing of his business in the former city to his brother, and in this city he established a retail general merchandise store, which he conducted successfully for about three years. In February, 1901, he began the manufacture of overalls on the second floor of the building on East Main street, where he continued for a year. Then in order to secure more commodious quarters he removed to the third floor of a building, where he continued for five years or until the 1st of June, 1906, when he came to his present location at the corner of Mulberry and Seminary streets. He erected the building here—a four-story structure, sixty-six by one hundred and twenty feet, having thirty-one thousand, six hundred and eighty square feet of floor space. Something of the rapid and gratifying growth of the business is indicated in the fact that while he at first employed only ten people, he now has one hundred and seventy-five names on the pay roll. The plant is thoroughly equipped with modern machinery and independent motors and the business is represented on the road by seven traveling salesmen who cover the territory of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Oklahoma and Kansas. The output is now very extensive, being shipped to nearly all of the middle west states, and the business has assumed proportions which make it one of the most important productive industries of the city.



On the 20th of October, 1901, Mr. Gross was united in marriage to Miss Libby Oppenheim, a daughter of Max and Yetta Oppenheim, of Peoria, Illinois. Mr. Gross holds to the religious faith of the Jewish church and in politics is an independent voter. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and to the Galesburg Club and is well known in the city socially as well as in business circles, where he is regarded as a most enterprising, progressive man, who with resolute spirit carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

S. W. MAY.

S. W. May, who is living retired on his farm of five hundred and thirty acres in Rio township, has been actively connected with this district for many years both as an agriculturist and as a manufacturer. He was born March 20, 1836, in Genesee county, New York, his parents being Harvey H. and Delia Duwayne (Ray) May. The family comes of English and Dutch ancestry on the paternal side and is of German and French lineage on the maternal side. Harvey H. May was born in Washington county, New York, and his wife's birth occurred in the Empire state in 1806. The former was a son of Nathaniel May, a very prominent church worker of New York and a farmer by occupation. He owned four hundred acres of rich and valuable land and always continued his residence in New York.

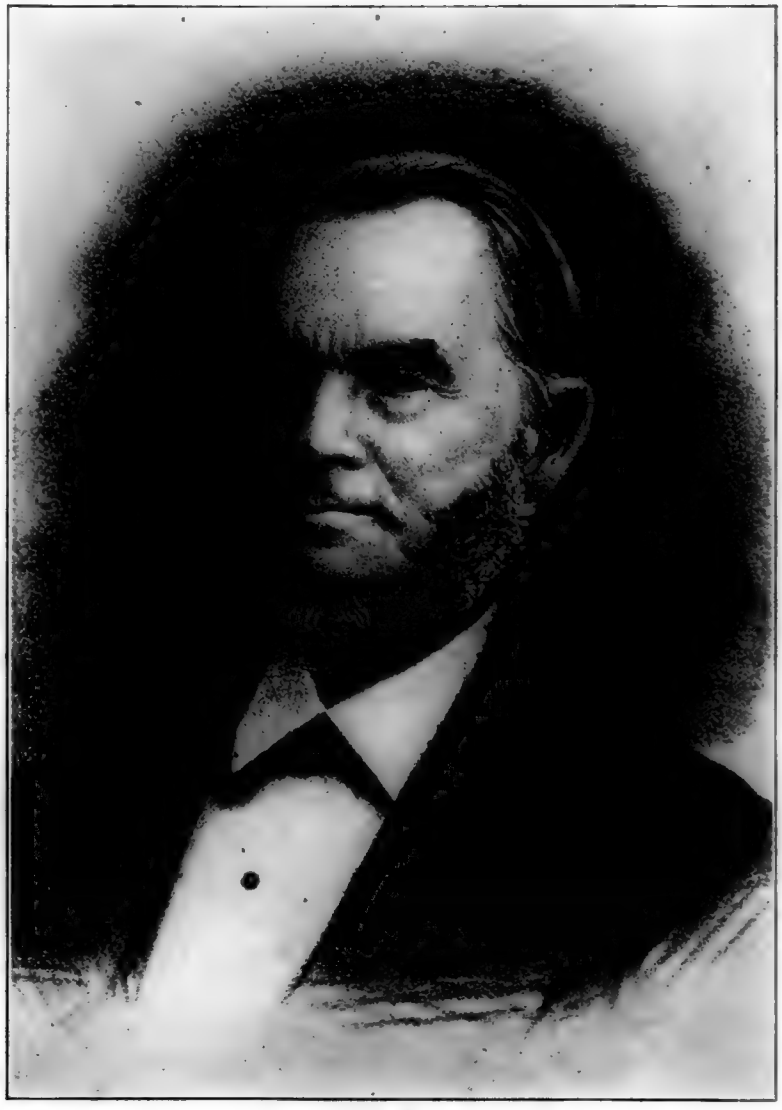
In that state Harvey H. May was reared and educated and in 1837 came to Illinois, accompanied by Dr. Gorham, to look over the country. They made horseback trips throughout this district, viewing the land with the idea of locating here in the near future. A year later H. H. May brought his family and household goods to Knox county, traveling by raft from the state of New York by way of Lake Erie and the Ohio river and bringing with him the lumber from which he built the first pine building in Log City. This he placed on skids and hauled it to Galesburg with ten yoke of cattle. He possessed marked mechanical skill and ingenuity and was proprietor of the first factory in Galesburg. For some time he prospered in business but during the financial crash in the '50s he lost nearly all that he had made. He is most entitled to honor and remembrance by reason of the fact that he was the inventor of the first steel plow which he made from two old mill saws, molding them to the shape desired. He applied for a patent for the use of steel in manufacturing plows so they would scour, in 1842 but it was not granted at that time. He had considerable difficulty in getting a plow that would scour bright but after much discouragement and many trials he finally succeeded in securing material that could be highly polished and would remain that way. Through political reasons he was never able to obtain a good patent but between the years 1867 and 1871 the case was decided by Judge Sidney N. Breese in the United States supreme court. In his decision Judge Breese said: "The history of the plow goes back to 1841." Later he said that "May of Galesburg manufactured a plow in shape nearly the form of that manufactured now." This is S. W. May's earliest recollection of seeing a steel mold board as referred to by Robert N. Tate in the testimony. The share and mold board were combined at that time and May was the first man that laid any claim to the improved steel plow. Later the judge referred to seven working models of plows "copied strictly after the May plow." and added: "I essentially consider May the sole constructor in the form of the western steel plow." By this decision Harvey H. May had the honor and credit of giving to the world this most useful implement. By this invention he demonstrated that a man could do two days' work in one day. In 1842 H. H. May began the manufacture of his plow and continued until about 1859. During the early '40s he had begun the purchase of land in this country and at one time had several thousand acres but through speculation and widespread financial panic in which the country became involved he lost nearly everything that he had. The little that remained was turned over to his son, Samuel W. May, who although a young man took up the work laid down by his father and assumed the task of regaining the fortune his father had lost. H. H. May continued to reside in Galesburg until the time of his death, which occurred in 1886, when he had reached the advanced age of eighty-four years. In politics he was independent, voting as his judgment dictated. In early life he attended the Presbyterian church but was afterward a member of the Congregational church for many years.



In his youthful days Samuel W. May attended the public schools and at the age of thirteen assisted his father, going upon the road as a traveling salesman and selling the plows which the father manufactured. He continued successfully in this work for some time but afterward engaged in teaming between Galesburg and Peoria. Realizing his need and also the value of education, Mr. May when twenty-two years of age entered Knox Academy and diligently applied himself to the mastery of a course of study which prepared him to enter Knox College, where he remained as a student for two years. He next rented a farm in Henderson township which he cultivated for two years prior to his removal to Rio township in 1861. There he purchased farm land which was the nucleus of his present extensive possessions, now comprising five hundred and thirty acres. He has brought his farm under a high state of cultivation and as the reward of his fifty years of labor now has one of the finest properties in Rio township. He has always followed progressive and scientific methods, carrying out his plans with persistency and energy, his labors proving effective in developing the farm for general agricultural purposes. In former years in addition to the cultivation of the soil he also engaged in raising cattle and hogs which proved a profitable branch of his business, nor were his efforts confined to agriculture alone for he engaged in the manufacture of the May windmill which he invented. This has been very successful and has been commonly used in this county for more than thirty years. The first two hundred mills were manufactured on his farm in Rio township but afterward, in order to meet the increasing demands, he made arrangements for their construction with Candee & Company, at Oneida, with Nelson Latueratt & Company, at Bushnell, and with H. L. May, at Galesburg, there operating under the firm name of May Brothers, the business proving very profitable. Although Mr. May now rents his land, he still resides at the old home and is one of the prosperous agriculturists of the county.

On the 27th of November, 1870, occurred the marriage of Mr. May and Miss Elizabeth Hanan, a daughter of William and Eleanor (Handlen) Hanan. On the paternal side the family is of Scotch origin and was founded in America in colonial days, her great-grandfather serving as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Her paternal grandfather, George Hanan, died in the war of 1812. In politics Mr. May has always maintained an independent attitude, voting for men and measures rather than for party principles. His fellow townsmen frequently called him to office and for ten years, beginning in 1880, he served as township supervisor. He is one of the oldest and most prominent residents of Rio township. His life has been spent in persistent and diligent labor for the improvement of his own interests and for the development of the community. In all his business and social relations he has never been neglectful of any duty whether of a public or private nature, and his conduct has always been in accordance with his high sense of citizenship.

SMILEY S. RICKORDS.

Smiley S. Rickords, who for the past fourteen years has been on one of the rural mail routes of Knoxville, was born in Pike county, Ohio, on the 8th of February, 1842, his parents being Benjamin and Sabrina (Kilpatrick) Rickords. His father was born and reared in Maryland, of which state the family had been residents for several generations. He received a common-school education

SMILEY S. RICKORDS.

Smiley S. Rickords, who for the past fourteen years has been on one of the rural mail routes of Knoxville, was born in Pike county, Ohio, on the 8th of February, 1842, his parents being Benjamin and Sabrina (Kilpatrick) Rickords. His father was born and reared in Maryland, of which state the family had been residents for several generations. He received a common-school education and subsequently learned the blacksmith's trade, but in common with many young men he decided to pursue his business career amid new environments. With this purpose in mind he came to Ohio, at that time termed the west, locating in Pike county, and there he met the lady who was destined to become his wife. She was a native of that county, of Irish extraction, her father, Brice Kilpatrick, having been born and reared in Dublin, Ireland. Benjamin Rickords established a shop and engaged in blacksmithing and horseshoeing and also manufactured wagons in Pike county until May, 1857. The lure of the west once more proving irresistible, he disposed of his interests and with his wife and family of eleven children started for Illinois, with Logan county as his destination. He settled in the vicinity of Lincoln and there resumed his trade, which he followed until 1874, when he and the mother made their home with their son John in Arkansas. There she passed away on the 27th of September, that year, and was survived only a few weeks by the father, his death occurring on the 14th of October. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Rickords consisted of six sons and five daughters, as follows: Richard E., who is a resident of Belle Plaine, Kansas; William, who is living in Lincoln, Illinois; Sarah E., who is deceased and was the wife of Samuel Watts; Mary J., also deceased, who married Andrew Lawson; Eliza Ann, the deceased wife of John Lawson; Smiley S., our subject; John W., who was a member of Company H, Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war, being discharged with the rank of corporal, now living in Kingfisher, Oklahoma; Joseph A., who is deceased; Samuel B., a resident of Seymour, Iowa; Druzilla, the deceased wife of Andrew Laswell; and Rebecca, the wife of Mahlon Lawson, of Williamsville, Illinois.

H. H. MAY

Smiley S. Rickords was a lad of fifteen years when he removed with his parents to Logan county, in which public schools he completed his education. After leaving school he entered his father's shop and learned the blacksmith trade, following this occupation for many years in Logan county. From there he went to Hancock county, settling at Carthage where he spent several months before coming to Knoxville. In the late '90s Mr. Rickords withdrew from his trade in order to assume the duties of his present position. He is one of the soldier boys whom Illinois sent to the battlefields of the south during the Civil war, and first enlisted for three months in Company H, Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and at the expiration of that period reenlisted in Company F, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, remaining at the front until the close of hostilities, receiving his discharge at Springfield, Illinois.

On the 7th of June, 1864, Mr. Rickords married Miss Eliza J. Porter, who was born in East Liverpool, Ohio, on the 3d of August, 1849. She is a daughter of John Thomas and Mary (Hickey) Porter, natives of Maryland, whence they removed in early life to Ohio. Farming always engaged the energies of the father, who with his wife and family again started westward. He crossed the prairies of Ohio and Indiana to Illinois, settling on a farm in Logan county and there both he and the mother passed away. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Porter and beside Mrs. Rickords they are as follows: James H., who enlisted from Bloomington in Company H, Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was wounded at the battle of Richmond, when last heard from residing at Edinburg, Illinois; John, who was killed at the battle of Hilton Head, South Carolina, during the Civil war; Rebecca Jane and Josephine, who are deceased; and George, who is living at Galesburg. The children of Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Rickords are named below: Mary, married Louis Faass, a farmer at Billings, Oklahoma, and they have five children: Clarence, Raymond, Mabel, Donald and Walter. George T., who is living at Knoxville, married Zona B. Miller and they are also the parents of five children: Elma, Spencer, Wesley, Edith and Mabel. Fred, who is a resident of Knoxville, chose for his wife Nora B. Way, and to them have been born three sons: Stanley, Charles and Harry. Gertrude is the wife of Jesse Ward of Oregon and the mother of seven sons: James, William, Roy, Harvey, Charles W., Owen, and Howard. Garfield B. married Lottie Foster, of Knoxville, where they continue to reside, and has two sons, Cecil B. and William Dean. The two next in order of birth are William B. and Lincoln Grant, both of whom are still at home. Bessie, who is the youngest member of the family, married Clyde Brown, a brakeman on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and they live at Galesburg.

His political allegiance Mr. Rickords has always given to the republican party, considering its policy best qualified to serve the highest interests of the nation. In matters of faith the family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church of which the mother is a member. Mr. Rickords is identified with the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic, through the medium of which he maintains relations with his comrades of the war. The life of Mr. Rickords has been similar to that of hundreds of American citizens, who do their duty steadfastly to the best of their ability, discharging their obligations to their families and society, while at the same time they establish the nation's standard of citizenship.

HENRY ALONZO ALLEN.

Henry Alonzo Allen is a native son of Galesburg and has spent much of his life in this city, although at intervals he has resided elsewhere. In 1908 he erected a comfortable residence here and now divides his time between Galesburg and Tennessee, where he has important lumber manufacturing interests. His birth occurred December 10, 1842, his parents being Sheldon William and Fidelia (Leach) Allen.

Sheldon W. Allen was born September 28, 1808, in Oneida county, New York, and was a son of Chester Ephraim Allen, who was born at or near New Haven, Connecticut. The latter married Eunice Baldwin, of Bethlehem, Connecticut, and removed to Augusta, Oneida county, New York, where they reared their family of nine children, namely, Sophia, Juliette, Sheldon, Algenia, Amanda, Adaline, Mary, Homer and Asahel. In the county of his nativity, Sheldon W. Allen was reared and after arriving at years of maturity he was married in January 1834, to Miss Fidelia Leach, who was born in the Empire state in 1812. Three years after their marriage they removed westward, settling in Galesburg, Illinois, in 1837. They were the parents of eight children, James Sherman, Shelfantry and was wounded at the battle of Richmond, when last heard from residing at Edinburg, Illinois; John, who was killed at the battle of Hilton Head, South Carolina, during the Civil war; Rebecca Jane and Josephine, who are deceased; and George, who is living at Galesburg. The children of Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Rickords are named below: Mary, married Louis Faass, a farmer at Billings, Oklahoma, and they have five children: Clarence, Raymond, Mabel, Donald and Walter. George T., who is living at Knoxville, married Zona B. Miller and they are also the parents of five children: Elma, Spencer, Wesley, Edith and Mabel. Fred, who is a resident of Knoxville, chose for his wife Nora B. Way, and to them have been born three sons: Stanley, Charles and Harry. Gertrude is the wife of Jesse Ward of Oregon and the mother of seven sons: James, William, Roy, Harvey, Charles W., Owen, and Howard. Garfield B. married Lottie Foster, of Knoxville, where they continue to reside, and has two sons, Cecil B. and William Dean. The two next in order of birth are William B. and Lincoln Grant, both of whom are still at home. Bessie, who is the youngest member of the family, married Clyde Brown, a brakeman on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and they live at Galesburg.

His political allegiance Mr. Rickords has always given to the republican party, considering its policy best qualified to serve the highest interests of the nation. In matters of faith the family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church of which the mother is a member. Mr. Rickords is identified with the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic, through the medium of which he maintains relations with his comrades of the war. The life of Mr. Rickords has been similar to that of hundreds of American citizens, who do their duty steadfastly to the best of their ability, discharging their obligations to their families and society, while at the same time they establish the nation's standard of citizenship.

HENRY ALONZO ALLEN.

Henry Alonzo Allen is a native son of Galesburg and has spent much of his life in this city, although at intervals he has resided elsewhere. In 1908 he erected a comfortable residence here and now divides his time between Galesburg and Tennessee, where he has important lumber manufacturing interests. His birth occurred December 10, 1842, his parents being Sheldon William and Fidelia (Leach) Allen.

Sheldon W. Allen was born September 28, 1808, in Oneida county, New York, and was a son of Chester Ephraim Allen, who was born at or near New Haven, Connecticut. The latter married Eunice Baldwin, of Bethlehem, Connecticut, and removed to Augusta, Oneida county, New York, where they reared their family of nine children, namely, Sophia, Juliette, Sheldon, Algenia, Amanda, Adaline, Mary, Homer and Asahel. In the county of his nativity, Sheldon W. Allen was reared and after arriving at years of maturity he was married in January 1834, to Miss Fidelia Leach, who was born in the Empire state in 1812. Three years after their marriage they removed westward, settling in Galesburg, Illinois, in 1837. They were the parents of eight children, James Sherman, Sheldon Oberlin, Albert Herman, Henry Alonzo, Norman Taylor, Chester Ephraim, Mary Fidelia and John Stebbins. The wife and mother passed away November 23, 1855, and Sheldon W. Allen afterward married Nancy Shaver, by whom he had seven children, George, Frank, Alida, Fred, Ida, Minnie and Willie. Of these Frank, Alida and Fred are still living. Of the children of the first marriage all are yet living with the exception of Sheldon and Mary.

Galesburg was but a tiny western town when the Allen family was established there and had not advanced far toward its present prosperous and progressive condition when Henry A. Allen was pursuing his education in its public schools. He afterward entered Knox College, wherein he continued his studies until the 15th of October, 1861, when he left the junior class to enlist as a soldier in the Civil war. Later he continued his education in Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, New York, from which he was graduated on the 22d of March, 1866. In the meantime he had seen four years military service, having on the 15th of October, 1861, joined Company C, of the Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Cavalry. He was injured in action near Boliver, Tennessee, August 30, 1862, sustaining a gunshot wound through the left hand and left leg. On the 1st of June, 1863, he was promoted to the rank of commissary sergeant and was mustered out with his regiment October 18, 1865. He had participated in a number of important engagements and for four years had given tangible proof of his valor, his loyalty and his patriotism.

After completing his education in Eastman's Business College of New York Mr. Allen became connected with the butchering business at Galesburg, where he remained until the spring of 1869. He then removed to Viola, Illinois, where he conducted a lumberyard until the spring of 1871. At that date he became a resident of Pettis county, Missouri, where he engaged in farming, but in December, 1873, returned to Galesburg, where he followed farming and butchering until the spring of 1877. He was then elected justice of the peace and served for four years, his decisions being strict and impartial so that his course won the approval of the public. On the 1st of August, 1881, he was appointed United States storekeeper and while discharging the duties of that position resided in Peoria until the 1st of February, 1886, when he removed to Russell county, Kansas, where he engaged in farming. In September, 1896, he returned with his family to Galesburg but in the spring of 1899 removed to Fayette county, Tennessee, where he again took up the occupation of farming. In 1904 he purchased a sawmill, which he operated in connection with his agricultural pursuits. In 1908 he returned with his family to Galesburg, erecting an attractive home here, and has since divided his time between this city and Tennessee, giving supervision to his agricultural and industrial interests in that state. In addition to his other interests Mr. Allen was a director and president of the Farmers Alliance Exchange Company of Russell, Kansas, for several years and was also a director and secretary of the Farmers Union Warehouse Company, of Somerville, Tennessee.

On the 16th of September, 1867, at Denison, Iowa, Mr. Allen was united in marriage to Miss Sue McIlhenny Cobean, a daughter of Robert and Nancy (McIlhenny) Cobean. Her father was a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Cunningham) Cobean. The latter was a daughter of Robert and Martha (Watt) Cunningham, whose parents were John and Elizabeth Cunningham and David and Mary Watt respectively. John Cunningham, the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Allen, came to this country from the north of Ireland about the year 1748. His son Robert settled in Adams county, Pennsylvania, about 1770, and served in the Revolutionary war, being commissioned a lieutenant. David and Mary Watt, great-great-grandparents of Mrs. Allen, came to the new world from the vicinity of Glasgow, Scotland, in the decade between 1740 and 1750, settling near Oxford, Chester county, Pennsylvania. The tall monument to John Watt in the burial ground of Trinity church on Broadway, opposite Wall street, New York, and the Watt monument in Glasgow, Scotland, both indicate where ancestors of Mrs. Allen lie buried. Mrs. Nancy Cobean, the mother of Mrs. Allen, was a daughter of Victor and Agnes E. W. (Orr) McIlhenny, the latter a daughter of George Orr and the former a son of Robert and Martha (King) McIlhenny. This Robert McIlhenny was a son of Robert McIlhenny, Sr., and his wife, Martha King, was a daughter of Victor King. Both of these were great-great-grandfathers of Mrs. Allen and both came from the north of Ireland, settling in Adams county, Pennsylvania, in 1767. Her great-great-grandfather Victor King and her great-grandfather Robert McIlhenny both served in the Revolutionary war and both were commissioned lieutenants.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Allen were born seven children. Sue Fidelia, the eldest, born August 25, 1869, was married February 14, 1889, to George W. Chew, and they had three children: Anna Grace; Mary Allen; and William Henry, who died in childhood. Harry Myrtle Allen, born October 4, 1874, wedded on April 15, 1896, Anna Melissa Bunner, and they have three children, Thomas Henry, Donald Ray and Harry Bunner. Nettie Cobean Allen was born April 15, 1877, and is at home with her parents. Bessie Leach, born December 7, 1879, is a missionary at Teheran, Persia. Ralph Chester, born April 15, 1882, was married January 3, 1904, to Pearl Lavinia Kolla, and they have three children, Chester Robinson, James Everett and Robert Cobean. Sheldon Robert, born April 18, 1884, was married July 12, 1906, to Edna Josephine Parnell. Willis Ray, born July 23, 1889, died February 17, 1893.

Mr. Allen has always been regarded as a man of prominence and influence in the different localities in which he has lived and has done not a little toward molding public opinion. In politics he is a republican, always stanch in support of the party. While living at Viola, Illinois, he was elected village trustee in the spring of 1869. In April, 1877, he was elected justice of the peace in Galesburg and filled the position for four years. This was followed by his appointment to the position of United States storekeeper at Peoria, in which capacity he served from August 1, 1881, until February 1, 1886. In November, 1888, he was elected county commissioner of Russell county, Kansas, for a term of three years, and was reelected in November, 1891. During five of the six years of his service he was chairman of the board and he also served for several years as school director in the same county. As president of the Russell County Farmers Alliance he attended the meeting of county presidents at Topeka, Kansas, and voted against the formation of the populist party. He was a delegate to the sixth district republican congressional convention at Colby, Kansas, in 1892. There several ballots were taken yet no candidate received a sufficient number of votes to become the party nominee. Then his name was presented and he received so many votes on the first ballot as to alarm the regular candidates, who secured an adjournment and fixed up their differences, which resulted in the nomination of Webb McNall. He was urged by his friends in Russell county to allow his name to be presented as a candidate before the populist convention but declined.

He has been elected to various offices outside the pale of politics, serving as president of the Farmers Alliance at Russell, Kansas, and also as president of the County Alliance of Russell county, Kansas. He has likewise been secretary of the Fayette County Farmers Union at Somerville, Tennessee, and was president of the Farmers Institute at Russell, Kansas. In fact, he has been a very prominent worker in behalf of organized effort for the benefit of the agricultural class and his labors have been productive of much good. He is well known, too, in fraternal relations and has the highest regard of many of his brethren in the different lodges to which he belongs. In 1879 he joined the Masonic order and has since taken the degrees of the chapter and commandery. He has served as high priest of Russell Chapter in Russell, Kansas, and also as high priest of the chapter at Somerville, Tennessee. He was a charter member of the Grand Army post at Galesburg, served as its first officer of the day and its third commander, and he was also commander of the post at Russell, Kansas.

His has been an extremely active, busy and useful life. His labors have been attended by substantial and gratifying results for the benefit of the different organizations with which he is identified, while in business affairs his well directed efforts have brought him a substantial and gratifying measure of success.

EDWIN NASH, M. D.

Dr. Edwin Nash, a physician and surgeon of Galesburg, has there practiced his profession since 1904 and has won an enviable reputation as a skilled representative of the medical fraternity. His birth occurred in Chicago, on the 21st of November, 1876, his parents being Orrin and Martha (Heald) Nash, who are natives of Massachusetts and Illinois respectively. The paternal grandfather, Hervey Nash, was born in the state of New York and became a railroad contractor. He and his wife, Mrs. Anna (Swift) Nash, settled in Chicago about 1856 and spent the remainder of their lives in Illinois, passing away in Gibson City at an old age. They had quite a number of children, including: Nicholas; Milton; James; Hervey; Orrin; Loraine, who gave her hand in marriage to John Carver; Marilla; and Marietta. Alexander Heald, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of New York and a contractor by trade. He and his wife, Mrs. Naomi (Pope) Heald, took up their abode among the early settlers of Lake county, Illinois, and passed away in Chicago when well advanced in years. Their children were four in number, namely: Martha, Mary, James and Nelson.

Orrin Nash, the father of Dr. Nash, accompanied his parents on their removal to Illinois when a youth of thirteen, the family home being established in Chicago, where he grew to manhood and completed his education. In April, 1862, he joined the Union army as a private, serving until the cessation of hostilities with the Chicago Mercantile Battery, Artillery. After the close of the war he went to Louisville, Kentucky, and followed bridge building in partnership with his brother for a number of years. After returning to Chicago he was elected to various county offices and acted as committee clerk of the board of commissioners for about thirty years. At the present time he makes his home in Boston. He is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity and both he and his wife are Universalists in religious faith. They have two sons: Wilmar, living in Boston; and Edwin, of this review.

The latter was reared in the city of his nativity and is a graduate of the Oak Park high school. After leaving that institution he entered the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College and was graduated therefrom in 1900. Subsequently he spent eighteen months as interne in the Cook County Hospital and then devoted another year to study in Rush Medical College, of which institution he is likewise a graduate. He first located for practice in Chicago but in 1904 came to Galesburg and has here since remained, his patronage steadily increasing as he has demonstrated his skill and ability in coping with the intricate problems which continually confront the physician in his efforts to restore health and prolong life. Through his membership in the Knox County Medical Society and the Illinois State Medical Society he keeps in close touch with the progress which is constantly being made by the profession.

On the 2d of October, 1902, Dr. Nash was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Scofield, a native of Rock county, Wisconsin, and a daughter of George and Sarah (Hurd) Scofield, who were also born in that state. The father passed away in Janesville, Wisconsin, but the mother still survives and makes her home at that place. They had seven children, namely: Mitta, Clara, Willis, Elma, Jessie, Bertha and Floy. Silas Hurd, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Nash, was a native of New York, became a farmer and miller by occupation and took up his abode among the early settlers of Rock county, Wisconsin. Dr. and Mrs. Nash have two children, Edwin and Lois.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Dr. Nash has supported the men and measures of the republican party, believing that its principles are most conducive to good government. In religious faith both he and his wife are Universalists. Though yet a young man, he has already attained a creditable position in professional circles, while the salient characteristics of his manhood are such as have brought him the warm regard of those with whom he has been otherwise associated.

EDISON P. METCALF.

Edison P. Metcalf, deceased, who during his active business life was associated with farming interests in Knox county, was born in the state of New York on the 8th of July, 1838, his parents being Jonathan G. and Phoebe (Fountain) Metcalf, who were likewise natives of New York. There the father followed the occupation of farming until he removed westward with his family, settling in Knox county at an early period in its development and improvement. He took up his abode upon a tract of land east of Knoxville and continued to engage in the cultivation of the fields until his life's labors were ended in death. His diligence and reliability in business made him a valued citizen and one worthy the regard uniformly given him. In the family were the following children, but the only one now living is Mrs. Mary Ferry, of Knoxville. Sarah, Edison P., Rufus and Mrs. Harriet Vermillion are deceased.

Edison P. Metcalf was a young lad when he accompanied his parents on their removal westward to Knox county. He pursued his early education in the district schools and afterward continued his studies in the schools of Knoxville. He was trained to the work of the farm and took up farming on his own account when a young man. He continued to engage in agricultural pursuits throughout his entire life and became the owner of a well developed property, the fields being brought under a high state of cultivation, while substantial improvements were made upon the farm in the shape of substantial buildings and well kept fences.

On the 18th of December, 1862, Mr. Metcalf was united in marriage to Miss Marion Gould, who was born in Adams county, Illinois, February 16, 1840, a daughter of William and Sallie Ann (Mapes) Gould, natives of New Hampshire and Vermont respectively. This section of Illinois was still largely undeveloped when they came to the state, taking up their abode in Adams county, where the father devoted his attention to farming. He was also a carpenter by trade and his skill with tools enabled him to keep everything about his farm in excellent condition. He remained in Adams county for some time and then removed to Knox county when Mrs. Metcalf was a small child but during the fall before she was thirteen the family went to Morgan county, Missouri, where the mother died and was buried. The family afterward returned to Knox county, Illinois, and here the father lived until called to his final rest. They were the parents of nine children, of whom five died in infancy, while four reached years of maturity, namely: John, now deceased; Mrs. Metcalf; William, who is living in this county; and Mrs. Samantha Metcalf, who resides northeast of Knoxville.

Unto Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf there were born seven children. Marietta, the eldest, became the wife of Stephen M. Turner but is now deceased. In their family were eight children: Geneva; Oran; Eva; Gertrude; Lee; Maude; and Merle and Pearl, twins. Melissa Ann, the second of the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Edison Metcalf, is the deceased wife of Charles A. Ramp, of this county, and of their five children two died in infancy, the others being Alice G., Inez L. and Lavon. Emma Metcalf is the wife of Charles M. Hawley, a resident farmer of this county, and they had seven children, of whom Robert C. and Lessie are deceased, the others being Sylva S., Selma M., Ray, Roy and Allie. Ellen Mae became the wife of William Armstrong but both have passed away. They are survived by three living children: Bessie R., Minnie J. and Aileen M. Charles W. Metcalf makes his home near London Mills, Fulton county. Alma A., the next of the family, died in infancy. Alice G. is the wife of Franklin Sargent and they reside in Knoxville, Illinois. They have four living children: Charles E.; Celia Mae and Cecil Merle, twins; and Vivian. They have lost their first daughter, Catherine M. Geneva Turner married Frank Howalter, of Knox county; and Eva Turner became the wife of Thomas Davidson.

The death of Mr. Metcalf occurred in 1906 when he had reached the age of sixty-eight years. He was a member of the United Brethren church and his wife holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church. His political allegiance was given the republican party and he was always loyal to his honest belief. Those who knew him, and he had a wide acquaintance, entertained for him warm regard. He was devoted to the welfare and happiness of his family, was progressive and public-spirited in citizenship and loyal in friendship, and because of his many sterling traits of character he left to his family the priceless heritage of an untarnished name.

EDWARD RICHMOND ADAMS.

Almost three decades have passed since Edward Richmond Adams was called to his final rest, and yet his memory is enshrined in the hearts of many who knew him and who entertain for him the warmest regard because of his individual traits of character and the important part which he played in the public life of Galesburg. He figured prominently here for many years as a merchant and in matters of citizenship his influence was always given on the side of progress, reform and improvement. He was born in Stoughton, Massachusetts, February 5, 1809, and traced his ancestry back to Henry Adams who, on coming from England in 1632, settled in Braintree, Massachusetts, where the family home was maintained until the Rev. Jedediah Adams was called to a pastorate in Stoughton after 1733. Dr. Peter Adams, the father of Edward R. Adams, was born in Stoughton, June 3, 1756, and was graduated from Harvard College in 1778. He studied medicine and was the first regularly settled physician in Stoughton. In 1805 he wedded Sarah Johnson, a daughter of Lewis and Mary (May) Johnson of that place. The father died in 1832 and the mother passed away the following year.

Edward R. Adams pursued his education in the common schools, but remained throughout life a broad reader of the best literature and kept well informed upon all topics of general and vital interest. After leaving his native town he engaged in business in Boston until 1836 when he removed westward to Illinois, settling first in Henderson county where he engaged in buying all kinds of produce which he shipped to New Orleans. In 1854 he came to Galesburg and about 1855 he established a business that constituted the nucleus of the present saddlery and hardware establishment of Adams & Johnson Company. About 1855 he built the stores at Nos. 1 and 3 Main street, and throughout the period of his residence in Galesburg, covering almost three decades, was prominently, closely and honorably associated with its business activities and its upbuilding. He always followed constructive methods, never taking advantage of the necessities of another, and his enterprise, diligence and honorable dealing brought him well merited success. He was one of the original incorporators of the Farmers' & Merchanics' Bank, and served as a member of its board of directors until he resigned in September, 1882.

Mr. Adams was married twice. He first wedded Miss Mahala Choate, of Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1842. Her death occurred the following year and on the 12th of August, 1846, he wedded Miss Nancy Gilbert Thomas of New Haven, Connecticut, a daughter of Lewis and Mary (Gilbert) Thomas. There were seven children of this marriage, of whom four died in infancy or in childhood, while three survived their parents. They are: Edward Quincy, who was married in 1885 to Miss Helen L. Gay, of Easton, Massachusetts, and has two children; Katherine Amelia, the wife of Wallace S. Johnson, whom she married in 1884 and by whom she has two children; and Harriett Marsh, living at Galesburg. The death of Mr. Adams took place on October 2, 1883.

Mr. Adams was the possessor of an unusually fine tenor voice and was a member of the two oldest musical societies in the country, the Stoughton Musical Society, which was formed in 1756 and of which his father, Dr. Peter Adams was a charter member, and the Handel & Hayden Society of Boston which was founded in 1815. While not a member, Mr. Adams was a generous contributor to and constant attendant of the services of the Congregational (brick) church and the Universalist church in which he had been reared, his grandfather, the Rev. Jedediah Adams having been the first regularly settled minister of that faith in Stoughton. Mr. Adams was recognized as a man of high moral character whose devotion to his duty was unquestioned, and who ever sought those influences and aids which are of the most value in promoting individual and community progress. He was devoted to his home and family, was always a generous friend and gave freely of his means to those who needed assistance. Many testify as to his generosity and his kindly spirit, and the name of Edward Richmond Adams is yet an honored one in Galesburg where he so directed his labors as to make his work of lasting benefit to the city.

GEORGE FREEMAN CONLEY.

George Freeman Conley, who for the past fourteen years has been representing the fourth ward in the city council, is one of the well known residents of Galesburg. He was born on a farm in the vicinity of Wataga, Knox county, on the 22d of July, 1853, the only child of Linzley and Catherine (Anderson) Conley. The father was born in Glasgow, Barren county, Kentucky, on June 16, 1827, while the mother's birth occurred in Hancock county, Indiana, May 6, 1830. When he was a lad of three years Linzley Conley came to Illinois with his father, Levey P. Conley, who had been given a grant for one hundred and sixty acres of land in Knox county, eighty for services rendered in the Black Hawk war and eighty on account of the war of 1812. For many years Levey P. Conley devoted his entire time and attention to the further development and improvement of his farm, and there he passed away on January 4, 1870, at the age of seventy-eight years, while his wife died November 10, 1864. His son, Linzley Conley, was reared and educated on the old homestead, where he also received his agricultural training. When he had attained his majority he left the parental home and began working for himself, continuing to follow farming. At the breaking out of the Civil war, in 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Forty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry as a private and went to the front where he remained for nearly three years. The hardships and privations incident to army life completely undermined his health, and he returned to the old farm practically an invalid. He again turned his attention to the cultivation of the fields, devoting his energies to agricultural pursuits until 1868. In the latter year he gave up farming and came to Galesburg, and from that period until his death on the 13th of February, 1899, engaged in sinking artesian wells. The mother had passed away many years before on the farm, her demise occurring on April 27, 1854. They were married, June 22, 1851. They were members of the Baptist church, and the father also belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic. In his political views he was a republican and while residing at Galesburg served as constable.

The early years in the life of George Freeman Conley were spent on the old farm, in the work of which he assisted while pursuing his studies in the common schools of Wataga. On the 10th of June, 1870, at the age of seventeen years, he began work as a section hand on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He had higher aspirations, however, and on October 13, 1872, began braking on a freight train. In the discharge of his services he was both efficient and satisfactory and on the 20th of June, 1876, he was promoted to the position of conductor. He continued in this capacity for twenty years, at the expiration of which period he was given a passenger train. He is now and has been for some time on the Peoria and Galesburg division of the road. In years of continuous service he is one of the oldest men in the employ of the company, having been with them for over forty-one years.

On the 20th of March, 1875, Mr. Conley was married to Miss Mary Matthews, a native of Scott county, Iowa, who passed away on February 25, 1885. One daughter was born unto them, Grace W., who is at home with her father. On October 19, 1889, Mr. Conley married Mrs. H. H. McSkinnens, whose death occurred on June 12, 1908.

Mr. Conley has ever been loyal to the principles of the republican party and for fourteen years has been alderman from the fourth ward. That he has discharged his duties in a highly satisfactory manner is evidenced by the length of his period of service. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to the Blue Lodge, council and commandery, and he is also a member of the Fraternal Reserve, Court of Honor, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Elks Club. He is a member of the legislative committee for the state of Illinois, of the Order of Railway Conductors and has held all of the chairs. Mr. Conley possesses a high sense of honor, and always discharges any duty assigned him with a conscientious appreciation of his responsibility.

S. A. WAGONER.

Persistence of purpose and unfaltering energy have been strong forces in winning success for S. A. Wagoner and thorough training in his especial line has also constituted a feature in the establishment of his present prosperous business which is conducted under the name of the Wagoner Printing Company at Galesburg. The business was established in 1897, and since that time Mr. Wagoner has been active in its control and management. He is one of Wisconsin's native sons, his birth having occurred near Viroqua, March 25, 1863, his parents being Alexander and Hannah (Bahr) Wagoner. The father was born near Watertown, Jefferson county, New York, and when a young man came to Wisconsin. He was a farmer by occupation and at one time engaged in the conduct of a meat market in Laporte City, Iowa. He afterwards spent six years as a minister in connection with the Evangelical Association and then returning to commercial life became manager for a lumber company in Duluth, Minnesota, and now resides at Tower, Minnesota.

It was in 1861 that he married Hannah Bahr, who was born near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and they became parents of two children, Simon Alvey and William E., both residents of Galesburg. The father is a republican in his political views and in his fraternal relations is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Simon A. Wagoner was educated in the public schools in his native state and also in the high school at Red Oak, Iowa. He was only fourteen years of age when he began learning the printing business at Anita, Iowa, where he remained for two years. He then returned to Laporte City, Iowa, where he followed his trade for nine years, and during his residence in that place established the Laporte City Review in connection with a partner with whom he remained for nine years. While there he made the acquaintance of A. D. Thurston, night telegraph operator, and they formed a partnership for the publication of the monthly paper called the Railroad Telegrapher. These two men called a meeting of the telegraph operators of the United States at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in July, 1886, and one hundred delegates from a number of different states assembled in convention there and established the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Mr. Thurston becoming the first grand chief telegrapher of the order. Mr. Wagoner remained the editor and manager of the paper which was printed at Laporte City, Iowa, until 1888, when he removed to Vinton, Iowa, where he remained for three years and in November, 1891, he came to Galesburg as superintendent of the printing plant of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of which he was in charge until it was removed from Galesburg five years later. At the same time he conducted a small fruit farm near the city, and in 1897 he established his present business in which he was joined by W. E. Wagoner and G. H. Mehler. They began business in a small way on the third floor of the Bank of Galesburg building on Main street where they continued until 1901 when they consolidated their interests with the job-printing department of the Evening Mail, called the Mail Printing Company. The business was incorporated for thirteen thousand dollars with S. A. Wagoner, as president, F. H. Sisson, vice president, E. S. Tobey, secretary and C. H. May, treasurer. They removed to the Mail building on Cherry street, and there continued until 1909 when the business was reincorporated under the style of the Wagoner Printing Company and capitalized for twenty thousand dollars, with S. A. Wagoner as president and manager, H. W. Lass, vice president and E. S. Tobey secretary and treasurer. They employ thirty-five people and conduct a general printing business, a complete system of direct-connected individual motors to all machines forming a part of the equipment of the plant. The business has steadily grown until it amounts to seventy-five thousand dollars annually, two thirds of which comes from outside the city. They make a specialty of college and fraternity printing and keep in touch with the most modern and advanced styles of the printing art.

On the 25th of November, 1885, Mr. Wagoner was married to Miss Emma R. Fischer, a daughter of Henry Erhardt and Catherine (Freiberger) Fischer, of Laporte City, Iowa. Her parents were natives of Darmstadt, Germany, and came to the United States in the '50s, settling in Ondaga county, New York, where the father followed the occupation of farming and also as a representative of the ministry of the Evangelical Association engaged in preaching in Utica and in Troy, New York. He died in Manlius, New York, in 1868, after which his widow came to the west, settling in Cedar Falls, Iowa, while later she became a resident of Laporte City, Iowa, where she married the Rev. George Eckhard. He died November 28, 1910. Mrs. Eckhard still survives and now makes her home in Cedar Falls. Her daughter, Mrs. Wagoner, was born in Utica, Ondaga county, New York, March 28, 1865, and by her marriage has become the mother of two daughters but the younger, Helen R., who was born in Galesburg, died when but eighteen months old. The elder daughter, Nora M., was born in Laporte City, Iowa.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Wagoner are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they take active and helpful part. Mr. Wagoner is now serving on the board of stewards, is secretary of the building committee, is one of the trustees of the church and is teacher of the men's bible class in the Sunday school. He is greatly interested in Sunday-school work and is serving on the executive committee and finance committee of the Knox County Sunday School Association. He is also an exemplary member of Vesper Lodge, No. 584, F. & A. M.; Camp No. 667, M. W. A. He is also a member of the Galesburg Club and is president of the Retail Merchants' Association. He has made an excellent record in business, wisely used his time and opportunities, and as the years go by, has steadily progressed, winning success along the legitimate business lines. He has ever recognized the fact that satisfied customers are the best advertisement, and the excellent work which he has done has been the chief factor in his enviable and well merited success.

FRANK SEARS BARTLETT.

Frank Sears Bartlett, a representative of an old and prominent family of Knox county, is successfully engaged in business as a member of the real-estate and insurance firm of Bartlett & Robbins and is likewise the secretary of the Mutual Loan & Building Association of Galesburg. His birth occurred in this county, on the 4th of December, 1855, his parents being Erasmus Almon and Helen J. (Sears) Bartlett, both of whom were natives of the state of New York. The paternal grandfather, John D. Bartlett, was born in Vermont and when four years of age was taken by his parents to Genesee county, New York, where he grew to manhood and conducted a hotel in Alexander. In 1842 he visited Illinois on horseback and two years later brought his family here, purchasing land in Rio township. He passed away at the age of seventy-eight years, while his wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Pryor, was about eighty-two years when called to her final rest. Their children were five in number, namely: Livona, who gave her hand in marriage to E. C. Field; Loamma M.; Erasmus A.; Sarah, who became the wife of E. R. Rhoades; and John D., Jr. William Sears, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was a native of Cortland county, New York. He and his wife, Mrs. Caroline (Vaile) Sears, became pioneer settlers of Knox county, Illinois, locating at Henderson, where Mr. Sears conducted a hotel, a flouring mill and a sawmill and also engaged in farming. In 1869 he removed to Iowa, settling in Harrison county, where his demise occurred when he was past eighty years of age. His wife was also past that age when called to her final rest. They had thirteen children, including the following named: Helen J.; Frank W.; Crandall; Lottie, who married a Mr. Baird; Charles; and LeGrand.

Erasmus A. Bartlett, the father of Frank S. Bartlett, followed general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career. In 1844 he was brought to Knox county, Illinois, by his parents, the family home being established in Rio township, where he grew to manhood and began farming. At the time of his demise he owned one hundred and thirty acres of rich and productive land in Rio township. He died in 1908, when seventy-eight years of age, passing away in the faith of the Universalist church. The period of his residence in this county covered more than six decades and he was well known and highly esteemed within its borders. He served as a school director and held various township offices. His first wife, the mother of our subject, passed away in 1869 at the comparatively early age of thirty-six. She was the mother of eight children, of whom Frank Sears is the only one now living. For his second wife Erasmus A. Bartlett chose Mrs. Elizabeth A. Edwards, by whom he had two children: Charles E., of Rio township; and Sarah A., who died at the age of thirty-two years.

Frank S. Bartlett remained on his father's farm until eighteen years of age, first attending the district schools and later continuing his education in Knox College. After putting aside his text-books he began clerking in the storehouse of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. He remained in the service of that corporation for eighteen years and three months and was steadily promoted as he demonstrated his capability and trustworthiness, holding the position of division storekeeper when he resigned. Subsequently he embarked in the real-estate and insurance business, which has claimed his time and energies continuously since. In 1906 he admitted William A. Robbins to a partnership in the business, which has since been conducted under the firm style of Bartlett & Robbins. Their efforts have been attended with gratifying success and their clientage is of a most extensive and important character.

On the 10th of January, 1877, Mr. Bartlett was united in marriage to Miss Sarah A. Fleharty, a native of Rio township, Knox county, Illinois, and a daughter of William L. and Elizabeth (Terrell) Fleharty, who became pioneer settlers of this county, taking up their abode in Rio township. The father served as a soldier of the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Fleharty passed away at Galesburg in middle life. They had six children, namely: Stephen T., Sarah A., William H., Elizabeth, Belle M. and Vinnie May.

William and Amelia (Kirkpatrick) Fleharty, the paternal grandparents of Mrs. Bartlett, were early settlers of Knox county and passed away here, the former when about eighty-four years of age and the latter when about fifty years old. Unto them were born five children: Jesse J.; William L.; John and Henry, twins; and Stephen F. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett were also born five children, as follows: Alice Helen, living in Aurora, Illinois, who is the wife of M. T. Bruner, by whom she has two daughters, Lois and Helen; John D., a physician and surgeon by profession, who wedded Miss Ethel Booker and has one son, John D.; William A., who married Miss Maude Shussler and is engaged in the real-estate business at Galesburg; Walter L., who died when a youth of thirteen years; and Winfield Franklin, who is attending school.

In politics Mr. Bartlett is a republican and his fellow townsmen, recognizing his worth and ability, have called him to several positions of public trust. He served as a member of the board of education for twelve years, was alderman of the fourth ward for one term and acted as a member of the board of supervisors for two terms. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, belonging to Vesper Lodge, F. & A. M.; Galesburg Chapter, No. 46, R. A. M.; and Galesburg Commandery, No. 8, K. T. He serves as trustee and treasurer of the Universalist church, to which his wife also belongs. They have spent their entire lives in Knox county and enjoy an extensive and favorable acquaintance within its borders.

GEORGE CHURCHILL.

An enumeration of the residents of Galesburg who have won honor and distinction and at the same time whose records have been an honor to the city, would be incomplete and unsatisfactory were there failure to make prominent reference to George Churchill. His work in behalf of public education would alone entitle him to distinction and yet in other relations of life his labors were equally commendable and were crowned with far-reaching and beneficial effects. Progress and patriotism might well be termed the keynote of his character, prompting his active cooperation in every movement for the public good and his loyal support of the salient features of good citizenship.

Dr. Churchill was born in Herkimer county, New York, April 2, 1829, a son of Norman and Ann (Eggleston) Churchill. The father first visited Illinois early in the fall of 1836, at which time he purchased ten acres of land on West Main street in Galesburg which is still known as the Churchill home. To this he removed in 1839 and remained thereafter an active and honored resident of this city where he passed away on the 20th of September, 1886, at the age of eighty-seven years. He was born in Hubbardton, Vermont, November 5, 1799, the son of the Rev. Jesse Churchill.

George Churchill was a lad of only ten years when the family home was established in Galesburg and from that time until his death he was an interested witness of the changes which here occurred and the growth that wrought the present prosperity of the city. He entered Knox College as a student in the preparatory department in the first year of its history and when other preparations had qualified him for advanced study, he entered the college class and was graduated in 1851. He then crossed the threshold of the business world, spending a year as civil engineer in connection with the construction of the Central Military Tract Railroad, which later became a part of the main line of the Burlington. However, his interest in the cause of education had been aroused and he was giving much time and thought to the study of the public-school system. He recognized the fact that the schools in Galesburg and vicinity were inadequate to the needs of a community that was growing rapidly and he

He recognized the fact that the schools in Galesburg and vicinity were inadequate to the needs of a community that was growing rapidly and he desired to supplant that system by an improved one. This desire took him to Europe in order that he might make a most thorough inspection of the schools of Prussia. He carried with him letters from the United States secretary of state which enabled him to gain an accurate knowledge of the system of instruction of the country which he visited. He gained many valuable ideas which his practical ability enabled him to adapt to the needs of the Galesburg schools and upon returning to this city he at once undertook the task of arousing public sentiment in favor of an improved school system. He not only gave generously of his time and energies but his work also made large inroads upon the small salary that he received as a teacher. He did not hesitate, however, in the accomplishment of his purpose and called to his assistance the Hon. Henry Barnard, of Connecticut, who afterward received the first appointment as commissioner of education for the United States. His determined perseverance finally resulted in procuring a special charter by which the former district schools were consolidated and the foundation of the present system was laid. The board of education has shown a just appreciation of Dr. Churchill's services by naming one of the grammar schools in his honor and by adopting, on the 14th of January, 1896, special resolutions commending him for his work. He may well be termed the father of the public-school system of Galesburg, for it received its impetus toward improvement from his untiring labors and practical, far-reaching methods. For thirteen years he was a member of the board of education and labored untiringly to arouse the standard of the schools.

This by no means comprised the extent of Dr. Churchill's public service or indicates the limit of his usefulness. For twenty-two years he served as city engineer and in other public offices labored for the welfare and upbuilding of the city. For two terms he was alderman, for eight years was a member of the board of park commissioners and for twenty-three years or until the time of his death held a position on the library board. For forty-four years he was one of the professors of Knox College, and that institution, ever regarded as one of the strong and stable educational forces of the state, owes to him a debt of gratitude which can never be paid. Far beyond any pecuniary recompense that could be made him were his labors in behalf of the college. He never lowered the high standard which he set up but sought ever to work toward it and his own enthusiasm and zeal constituted an inspiration to fellow teachers and pupils. Of him it was written: "He was born to be useful; he was born to be good; he was born especially as an educator of the youth." While he always strove to attain high ideals his methods were ever practical and he proved his worth and force in business circles as well as along professional lines. He became one of the directors and the just president of the Mechanics Homestead & Loan Association, occupying this position from its organization in 1882. Its assets and disbursements in 1899 amounted to two and a half million dollars.

Dr. Churchill was married three times. He first wedded Clara A. Hurd and to them was born a son, Milton E., who is now professor of Pomona College at Claremont, California. His second wife was Ada H. Hayes and they had one daughter and two sons: Mary H., now deceased; Charles E., an attorney of Montclair, New Jersey; and George B., of Galesburg. For his third wife Dr. Churchill chose Ellen Sanborn Watkins, who died five years ago, and they had one son, William David. By a former marriage Mrs. Churchill also had a daughter, Mrs. Nellie Sanborn (Watkins) Wetherbee. It was in 1851 that Mrs. Churchill came with her parents from Bronfield, Illinois, to Knox county. Previously they had been residents of Vermont. Her father, David Sanborn, after coming to Galesburg, was engaged in the dry-goods business and later became president of the Second National Bank. He was also prominently connected with public affairs, at one time serving as postmaster of Galesburg, and was active in the establishment of the Burlington railroad. He married Sophie A. Ramsey and continued his residence in Galesburg until his death, which occurred April 9, 1883. Their daughter, Mrs. Churchill, was first married to Albert T. Watkins, who removed from New York to Illinois when twenty years of age and died at the age of thirty years. He was engaged in the grocery business in Galesburg and also owned and operated one of the first presses for baling hay, selling his product to the army during the Civil war. He afterward aided in organizing the Second National Bank and was a very prominent and influential business man and citizen here, but death terminated his career at an early age.

The death of Dr. Churchill occurred in September, 1899. As a man and citizen he was very popular, readily winning the friendship of those with whom he came in contact while his sterling traits of manhood enabled him to retain their high regard. Added to his keen intelligence and strong manhood was a most amiable and cordial disposition. He was reported as a man of strong character and marked individuality and it was known that his position was never an equivocal one. He was always a friend to the poor and gave generously of his means where assistance was needed. At the age of sixteen years he became a member of the First Congregational church and later placed his membership with its successor, the Central Congregational church. He was a member of the building committee of the new church. From the time that he identified himself with a religious organization he took an active part in church work, serving for fourteen years as deacon, for twenty-five years as superintendent of the Sunday school and for more than a half century as leader of the choir. One of the local papers said: "There is scarcely a department inaugurated for the improvement of the city or for the betterment of the conditions of its people without a trace of his handiwork. He has been part and parcel of the city of Galesburg and of Knox College almost from their inception and his life record is inseparably interwoven with their history." A review of his life indicates that he was ever faultless in honor, fearless in conduct and stainless in reputation.

WILLIAM ALLEN ROBBINS.

William Allen Robbins, who has maintained his residence in Knox county for forty-five consecutive years, is one of the prominent and esteemed citizens of Galesburg and since 1906 has been engaged in the real-estate and insurance business as a member of the firm of Bartlett & Robbins. His birth occurred in the old town of Oxford, Henry county, Illinois, on the 10th of April, 1851, his parents being Edward S. and Temperance (Allen) Robbins, both of whom were natives of the state of New York. The paternal grandfather, Levi Robbins, was a native of Massachusetts. Both he and his wife, Mrs. Dinah (Goodenough) Robbins, passed away in Copenhagen, Lewis county, New York. He was an agriculturist by occupation and enjoyed an enviable reputation as a prominent, popular and highly esteemed citizen of his community. At the time of his demise he was one hundred years and five months old. His first wife, the grandmother of our subject, was more than seventy years of age when called to her final rest. Their children were as follows: Austin, Edward, Levi, Orrin and Chloe. The maternal great-grandfather of our subject was Ebenezer A. Denison, son of Daniel, and was born on the 26th of January, 1760. In 1784 he wedded Mrs. Elizabeth (Spencer) Jones, with whom he resided in Berne, Albany county, New York. The founder of the Denison family in the United States was William Denison, who came to America in 1631, settling at Roxbury, Massachusetts. The maternal grandparents of William A. Robbins were William and Catharine (Denison) Allen, the former born at Groton, Connecticut, on the 31st of October, 1782, and the latter in 1786. Both died in Lewis county, New York, William Allen passing away in the '70s and his wife at the age of eighty-seven years. Unto them were born eleven children who lived to maturity and had families; Avery, Eliza, Temperance, Ebenezer, Ephraim, Elizabeth, Ira, Hannah, Orpha, Paulina and Lydia.

Edward S. Robbins, the father of Mr. Robbins of this review, was reared on a farm in Lewis county, New York, and in 1836 located among the earliest settlers of Knox county, taking up government land near Log City, where he began farming. Subsequently he spent a number of years in Sparta township and later removed to a farm in Henry county. Disposing of the property, he took up his abode in Galesburg, on the 8th of March, 1866, and here passed away at the age of seventy-eight years. The death of his wife occurred when she was eighty-two years old. They were originally Baptists in religious faith but at the time of their demise and for many years prior were identified with the Second Adventists. Edward S. Robbins successfully practiced medicine for a number of years. Unto him and his wife were born five children, as follows: Edward C. D., who died while serving as a captain in the Civil war and was buried in the Vicksburg National Cemetery; Mildred E., who first wedded Albert T. Boyd and is now the wife of George H. Hotaling, of Grant City, Missouri; Orpha C., who is the widow of Joseph Pine and resides in Galesburg; William A., of this review; and Levi, who died in infancy.

William Allen Robbins, whose name introduces this review, remained on his father's farm in Henry county until fifteen years of age and then came to Knox county, within the borders of which he has since resided. He began his education in the country schools and later spent two years in the public schools of Galesburg. When a youth of seventeen years he put aside his textbooks and entered the grocery store of Dunn & Kingsbury, serving as a clerk for three years. He then spent about a year, in 1871, with the Frost Manufacturing Company and next became an employe of George D. Crocker, whom he served in the capacity of clerk for about seven years. On the expiration of that period he became a partner of his employer and the relation was maintained with mutual pleasure and profit for twenty-six years. In 1893-4 Messrs. Crocker and Robbins erected the Arlington Hotel. Mr. Robbins was the pioneer in the pure-food movement in this section. In 1906, one year after severing his business connection with Mr. Crocker, he became a partner of Mr. Bartlett in the real-estate and insurance business and has since enjoyed a gratifying clientage as a member of the firm of Bartlett & Robbins. He owns farm lands in Cass and Steele counties, North Dakota, and has followed general agricultural pursuits there for six years, maintaining his residence, however, in Galesburg.

On the 13th of October, 1874, Mr. Robbins was united in marriage to Miss Nettie E. Carr, a daughter of Dr. M. S. and Susan M. (Espy) Carr. They had two children, namely: Elizabeth, who gave her hand in marriage to E. L. Tilden and resides in Buffalo, New York; and Elmer A., who died at the age of ten years.

In politics Mr. Robbins is a stanch republican, loyally supporting the men and measures of that party. He was a deacon of the First Baptist church for twenty-seven years and acted as chairman of the board for seventeen years. His wife is likewise a devoted and faithful member of that church. His career has been one of continuous activity, in which has been accorded due recognition of labor and today he is numbered among the substantial and representative citizens of his county.

CHARLES A. MALCOLM.

Charles A. Malcolm, an agriculturist now residing in Ontario township, was born on the 22d of April, 1866, in Safsjo, in the central part of Sweden, his parents being John and Johanna (Charlotta) Malcolm, both of whom are natives of Sweden, the former having been born there on the 29th of January, 1837. In his native land John Malcolm was engaged in farming until he set out for America, in 1868, with his family, locating first near Andover, Henry county, Illinois. The trip across the country from Genoa to Andover was made with teams in a heavy hail and rain storm, this being but one of the many hardships which the travelers in those early days encountered. Because of his lack of experience Mr. Malcolm was forced at first to accept inferior employment, his first work being plowing corn at fifty cents per day. But earnest and persistent labor always leads to better fortunes and Mr. Malcolm was soon ready to undertake the cultivation of a small tract of land and later purchased a small piece of property for himself. After fourteen years he added twenty acres and subsequently purchased forty acres of timber land, which he cleared and started to farm. Disposing of the various holdings, he bought one hundred and sixty acres of valuable land, upon which he resided for twenty-seven years before removing to his present farm. At one time he held three hundred and twenty acres of land in the county and eighty acres in Henry county, but he is now living retired, having sold all of his property to his children. His home is now called Malcolmville and the other farm which he at one time owned was called Malcolm Dandy. Mrs. Malcolm passed away on the 23d of February, 1909, in Knox county, at the age of seventy-two years.

independently, he farmed for six years in Henry county and then for seven years just south of his present location. In January, 1909, he removed to his present farm and has since been engaged in general farming and raising hogs. His property is known as "Fairview farm."

On the 25th of December, 1895, Mr. Malcolm was married to Miss Delphia C. Walgreen, a daughter of John P. and Anna (Fredericks) Walgreen, who have been connected with the agricultural interests of Knox county for many years. At present Mr. Walgreen is residing in Altona, where he is living retired. He is one of the oldest settlers of the county, having come here over fifty years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm seven children have been born, Violet E. J., Germaine I. W., Weslye W., Ludella V. G., Curtis C., Myrna A. C., and Pauline I. M.

In politics Mr. Malcolm gives his support to the republican party, taking an active interest in all the measures proposed for political welfare. He also holds membership in the Swedish Lutheran church and is interested in the incorporated bank of Galva and in the elevators at Oneida and Nekoma. In connection with the development of his property he has exercised good judgment and under his management it is yielding profitable crops in return for the labor expended upon it, and as a citizen he is highly estemed in the community where he has always resided.

WILLIAM LORENZO BELDEN.

William Lorenzo Belden is a retired farmer of Galesburg, who for many years was associated with general agricultural pursuits in Orange township and also engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery. The success which crowned his labors enables him at the present time to enjoy the comforts of life without further recourse to business activity. He was born at Cayuga Lake, New York, in 1836, a son of Alonzo and Hannah (Swartz) Belden, who were also natives of the Empire state. They removed to Ohio when their son William was a lad of seven years and in 1850 came to Knox county, Illinois. The father was a plasterer by trade and spent his last years in this county, while his wife died in Nebraska, where she had gone after the death of her husband. In their family were seven children, of whom William L. and a brother, George C., are the only ones now living. Two of the brothers served as soldiers in the Union army during the Civil war, George C. and Charles, who was killed by the notorious Rand at Gilson.

After spending the first seven years of his life in the state of New York, William L. Belden accompanied his parents to Ohio and for about seven years was a resident of Marion county, that state. He came to Knox county, Illinois, when a lad of fourteen years and for more than six decades has resided within its borders, witnessing the many changes which have occurred as the work of development and improvement has been carried forward. Settling in Orange township, near Knoxville, he began farming and from a timber tract developed a richly improved farm of eighty-eight and three-fourths acres. He made all of the improvements upon the place, set out an orchard, erected substantial buildings and built good fences. Year after year the work was carried steadily forward and, as the result of early spring plowing and planting, good crops were gathered in the autumn. The methods which he pursued in the development of his land were both practical and progressive and his crops found a ready sale on the market. He continued to make his home upon his farm until 1911, when he left the care of the property to others and took up his abode in Galesburg, where he is now living. He still owns the old home place and while residing thereon he engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery.

In 1865 Mr. Belden was united in marriage to Miss Emily Hawley, who was born in Orange township, this county, and is a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Westerfield) Hawley. Her father came to Illinois from New York and established his home in Orange township, where he carried on farming throughout his remaining days. To him and his wife were born eight children, of whom two sons and two daughters yet survive, all being residents of Knox county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Belden are: Henry A., who follows farming in Kansas; Nellie, the wife of Charles Miller, of Iowa; Loretta, the wife of Milo Brown, also of Kansas; Mrs. Mattie Bowhay, who likewise makes her home in the Sunflower state; and Zenana, yet at home.

On attaining his majority William L. Belden proudly cast his first vote for republican candidates and has since stanchly supported the party. He has served as road commissioner and in other local offices but has not sought or desired political preferment. From the age of fourteen years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and has guided his life by its teachings, ever endeavoring to follow the Golden Rule. Undoubtedly he has made mistakes—as who has not—but they have been of judgment rather than of intention, for at all times he has sought to do to others as he would have them do unto him. He has now reached the advanced age of seventy-five years and during sixty-one years of this time has been a resident of Knox county, so that he has witnessed much of its progress and improvement, aiding at different times in work that has contributed to its growth and development. He has personal knowledge of many things which are to others matters of history and his memory recalls many interesting events of the early days.

LOREN STEVENS.

Loren Stevens had for seven years occupied the responsible position of cashier in the First National Bank when he retired to private life to enjoy the fruits of his labor. He now gives his supervision only to his investments which include loans and real-estate interests. He was born in Chittenden county, Vermont, May 25, 1845, the younger of the two sons of Cassius P. and Clamentia (Smith) Stevens, both of whom were natives of Vermont. He comes of ancestry represented in the Revolutionary war, his great-grandfather having been Abram Stevens, who was born in Killingsworth, Connecticut, and at the age of sixteen years joined the Continental army under the valorous leader of the Vermont troops, General Seth Warner. He afterward became colonel under Montgomery and for many years lived to enjoy the fruits of liberty, his death occurring in 1830. He was a native of England and had come to the new world with two brothers. His son, Alonzo Stevens, was born in Vermont and served his country as a soldier in the war of 1812, while later he became colonel in the state militia. He devoted his life to farming and died at the age of seventy years, having long survived his wife. They were the parents of two sons and six daughters, Cassius P., Alonzo J., Lucia, Mary, Almira, Louisa, Cornelia and Rosamond. The maternal grandfather of Loren Stevens was Thomas Smith, who was born on November 10, 1765. He spent his entire life in the Green Mountain state, devoting his time and energies to farming. His death occurred May 17, 1837, and his wife, Mrs. Mollie Smith, who was born July 24, 1768, died on the 13th of January, 1834. Their family numbered ten sons and a daughter, Repline, Hiram, Philemon, Loren, Orrin, Roswell, Sidney, Ceylon, Loyal, Loudon and Clamentia.

Like others of the family Cassius P. Stevens devoted his life to farm work, owning and cultivating a tract of land in Chittenden county, Vermont, where his worth as a business man and citizen was widely acknowledged. Both he and his wife were consistent and faithful members of the Methodist church, closely following its teachings. His death occurred in 1892, when he was seventy-seven years of age and his wife passed away in 1876 when sixty-one years of age. Their eldest son, Byron A., died in 1895, leaving Loren Stevens the only surviving member of the family.

During the first twenty years of his life Loren Stevens remained a resident of Vermont, residing on his father's farm until seventeen years of age. During that period he attended the district school and for a short time pursued an academical course. After leaving home he engaged in driving a team for one summer and during the following fall entered the employ of the Central Vermont Railroad Company but gave up that position to attend business coliege when eighteen years of age, recognizing how necessary is educational training for success in life. After completing his course he was offered and accepted the position of teacher in the same institution, there remaining for a year and a half, but thinking that the west offered better and broader opportunities he made his way to Ohio, where he spent the fall and winter of 1865. In the spring of 1866 he came to Galesburg, where he has now lived for more than forty-five years. Here he entered the office of the Brown Cornplanter Works with which he was connected for a year and later spent two years in the office of Benjamin Lombard, Jr., as bookkeeper. The head man of the Brown Works died in the meantime and Mr. Stevens was then offered the vacant position, remaining there as secretary of the company for seventeen years, or until 1886. He then turned his attention to buying and selling real estate and making loans and that business together with traveling occupied his time for ten years. He next entered the First National Bank as cashier, continuing in the position for seven years, when he retired from active business save that he still makes loans, his keen discrimination and sound judgment largely preventing the possibility of loss in that direction. He also owns a large orange orchard at Riverside, California.

Mr. Stevens was married, May 25, 1870, on his twenty-fifth birthday and exactly four years after his arrival in Galesburg, to Miss Lizzie C. Simmons, who died on the 26th of March, 1911, when nearly sixty-three years of age. She was a member of the Universalist church. Mr. Stevens has traveled quite extensively, visiting every state in the Union, as well as the West Indies, old Mexico and the Hawaiian islands, besides various parts of Canada from Vancouver to Quebec. He was a charter member of the Galesburg Club and is also a member of the Country Club. His political allegiance has ever been given to the republican party and for two years he served as mayor of the city, having been elected in the spring of 1889. He has ever been recognized as a public-spirited citizen whose aid and cooperation can be counted upon to further progressive public measures. A review of his life indicates that he has made wise use of his time and opportunities, has utilized the chances for careful and remunerative investment and now as a result of his labors, intelligently directed, he stands among the prosperous residents of his adopted city.

OLEY C. NELSON.

Oley C. Nelson, who owns a farm adjacent to Knoxville that he is now operating, has been a resident of this county for fifty-nine years. He was born in Sweden, on the 14th of November, 1836, and is a son of Carl and Hannah (Ingamonson) Nelson, for some years numbered among the farming people of this county. Carl Nelson, who was born in 1813, engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native land until 1852, when he disposed of his interests there and together with his wife and family took passage for the United States. They landed in New York city seven weeks later and came from there directly to Knox county, which was their destination. Here the father subsequently bought some land, to the further cultivation and improvement of which he devoted his attention until his death in September, 1854, at the age of forty-two years. The mother survived until 1885. Their family consisted of three sons and one daughter, of whom our subject is the eldest, the others being as follows: Swan, who is deceased; John, who is living in Knoxville; and Sarah, the widow of Ola Peterson, who was living in Essex, Iowa. Oley C. Nelson was a youth of sixteen years when he emigrated to the United States with his parents and acquired his education in the schools of his native land, the course there pursued being later supplemented by one term's study in the district schools of Knox county in the winter of 1855, for the benefit of his English. Long before leaving Sweden he had begun to assist his father in the fields, his energies ever since having been devoted to agricultural pursuits with the exception of ten years, when he prospected in Colorado. At the expiration of that period he returned to Knox county and again engaged in farming, locating on the place where he now resides. Mr. Nelson has met with a fair degree of success in his undertakings, being an industrious and enterprising man of practical ideas and thrifty habits.

Knoxville was the scene of Mr. Nelson's marriage, on the 6th of October, 1867, to Miss Hannah Erickson, who was born in the southern part of Sweden, on February 3, 1851. She is a daughter of Ola and Ellen (Johnson) Erickson, who emigrated to the United States in 1852, locating on a farm a mile and a half from Knoxville, where they passed the remainder of their lives, the father passing away in 1904, at the age of ninety-two years and the mother in 1908.

eighty-three years of age. By a former marriage Mrs. Erickson had one son, John Nelson, who now lives in Knox county, and Mr. and Mrs. Erickson had in their family beside Mrs. Nelson, their eldest daughter, the following in order of birth: Emma, the deceased wife of Michael E. Schuck, of Pennsylvania; Erick, who is living in Kansas; Joseph, who passed away in that state; Jacob, who is also a resident of Kansas; Olaf, who lives in Knoxville; Emanuel, living in Kansas and one who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have become the parents of eight children, three of whom are now deceased. August, who is living in Knoxville, married Mary Anderson and they have four children: Naomi, Howard, Sterling and Lorenz. Rosie, who is the only living daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, is the wife of William Carlson of Knoxville and the mother of two sons, Laverne and Francis. Albert, who is a resident of Wataga, chose for his wife Mattie E. Foster and they have two children, Alberta and Oliver, and eight grandchildren. Oscar and Joseph, the two youngest members of the family, are living at home with their parents.

The family are all members of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church, and number among its congregation many friends. Mr. Nelson, who is now seventy-five years of age, is one of the highly esteemed citizens that Sweden has contributed to Knox county, where his energy and application has numbered him among the successful agriculturists.

HENRY EMRICH.

Henry Emrich, president of the Plaindealer Printing Company, was born January 26, 1844, in a little village in Hesse-Darmstadt, five miles from Bingen-on-the-Rhine, Germany. His mother died in 1850 and two years later Mr. Emrich, with his father and brother, came to the United States, living in New York city until 1856, when with his father he came to Galesburg. In December, 1858, he entered the Free Democrat printing office as an apprentice and in 1862, when just eighteen years of age, he enlisted in Company H of the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry, participating with his regiment, or on special duty, in nearly every campaign in southeastern Missouri, northeastern Arkansas, the capture of Little Rock and the operations in and around central and southeastern Arkansas. After the capture of Little Rock in September, 1863, and some special duty as orderly at the headquarters of Major General Eugene A. Carr, Mr. Emrich was permanently attached as orderly at the headquarters of the First Brigade, First Division, Seventh Army Corps, General Samuel A. Rice commanding, and in that capacity took part in what is known as "the Camden trip," during which General Rice was twice wounded, the second wound proving fatal, while Captain Townsend, one of General Rice's aids, was killed and another aid's horse and Adjutant John F. Lacey's horse were wounded. Mr. Emrich's horse was struck twice in the same moment by canister shot on April 2d and his eyes injured by an exploding shell on the 10th of April, 1864. The death of General Rice dissolved the "headquarters family," Major Lacey being attached to the headquarters of Major General Fred Steele, commanding the Seventh Army Corps, and a few days later Mr. Emrich was attached to the same headquarters for special duty, thus serving to the end of his enlistment.

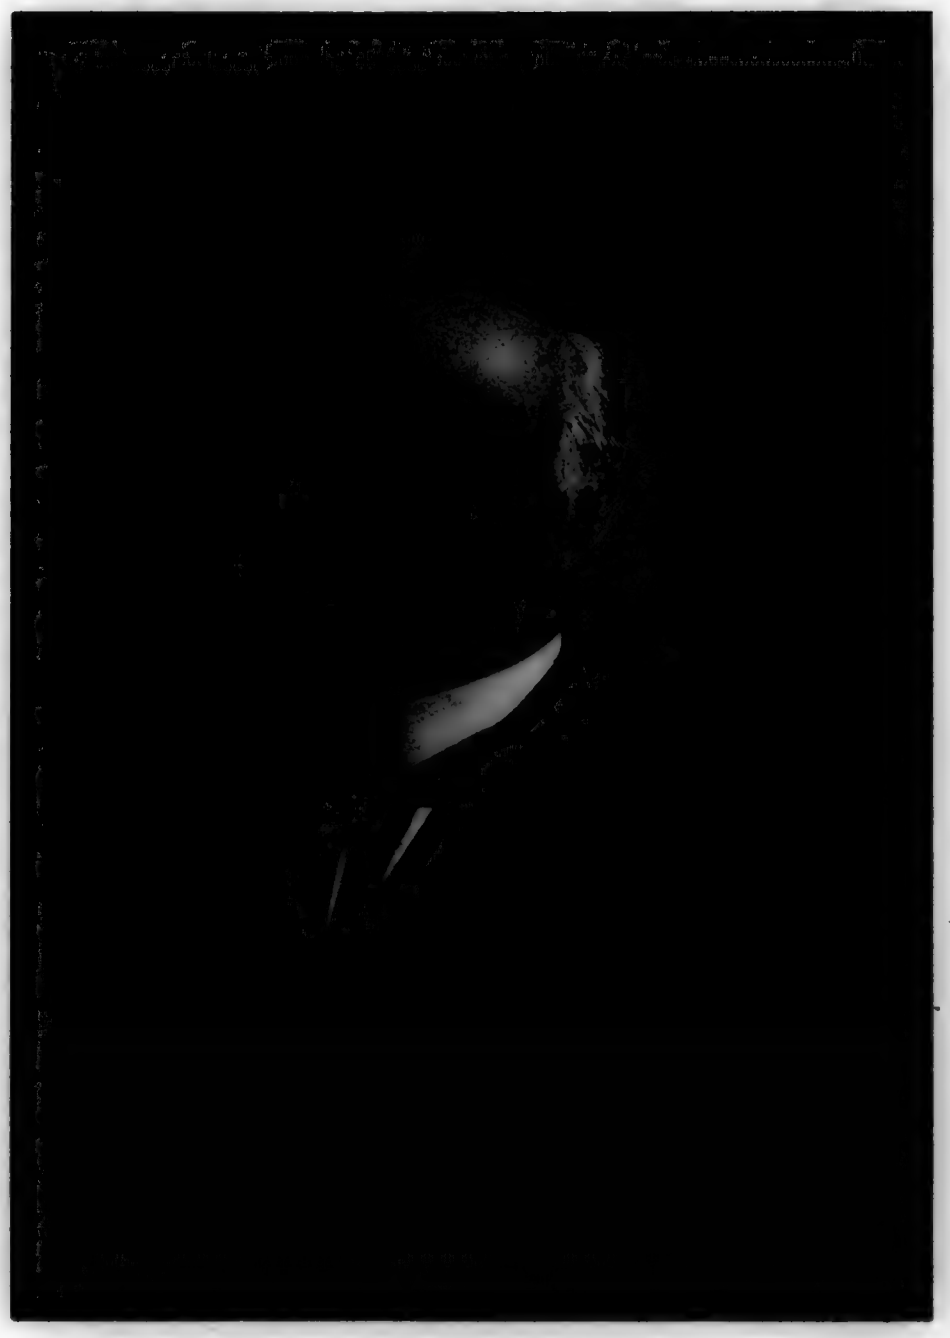
Being mustered out of the service in 1865, Mr. Emrich returned home and resumed the printer's trade in the office of the Quincy Herald, but a few months later returned to Galesburg and took a position in the office of the Free Democrat, in which he had learned his trade some years before.



In 1867 Mr. Emrich was married to Miss Caroline Rulf and to them five children were born. In 1870, in connection with Joe Prior, Mr. Emrich began the publication of the Galesburg Republican and in 1872 he went to Quincy, where he again entered the Herald office, remaining there until December, 1879, when he returned to Galesburg and purchased an interest in the Plaindealer, which paper is mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

In politics Mr. Emrich has always been a republican, taking an active part personally and editorially in every campaign during the past thirty-three years. He and the Plaindealer presented General P. S. Post to the republicans of the then tenth congressional district as a candidate for congress in 1886, the General being elected and remaining in congress until his death in 1893, when Mr. Emrich and the Plaindealer presented the Hon. George W. Prince as his successor and he has represented the district ever since. In city affairs Mr. Emrich has also taken an active part, always striving for good municipal government and the advancement of the material prosperity of the city. He is a member of the Central Congregational church, taking an active interest in the conduct and work of that institution. As a citizen and business man he stands well in the community and his personal friends are many. He is a member of the Galesburg Club and of Post No. 45, G. A. R., having been commander of that post and junior vice commander of the Department of Illinois and a frequent delegate to the national encampments.

JOHN C. FAHNESTOCK.

John C. Fahnestock is well known in the business circles of Galesburg, having handled land and immigration interests for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad and at present conducting a general insurance and real-estate business. He is now in the seventy-fourth year of his age but is yet very active, and such a record should put to shame many a man of much younger years who has grown weary of the struggles of life and wishes to relegate to others the burdens that he should bear. Mr. Fahnestock was born October 20, 1838, in Warren, Chester county, Pennsylvania, his parents being William and Ann Elizabeth (Ernst) Fahnestock. He traces his ancestry back to Diedrich and Margarette Fahnestock, who emigrated from Prussia in 1726 and settled near Ephrata, Pennsylvania, where representatives of the name have since been found.

John C. Fahnestock was educated at Blair Hall in his native county and, entering business life, became connected with the sale of books and stationery. He has been a resident of Galesburg since 1865, conducting a book and stationery business for several years, after which he acted as land and immigration agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad for ten years. His time is now the Seventh Army Corps, and a few days later Mr. Emrich was attached to the same headquarters for special duty, thus serving to the end of his enlistment.

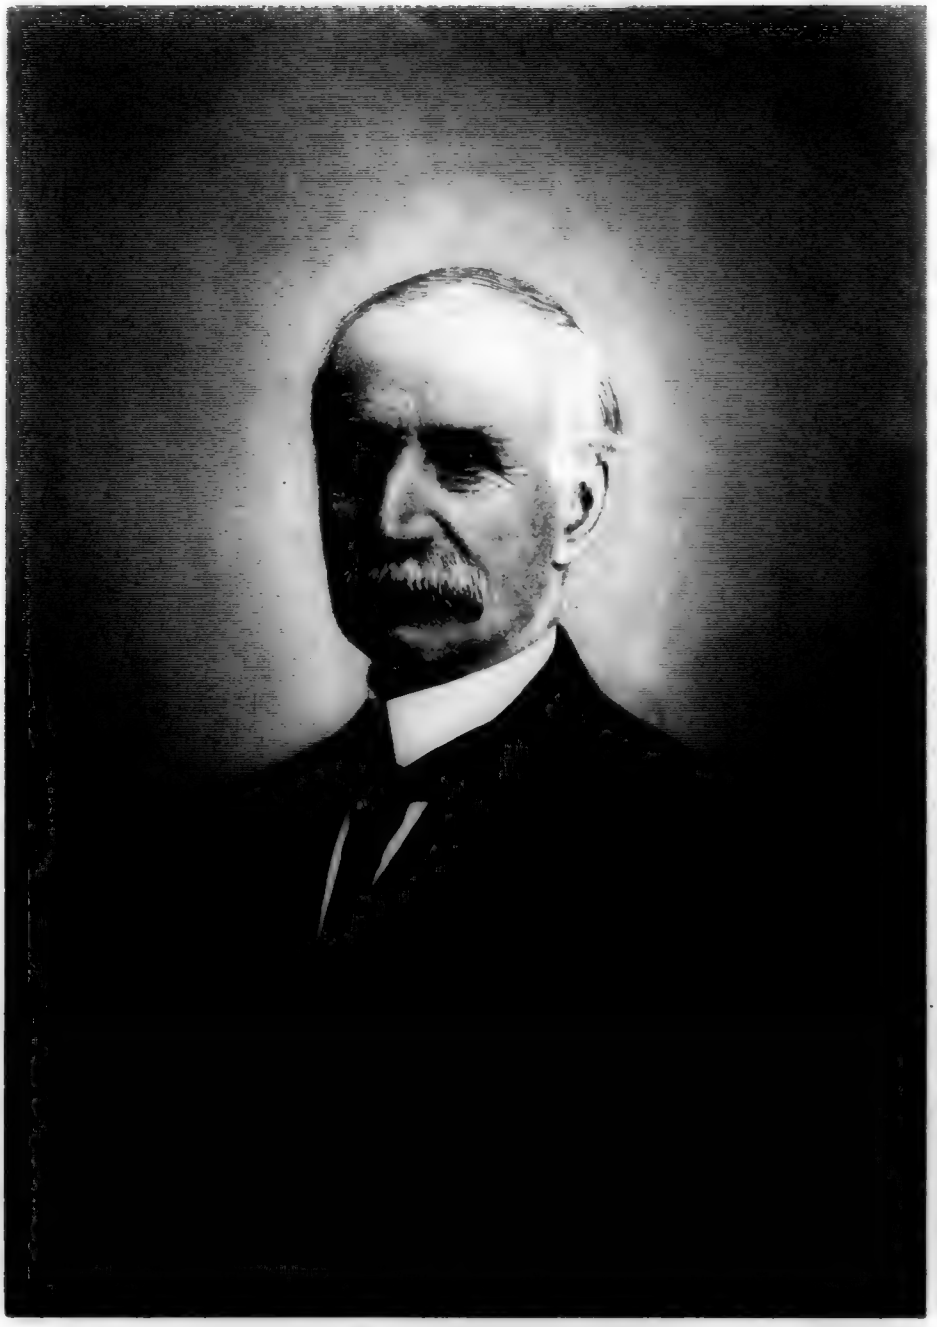
Being mustered out of the service in 1865, Mr. Emrich returned home and resumed the printer's trade in the office of the Quincy Herald, but a few months later returned to Galesburg and took a position in the office of the Free Democrat, in which he had learned his trade some years before.



In 1867 Mr. Emrich was married to Miss Caroline Rulf and to them five children were born. In city affairs Mr. Emrich has also taken an active part, always striving for good municipal government and the advancement of the material prosperity of the city. JOHN C. FAHNESTOCK.

John C. Fahnestock is well known in the business circles of Galesburg, having handled land and immigration interests for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad and at present conducting a general insurance and real-estate business. He is now in the seventy-fourth year of his age but is yet very active, and such a record should put to shame many a man of much younger years who has grown weary of the struggles of life and wishes to relegate to others the burdens that he should bear. Mr. Fahnestock was born October 20, 1838, in Warren, Chester county, Pennsylvania, his parents being William and Ann Elizabeth (Ernst) Fahnestock. He traces his ancestry back to Diedrich and Margarette Fahnestock, who emigrated from Prussia in 1726 and settled near Ephrata, Pennsylvania, where representatives of the name have since been found.

John C. Fahnestock was educated at Blair Hall in his native county and, entering business life, became connected with the sale of books and stationery. He has been a resident of Galesburg since 1865, conducting a book and stationery business for several years, after which he acted as land and immigration agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad for ten years. His time is now fully occupied by his real-estate and insurance business, and these different lines are well managed by reason of his sound judgment, his earnest purpose and his wise use of opportunities.

On the 7th of November, 1878, in Galesburg, Mr. Fahnestock was married to Miss Grace D. Carr, a daughter of Clark M. and Fanny L. Carr, of this city. She is the only sister of General Eugene A. Carr, now deceased, Colonel B. O. Carr, Rev. Horace M. Carr, Hon. Clark E. Carr and Captain George P. Carr, whose early death by accident, occurred in 1871. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Fahnestock were born two children: Fanny E., who married Alfred Williams and died May 12, 1906; and Grace, the wife of Dr. Thomas F. Birmingham, of Galesburg.

Mr. Fahnestock gives his political allegiance to the republican party and, while never an aspirant for office, has always been loyal to its principles and a supporter of its activities. His social connections are with the Galesburg Club and his religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church. He is well known in this city, where sterling traits of character have placed him in a high position in public regard.

HENRY P. BURGLAND.

In a history of the successful men of Galesburg mention should be made of Henry P. Burgland, who is now living retired. Industry, unfaltering and persistent, has been the basis of his success, enabling him to work his way gradually upward. He was born in Sweden, April 20, 1834, and was reared and educated there, after which he entered business circles as a dealer in live stock and sold meat from a market place, as was the custom at that time. He came to America in 1854, then a young man of twenty years, hoping that he would here find better business opportunities than could be secured in the old world. He did not tarry on the Atlantic coast but made his way at once into the interior of the country with Galesburg as his destination. Afterward he resided for a time in Bishop Hill, Avon and Monmouth but returned to this city where he has since made his home, living here for more than half a century, during which period he has witnessed much of its growth and development and to a considerable extent, in a quiet way, has aided in its progress. Embarking in business here, he opened a meat market which he conducted for many years, carrying always a good line, which in combination with his straightforward and honorable dealing, brought to him constantly growing success. He likewise bought and shipped live stock and both branches of his business proved profitable. He early recognized the fact that energy and determination are the basis of advancement, and by reason of these qualities he has worked his way steadily upward. On account of illness years ago he retired from business for a time and made two trips to Sweden for the benefit of his health, there visiting the friends of his youth and the scenes among which his boyhood days had been passed. For a quarter of a century he has lived retired, enjoying the fruit of his former toil. After ceasing to carry on the meat market, he continued to buy stock for some time but ultimately withdrew from all trade connections.

December 23, 1856, Henry P. Burgland was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Nelson and they became the parents of six children, of whom three are now living: Jennie B., who is the widow of Charles A. Peterson, who for many years conducted a shoe store; Amanda, at home; and Edward O. The parents are both members of the First Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church and for a long period Mr. Burgland was regarded as one of its leading representatives, serving for many years as a trustee and taking an active and helpful interest in all of the church work. His religious belief has fostered those principles which constitute the basis of honorable manhood and citizenship, and while he has never sought to figure prominently in public affairs, his life, ever straightforward in all its relations, has commended him to the respect and good-will of those with whom he has come in contact. In looking back over his past he can experience no great feeling of regret that he left his native land. He found a welcome on the free soil of America and in her avenues of commerce he found a field for his abilities that the old country might not have afforded.

He was succeeded by the firm of Burgland & Johnson, Edward O. Burgland, who has been associated in the conduct of the business with his cousin, Erick M. Burgland, since 1893, conducting the market. They have one of the oldest markets in the city and do a large business.

Edward O. Burgland was married September 14, 1899, to Miss Minnie Esther Fredericks, a native of Galesburg township, Knox county, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis F. Fredericks, who were natives of Sweden but became early residents of this county and are now living in Galesburg. For some years her father was identified with agricultural interests in this part of the state. In the Fredericks family were but two daughters, the younger, Julia, being the wife of Forrest L. Hallin, a prominent merchant of Kewanee, Illinois. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Edward O. Burgland has been born a son, Frederick Henry.

Like his father, Edward O. Burgland has always given his political allegiance to the republican party, supporting its principles continuously since age conferred upon him the right of franchise. He possesses much natural musical talent and his ability in that direction has brought him many pleasant hours. For some years he was connected with the Galesburg Military Band and for the past two years has had charge of and directed the orchestra of the First Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church of this city. He has followed closely in the footsteps of his father in relation to church work as well as in other lines and is serving as one of its trustees. The name of Burgland has ever been an honored one in Galesburg since Henry P. Burgland came from Sweden to try his fortune in the new world.

GEORGE CRAIG.

George Craig, of the firm of Craig & Harris, monument manufacturers, located at 132 East Simmons street, Galesburg, was born in Quincy, Massachusetts, on the 1st of February, 1865. He is a son of Robert and Janet (Smith) Craig, natives of Scotland, the father having been born in Edinburgh, on March 22, 1823, and the mother in Glasgow, on Christmas day, 1834. Robert Craig remained in the country of his birth until he was twenty-four years of age. After completing his education he learned the granite cutter's trade and also served for a time in the English army. In 1847, he took passage for the United States, and upon his arrival located at Quincy, Massachusetts, where about three years later he was married to Miss Smith. He followed his trade there for many years, but subsequently removed to Richmond, Virginia, where he resided for a year or two, when he returned to Quincy, where he passed away at the age of sixty-three years. The mother is still living and continues to make her home in Quincy. In matters of faith they were both conformists in the old country, and always affiliated with the Episcopal church after coming here. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Craig numbered twelve, as follows: John E. and William Wallace, both of whom are deceased; Isabella, the widow of William Jones, of Quincy, Massachusetts; Robert Alexander, who is deceased; James, who is living in Quincy; Janet, who married Henry Wilson, also of Quincy; George, our subject; Angus Grant, living in Buffalo, New York; Charles Henry, of Newark, New Jersey; Walter, who is living in Batavia, New York; Arthur, who is deceased; and Frank D., who is a resident of New York city.

In the acquirement of his education George Craig attended the public schools of his native city until he had mastered the common branches. He then laid aside his text-books and entered his father's shop for the purpose of learning the stone-mason's trade. When he attained his majority he left the parental home and began working for himself. His first position was in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he followed his trade for a time and then went on the road, selling monuments. He made Philadelphia his headquarters for five years thereafter, when he removed to St. Louis, continuing to sell monuments until the spring of 1891. In June of the latter year he located in Kewanee, Illinois, and went into business. In April of 1893 they first came to Galesburg to do the stone work on the Baptist church, for which they had been awarded the contract. Although they employed twelve men in the work, the building was some time in the course of construction, and during that period they became quite familiar with conditions here and felt convinced that there was a good opening for a business such as they are now conducting. They continued their establishment at their present stand, still continuing to take building contracts. During the eighteen years that have elapsed since then, they have practically withdrawn from contracts of this nature and now give their entire attention to the manufacture of monuments and ornamental stone work. They have a spacious building, which they erected for the purpose, fully equipped with pneumatic tools and all modern inventions and conveniences required in the business. At the present time they have five men in their employ, all first-class, skilled mechanics, and are being favored with a very good patronage. Each piece of work that leaves their factory is passed upon by both Mr. Craig and Mr. Harris, his partner, who give their personal supervision to every detail of the business. They have a high standard to which they rigidly adhere, and no order is ever permitted to leave their shop unless they feel that it reflects credit upon the industry. Thus they have established a reputation for high-class work as well as trustworthiness and reliability, and both as a firm and individually are accorded the respect of all with whom they have had transactions. Their enterprise has prospered from the first and they are now firmly established with a constantly increasing patronage, and every assurance of success.

On the 27th of September, 1894, Mr. Craig was united in marriage to Miss Alice Broadbent, a daughter of William and Martha (Prince) Broadbent, of Kewanee, Illinois. Six children have been born unto Mr. and Mrs. Craig, as follows: Robert Sidney and Leonard George, both of whom are deceased; Wilbur and Kenneth, both of whom are at home; Martha, who is deceased; and Alice Janet.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Craig hold membership in the Episcopal church, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. He also belongs to the Galesburg and Country Clubs, and politically he is a republican. In local elections, however, he casts an independent ballot, giving his support to such men and measures as he deems best qualified to protect the interests of the majority. Mr. Craig is a business man of sagacity and foresight, as he has demonstrated during the period of his residence in Galesburg, and in matters of citizenship he is progressive and enterprising, taking an active interest in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the community.

JOHN L. BRADBURG.

John L. Bradburg, connected with the W. O. Houghton Lumber Company, was born in Sweden, October 20, 1855, and is a son of Lewis H. Bradburg, also a native of that country. The father was engaged in construction work on the railroads and remained a resident of Sweden until 1869, when he bade adieu to friends and native land and sailed for the United States. He at once came to Galesburg and began working for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, after which he entered the employ of Ben Huff. His capability won him advancement to the position of foreman, in which capacity he continued until his death. His wife had died when her son John was ten years old. The father later married a Mrs. Heddendahl, also deceased, and one daughter, now Mrs. Nels Samuelson was born by this marriage. The father died at Galesburg, a victim of a railroad accident, in 1889. After coming to America and taking out naturalization papers Lewis H. Bradburg gave his political support to the republican party and his religious faith was that of the Swedish Lutheran church to which his wife also belonged. They were the parents of but two children, the younger being August Bradburg, now a resident of Soperville, Illinois.

John L. Bradburg spent the first fourteen years of his life in his native country and during that period pursued his education in the schools of Sweden while later he continued his studies in Galesburg. He afterward worked in the nursery of Hunt & Mason for a time and later was employed by L. L. Gibson for five years. On the expiration of that period he began working in the lumberyard of Sargent & Lewis, with whom he continued for two and a half years, when they sold out and he spent the succeeding year with C. H. Bogue. He was afterward connected with Anthony & Myers for seven years and continued with Mr. Anthony for four years after the dissolution of the firm. Later he entered the employ of Mr. Myers with whom he continued for several years and is now with the W. O. Houghton Lumber Company. He has thus long been connected with the lumber trade in this city and is widely known in business circles.

On the 5th of April, 1894, occurred the marriage of Mr. Bradburg and Miss Lottie Peterson, a daughter of A. P. and Mathilda Peterson, of Galesburg, who were natives of Sweden and on coming to the new world, in 1857, first settled in the east but several years ago they came to this city. Here the father was employed in the freight house of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad until his death. His wife still survives and is now making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Bradburg. Mr. Peterson was a republican in his political affiliations and he belonged to the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church. Mrs. Bradburg was born in Sweden and was brought to the United States with her parents when but a year and a half old, so that she was reared and educated in this country. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bradburg are loyal in their relations to the English Lutheran church, in which they hold membership, and politically he is well known as a republican although he has never sought nor desired office. Fraternally he belongs to both the subordinate lodge and encampment of Odd Fellows and has passed through all of the chairs.

JOHN BRANDT.

John Brandt was born in Sweden, December 8, 1817, and departed this life in Knoxville on the 20th of October, 1899, when almost eighty-two years of age. During his active connection with business affairs he had devoted many years to the painting and decorating business and in trade circles as in other relations of life had commanded the confidence and good-will of his fellowmen. His parents were Swan and Bengta (Swanson) Brandt, who were likewise natives of Sweden, in which country the father passed away. John Brandt was connected with the Royal Swedish army in his native land, serving for thirteen years as an officer in the same. His education had been acquired in the military schools and his wise home training qualified him for the practical and responsible duties which later devolved upon him. In 1853, accompanied by his mother, he came to America, attracted by the broader business opportunities of the new world. They made their way direct to Knoxville, where Mrs. Brandt continued to reside until her death, which occurred in 1872, when she had reached the age of eighty-five years. The family numbered five sons and two daughters, namely: Mrs. Inga Larson, who died in Sweden; Swan, who has also passed away; John, of this review; Hakon and Andres, both now deceased; Nilla A., the wife of John Holcomb, of Altona, this county; and Peter, who came to America and died in Minnesota.

In his native land John Brandt learned the trade of painting and decorating and after coming to Knoxville followed that pursuit, remaining for a time in the employ of others and later engaging in contracting along that line on his own account. His excellent workmanship and honorable dealing won for him a substantial return for his labors, a liberal patronage being accorded him so that he was enabled to provide his family with all of the comforts of life.

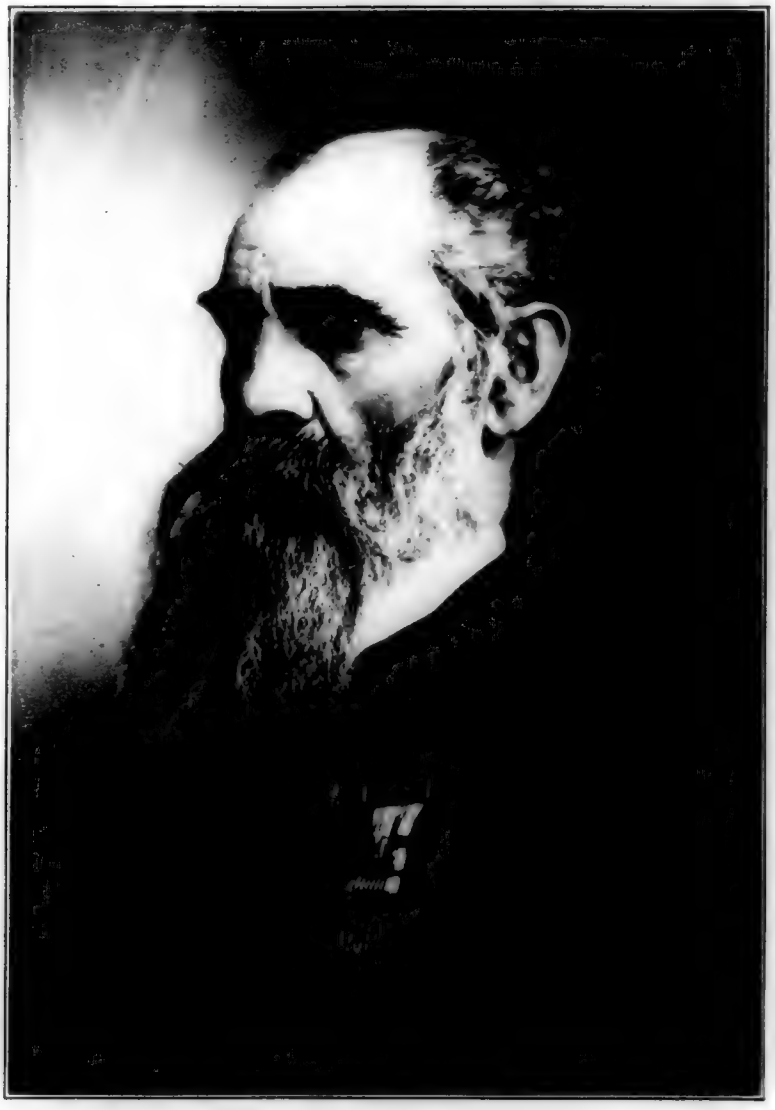
Ere leaving his native land Mr. Brandt was united in marriage in 1853 to Miss Bengta Swanson. Her parents never came to America, spending their entire lives in Sweden. In their family were seven children, five sons and two daughters, namely: Swan, deceased; Mrs. Hannah Basser, of Knoxville, now deceased; Nels and Jens, both of whom have passed away; Mrs. Brandt; Ola, deceased; and John, who is the twin brother of Ola and is living in Elsmore, Kansas. To Mr. and Mrs. Brandt were born three children but the eldest, Franz G., died at the age of two years. The daughter, Carrie, is the wife of Alexander Peterson, of Knoxville, and the second son, Frank August, died at the age of seven years.

In his political views Mr. Brandt was a republican, always voting for the men and measures of the party yet never seeking nor desiring office for himself. He lived a busy and useful life, being ever an industrious, painstaking and thoroughly reliable man who merited success by reason of the good work which he did and his straightforward dealings. These qualities, too, won him the regard of those with whom he was associated and he had a wide acquaintance in Knoxville and this part of the state.

ROBERT E. ERVIN.



Robert E. Ervin is now living retired in Galesburg, his activity and enterprise in former years bringing him a comfortable competence that enables him at this time to rest from further labors in the enjoyment of the fruits of his previous toil. He lived for a long period in Wenona, Illinois, before his removal to the city which is now his home. He was born, however, near Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1841, a son of Newton S. and Jane (Jones) Ervin, both of whom were natives of Virginia. They lived for a time in Ohio and when their son Robert was seven years of age removed to Illinois, where the father engaged in farming until 1868, in which year he became a resident of Missouri.

Robert E. Ervin has spent the greater part of his life in this state and in its public schools acquired his education, while his vacation periods were devoted to work in the fields. He had but recently attained his majority when, on the 9th of August, 1862, he offered his services to the government, enlisting as a member of Battery A, of the Third Illinois Light Artillery. He was enrolled at Wenona and went into camp at Camp Butler, from which point the regiment proceeded to the front. The first battle in which he engaged was at Little Rock, Arkansas, and later he participated in the battles of Prairie Dam and Oklahoma, after which he returned to Jenkins Ferry. In the spring of 1865 he was again at Little Rock and on the 30th of June of that year was mustered out at Springfield. He had held the rank of sergeant all through the war and had proved himself a loyal soldier, never faltering in the performance of any duty whether it called him to the firing line or stationed him at the lonely picket line.

After the war was over Mr. Ervin engaged in farming near Wenona and also made stock raising an important branch of his business. Year by year he carefully tilled the fields, which responded readily to the care and labor which he bestowed upon them, yielding to him rich crops. In 1882, however, he left his farm and took up his abode in Wenona, where at different times he was connected with various business enterprises, conducting an implement business, later a livery stable and afterward engaging in the manufacture of cultivators. Whatever he undertook he carried forward to successful completion and as the years passed by, he added annually to his capital until he felt that the sum was sufficient to provide him through his later years with the necessities and comforts of life. Accordingly, he put aside business cares, removed to Galesburg and has since lived retired. He traces his genealogical record back to 343 and a work is now being published which will contain his branch of the family and will be in print in about a year.

In Wenona in the fall of 1865 Mr. Ervin was united in marriage to Miss Marietta A. Howe, a native of Missouri, who removed to Illinois when six years of age, accompanying her parents, Peter and Arvilla (Park) Howe, who were natives of Vermont and who settled at Wenona. Her father followed farming in that district for a considerable period and later turned his attention to financial interests, becoming owner of the Bank of Wenona, which is now being conducted by his son. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Ervin have been born two children but the daughter, Ella Irene, died when only six years old. The son, Newton Howe, is now engaged in the stock and dairy business at Galesburg. Mr. Ervin has ever been devoted to the welfare and happiness of his family. He is preeminently a home man and yet he has never neglected his duties in other relations of life. He is a valued member of Shields Post, No. 45, G. A. R., and has served as its commander. Politically he is a stalwart republican and was mayor of the city of Wenona in 1888 and 1889, his administration being businesslike and progressive. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian church, to which Mrs. Ervin also belongs. She is descended from the same ancestry as Martha Washington and the Rebecca Park Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution was named in honor of one of her maternal ancestors. Mrs. Ervin is a prominent member of this chapter and has served on a number of its important committees. She was also junior vice in the Grand Army of the Republic Circle of Abingdon and she is a prominent worker in the Women's Relief Corps. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ervin occupy a prominent position in the regard of many friends and are widely known in Galesburg and throughout this part of the state.

Their son, N. H. Ervin, was born in Wenona, August 9, 1875, and there pursued his education until 1891. In the following year he came to Galesburg and entered Knox College, where he remained as a student for four years, pursuing the scientific course. After leaving college he went abroad and traveled for three years, gaining that comprehensive knowledge and culture which only find their source in travel. After living in various places for a time he returned to Galesburg and established a suburban home at No. 1264 West Main, known as Ervindale. He has here thirteen acres, upon which are found substantial and commodious buildings, erected in attractive modern styles of architecture, while the equipments and the improvements of the place in every particular are most pleasing. He now makes a specialty of raising Jersey cows, having some fine specimens of that breed, and in this branch of his business is very successful. He also conducts a dairy, which is likewise a source of gratifying profit.

On the 14th of September, 1902, N. H. Ervin was united in marriage to Miss Lula H. Hicks, of Bushnell, Illinois, who was born and educated there. Mr. Ervin belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan. He also holds membership in the Presbyterian church and he gives his political support to the republican party, keeping at all times well informed on the questions and issues of the day, yet never seeking nor desiring public office.

JOHN WILLIAM SMITH.

John William Smith resides at No. 1688 North Broad street, where he has a well developed and highly cultivated tract of land of six acres. He was born in Wythe township, Hancock county, Illinois, November 19, 1863, his parents being John W. and Eliza (Yenawine) Smith, both of whom were natives of Kentucky, as were the paternal grandparents, Denton and Rebecca (Landers) Smith, born in 1800 and 1801 respectively. Mr. Smith died in 1884, while his wife had preceded him in death in 1882. The maternal grandparents, also natives of Kentucky, were Jacob and Ann Maria (Bence) Yenawine. Mr. Yenawine's birth occurred in 1795 and his demise took place in 1863, while his wife had been born in 1803 and died in 1859. John W. Smith, Sr., made farming his life work and at an early day became a resident of Hancock county, Illinois, where he lived for many years, his time and energies being devoted to general agricultural pursuits. He died in Keokuk, Iowa, in July, 1906, at the age of seventy-one years, and is still survived by his wife, who is making her home in Keokuk, at the age of seventy-four. For many years they were devoted and loyal members of the Christian church and Mr. Smith held various township offices, the duties of which he discharged with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. Unto him and his wife were born twelve children, of whom nine are now living: George W. and Benjamin F., both of whom are residents of Keokuk; Sadie, who is married and lives in Andover, Kansas; Charles H., of Galesburg; John W.; James E., also of this city; Lou, the wife of Will Dooley, of Keokuk, Iowa; Homer D., also of Keokuk; and Maude, the wife of Burt Clark, of that city.

John W. Smith spent his boyhood in the usual manner of farm lads, remaining through the period of his youth upon his father's farm in Hancock county, during which time he attended the district schools in the winter months and in the summer seasons aided in the work of the fields. He lived at home until he had attained his majority and then rented land, after which he engaged in cultivating the soil in this manner for several years in Hancock county. In 1900 he came to Galesburg, where he was engaged in the grocery business for a little more than seven years. On the expiration of that period he sold out and returned to farming. He now has six acres of land in his home place, rents other land and likewise owns some town property.

Mr. Smith was married November 1, 1887, to Miss Ella McCracken, a daughter of Benjamin and Jane (Hendricks) McCracken. Mrs. Smith died eight years later and on the 7th of December, 1898, Mr. Smith wedded Miss Cora Ethel Dodge, who was born in Hamilton, Hancock county, Illinois, a daughter of Thomas and Caroline (Atwater) Dodge, who were natives of Fulton county, Illinois. The father was a son of Henry and Lorana (Jolly) Dodge and her mother was a daughter of Charles and Jane (Dawson) Atwater. The death of Thomas Dodge occurred at Quincy, Illinois, in 1891, when he was fifty-one years of age, but his widow, who still survives, makes her home in Hamilton. They were the parents of thirteen children, of whom eleven are now living: Laura, who is the wife of William Kirkpatrick; Sherman Dodge; Charles; Howard; Ola, the wife of John Miller; Jefferson; Bert; Cora E.; Daisy, the wife of John Curtis Taylor; Julian; and Gertrude. The two who died in early childhood were Edward and Winona.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith have become the parents of two children, Lucile and Edwin. The parents are members of the Christian church and Mr. Smith gives his political support to the democratic party. He has worked hard and his life of industry and perseverance has brought him a substantial measure of success. At all times he has commanded the respect and good-will of his fellowmen because in every relation he has been honorable and straightforward.

JOHN MICHAEL BOHAN, M. D.

John Michael Bohan is one of the younger representatives of the medical profession in Galesburg but has become established in practice in a way that many an older member of the profession might well envy. The college training is so far in advance of what it was even a quarter of a century ago that the young man of today enters upon his professional duties with an equipment that the older generation had to gain through years of experience. Moreover, Dr. Bohan brings to bear sound judgment in all of his professional service, combined with a ready sympathy that enables him to quickly understand both the physical and mental condition of his patients. He was born in Henderson county, on the boundary line of Mercer county, Illinois, March 13, 1881, his parents being John and Bridget (Haney) Bohan. The family name indicates the ancestral line to have had its root in Ireland. The father was born in County Mayo, that country, in 1830, and the mother's birth occurred in the same county, on the 12th of January, 1839. In 1851 John Bohan, then a young man of twenty-one years, bade adieu to friends and native land and sailed for the United States, settling in the state of New York, where for a time he was employed at various occupations. In 1854 he went to Keithsburg, Illinois, where for ten years he engaged in teaming. He next turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, settling upon a farm about eight miles east of Keithsburg, his remaining days being devoted to the development and cultivation of the soil in the production of the crops best adapted to climatic conditions. His political indorsement was given to the democratic party and he held membership in the Catholic church. He died February 13, 1903, and his wife, who is now living in Keithsburg, still survives him. They were married in that place on the 21st of October, 1863, and became the parents of ten children, as follows: John, who is deceased; John, the second of the name, who has also passed away; Anna, the wife of William Callahan, of Mercer county, Illinois; William P., living in Alexis, this state; Margaret, deceased; Mary, twin sister of Margaret, who is now the wife of Mark Humphrey, of Keithsburg, Illinois; Peter T., a practicing physician of Kansas City, Missouri; Bertha, at home; James A., residing on the old homestead place; and John Michael, of this review.

The last named pursued his education in the public schools until he had completed a high-school course at Seaton, Illinois. He afterward entered Knox College and eventually matriculated in the medical department of the Northwestern University at Chicago, Illinois, from which he was graduated with the class of 1907. In December of the same year he came to Galesburg, where he has since continued in general practice, and the work that he has done indicates his thorough understanding of the profession and the scientific principles which underlie his labors.

Dr. Bohan proudly cast his first vote for the candidates of the democratic party and has always adhered to that political faith. He is a Catholic in religious belief, holding membership in Corpus Christi church, and his fraternal relations are with the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Modern Woodmen and the Mystic Workers.

WILLIAM LARSON.

William Larson is the owner of five hundred and ten acres of fine land in Knox county, his home farm, comprising one hundred and twenty acres, being situated in Copley township, near the Persifer township line. He was born in Gefle, Sweden, April 25, 1830, the oldest of three children in the family of Larson and Eliza (Anderson) Oleson. His father spent all his life in Sweden, where he died at the age of forty-seven. His mother, after the death of her husband, came to America and lived for a number of years with her son William in Knox county, Illinois, later making her home with her daughters in Minnesota, where she died at the age of seventy-five. William had one brother, Andrew Bourgelon, who died in Sweden, and one sister, Eliza, who was the wife of John Beckus and lived in Minnesota, where she and her husband both died.

William Larson was reared and educated in Sweden and was there married in 1855 to Miss Annie Shustrom, a daughter of John and Annie Shustrom, both of whom died in Sweden. Mrs. Larson was born June 29, 1829, in that country and was also reared and educated there. For one and one-half years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Larson resided in their native land, where their first child was born, then coming to America, settling in Knox county, Illinois. Looking around for a location they moved at first to various places, but after four or five years located on their present farm, on section 36, Copley township, Knox county, where they built a one-room log house and Mr. Larson began on a small scale to raise cattle. Mr. Larson paid an enormous price for the first team he ever owned, having earned the purchase money by digging coal and mixing lime. From these meager conditions Mr. and Mrs. Larson by thrift, honesty and prudent management have come to their present good financial circumstances. Gradually Mr. Larson has increased his cattle-raising business until it has become very extensive. He has added to his holdings until he now owns five hundred and ten acres of some of the most valuable land in the county and he has on his home farm a very fine residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Larson have become the parents of five children. The eldest, Lewis, who resides in Copley township, married Miss Emma Samuerson and they have five children: Mrs. Mabel Scandland; Elmer, who lives in Chicago; and Effie, Charles and Hattie, at home. John and William, the second and third sons, are unmarried and live at home with their parents. Annie, who died at the age of one year and seven months, is buried in the Victoria cemetery. Emma, who is the wife of Emil Carson, resides on the old home farm. She has two sons, Floyd and Charles, both of whom are in school.

In politics Mr. Larson is independent and in religion he strictly adheres to the faith of the Lutheran church, of which church his entire family are earnest and devoted members. He was at one time pathmaster of Copley township. Mr. Larson has attained the advanced age of eighty-one years and in every relation, whether as a business man, friend or citizen, has commanded the confidence and regard of those with whom he has been brought in contact. He has never regretted his determination to seek a home in America, for he here found the opportunity he sought, and by his well managed business affairs has gained a handsome competence, which supplies him in his advanced age with the necessities, comforts and some of the luxuries of life.

LLOYD H. DENNISON.

Lloyd H. Dennison, whose successful operations in the field of real estate indicate his thorough knowledge of the business and his sound judgment in investment, was born in Warren county, Illinois, May 22, 1876, a son of John and Elizabeth (Buck) Dennison, the former a native of New York and the latter of Ohio. The grandfather likewise bore the name of John Dennison and was a native of the Empire state. Unto him and his wife were born the following children: Daniel, George, Mary, Samantha and John. The last named was reared to farm life in the Empire state and always devoted his energies to the work of tilling the soil. On coming to Illinois he settled in Warren county among its earliest residents and worked out by the month as a farm hand until he was able to save from his earnings a sum sufficient to enable him to engage in business on his own account. Later he bought a farm of one hundred and eighty acres, which he cleared and improved and to it added until he had eight hundred acres near Gerlaw, although the town was not established when he first located there. His industry and determination were the basis of his success and he became in time one of the foremost agriculturists of his community, his prosperity being visible evidence of his life of well directed energy and thrift. He died upon the old homestead farm in 1889, at the age of fifty-two years, while his wife passed away in 1899, at the age of sixty years. She was a daughter of Norman Buck, a native of Vermont and a farmer by occupation. He married a Miss Murray and they removed westward to Illinois, becoming pioneer settlers of Rushville, in Schuyler county. Subsequently they removed to Warren county, where their remaining days were passed. They were the parents of six children, all daughters, namely: Adeline, Ann, Lou, Elizabeth, Emily and Ellen. Of these Elizabeth became the wife of John Dennison and the mother of Lloyd H. Dennison. Her family numbered two sons and three daughters: Harriet, the wife of Henry Clayton, now of Monmouth; Lulu, the wife of N. I. Waters, of Millington, Illinois; Ray W., who is living on the old home place in Warren county; Florence, the wife of I. Q. Robison, of Monmouth; and Lloyd H., of this review.

The last named was reared in Warren county upon his father's farm and attended the district schools, remaining at home until he had attained his majority. The father left each of his children a farm and Lloyd H. Dennison came into possession of one hundred and sixty acres in Monmouth township, Warren county, which he still owns and which he cultivated with success until 1902. He then rented the property and removed to Galesburg, purchasing a fine home on North Broad street, which he still occupies.

On the 25th of September, 1901, Mr. Dennison was married to Miss Frances E. Kiernan, a daughter of Thomas and Ann (McGraw) Kiernan. Her mother died in 1903, at the age of forty-five years, but her father is now living, spending much of his time in Galesburg. In their family were three children, Mary, Frances and John. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Dennison was Francis Kiernan, a native of Ireland, who became a pioneer settler of Warren county. Her maternal grandfather was also born on the Emerald isle and became an early settler of Knox county. Mr. and Mrs. Dennison have but one child, a son, John R. The mother is a member of the Catholic church. Mr. Dennison belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; politically he has always been a republican and while living in Warren county he filled the office of supervisor. Since removing to Galesburg he has engaged in real estate deals, having an office at No. 118 East Main street. His work here has been crowned with substantial success and he is now thoroughly conversant with realty values and knows the property that is upon the market and what it can be bought for. As a valuator of real estate it is seen that his judgment is sound and at all times he is watchful of opportunities, which enables him to promote his individual interests and to safeguard the interests of his clients.

SWAN H. PETERSON.

Swan H. Peterson has reached the venerable age of eighty-five years. Nature seems to have intended that man should enjoy a period of rest in the evening of life for in youth he possesses vigor, energy and hopefulness which in time develops into habits of industry and perseverance. If his labor is directed by sound judgment he may at length reach success, enabling him to spend his last days in retirement from business. Such has been the record of Swan H. Peterson who for a long period was connected with agricultural pursuits in Knox county but now makes his home in the village of Knoxville. He was born in Sweden, December 3, 1826, a son of Peter and Nellie (Benson) Peterson. His parents never came to America, passing away in Sweden after attaining an advanced age. In their family were four sons and two daughters of whom Swan H. is the eldest, the others being Peter, Nels, Mons, Elsie and Hannah.

In the schools of his native country Swan H. Peterson pursued his education and at the age of twenty-one years became connected with the military service, remaining in the army for five years. In his youthful days he worked at farm labor under the direction of his father and in 1854 when about twenty-eight years of age he sought a home in the new world, thinking that better business opportunities might be secured on this side of the Atlantic. Accordingly he landed in Quebec, after a voyage of six weeks upon the ocean, and from that point made his way direct to Illinois, settling in Knoxville. Here he engaged in farming, working out, first by the day, but as soon as his labors had brought him sufficient capital, he purchased land and continued to engage extensively in farming until advanced years compelled his retirement. He brought his fields under a high state of cultivation in raising the cereals best adapted to soil and climate, and at all times his farm work was characterized by practical and progressive methods.

In August, 1854, Mr. Peterson was united in marriage in Knoxville to Miss Truen Olson, who was born in Sweden, August 29, 1828. Her parents never came to America, spending their entire lives in Sweden. In their family were four sons and three daughters, Peter, Swan, Hannah, Andrew, Bengta, Truen and Nels. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Peterson were born three sons and two daughters, Mons, Ellen, Anna, John and Otto. Of these John married Miss Betty Nelson and they have two children, Hattie and John. In 1910 Mr. Peterson was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who died on the 12th of June, of that year. They had traveled life's journey together for more than fifty-five years, their love and confidence increasing as time passed on. Mrs. Peterson belonged to the Swedish Lutheran church, in which Mr. Peterson still holds membership. His entire life has been in harmony with his religious professions and has been characterized by faithfulness to duty, by strict integrity, by charity and kindliness.

JOHN NEIL COX, M. D.

Dr. John Neil Cox, who has been engaged in the practice of medicine in Galesburg for the past four years, was born in Mercer county, Illinois, on the 20th of January, 1851. He is a son of Richard R. and Sarah L. (Epperson) Cox, the father having been the first male white child born in Crawford county, Indiana, while the mother was a native of Virginia. Richard R. Cox was reared and educated in his native state, where he later engaged in agricultural pursuits until he had attained the age of twenty-six years. He then came to Illinois, acquiring some land in Mercer county, near Oxford, that he developed during the remainder of his active life. His efforts in this direction proved so lucrative that he was able to withdraw from active farm work and spent his latter days in retirement in Oxford, where he passed away on the 11th of September, 1877.

He had long survived his wife, who died on the old homestead on February 14, 1863. Mr. Cox, who was a veteran of the Black Hawk war, at the time of the Rebellion was a lieutenant colonel in the Illinois National Guards and was offered the rank of colonel if he would go to the front with the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was compelled to decline because of physical infirmities. His political support he always gave to the republican party and was chairman of the first board of supervisors in Mercer county. Mr. and Mrs. Cox were married in Crawford county, Indiana, and there spent the early years of their domestic life. Seven children were born to them, as follows: Charles E., who is living in Pittsfield, Illinois; Joseph R., who passed away in 1869; Mary, the wife of William L. Thomas, of Clarinda, Iowa; Augustus B., who died at Andersonville prison; Hiram S., who is living in Plainview, Texas; John Neil, our subject; and Julia Etta, the deceased wife of Thomas Pike, of Sioux City, Iowa. The religious views of the parents accorded with the tenets of the Baptist church in which they held membership.

The youthful years of Dr. Cox were spent on his father's farm in the work of which he assisted while pursuing his studies in the public schools of Oxford. He was a very ambitious young man and desired a better education, aspiring to a professional career. It was necessary that he earn the money for further study and with this aim in view at the age of sixteen he began teaching. Thus he acquired the means to pay for his tuition in the Northern Indiana Normal, at Valparaiso, from which he was graduated with the class of 1878, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He subsequently attended the University of Wooster, Ohio, graduating from that institution in 1889, while his professional course was pursued in the Chicago Medical College. Teaching engaged his attention for practically twenty-one years, or until he was thirty-seven, except when he was in college. He completed his medical course in 1889, and immediately thereafter established an office at Lakefield, Minnesota, and engaged in practice. At the end of a year he removed to North Henderson, Illinois, where he remained until 1907, when he came to Galesburg, where he still engages in general practice, but makes a specialty of diseases of the chest. Although he has resided here but four years, Dr. Cox has met with good success, and numbers among his patients some of the leading people of the town. Intelligent and practical in his ideas, those who seek his advice are always favorably impressed and inspired with confidence in his abilities.

On the 26th of September, 1889, Dr. Cox was united in marriage to Miss Bettie Dalhouse, a daughter of William and Bettie (Bruington) Dalhouse, of Trenton, Missouri, and they have become the parents of three daughters: Cella and Gladys, who are at home; and Mabel, who is deceased.

Dr. Cox is a deacon in the Baptist church, with which his family are also affiliated, and fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masonic order, having attained the rank of Knight Templar in the latter. He keeps in touch with the other members of his profession through his connection with the City and Knox County Medical Societies, and the Illinois State and National Medical Associations. His membership in organizations of a more purely social nature is confined to the Galesburg Club, while in politics he is independent. He is interested in all questions that vitally affect the municipality, but his ballot is always cast for the man or measures he considers best adapted to meet the exigencies of the situation, irrespective of party affiliation. He has never aspired to public honors or the emoluments of office but served as county superintendent for one year, while living in Henry county, Illinois. Dr. Cox is a man whose influence is freely exercised in advancing the welfare of the community through the highest standards of citizenship.

SWAN A. ANDERSON.

In the years of his connection with the active business interests of Galesburg Swan A. Anderson conducted a tailoring establishment and a furnishing-goods store and by reason of his excellent workmanship and honorable dealing made for himself a most creditable name in commercial circles. Success at length crowned his labors, enabling him to retire from active business some time prior to his death, which occurred on the 7th of July, 1900. He was then in the sixty-ninth year of his life, his birth having occurred in Sweden on September 26, 1831. His father, Andrew Anderson, was also a native of that country and there followed farming and merchandising, continuing a resident of Sweden until his life's labors were ended. In his family were seven children of whom Andrew, Nels, Swan and Oliver are all now deceased. Caroline is still living in Sweden, but the other daughters of the family, Celia and Annie. have also passed away.

Swan A. Anderson was educated in Sweden and at the age of twenty-three years came to the United States. He desired to make the best possible use of his time and opportunities and believed that better returns could be secured for labor in the new world than in the old. Accordingly in 1854 he crossed the Atlantic and made his way at once from the coast to the interior of the country, settling at Galesburg. That was before the railroad had reached this city and he walked here from Geneseo. He first worked as a painter and followed this trade for several years. Later he engaged in the tailoring business in company with John Peterson and had in the course of years several partners, the last of whom was Frank Brown. He then established an independent business under his own name, carried on in connection with a furnishing-goods store, which he conducted until eight years prior to his death, when he retired. He was an excellent workman and had built up a good business owing to the fact that he always carried a well selected line of dependable goods, kept up with all the changes in style and turned out most attractive garments.

Mr. Anderson was most pleasantly situated in his home life. On the 5th of January, 1861, he married Miss Betsy Erickson, a daughter of Eric and Anna (Peterson) Erickson, of this city. Her parents, however, were natives of Sweden and on coming to the United States in 1854, first located in Chicago and Michigan, making their way to Galesburg in 1856. Mr. Erickson had been reared to the occupation of farming and continued to make it his life work, owning and cultivating a tract of land which he transformed into productive fields and upon which he made various substantial improvements. Year after year his labors were crowned with good harvests and the sale of his crops brought him a substantial financial return, that enabled him at length to put aside business cares and live retired for several years prior to his death. In his political views he was a republican, interested in the success of the party yet never seeking office. He held membership in the Swedish Lutheran church and at all times lived an upright, honorable life that gained him the favorable regard and good-will of his fellowmen. Unto him and his wife were born seven children, of whom Oliver, Peter, John and William are now deceased. Mrs. Anderson was born in Sweden July 18, 1842, and was the next in the family. Elsie is the widow of Andrew Hedburg, of this city, and Mathilda is the wife of Matt Gibson, of Monmouth, Illinois. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Anderson there were born three children but they lost their first two, Emma and Andrew Edward. The only surviving child, Frederick, is at home with his mother.

The death of Mr. Anderson occurred July 7, 1900. He was a republican in politics, loyal to the party because he believed that its principles would best conserve good government. He belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the First Lutheran church, from its organization, and his life was in strict conformity with his professions. He was a quiet man, of good judgment and kindly ways, thoughtful and of well balanced nature, of good habits and an upright life. He never had occasion to regret his determination to come to America. His hope of finding improved business conditions was realized and he found that better returns were secured for his endeavor.

HON. JAMES PADEN.

A well spent life established the Hon. James Paden in a most enviable position in public regard and throughout the years of his connection with Knox county he was prominently connected with its development and progress and at the same time carefully conducted his business affairs so that success finally rewarded his labors, making him one of the men of affluence of this part of the state. He was born June 17, 1827, in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, and was the second son of Isaac Paden and Celia (Fish) Paden. The family is of Scotch origin but has been represented in America throughout several generations. Isaac Paden was born in the Keystone state, while his wife was a native of New York. In 1843 they removed westward, establishing their home in Knox county, Illinois, on a farm southeast of the city of Galesburg. There Isaac Paden resided for many years and was well advanced in life when called to his final rest. He remained a continuous resident of Illinois to the time of his death, save for a brief period which he spent in Minnesota. He returned then to Henry county, Illinois, where he tilled the soil for a considerable period, but his last days were spent in Knox county, where he passed away at the advanced age of ninety-five years.

James Paden was a lifelong farmer and always kept in touch with the most progressive methods of agriculture. His labors, too, were of a very practical character, as shown in the excellent results which attended his work. Year by year he plowed and tilled his fields, and in the autumn gathered rich harvests. As time passed on he became one of the substantial residents of the county, acquiring a very gratifying reward for his labors, and he also became well known in financial circles as a director of the First National Bank of Galesburg, and in every relation of life he maintained a high standard of integrity. From the time of his arrival in Knox county, in 1843, until his death he continued a permanent resident here save for a single year passed in Minnesota prior to his marriage.

On the 1st of January, 1851, he wedded Mrs. Martha (Edgar) Fuqua, who was a native of Kentucky and for a few years was a widow prior to her marriage to Mr. Paden. They traveled life's journey together most happily for more than a half-century and were then separated by the death of Mrs. Paden on the 26th of July, 1904. Their only child, Alonzo F. Paden, owns the old homestead farm and with him the father resided after the death of his wife.

Mr. Paden was a most public-spirited man, always deeply and helpfully interested in the welfare of the city and county. He served for several terms on the board of supervisors, representing Galesburg in that body, and was filling that position when the present courthouse was erected. He acted on various important committees and his labors were a most effective and beneficial element in the progress and upbuilding of the county during his long connection with the office. He also labored earnestly to promote the best interests of the agriculturists and cooperated in every project which tended to work for the permanent benefit of the farming class. In politics he was a stanch Republican and was a warm admirer of Abraham Lincoln, whose debate with Douglas he heard in antebellum days. In his death, which occurred in 1908, Knox county lost one of its most honored pioneers and valued citizens. For more than six decades he had resided in the county, thus witnessing almost its entire development. He had seen its wild lands converted into productive farms, its tiny villages grow into thriving towns and cities, had seen churches and schoolhouses built and in every possible way had aided in advancing the work of civilization. He was thoroughly reliable in business, bearing an untarnished reputation in all of his transactions, and thus he left to his family the priceless heritage of a spotless name as well as a substantial fortune, which was the reward of his years of earnest and unremitting toil.

ALADINE CUMMINGS LONGDEN, A. M., PH. D.

Aladine Cummings Longden, professor of physics and astronomy in Knox College since 1901 and recognized as one of the able educators of the state, was born in Leesville, Ohio, February 19, 1857. His parents were Samuel and Adaline (Cummings) Longden, the former born near Manchester, England, while Leesville, Ohio, was the birthplace of the latter. The paternal grandfather of Professor Longden was an architect in England and died in that country when well advanced in years. Unto him and his wife were born several children, the family including John, Thomas, George, James and Samuel, of which number George was a captain in the Crimean war. The maternal grandfather of Professor Longden was Dr. James Cummings, who for many years successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Leesville, Ohio. He wedded Mary Margaret Moore and both lived to be past middle life, the latter dying when seventy-five years of age. Their children were Thomas, James, Edwin, Adaline, Edy, Mary and Annie M.

Samuel Longden was reared in England and became a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was born July 24, 1815, and on attaining his majority came to America in 1836, settling in eastern Ohio, where he became a member of the Erie Conference. He was an itinerant preacher and rode horseback through the newly developed country of eastern Ohio and Pennsylvania, preaching the gospel to the pioneer residents of that section. He also had various charges in that country and his labors proved a potent force for good. He was married in Ohio to Miss Adaline Cummings and they were residents of Leesville at the time of the birth of Professor Longden. The mother there died April 2, 1857, when her son was but six weeks old. He was the youngest of six children, four of whom reached years of maturity: Thomas E., now a resident of Philadelphia; Mary S., deceased; Rev. Wilbur C., a Methodist Episcopal missionary, now at Chinkiang, China; and Professor Longden of this review. The other two died in infancy. Having lost his first wife the Rev. Samuel Longden married Miss Sarah E. Boyer and unto them were born three children: Henry B., now professor of German in De Pauw University, Greencastle, Indiana; Martha, who was librarian of De Pauw University for a number of years; and James Albert, who died of typhoid fever at the age of twenty-one. Rev. Longden closed a most active and useful life in his eighty-fourth year, passing away at Greencastle, Indiana, in 1898.

Professor Longden, owing to his mother's early death, spent the first ten and one-half years of his life with his aunt, Annie M. Cummings, in Poland, Ohio. He then resided for a part of a year with an uncle, Edwin B. Cummings, in Cattaraugus, New York, and at the age of eleven years joined his father in Indiana, where his later boyhood and early manhood were spent. His preliminary educational advantages were supplemented by a course in De Pauw University, from which he was graduated A. B., in 1881, while in 1884 his alma mater conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. He won his Ph. D. degree in Columbia University in the city of New York, in 1900 but in the meantime had entered the educational field and had done excellent work therein. He presents clearly and cogently the knowledge he has acquired. He occupied the professorship of physics and chemistry in the State Normal school of Westfield, Massachusetts, from 1888 until 1897, and in the latter year he became a graduate student in physics and chemistry in the University of Chicago, spending a scholastic year there, and in 1898 he was appointed assistant in physics at the University of Chicago, there remaining for a year. He became a graduate student of Columbia University in 1899, pursuing his studies there through the ensuing year, while in 1900-1 he was an instructor in physics in the University of Wisconsin. In the latter year he was called to Knox College as professor of physics and astronomy and has occupied that position to the present day, his ability as an educator making his classes most attractive and constituting him one of the forceful factors in the success of the school.

Professor Longden was married December 24, 1884, to Miss Jeanie Humble, a daughter of John and Mary (Campbell) Humble, of Buffalo, New York. In that city Mrs. Longden was born, her parents having removed there immediately after their marriage. Her father was a ship architect, builder, and owner and for a number of years superintendent of one of the largest dry docks in Buffalo. He designed and built the Erastus Corning, at that time the largest freighter on the Great Lakes. He and his wife still reside in Buffalo and there they reared their family of three children, of whom Mrs. Longden is the eldest. Her sister Mary Ella, who is now deceased, became the wife of Charles W. Wells, president of the Republic Metalware Company, and her brother, Fred W. Humble, is a well known architect of Buffalo.

Both the Professor and Mrs. Longden were reared in the Methodist faith but are now identified with the Presbyterian church. They have been residents of Galesburg for ten years and their home, at No. 643 West North street, is attractive by reason of its warm-hearted hospitality. Professor Longden votes with the republican party but while he has never sought office, has always been a great student of the sociological, political and economic questions which engage the attention of the thinking men of the age. Something more of the nature of his interests is indicated in the fact that he is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; a member of the American Physical Society and of the Belgian Astronomical Society. His reading has been broad, his research extensive, and his intellectual progress has placed him in a position where association with him means inspiration and elevation.

JOHN FRANCIS CORBIN, M. D.

Dr. John Francis Corbin, successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Galesburg, with offices in the Holmes building, was born near Dahinda, Illinois, on the banks of Spoon river, on Christmas Day of 1869. He represents one of the old pioneer families of this state. His grandfather was Henry J. Corbin, a native of Ohio, who became an early settler of Truro township, Knox county, there taking up his abode when the district was largely wild and undeveloped. He secured land, began the development of property and in course of time became an extensive and prosperous farmer. He died of typhoid fever upon his homestead when about fifty-eight or fifty-nine years of age. Among the children born to him and his wife, Mrs. Olive Corbin, was Edwin A. Corbin, the Doctor's father, his birth occurring on the old homestead farm in Truro township. At an early day he began farming on his own account. Subsequently, however, he removed to Knoxville, where he engaged in the practice of law for a quarter of a century, having previously prepared for the bar as a student in the office of Z. Cooley, a well known attorney of an early day. Edwin Corbin has served as city attorney of Knoxville for a number of years and still makes his home there. He married Miss Lucinda Beatty, also a native of Illinois, her parents being farming people of this state. Of that marriage there were born five children, four sons and a daughter, namely: Henry Butler, of Galesburg; Dr. John F., of this review; George Clement, of Toledo, Ohio; Mary Etta, the wife of Charles A. Johnson, of Galesburg; and Al E., of Peoria. For his second wife Edwin Corbin chose Elizabeth Utter and unto them were born four children, as follows: Lucinda, the wife of Charles Ferguson, of Chicago; Lee and Harold, also of Chicago; and Hortense, who married Kenneth Hawkins, of Galesburg.

Dr. Corbin, whose name introduces this record, was reared in Knox county and completed his public-school education by graduation from the high school with the class of 1888. He then entered Knox College, from which he was graduated in 1895. During his college course he devoted one year to teaching school and later took up the study of medicine, matriculating in the University of Illinois where he completed the full course in the medical department and was awarded his M. D. degree. He then began practice in Galesburg in 1898 and has since been a representative of the profession in this city, building up a business that has increased annually, both in extent and importance. Many who came to him as casual patients have continued as patrons when the need for professional service has been felt.

On the 11th of November, 1903, Dr. Corbin married Miss Marian Saywright, who was born near Toronto, Canada, as were her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Saywright, who still reside in that locality. She was the eldest of their four children, the others being James, Norman and Cora. Dr. and Mrs. Corbin have an interesting little daughter, Maxine Frances, who was born on the 17th of July, 1905. Mrs. Corbin belongs to the Episcopal church. Dr. Corbin is a republican in his political views and is a member of the pension board but has never sought nor desired office outside the strict path of his profession, for he prefers to concentrate his time and energies upon his chosen life work and his broad reading and continued study have given him comprehensive knowledge of the science of medicine and added to experience have continuously promoted his efficiency.

SAMUEL MICHAEL HUGHES.

Samuel Michael Hughes, who since August, 1906, has been successfully engaged in the real-estate business at Galesburg, was born in Fall Creek township, near Quincy, Adams county, Illinois, on the 20th of December, 1868, his parents being Michael William and Cynthia Anna (Thompson) Hughes. The father's birth occurred in New Ross, County Wexford, Ireland, on the 7th of January, 1837, while the mother was born in Fall Creek township, Adams county, Illinois, on the 30th of May, 1845. The paternal grandparents, Henry and Catherine (MacDonald) Hughes, were likewise natives of the Emerald isle, the former having been born in County Cavan and the latter in County Carlow. Henry Hughes was an agriculturist by occupation. Unto him and his wife were born four children, as follows: Katherine, the wife of a Mr. Ormsby, of Dublin, Ireland; Harriet, who is deceased; Michael William, the father of our subject; and Mary Anna, the widow of a Mr. Dickinson, who made his home in Evanston, Illinois.

Michael W. Hughes acquired his education in a Catholic college near Dublin, Ireland, and emigrated to Canada when a youth of seventeen, thence making his way, via the St. Lawrence river and the Great Lakes, to Washington county, Ohio, where he began the manufacture of pumps. In the latter part of 1860 he began the overland journey to California and had reached St. Joseph, Missouri, when the Civil war broke out. He enlisted as a private in the Thirteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry and was captured at Lexington, Missouri, in 1861. On the expiration of his term he reenlisted as a private of Troop I, Third Missouri Cavalry, winning promotion to the rank of captain. In the fall of 1864 he was discharged because of physical disability due to wounds and went to Quincy, Illinois, having charge of a sawmill south of the city for a few years. Subsequently he turned his attention to general agricultural pursuits, being busily engaged in the work of the fields until the time of his retirement in 1905. He is still numbered among the honored and respected residents of Quincy, Illinois. His political allegiance is given to the republican party and he still maintains pleasant relations with his old war comrades through his membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. It was on the 8th of January, 1865, in Fall Creek township, Adams county, that he wedded Miss Cynthia Anna Thompson, who was educated in the public schools of Adams county and in a seminary at Quincy. Unto them were born five children, as follows: Harriet Evelyn, the wife of Almond D. Stratton, of Plainville, Illinois; Samuel Michael, of this review; Josiah Henry, living in Quincy, Illinois, who is engaged in the real-estate business in association with his brother Samuel; Katherine Priscilla, the wife of Jacob Blauser, of Payson, Illinois; and William Terrence, an advertising agent of St. Louis, Missouri.

Samuel Michael Hughes obtained his early education in the public schools of Adams county and later entered Knox College, in which institution he finished the sophomore year with the class of 1891. Subsequently he followed farming and also taught school in Adams county for six years and during the next two years served as deputy county recorder of this county. He was then employed by T. C. Poling, a mortgage banker of Quincy, Illinois, for four years and on the expiration of that period embarked in the real-estate business on his own account at that place. In August, 1906, he came to Galesburg, Illinois, and has here conducted his real-estate interests to the present time, dealing in Illinois and Iowa corn-belt lands.

On the 17th of May, 1894, Mr. Hughes was married to Miss Mary Campbell Robbins, whose birth occurred in Payson, Illinois, on the 8th of October, 1869, her parents being Daniel and Anna C. (Thompson) Robbins, likewise natives of that place. Jonathan Robbins, the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Hughes, served in the Revolutionary war with the rank of captain, enlisting from Massachusetts. Daniel and Mary (Prince) Robbins, the paternal grandparents, were natives of New Hampshire and Massachusetts respectively. Daniel Robbins followed the profession of teaching after coming to Payson, Illinois, in the early '30s but later devoted his attention to the work of the fields. Both he and his wife passed away at Payson. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Hughes were Philo and Ellen (Wallace) Thompson, both natives of Connecticut. They also came to Payson, Illinois, in the early '30s and were there married. Philo Thompson followed farming as a life work and was a devoted member of the Congregational church. Daniel Robbins, Jr., the father of Mrs. Hughes, joined the Union army at the beginning of the Civil war as a private of Company D, Seventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, remaining with that command for four years and being promoted to the rank of captain. He is an agriculturist by occupation and gives his political allegiance to the republican party, having served as school trustee for a number of years. His religious faith is that of the Congregational church, in which he acts as deacon. He also belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Anna C. Thompson and whom he wedded at Payson, Illinois, was called to her final rest on the 8th of June, 1904. They had five children, as follows: Ellen R., who married a Mr. Arnett, of Fresno, California; Mrs. Hughes; Grace Prince, the widow of Albert T. McCrory, of Okmulgee, Oklahoma; Ernest T., of Chicago, who is assistant editor of the Breeders Gazette; and Edith Anna, at home.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Mr. Hughes has supported the men and measures of the republican party. He is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic fraternity and also belongs to the Congregational church of Quincy, to Phi Delta Theta, a college fraternity, Delta Chapter of Knox College and the Galesburg Club. His life has been one of well directed effort and enterprise, resulting in the attainment of a creditable and gratifying measure of success. In all its relations he has enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellowmen because he is honest, upright, persistent and determined.

JOHN E. ERICSON.

John E. Ericson, who with his father is the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land on sections 9 and 10, of Victoria township that he is devoting to general farming, was born on the place, where he now resides, on the 27th of May, 1866. Eric Ericson, his father, was born in Sweden and there he passed the first fourteen years of his life. At the expiration of that period he emigrated to the United States, locating in Wisconsin. There he met and subsequently married Miss Christina Bloom, the mother of our subject, likewise a native of Sweden, who came to the United States the same year as her husband. During the early years of their domestic life they removed to Illinois, settling in Knox county, which was thereafter their home. Mr. Ericson subsequently purchased the farm that his son John E. is now operating and settled there with his family. This was an improved place and was under cultivation, but he energetically applied himself to bringing it into a higher state of productivity and during the period of his operation wrought many changes that added greatly to the value of the property. Here the mother passed away, in 1897, at the age of fifty-nine years and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Victoria. The father is still living, however, and continues to make his home on the farm with his son. He is a member of the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church, to which the mother also belonged and in the faith of which they reared their family. Mr. and Mrs. Ericson were parents of one son, John E., our subject.

The entire life of John E. Ericson has been passed amid his present environments. When old enough to begin his education he attended the district schools, later supplementing his elementary knowledge by a commercial course in a college at Galesburg, thus qualifying himself for the practical duties of business life. While still a small lad he was assigned light duties about the home, thus early instilling in him lessons in the value of industry and patience as well as thrift. As his strength and sense of responsibility increased with the passing years his duties became heavier, and after laying aside his text-books he gave his undivided attention to the work of the fields and care of the stock. By the time he had attained his maturity he was thoroughly proficient in the practical methods of agriculture and fully qualified to assume the management of the farm. This he ultimately did, so advantageously directing his activities, that he later came in possession of a half interest in the property. Mr. Ericson operates his farm along general lines, but as he is a man of progressive ideas quite closely adheres to modern ideas in his methods. During recent years he has installed various appliances and conveniences deemed essential to the agriculturist of today but unknown a generation ago, and now has one of the most completely equipped farms in the community.

Mr. Ericson established a home of his own when he married Miss Amanda Johnson, who was born in Sweden, but was brought to America by her parents at the age of three years. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Johnson, well known residents of Victoria township. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Ericson numbers six, as follows: Edna, the wife of Henry Linderholm, of Victoria township; Alice, who became the wife of John L. Jarnigan, of Galesburg; and Earl, Carl, Willard and Wendell. After his marriage Mr. Ericson brought his bride to the old home farm, and here his children have been born, reared and educated.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ericson hold membership in the Swedish Methodist Episcopal church. He votes with the republican party and, despite the fact that his personal interests require nearly all of his time, has always taken a deep interest in local politics and has assumed his share of the governmental duties of the township. He is a public-spirited man and has high standards of the responsibilities of citizenship and strives to live up to them. For the past eight years he has been road commissioner, the length of his term attesting his efficiency in this capacity. He was school trustee for twelve years and for one he was assessor, discharging the duties of both offices in a highly capable and satisfactory manner. Mr. Ericson has become one of the substantial citizens of Victoria township; he is one of the popular and highly esteemed men of the community, where his ideas have much weight in influencing public opinion, owing to his recognized capabilities as a business man and his common sense as a politician.

ALVAH ISOME SARGENT, D. D. S.

Dr. Alvah Isome Sargent, a successful practitioner of dentistry, has followed his profession in Galesburg for the past fourteen years and has built up an extensive and profitable patronage in this connection. His birth occurred in South Wayne, Wisconsin, on the 26th of April, 1870, his parents being Charles Edward and Nancy (Riggs) Sargent. The father was born near Springfield, Illinois, on the 25th of December, 1834, while the mother's birth occurred at Wiota, Wisconsin, in 1840. Charles E. Sargent removed to Wisconsin when a lad of twelve years and was successfully identified with general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career. For the past few years he has lived in honorable retirement, now making his home at Warren, Illinois. He gives his political allegiance to the republican party and is a devoted and consistent member of the United Brethren church. His wife was called to her final rest on the 10th of March, 1882. Their children were five in number, namely: Lewis, who is a resident of Huron, South Dakota; John, living in Warren, Illinois; Mary, the wife of H. J. Smith, of Warren, Illinois; Frank, who makes his home at South Wayne, Wisconsin; and Alvah I., of this review.

The last named is a graduate of the high school at Warren, Illinois, and also spent one year in college at Beloit, Wisconsin. Subsequently he entered the Chicago Dental College and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1896. Opening an office at Huntington, West Virginia, he there remained for a year and a half and on the expiration of that period came to Galesburg, Illinois. As a practitioner of dentistry he enjoys an enviable reputation among the members of the profession as well as with the general public, having built up a gratifying patronage and also acting as secretary of the Knox County Dental Society at the present time.

On the 25th of June, 1896, Dr. Sargent was joined in wedlock to Miss Mary Bates, a daughter of Madison C. and Emma (Latimer) Bates, of Oberlin, Ohio. They have two children: Constance L., who was born at Huntington, West Virginia, on the 29th of September, 1897; and Hubert Drennan, whose birth occurred in Galesburg, on the 13th of March, 1904.

Since age conferred upon him the right of franchise Dr. Sargent has supported the men and measures of the republican party, being convinced that its principles are most conducive to good government. His religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Central Congregational church, of which he acts as deacon and has acted as trustee. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a director in the Young Men's Christian Association. His salient characteristics are such as are worthy of emulation and have gained for him the respect and good-will of a large circle of warm friends.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM FREDERICK BENTLEY.

William Frederick Bentley, director of the Knox Conservatory of Music and professor of singing in Knox College, has been a potent factor in the development of the musical taste of this section for many years. His native talent in this direction was soon manifest and after laying the foundation of a general education in a mastery of the fundamental principles of knowledge, he concentrated his efforts more and more largely upon the study of music, and thorough training in this land and abroad has qualified him for the position of responsibility that he has filled in connection with Knox College for more than a quarter of a century.

Professor Bentley was born at Lenox, Ohio, September 12, 1859, and is a representative of an old New England family. His paternal grandfather, Arnold

Bentley, was a native of Massachusetts and a blacksmith by trade, but for some years conducted a general store in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. He married Lois Beach and both lived to an advanced age, rearing several sons and daughters, including Anna, Mary, Lucy, Cyrus and Emily. The only son, Cyrus Bentley, the father of Professor Bentley, was born January 4, 1822, at Pittsfield, Massachusetts. The family soon after moved to East Otto, Cattaraugus county, New York, where the boy grew to manhood. He became a singing teacher and conductor of musical conventions, and when a young man removed to Ohio, settling in Ashtabula county, where he spent the greater part of his life. For three years he engaged in teaching music in Marietta, Ohio, and for about ten years was a professor of music in Oberlin Conservatory of Music. Among his pupils were: the late Charley Williams, the famous Evangelist singer; George W. Andrews, the distinguished organist, and many other people of renown in musical circles, including Professor Rice, now deceased, who was the former director of the Oberlin Conservatory of Music. Professor Cyrus Bentley was married in Harpersfield, Ohio, October 16, 1851, to Miss Harriet Prentice, a native of that state and a daughter of Daniel Prentice, who was born in Stonington, Connecticut, August 25, 1773, and as a young man came to Ohio and carried on business as a farmer and cattle buyer. He married Mary Atwater Hotchkiss, who was born June 21, 1779, at Cheshire, Connecticut, and they had several children, including John, Noyce, Henry, Eunice, Salina, Lucinda and Harriet. The marriage of Cyrus and Harriet (Prentice) Bentley was blessed by three children: Alice, now deceased, who was the wife of Corydon Sexton; Ralph Prentice, of Dorset, Ohio; and Professor Bentley of this review.

The last named spent his youthful days upon his father's farm in Ashtabula county, Ohio, where he mastered the branches of learning taught in the district schools and later attended the public schools of Marietta, Ohio, the Normal school at Geneva, Ohio, and the high school of Oberlin. His father's recognition of his musical talent led to his education along that line and he was graduated from the Conservatory of Music of Oberlin College. He then went abroad for further study, spending three and one-half years in the musical centers of the old world, including Leipsic, Berlin, Paris and London, where he had the benefit of instruction from some of the ablest masters. In the meantime he had engaged in teaching music for two years and after his return from Europe he came to Galesburg, to accept the position of director of the Knox Conservatory of Music, in which capacity he has continued since 1885, making this one of the popular and well patronized departments of the college.

Professor Bentley was married, November 28, 1883, to Julia Asenath Webster, a native of Geneva, Ohio, and a daughter of Dennis and Mary A. (Sampson) Webster, who were natives of Ohio and New Hampshire, respectively. Her father is now deceased, but her mother still resides at Geneva, Ohio. In their family were four children, George, Julia, Mary and Harriet. Professor and Mrs. Bentley have a daughter, Florence May, who is now attending Knox College. The parents are members of the Central Congregational church and are well known in the city where their residence covers a period of twenty-six years. Their home has ever been a hospitable one and the center of a cultured circle of society. Professor Bentley has held to high ideals in his profession and his ability, based upon technical training and natural talent, and has well qualified himself to uphold the standard of his department and to stimulate his pupils with much of his own zeal and interest in and devotion to the work.

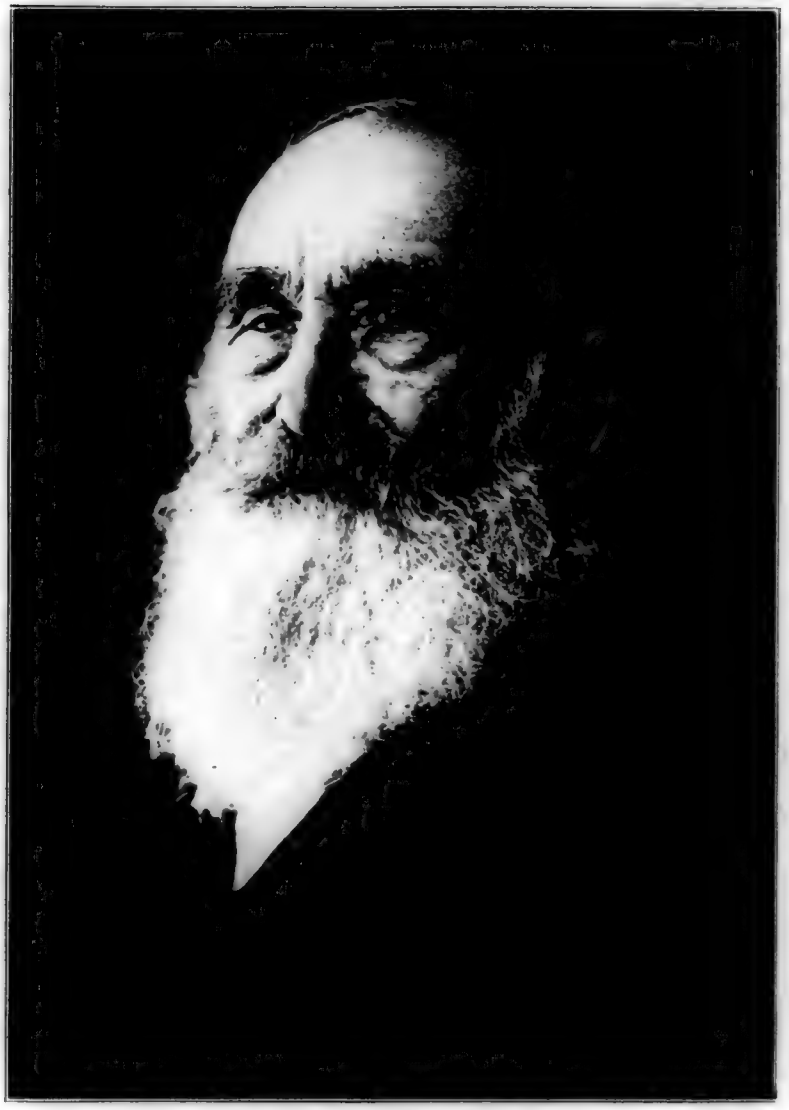
WILLIAM A. BARTLETT.

William A. Bartlett, a well known and prosperous young citizen of Galesburg, has here been engaged in the real-estate business since 1907. He was born in Galesburg on the 25th of October, 1882, his father being Frank Sears Bartlett, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume. After acquiring his education in the schools of his native city he went to Winnipeg, Canada, there spending one year in the employ of the Deering Harvester Company. He next acted as a clerk in the stock house of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad for one year and then became engaged in the hardware business at Monmouth, Illinois, in association with his father-in-law, George A. Schussler, this relation being maintained for three years. On the expiration of that period he went to Racine, Wisconsin, as purchasing agent for the J. I. Case Plow Works, but resigned at the end of a year and removed to Colorado for the benefit of his health, remaining in that state for two years and having charge of a lumber concern. In 1907 he came to Galesburg, Illinois, and has since devoted his attention to real-estate interests here with excellent results, selling Red River lands in North Dakota.



On the 30th of June, 1903, Mr. Bartlett was united in marriage to Miss Maude Frank Schussler, a daughter of George A. and Mary J. (Barnes) Schussler, of Monmouth, Illinois. In politics Mr. Bartlett is independent, supporting men and measures rather than party for party principles. He is a devoted and consistent member of the Universalist church and also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Elks Club, the Galesburg Club and the Country Club. His nature is social and his disposition cordial, and while he has at all times commanded the respect and admiration of his business associates, he has also enjoyed the warm friendship of those who have come within the closer circle of his acquaintance.

ANGUS MOOR.

Angus Moor, who is now living retired on his farm on section 36, Rio township, was for many years successfully engaged in general farming and stock-raising in this county. His birth occurred at Anson, Somerset county, Maine, on the 8th of February, 1835, his parents being Eber S. and Lydia T. (Daggett) Moor. The parents were also natives of Maine, the father's birth occurring on the 15th of October, 1807, and that of the mother on January 8, 1805. The paternal ancestors came from Massachusetts, the great-grandfather, John Moor, was a veteran of the Revolutionary war, having participated in the battle of Bunker

Hill, but the mother was of English extraction. Mr. and Mrs. Moor were married in Maine, in November, 1830, and there they passed the early years of their domestic life. In 1844 they came west, Illinois at that time being considered the frontier, and in April of the following year they located on the farm, where our subject is now living. Mr. Moor devoted his energies to the further improvement and cultivation of this property and also raised and fed stock for the market during the remainder of his active life. He passed away on the homestead on the 4th of March, 1879, having attained the age of seventy-one years. Although he was not a professed Christian, nor affiliated with any church, he lived in the Christian spirit and exemplified many most estimable qualities of character. Of a kindly, generous nature, he was always ready to assist the unfortunate, being charitable in his criticism and lenient in his judgment. In politics he was a whig, but was never an office seeker, although he served very efficiently as road commissioner. He was survived for some years by his widow, who died on the 27th of December, 1889, at the venerable age of nearly eighty-five years. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Moor numbered six.

A lad of nine years when he came to Illinois with his parents, Angus Moor had begun his education, which he completed in Knox county. He shared with his people the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life, and although he was only a boy assisted much in the operation of the farm and the care of the stock. After leaving school he gave his entire time and attention to the tilling of the fields and the performance of other duties about the homestead until he had attained has majority. Confidence in himself and his acquirements induced him to launch upon a career as an independent agriculturist, and leaving home he engaged in farming for himself. He forsook his labors two years later, in 1859, and joined a party of gold seekers going to California. They made the trip in a prairie schooner and it was a long, hard journey, occupying several months. He remained on the coast prospecting for about eight years, meeting with but indifferent success, and then returned to Knox county, by the way of the Missouri river in a row boat. Upon his return in September, 1866, he again turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, ultimately acquiring the old home place, containing one hundred and thirty-seven acres, where he now lives. He has ever since made this place his home, but is now living retired, leaving to his son the operation of the farm. Mr. Moor always directed his undertakings along practically the same lines as his father, engaging in general farming and stock-raising, and met with gratifying success in both.

On the 23d of December, 1882, Angus Moor was united in marriage to Mrs. Lydia F. Stevens, who was born at Atkinson, Maine, on the 17th of June, 1844. She was a daughter of George Daggett, a farmer of Maine, where he passed his entire life and Mrs. Moor was reared. In her early womanhood she was married to a Mr. Stevens and they removed to Winnebago county, Illinois, and there he died in 1878. Six children were born to them, five of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Moor became the parents of one son, Don Angus. He married Ethel Knox of this county, a daughter of Charles Knox, formerly of Wataga, but now of Iowa, and is living on his father's farm. In 1911, they made a visit to Maine and there Mrs. Moor passed away very suddenly of apoplexy, on August 31.

In his political views Mr. Moor has always stanchly adhered to the principles of the republican party, but he has never aspired to public honors or the emoluments of office, although he meets the requirements of good citizenship by going to the polls on election day. The greater part of his life has been passed in the immediate vicinity of his present home, where he is widely known and has many loyal friends.

GEORGE D. AMENT.

George D. Ament, proprietor of the Galesburg Steam Laundry, was born in Pontiac, Illinois, July 23, 1871, a son of William T. and Harriet B. (Baker) Ament, both of whom were natives of the state of New York. The paternal grandfather was there also born and was a farmer by occupation but removed to Illinois with his family and both he and his wife died in La Salle county at an advanced age. They were the parents of four sons and a daughter, Oscar, Cyrus, Jutt, William T. and Catherine. William T. Ament was but a boy when he accompanied his parents on their removal from the Empire state to Ottawa, Illinois, where he was reared to manhood and obtained his education as a public-school student. He afterward removed to Pontiac, Illinois, where he engaged in the practice of law for many years. In this state he married Harriet B. Baker, whose parents were early settlers of La Salle county, Illinois, where they lived until called to their final rest. Her father was killed in a runaway accident when driving a young team. Her mother lived to be more than ninety years of age. Their children were James E., Joseph E., Cyrus, Charles and Harriet B. Unto Mr. and Mrs. William T. Ament there were born seven children, as follows: William L., deceased; Mabel, the wife of Sidney Herzberg, of Chicago; Charles, who has also passed away; Lou, the wife of Dr. W. L. Tallman, of Chicago; Joseph B., residing in Las Vegas, New Mexico; George D., of this review; and Harriet, the deceased wife of Glenn Martin. The father passed away when sixty-four years of age and the mother died two years later. He was a Presbyterian in religious faith while she held membership in the Episcopal church. He ranked high as a member of the bar and, in addition to the large private practice accorded him, he served as prosecuting attorney and was also at one time county judge of Livingston county.

George D. Ament spent his youthful days in Pontiac, Illinois, in the manner of most boys who receive the stimulus and encouragement of good home training. He attended the public schools there and made his initial step in industrial circles as an employe of Henry Foster in the electrical business in Pontiac. Subsequently he became connected with the General Electric Company of Chicago, but afterward turned his attention to the laundry business in Pontiac and subsequently continued in the same line at Joliet, Illinois. He also spent one year in the laundry business in Los Angeles, California, and for four years was identified with real-estate interests and mining in that section of the country. He then returned to Joliet, where he again conducted a laundry until 1907, when he came to Galesburg and purchased the laundry business of E. J. Cowan of which he has since been proprietor, conducting an establishment under the name of the Galesburg Steam Laundry at Nos. 151-153 North Cedar street.

Mr. Ament was married to Miss Analla Booth, a native of Logan county, Ohio, and a daughter of Thomas C. and Elizabeth (Young) Booth, natives of New Jersey and Pennsylvania respectively. Leaving the east they removed to Ohio and the mother died in Marion county, that state, but the father is still living. They were parents of the following children: Lorenzo W., Keokuk B., Harrison O., Osceola and Analla. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Ament was a native of England, who lived for a time in America but returned with his wife to their native land, where they spent their last days. They had three children, John, Thomas and Hester.

Mr. and Mrs. Ament are identified with the Christian Science church and his political views connect him with the republican party. He belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, to the Galesburg Club and to the Soangetaha Country Club. He is thus well known in the social circles of the city where attractive personal qualities and a genial manner have gained him many friends. He also occupies a creditable position in business circles as a reliable, enterprising man and whatever success he has achieved is attributable to his own efforts, for he started out empty-handed and has worked his way upward through energy, determination and the improvement of the opportunities that have come to him.

WILLIAM BURNSIDE.

William Burnside, formerly prominently associated with the agricultural interests of Knox county but now living retired, still derives much of his income from his interests in farm property. He has passed the seventy-eighth milestone on life's journey and the rest which he is enjoying is well merited for it has been won through the close application, unfaltering energy and unassailable integrity which he manifested when conducting his agricultural pursuits. He was born in Ohio, August 13, 1833, and was one of the eight children of William and Margaret (Callison) Burnside, who were natives of Virginia, the latter a daughter of Thomas Callison, who was a farmer of the Old Dominion. William Burnside, Sr., was reared in Virginia and, following his removal to Ohio, there engaged for a number of years in farming. Subsequently, however, he went to Indiana, but in the fall of 1850 came to Illinois, settling in Chestnut township, Knox county, where he purchased ninety acres of land, to which he added as opportunity offered and his financial resources permitted, until his farm embraced two hundred and forty acres of rich land. He died on the old homestead, at the age of eighty-four years, and his wife passed away at the age of seventy. She was a devoted member of the Methodist church and most carefully and conscientiously reared her family. The children were as follows: John, Anthony and Isaac, all now deceased; Elizabeth, the widow of John Hedley, of Kansas; William; Mary, the widow of Samuel Coffman, of Chicago; and George, who is living in Abingdon, Illinois.

William Burnside was three years old when his parents went to Indiana and was a youth of seventeen when the family came to Illinois. Here he was reared to manhood upon his father's farm in Knox county, attending the district schools in the winter seasons, and in the summer months aided in the cultivation of the home farm. The occupation to which he was reared he determined to make his life work and started out on his own account by renting a farm in Chestnut township. He carefully saved his earnings during that period and was at length enabled to purchase ninety acres, to which he added from time to time until he became the owner of fifteen hundred acres or more, thus winning a place among the most extensive landowners of central Illinois. The rapid settlement of this part of the state and the improvements which he placed upon his land greatly enhanced its value and won for him a position among the most prosperous agriculturists of Knox county. He engaged in farming and in raising and shipping stock until the fall of 1892, when he removed to Galesburg and purchased a fine home at the corner of Seminary and Grove streets. This he occupied until 1907, when he removed to his present residence, at No. 1078 North Broad street.

In 1861 Mr. Burnside was united in marriage to Miss Julia Terry, a daughter of John Terry. Mrs. Burnside was born in Knox county while her parents were natives of Virginia. The children of this marriage were six in number. Marcus T., who is now a farmer of Chestnut township, married Maude Cranston and has three children, Roy, Pearl and Orpha. Nellie is the wife of D. E. Meeks, of Galesburg, and they have two children, William and Fay. Charles S., a farmer living at Maquon, Illinois, married Jennie Clark. Fannie died in early childhood. Albert Guy, who is proprietor of a hotel at Spirit Lake, Iowa, married Mabel Ackerman and has one son, Carl. The youngest of the family is Carl S., who is operating one of his father's farms in Chestnut township. The mother died in 1895, at the age of fifty-three years, and on the 24th of February, 1897, Mr. Burnside wedded Mrs. Lydia Edgerton, widow of Dr. R. C. Edgerton, and a daughter of John and Cordelia (Clark) Tiffany. She was born in Harpersfield, Delaware county, New York, June 8, 1842, and her parents were also natives of the Empire state although their ancestors came from Connecticut. Her grandfather, Horace Tiffany, was a native of Connecticut and of English descent. He married Martha Osborn and they had eight children, Hiram, John, Peter, Nathan, Eliza, Olive, Sallie and Charles. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Burnside was John Clark and unto him and his wife, who died when a comparatively young woman, there was born a son and four daughters. John Tiffany, the father of Mrs. Burnside, was a soldier in a New York regiment in the Civil war and died from illness while in the service. His wife lived to be sixty-three years of age and reared their family of five children, Louise, Hiram, Lydia, Mary and Peter. By her former marriage Mrs. Burnside had one son, Hubert C. Edgerton, who is married and lives in Burley, Idaho. Mrs. Burnside belongs to the Universalist church. Mr. Burnside votes with the republican party and has filled the office of road commissioner but has not taken an active part in politics because of the demands made upon him by his extensive business interests. His real-estate holdings are the visible evidence of a life of well directed energy and thrift. Starting out empty-handed, he made the best possible use of his time and opportunities, and by honorable and straightforward methods, coupled with unflagging industry, gained a position among the prosperous and honored residents of this section of the state. His life may well serve as an inspiration and an example to others who desire to attain success and an untarnished name.

JOHN DONNINGTON BARTLETT, M. D.

Dr. John Donnington Bartlett, an able physician and surgeon of Galesburg, is numbered among the worthy native sons of that city, his birth having there occurred on the 30th of July, 1880. A sketch of his father, Frank Sears Bartlett, appears on another page of this work. He pursued his early education in the public schools of Galesburg and was graduated from the high school in 1897. Subsequently he entered Lombard College and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1901, winning the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Having determined upon the practice of medicine as a life work, he matriculated in Rush Medical College of Chicago, Illinois, and completed the prescribed course in 1905. Following his graduation he spent six months at the Lying-in Hospital as interne and during the next year and a half was associated with Dr. Nicholas Senn as interne at St. Joseph's Hospital. He acted as surgeon of the Chicago police department for three years and was also examining physician of the Police Benevolent Association, while for two years he served as physician at the Riverview Emergency Hospital. Dr. Bartlett was appointed by examination to the rank of first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States army and was commissioned by President Taft on the 11th of September, 1911. He maintained his office at No. 823 Sheridan road, Chicago, for three years, and on the 1st of January, 1911, came to Galesburg, having here been engaged in general practice to the present time. As a representative of the medical profession he has won a gratifying measure of success, enjoying an extensive practice that has come to him in recognition of his skill and ability in the application of remedial agencies. He acted as university marshal of the medical department of the University of Chicago in 1902 and in the line of his profession is connected with the Chicago Medical Society, the Physicians Club of Galesburg, the Physicians Club of Chicago, the Knox County Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

On the 4th of September, 1904, Dr. Bartlett was united in marriage to Miss Ethel Letitia Booker, who was born in Helena, Montana, on the 3d of October, 1880, her parents being George C. and Martha Elizabeth Booker. The father's birth occurred in St. Louis, Missouri, on the 7th of February, 1838, while the mother was born in Jefferson City, Missouri, on the 23d of January, 1855. George C. Booker journeyed westward in 1865, finally locating in Helena, Montana, where he became identified with mining interests. At the present time he is living retired at Helena, enjoying the fruits of his former toil in well earned ease. In Masonry he has attained high rank, now acting as secretary of the Helena and state Masonic bodies. Unto him and his wife were born three children, as follows: Mrs. Bartlett; Clinton Talbott; and Lester Harry. Mrs. Bartlett was graduated from the high school of Helena with the class of 1898 and subsequently pursued a special course of study in the University of Chicago. She had charge of the kindergarten department of the Helena public schools for four years and is still a member of the kindergarten board at that place. She now belongs to the Mosaic and Tourist Clubs of Galesburg and has already won many friends in this city. By her marriage she has become the mother of one son, John Donnington, Jr., whose birth occurred in Chicago, Illinois, on the 10th of March, 1909.

In politics Dr. Bartlett is a republican, while his religious faith is indicated by his membership in the Universalist church. His wife is a member of the Episcopal church. His fraternal relations are with Chicago Lodge, No. 4, B. P. O. E., and Vesper Lodge, No. 584, A. F. & A. M. He is likewise a valued member of the Galesburg Club, the Sigma Nu fraternity and Phi Rho Sigma, a medical fraternity. Dr. Bartlett is a popular young man, making steady progress in his profession and gaining steadily in the friendship of those with whom he comes in contact.

MRS. FREDERICKA GOLDQUIST.

One of modern philosophical trend of thought has written "in the good that comes to us, by the good that comes to the world through us, is the measure of our success," and judged in this way the life of Mrs. Fredericka Goldquist was a most successful one. Her labors were a continuous element for good in the community in which she lived and her life was, indeed, a serviceable one for she was continually holding out a helping hand, or speaking a word of encouragement, or kindly advice. She held closely to the high standards of Christian living and it has fallen to the lot of but few women in Galesburg to fill so large a sphere of genuine usefulness as did Mrs. Goldquist, who passed away on the 27th of March, 1889.

Fredericka Peterson was a native of Sweden, born in the parish of Haggersda, November 20, 1824, and was, therefore, twenty-three years of age when in 1848 she accompanied her father's family to the new world, their destination being Knox county, Illinois. This was the year of the terrible cholera scourge. The little band of emigrants first contracted the disease while passing through the Erie canal. As they proceeded on their journey by way of the Great Lakes and across the prairies of Illinois in lumber wagons, victim after victim was buried by the way. The mother and a brother of Mrs. Goldquist were of the number. Strange as it may seem, Mrs. Goldquist, although a constant caretaker of the dying and the dead, experienced no touch of the disease. The travelers proceeded to Andover, Henry county, where a heroic physician, Dr. Calhoun, came and ministered to them, but he too fell ill and passed away. After the scourge had spent its force the family moved to Knoxville, where they lived for two years. They then moved to Galesburg. Mrs. Goldquist was thus one of the first Swedish residents of the county.

Soon after taking up their abode in Galesburg she was married to Claus Olofson Goldquist, who died June 5, 1864, leaving her with five children. One of the local papers in writing of her and her experiences at this period in her life said,

Her labors were a continuous element for good in the community in which she lived and her life was, indeed, a serviceable one for she was continually holding out a helping hand, or speaking a word of encouragement, or kindly advice. She held closely to the high standards of Christian living and it has fallen to the lot of but few women in Galesburg to fill so large a sphere of genuine usefulness as did Mrs. Goldquist, who passed away on the 27th of March, 1889.

Fredericka Peterson was a native of Sweden, born in the parish of Haggersda, November 20, 1824, and was, therefore, twenty-three years of age when in 1848 she accompanied her father's family to the new world, their destination being Knox county, Illinois. After the scourge had spent its force the family moved to Knoxville, where they lived for two years. They then moved to Galesburg. Mrs. Goldquist was thus one of the first Swedish residents of the county.

Soon after taking up their abode in Galesburg she was married to Claus Olofson Goldquist, who died June 5, 1864, leaving her with five children. One of the local papers in writing of her and her experiences at this period in her life said,

MRS. FREDERICKA GOLDQUIST

"the quality of her nature and her strength of character are seen in the spirit with which she assumed the burden thus imposed by death upon her, and the complete manner in which she met this responsibility." All the children were given a public school education and had the joy of living in a cheerful and inspiring home atmosphere.

In spite of the responsibilities and cares of home, Mrs. Goldquist found time to take an active part in good work for the benefit of others. Her life was an illustration of interested unselfishness. During the war she was an active member of the Soldiers' Aid Society and met often with Mrs. T. L. Clark, Mrs. Clement Leech, Mrs. D. C. Raymond and others of the good women of the city, in the basement of the First Congregational church, where boxes were filled with articles for the soldiers. When, after the war, this organization became the Dorcas society, Mrs. Goldquist remained a member and was for over ten years a ward visitor for the Seventh ward. There are scores of people in that ward who can recall her kindnesses. When the Dorcas society was merged in the Free Kindergarten Association, Mrs. Goldquist retained her connection, and took a deep interest in this institution. It is said that, being unable to attend the last meeting of the association, she sent an order for some shoes for the little folks in need of them. She was seventh ward visitor also for the association.

In addition Mrs. Goldquist was at the head of an industrial school at the First Baptist church and one afternoon every week met twenty-five or thirty girls in one of the rooms at that edifice. In this work she had the help of several of the church women. She made her old age bright with helpful and beautiful deeds.

When one attempts to analyze the secret of Mrs. Goldquist's usefulness, he finds it in her sincere faith in Christ and in her desire to serve Him by ministering through every possible, accessible channel, to mankind. She was a member of the First Baptist church for nearly forty years, and all through was active and interested. For a long time she was a busy member of the various women's societies. For thirty-five years she was a teacher in the Sunday school. Her class was composed for over twenty years of young ladies, who as the years went by gave place to others many of these being pupils of the high school. She was a successful and inspiring teacher, so much so that at times her class room was crowded. While she was obliged on account of her failing health to relinquish some of her church work, she continued her labor of love in the Sunday school. The last time that she met her class was on Sunday previous to her illness, and that she could not be present the following Sabbath was to her a cause of sincere regret. Her heart was in the work. Owing to her kind, loving and helpful influence many of the lives of those belonging to her class have been moulded along Christian lines. She was regarded with affection by these pupils and they will never forget her.

Mrs. Goldquist, until her illness, was a constant attendant at the church services. She appeared in close touch with divine things. She was always ready to serve. But she also took a keen interest in the affairs of the city and was a faithful reader of current events. It is said of her that her nature was kind and deeply sympathetic and that any case of distress or suffering appealed strongly to her. At the time of the Chicago fire and of the Kansas famine she was a zealous solicitor for contributions for relief. It is said of her that as a ward visitor when she heard of a case of need she would go to the house, not send some one else. With her sympathy was combined a bright and cheerful disposition that made her presence welcome. All through she has also felt concern in all efforts to better the community. In the early days of the W. C. T. U. she was a member of that organization.

If lives are to be measured by kind acts, by sympathetic words and by good influences, then Mrs. Goldquist's life deserves the warmest praise and the loving tribute. Her career can be said to be worked like golden threads into the better natures of hundreds of men and women here. When death called Mrs. Goldquist the Rev. W. H. Geistweite, of Chicago, delivered a most earnest and impressive address upon the text, "She hath done what she could." Hers was the history of a life of responsibility, of toil and of sacrifice; a life that was one long labor of love in which she wrought not for herself but for others. She left her impress for good upon the city in which she long made her home and the memory of such a one can never die while living monuments remain, upon which were imprinted the touch of her noble soul.

FRANK E. ROGERS.

Frank E. Rogers, who has been in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company continuously for the past thirty-six years, was born in Warren, Trimble county, Ohio, on the 30th of March, 1848. His father, Pitt D. Rogers, was born and reared on a farm in the vicinity of Norwich, Connecticut, whence he removed in the early '40s to Trimble county, Ohio. There he met and subsequently married Miss Effie Ewalt, a native of that state, who passed away when our subject was in his first year. Pitt D. Rogers engaged in buying and selling stock in Ohio, where he resided until about 1845 or 1846, when he came to Knoxville. He there conducted the old Hibbard House, of which he subsequently became the proprietor, until his death in 1896. For his second wife he chose Miss Lavina P. Hibbard, whose father was one of the pioneer settlers of Knoxville, where he built the hotel that bore his name. Mr. Rogers was a member of the Episcopal church and while residing in Connecticut he belonged to the state militia.

The only child born unto his parents, after the death of his mother, Frank E. Rogers was taken to the home of his paternal grandparents in Connecticut. There he passed his boyhood and early youth, pursuing his studies in the common schools. He subsequently joined his father in Knoxville, completing his education in the old college at Abingdon, this state. After leaving school he returned to the hotel, where he assisted his father until January, 1875, when he became a freight brakeman on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He was later promoted to the position of conductor, but is now and has been for some time in the block office of this company at Galesburg.

On the 10th of November, 1878, Mr. Rogers was united in marriage to Miss Ella C. Sipherd, a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Webb) Sipherd, farming people residing three miles north of Knoxville. Four children have been born of this marriage, as follows: Harry E., who is in the railway passenger service in Chicago; George E., who is engaged in the real-estate business in New York city; Clara, the wife of H. W. Caldwell, of Galesburg, by whom she has had one daughter, Winifred; and Ralph Van, in the government irrigation service in the state of Washington.

In matters of faith Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are Presbyterians, and his political support he gives to such men and measures as he deems best qualified to protect the interests of the majority. Fraternally he is identified with no organization save the Order of Railway Conductors, his local connection being with Division No. 83 of Galesburg. Mr. Rogers is one of the oldest men in the company's employ, in years of continuous service, and is well known to all of the local trainmen among whom he numbers many stanch friends of long standing.

STEPHEN A. INGERSOLL.

Stephen A. Ingersoll, president of the Galesburg Coulter-Disc Company, is at the head of one of the important industrial and manufacturing enterprises of the city, contributing substantially to its business development. In the management of this undertaking he displays characteristic energy, determination and foresight, qualities which have enabled him to overcome obstacles, meet competition and so control his activities that success in substantial measure has resulted. He was born in Sullivan county, New York, near Barryville, April 27, 1858, a son of Abraham and Sarah (Swartout) Ingersoll, who were likewise natives of the Empire state. The paternal grandfather, however, was a native of Pennsylvania and was of English lineage. Unto him and his wife were born a son and five daughters, including Mrs. Sarah Kent and Abraham Ingersoll. The latter was reared in Sullivan county, New York, and for many years engaged in the lumber business but afterward turned his attention to farming. Coming to Illinois in January, 1867, he settled near Wenona, Illinois, where he purchased land, devoting his attention to its development and improvement until the death of his wife, after which he made his home with his children. He had married Sarah Swartout whose father, a native of New York, followed farming near Port Jervis, Orange county, New York. To Mr. Swartout and his wife were born a son and five daughters, including Peter, Sarah, Eliza, Jane and Mrs. Abraham Ingersoll. As stated, the last named passed away on the old homestead, near Wenona, Illinois. Mr. Ingersoll died at Sandoval, Illinois, in 1895, at the age of ninety-five years. He was remarkable in that his eyesight remained good through his entire life, never requiring the use of glasses. He was a democrat in politics and while living in the east filled several minor offices. Both he and his wife were members of the Congregational church and were ever loyal to their professions. Their family numbered the following children: Matilda, deceased, who was the wife of Frederick Nodine; Susan, who became the wife of John Knight and is now deceased; Eliza, the wife of Thomas B. Kent, of Kalispell, Montana; Emma, the wife of Charles Allen, of Forrest, Illinois; Naomi, the wife of Peter Marker, of Rutland, Illinois; Sarah, who died unmarried; and Stephen A., of this review.

The last named was eight years of age when the family came to Illinois, so that he was reared upon the old homestead farm in La Salle county. The summer months were devoted to the work of the fields and the winter seasons to the acquirement of an education in the district schools until he entered the high school of Wenona. Later he spent the greater part of four years as a pupil in the Northern Indiana Normal College of Valparaiso, after which he took up the profession of teaching, which he followed for a time, as he did also the occupation of farming. He then removed to Marion county, Illinois, where he engaged in the lumber business from 1881 until 1905, living at Sandoval. In the latter year he came to Galesburg. In the meantime he had turned his attention to manufacturing interests and on coming to this city removed the plant to this place. They now manufacture agricultural specialties, disc blades, plow discs, and kindred articles. They employ from fifty to one hundred people, according to the season. Their building is located at the western edge of the city and is one hundred and forty-four by two hundred and sixteen feet. It is thoroughly equipped with modern machinery and everything necessary to facilitate the business and produce an output that will find a ready and profitable sale on the market. The officers of the Galesburg Coulter-Disc Company at present are: Stephen A. Ingersoll, president; R. C. Ingersoll, vice president; H. A. Nelson, secretary; and L. P. Wertman, treasurer.

In November, 1884, Mr. Ingersoll was married to Miss Cordelia L. Gaylord, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Perry B. and Cordelia (Cowles) Gaylord, who were natives of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Ingersoll had a family of five children. Roy C., the eldest, married Lulu Hinchliff. Winifred has spent seven years in Knox College, pursuing the musical, scientific and classical courses and is now in the senior year of the regular course. Harold G. was graduated from Knox College in June, 1911, and now has charge of his father's ranch in Judith Basin, Montana. Jennie was drowned in August, 1909, when seventeen years of age. Stephen, who completes the family, is a pupil in the high school. The parents are members of the Central Congregational church and Mr. Ingersoll's views upon the temperance question are indicated in the fact that he votes with the prohibition party. His influence is always found on the side of right, progress, truth, reform and improvement, and his cooperation may always be counted upon to further any movement or measure calculated to advance the general good. His long life has ever been honorable and upright in all of its phases and he sustains an unassailable reputation for business integrity as well as for enterprise and careful management.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM BLAKE CARLTON.

William Blake Carlton, teacher of voice and head of the musical history and sight-singing department of the Knox Conservatory of Music at Galesburg, was born at Versailles, Tennessee, November 15, 1873. He was a son of William and Nancy Virginia (Williams) Carlton and a grandson of Blake and Mary (Walker) Carlton. The family comes of English ancestry and the name was originally spelled Carleton. Blake Carlton, a native of North Carolina, was a farmer by occupation and met an accidental death when about forty Thomas and Minos. The maternal grandparents of William Blake Carlton were James G. and Phoebe (Spence) Williams, the former born in Brunswick county, Virginia, May 2, 1812. He was of German descent and during his active life followed farming and blacksmithing. He reached the venerable age of eighty-six years while his wife was seventy-eight years of age at the time of her death. They had five children, who lived to maturity, as follows: Nelson, Elizabeth, Nancy Virginia, Adna and Enoch.

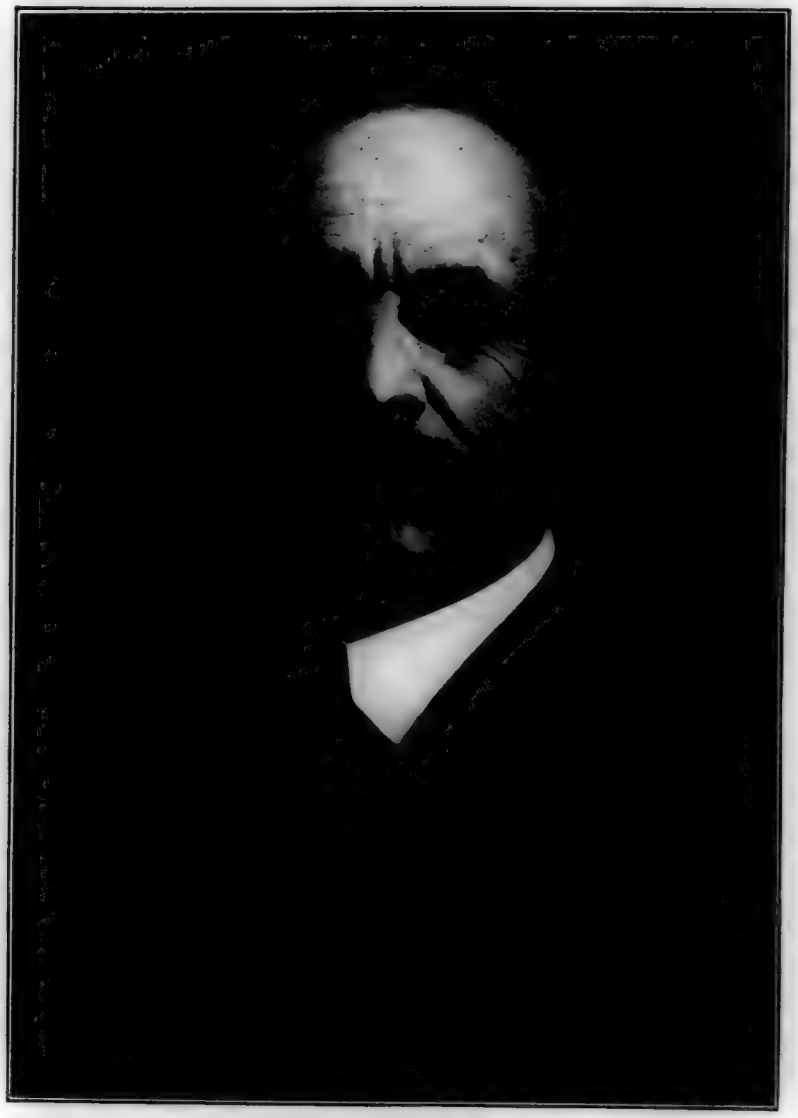
Both William and Nancy Virginia Carlton were natives of Tennessee and the former, who was reared in Rutherford county of that state, still makes his home there, having devoted his entire life to general agricultural pursuits. At the time of the Civil war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy and went to the front as a private of Company A, Twenty-fourth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry. Following the cessation of hostilities he took the oath of allegiance to the United States government. In community affairs he has been somewhat active, serving for one term as tax assessor and for many years as a member of the school-board, the cause of education finding in him a stalwart friend. He is a member of the Primitive Baptist church while his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian church. Of their family of seven children three were sons and four were daughters, as follows: Mary, the wife of Andrew Jackson, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee; Adna, the widow of Charles H. Hale, residing near Versailles, Tennessee; Elizabeth, who married Jasper W. Jackson, of Nashville, Tennessee; William Blake, of this review; Nelson Clay, of Springfield, Tennessee; Ella, the wife of W. Freeland Jackson, of Eagleville, Tennessee; and Dr. John D., of Union City, Tennessee. William Carlton was twice married, his first wife having been Sarah Spence, by whom he had two children, of whom one reached adult age, James F., now of Brownwood, Texas, while the other died in infancy.



William Blake Carlton was reared in Rutherford county, Tennessee, spending his youthful days upon his father's farm, in the vicinity of which was received his English education in the district schools of that county and at Haley, Tennessee. When eighteen years of age he started out in the world on his own account by clerking in a general store and later was connected with a grocery house in Springfield, Tennessee, for seven years in the capacity of salesman. He then became one of the proprietors of that establishment in partnership with his brother Nelson Clay, under the firm style of Carlton Brothers, which business association was maintained for five years. On the expiration of that period he came to Galesburg and pursued a course in Brown's Business College. He recognized the fact that nature had endowed him with a good singing voice and he was ambitious to develop his talents in that direction, so that he entered the Knox Conservatory of Music, pursuing the full course and graduating with the class of 1908. He taught for a year and a half, instructing such pupils as could not be accommodated in the college, beginning this work in 1907. In September, 1908, he became a regular teacher of voice in Knox College and the following year was made head of the department of musical history and sight reading. In this connection he is proving not only that he has musical talent himself, but that he also has ability as an instructor, his pupils making rapid and substantial progress under his direction in proportion to their talent.

On the 18th of June, 1902, Mr. Carlton was married to Miss Ellen Kendall Avery, who was born in Galesburg, March 9, 1881. Her parents, Robert H. and Sarah (Ayers) Avery, were also natives of Illinois and in this state her father died in 1892 and her mother in 1898. They were the parents of six children, Minnie, Fred, Sarah, Cornelia, Ellen and Elizabeth. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Carlton was George Avery, one of the pioneer residents of Knox county and a charter member of the Congregational church of Galesburg. Her maternal grandparents were Thomas N. and Sarah Ayers, whose family numbered the following, named: Cornelia, Sarah, Jessie, Abbie, Fannie, George, Henry, James and Nelson. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Carlton have been born three daughters, Margaret E., Esther A. and Sarah Jean. The parents are both members of the Congregational church and in Galesburg they are widely and favorably known, Mrs. Carlton having spent her entire life here, while Professor Carlton has gained an extensive acquaintance during the period of his residence in this city. His work is recognized as a valuable factor in upholding the standard of the departments with which he is connected, and his own love for and enthusiastic interest in music does much to inspire his pupils and to promote musical culture and taste in this city.

WILLIAM LUCAS STEELE.

William Lucas Steele, superintendent of the city schools of Galesburg and prominently known in educational circles throughout the state, was born in Adams county, Ohio, July 22, 1854, a son of William Lucas and Anna (Johnston) Steele. The father was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in which city he acquired his education. He came to America when about twenty years of age and devoted his life to farming. His wife was born near Chillicothe, Ohio, but her parents were natives of Scotland and resided for a time in Nova Scotia before coming to the United States.

During his early boyhood William L. Steele accompanied his mother on her removal to Randolph county, Illinois, where he attended a country school during the winter months until fourteen years of age. He afterward spent a year as a public-school student in Monmouth, Illinois, and obtained his advanced training in Monmouth College, from which he received the degree of Master of Arts, while Knox College has since conferred upon him the Ph. D. degree. Difficulties and obstacles have at times beset his path. His father died when he was but a year old and his mother was left with three small children, her property inheritance consisting of a farm, which she continued to manage after her husband's death. It was in 1859, when her son, William L. Steele, was five years of age, that she removed with her family from southern Ohio to a small farm in southern Illinois, where the succeeding ten years were passed, at which time the mother removed to Monmouth in order to educate her children, and Mr. Steele was given the opportunities hitherto indicated. He early knew what it was to labor and to meet the heavy responsibilities of life. At eight years of age he worked in the fields with a team and when twelve years of age was doing a man's regular work. He was ambitious to learn and made good use of his opportunities in that direction and while pursuing his college course engaged in teaching in the rural schools for three winters. Following the completion of his collegiate work in 1876 he was elected principal of the schools at Yates City, Illinois, which position he held until January, 1883, when he resigned to take up the duties of county superintendent of Knox county, to which position he had been elected in November, 1882. He thus served until September, 1885, when he resigned to accept the superintendency of the city schools of Galesburg. He has since been at the head of public instruction in this city, covering a period of twenty-seven years, and the present efficient school system is largely the monument to his indefatigable energy and ability in the field of his chosen profession. He has cooperated in many movements which have stimulated intellectual progress, always doing everything in his power to disseminate that knowledge which constitutes the basis of a higher civilization. When principal of the schools at Yates City he founded the Yates City School and Public Library, which contained over two thousand volumes when he removed to Galesburg. While serving as county superintendent of schools he prepared the first course of study or outline of school work for the country schools of the county. This was published by the board of supervisors and ten copies placed in each district. During his incumbency as superintendent of schools in Galesburg the high school has made remarkable development. It was the first public high school in the state to introduce manual training and the first high school in the country to adopt the elective system in studies. He is continually seeking out new methods to promote the work of the schools, rendering it of practical value as a preparation for life's responsible duties.

In addition to filling the office of county superintendent of schools of Knox county from December, 1882, until September, 1885, Professor Steele has filled other positions of trust and prominence. He has been honored with the presidency of the Central Illinois Teachers' Association, the Schoolmasters' Club of Illinois and also the Illinois State Teachers' Association. He is at present a member of the state commission of education, to which position he was appointed by the governor. His efforts have done much to stimulate coworkers with much of his own zeal and enthusiasm and while working toward high ideals his methods have always been of a most practical and resultant character. In addition to his labors in the field of education he has since 1909 been president of the Fidelity Savings & Loan Society, an institution whose assets are over eight hundred thousand dollars. He has also been a member of the board of directors of the First National Bank since 1905 and has been a member of the board of Hope cemetery association since 1894. He has been the secretary of the board of trustees of the Presbyterian church for over twenty years, of which church he is a member.

On the 20th of October, 1887, in Chicago, William L. Steele was united in marriage to Miss Helen Carter Benedict, a daughter of the late Rev. Thomas N. Benedict. For several years prior to her marriage Mrs. Steele was a successful teacher in the Galesburg schools. She died May 3, 1893, survived by her two daughters, Gertrude H. and Helen B. Her death was the occasion of deep regret to many friends as well as to her immediate family, for her many excellent traits of character had endeared her to all who knew her.

Mr. Steele's political allegiance has always been given to the republican party, though he has not taken an active part in politics since leaving the county superintendency in 1885. In manner he is quiet and unassuming, yet is constantly working with a definite purpose in view and seldom fails in its accomplishment.

AUGUST RINELLA.

August Rinella, who for the past thirteen years has been engaged in the wholesale and retail fruit and confectionery business in Galesburg, was born in Termini, Italy, on October 19, 1869. He is a son of Samuel and Josephine (Cardarone) Rinella, natives of the same place, the father's birth occurring on the 3d of June, 1846, and that of the mother on the 25th of September, 1856. Samuel Rinella resided in his native land, engaging in farming, until 1890, when with his wife and family, all except our subject, he emigrated to the United States, having located in Chicago, where he successfully conducted a fruit market for fifteen years. At the expiration of that period he retired and removed to Kewanee, this state, and there he and the mother and five younger members of their family continue to live. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rinella, as follows: August, our subject; Joseph; Anthony; James; John; and Angelo. The parents are communicants of the Roman Catholic church, and his political support the father gives to the democratic party.

The first twenty-four years in the life of August Rinella were spent in Italy, to whose schools he is indebted for his education. After laying aside his text-books he assisted his father in the work of the farm until he had attained his majority. He then entered the Italian army, as is customary in that country, serving for three years as a musician. At the expiration of his period of enlistment, in 1893, he took passage for the United States to join his people, who came to this country about the time he joined the army. During the first two years of his residence in America he worked for his father, but at the end of that time he started a business of his own that he conducted for three years. As competition was very keen in Chicago, he looked about for a location elsewhere, deciding in favor of Galesburg, where he located in 1898. Here he established a wholesale and retail fruit and confectionery business, that has prospered from the very first. Mr. Rinella is a business man of unusual capabilities, and although he had only lived in the United States for five years when he removed to Galesburg, he early manifested his ability to successfully compete with merchants, who had been born and reared in this country and were thoroughly familiar with its commercial conditions and methods. He has built up an extensive local patronage and also enjoys an excellent country trade, increasing so rapidly that it now requires the services of four salesmen to call upon his customers.

In Chicago on the 2d of November, 1894, Mr. Rinella was united in marriage to Miss Josephine Caruso, a daughter of Philip and Josephine (Purpera) Caruso. Mrs. Rinella was born in Termini, on November 1, 1873, and there she was reared and educated. Her parents, who were farming people, were natives of the same place, the father being born in 1829 and the mother ten years later. There the father passed away in 1891. The mother and family remained in Italy until 1893, when they emigrated to the United States, locating in Chicago, but Mrs. Caruso now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Rinella, at Galesburg. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Caruso numbered ten children, as follows: Antonema, the wife of Anthony Guiffre, of Chicago; Frank, who is living in Galesburg; Gidia, who died in Italy; Philip, whose death occurred in Chicago; Marie and Gustie, who both died before leaving their native land; Carmila, who passed away in Chicago; Josephine, now Mrs. August Rinella; August, living in Chicago; and Joseph, who died in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Rinella have had the following children, namely: Josephine, born October 7, 1895; Samuel, born March 9, 1897; Gustie, born January 17, 1900; Philip, born July 4, 1902; Joseph, born March 13, 1906; Mary, born October 8, 1908, and who has passed away; and August. Jr., born May 19, 1910.

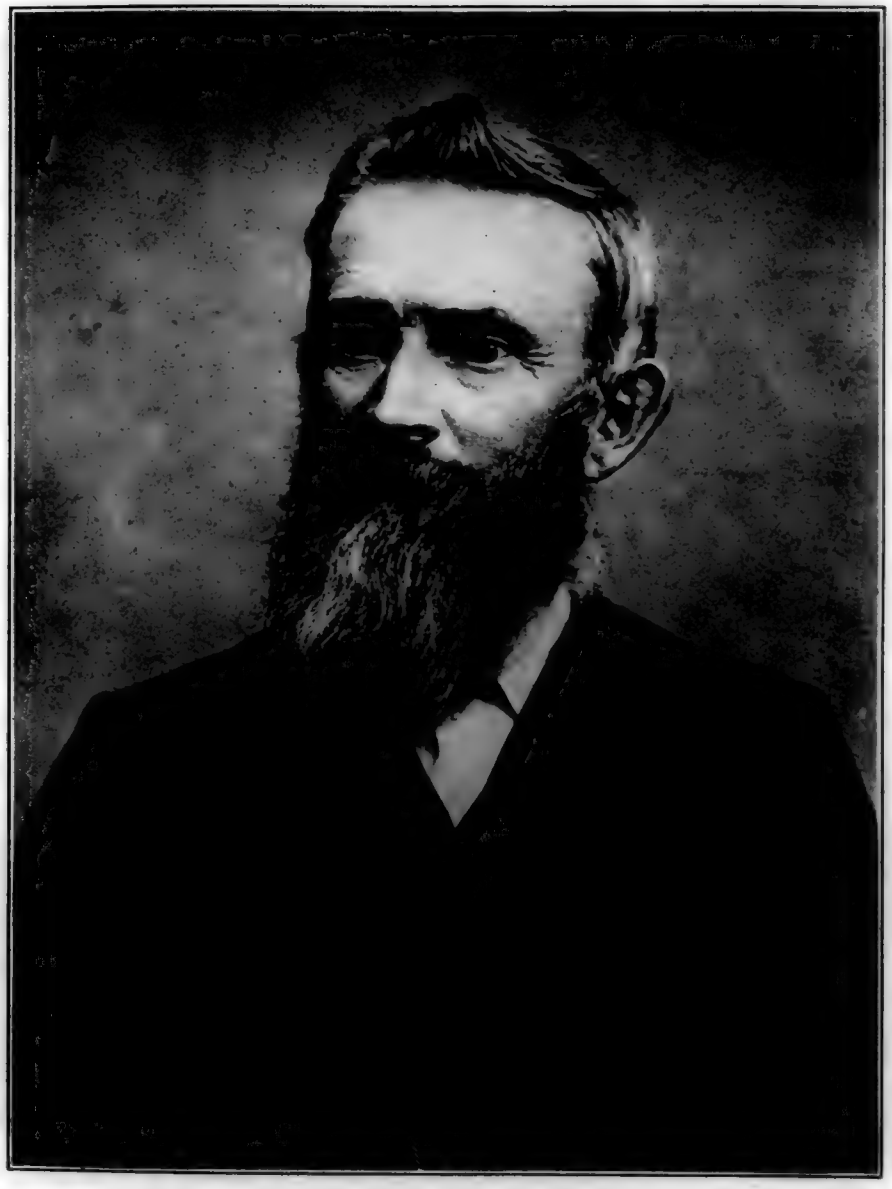
Mr. and Mrs. Rinella are Roman Catholics and belong to Corpus Christi parish, and he is a member of the Knights of Columbus. As one of the enterprising and progressive business men of the city Mr. Rinella belongs to the Retail Merchants Association. In matters politic he is a democrat, having given his unqualified support to that party ever since granted the right of franchise through naturalization. During the period of his residence in Galesburg he has shown himself to be in every way a most desirable citizen, possessing many substantial personal qualities. His integrity in all business transactions has always been found to be above questioning and he is thoroughly loyal to the country of his adoption.

AARON BOWERS.

Aaron Bowers is a retired farmer living with his sister, Miss Elizabeth Bowers, at No. 371 West North street in Galesburg. He was born in Highland county, Ohio, March 21, 1829, and is a son of Silas and Phoebe (Lewis) Bowers, who were natives of Virginia or Pennsylvania. The maternal grandparents were Jonathan and Elizabeth (Feasel) Lewis, both of whom lived to old age and reared a family of several children, namely: Isaac, Phoebe, Aaron, John, Christina, Nancy and Barney. Silas Bowers, the father of our subject, became a farmer of Highland county, Ohio, and afterward, removing westward, was an early settler of Parke county, Indiana. He passed away in Vermilion county, Indiana, when about sixty years of age. His wife survived him and passed away in 1876 at the advanced age of eighty-two years and eight months. She was a consistent member of the Methodist church. In their family were ten children, namely: Mary Ann, who is the widow of John Wilson and resides in Sigourney, Iowa; Aaron, of this review; Elizabeth, living in Galesburg; Sarah, the wife of J. H. Griggs, of Wheaton, Illinois; Christina, the deceased wife of William Redford; Lucinda, the deceased wife of J. A. McCoy; and four who passed away in early life.



Aaron Bowers spent a part of his youthful days in Ohio and also remained for a time in Indiana. He pursued his education in one of the old-time, log-cabin subscription schools. He was a particularly fine speller and knew the old elementary spelling book by heart. In 1855 he came to Illinois, settling in Warren county, where he purchased a quarter section of land in Coldbrook, for which he paid twenty-five dollars per acre. Later he bought a farm in Floyd township, where he now owns four hundred and one and a half acres, in addition to his one hundred and sixty-acre tract in Coldbrook township and a farm of two hundred and forty acres in Iowa. He lived in Coldbrook and Floyd townships for forty-five years but has made his home in Galesburg for the past eleven years and in this city owns a fine home where he lives retired, he and his sister Elizabeth living together. While his life was devoted mainly to general agricultural pursuits, in which line of business he won substantial success, he has also done some public service, acting as road commissioner for twelve years and also as school director for one term.

Elizabeth Bowers was born in Parke county, Indiana, October 31, 1833, and has always remained with her brother, acting as his housekeeper. She is a very devoted member of the Methodist church and takes a most helpful part in its work. Mr. Bowers was formerly a member of the Masonic fraternity and still holds his Masonic papers. He is yet a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Cameron. He is now more than eighty-two years of age and his life has been that of a successful farmer and stockman. He began as a poor boy without money and has made all of his property himself, placing his dependence upon energy, industry and determination. He certainly well deserves the prosperity that came to him. He has been a resident of this part of the state for fifty-six years and its history is therefore largely familiar to him, while in the work of its agricultural development he has borne an important part.

CHARLES S. CLARK.

One of the most extensive landowners and successful agriculturists of Victoria township is Charles S. Clark, who in addition to the duties connected with the operation of his extensive acreage is officially connected with a number of the leading banking institutions of Knox county. He is a native of New York, his birth occurring in Roxbury, Delaware county, on the 4th of June, 1835, and the eldest son of Job W. and Hepsey (Woods) Clark, while his paternal grandfather was Hazard Clark. The father was born in Berkshire, Massachusetts, on the 7th of July, 1812, while the mother was a native of Roxbury, her birth occurring in 1815. In his early manhood Job W. Clark came to New York, locating in Roxbury, where on the 13th of July, 1834, he was united in marriage to Miss Woods. There they spent the early years of their domestic life, but in 1855 they came west, and in December of that year settled in the village of Victoria. Mr. Clark subsequently purchased a quarter section of land west of there, known as the Mound farm. Later he and his wife removed to an eighty-acre tract in Victoria township, and there he passed away on the 24th of January, 1884, his wife surviving until the 13th of October, 1886, when her death occurred on the home farm. Both were laid to rest in the cemetery at Victoria. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Clark there were born six chil-

He began as a poor boy without money and has made all of his property himself, placing his dependence upon energy, industry and determination. He certainly well deserves the prosperity that came to him. He has been a resident of this part of the state for fifty-six years and its history is therefore largely familiar to him, while in the work of its agricultural development he has borne an important part.

CHARLES S. CLARK.

One of the most extensive landowners and successful agriculturists of Victoria township is Charles S. Clark, who in addition to the duties connected with the operation of his extensive acreage is officially connected with a number of the leading banking institutions of Knox county. He is a native of New York, his birth occurring in Roxbury, Delaware county, on the 4th of June, 1835, and the eldest son of Job W. and Hepsey (Woods) Clark, while his paternal grandfather was Hazard Clark. The father was born in Berkshire, Massachusetts, on the 7th of July, 1812, while the mother was a native of Roxbury, her birth occurring in 1815. In his early manhood Job W. Clark came to New York, locating in Roxbury, where on the 13th of July, 1834, he was united in marriage to Miss Woods. There they spent the early years of their domestic life, but in 1855 they came west, and in December of that year settled in the village of Victoria. Mr. Clark subsequently purchased a quarter section of land west of there, known as the Mound farm. Later he and his wife removed to an eighty-acre tract in Victoria township, and there he passed away on the 24th of January, 1884, his wife surviving until the 13th of October, 1886, when her death occurred on the home farm. Both were laid to rest in the cemetery at Victoria. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Clark there were born six children, the eldest of whom is Charles S., of this sketch. William Perry, who was born on June 11, 1839, now residing in Talmage, Nebraska, married Adaline Hines, a native of Victoria, from whom he was subsequently divorced. Of this marriage there were born three children: Carrie Augusta, who is deceased; Charles Perry; and William Bird, who is also deceased. On the 12th of March, 1887, he was married to Mary Peterson, also of Victoria, and they have three children: Marion Caroline; Ella May; and Mary Louise. Marian A., whose birth occurred on February 14, 1846, married Charles D. Sornborger, who was born in Victoria on the 26th of October, 1843. Their marriage occurred on the 12th of April, 1870, and on the 5th of March, seven years later, she passed away and was buried in the cemetery at Victoria. Unto them there were born three sons: Clifford Ford, whose natal day was the 12th of June, 1871; Clyde Wilson, born on July 24, 1874; and Earl Charles, who was born on August 13, 1877, and died on the 8th of April, 1878. Judson E., the fourth in order of birth of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Job W. Clark, was born in February, 1848, and died in 1850. Sarah Ella was born on Christmas day, 1850, and on the 29th of March, 1871, she was married to Elmer C. Powell, of Springfield, Ohio, whose natal day was November 1, 1849. Unto them were born the following children: Osborne Wayne, Augusta, Maurice Clark, Mabel Marion, Mildred Bell, Reed McKinley and Sybil Marie. Luman Reed was united in marriage on the 23d of May, 1884, to Matilda R. Cummings, who was born on the 14th of June, 1859, and she died in Kansas on the 20th of March, 1894. Of this marriage there were born five children, Arthur Wilcox, Nellie Belle, Charles, John Gilmore and Luman Reed, Jr.

Charles S. Clark was educated in the common schools of his native state, where he spent the first twenty years of his life. After the family removed to Victoria he began his independent business career, and for two years thereafter clerked in Whitting & Copley's mercantile establishment. Much of his life having been spent on a farm, he was thoroughly familiar with agricultural pursuits, and as this vocation seemed to afford better opportunities of advancement than commercial lines he left the store and the succeeding two years devoted to farming. In 1860 he made a trip to the mining sections of Colorado, making the journey with a team and wagon. There he secured a gold claim and spent eight months in prospecting. At the expiration of that period he returned to Victoria and bought a farm of one hundred and sixty acres a mile east of town. He subsequently disposed of this property and bought the place where he is now living, located on the east side of the north and south road in section 7, Victoria township, containing one hundred and thirty acres of fertile land, that is well improved and carefully kept up. In the operation of his fields Mr. Clark has always manifested the intelligence and capability that characterizes the successful business man in any line of activity, and as a result he has been unusually prosperous. Well tilled and carefully cultivated land, where all other conditions are favorable, invariably responds to the attention bestowed upon it by yielding abundant harvests, and such has been the experience of Mr. Clark, who annually realizes a handsome dividend from his fields. In connection with diversified farming he raises stock, and this branch of his business has also proven to be very remunerative. As his means have warranted he has added to his holdings until he now owns eleven hundred acres of land, all of which is under cultivation. With the exception of two eighty-acre tracts that are located in Copley township, all of his land is in Victoria township. All of the buildings now standing on his homestead have been erected during the ownership of Mr. Clark, with the exception of the residence. He has large, substantially constructed barns and outbuildings for his stock, which is of a good grade, and ample provision is also made for the protection of his grains and farming implements.

On the 21st of March, 1861, Mr. Clark was married to Miss Almina C. Hedstrom, who was born at Farmington, Illinois, on the 12th of October, 1840, and passed away on the farm, where Mr. Clark now resides on November 5, 1887, of typhoid fever. She is buried in the cemetery at Victoria. Her father was a Swedish minister and her mother a sister of Anson Sornborger, formerly of Worcester, Oswego county, New York. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Clark there were born five children. Irwin J., who is the eldest, was born on the 23d of September, 1862, and died on October 5, 1888. Mary Lois, who was born on the 19th of May, 1864, married Newton C. Robbins, of Copley township, and they have nine children, Glenn, Maurine, Edith, Eva, Reuben, Stewart, Howard, Jean and Lucille. Charles Delbert, who was born on November 14, 1866, and died in April, 1898, married Nettie Doak, this event occurring on the 5th of November, 1895. Unto them were born two sons, John Stewart and Charles Doak. On the 24th of April, 1900, Mrs. Charles Delbert Clark passed away and was laid to rest beside her husband in the cemetery at Victoria. She was a daughter of John and Janet Doak, of Oneida, Illinois. Both Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Clark were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He always took an active interest in all political affairs, his allegiance being given to the republican party, and he held a number of township offices. Jennie Becker was born on the 29th of September, 1869, and makes her home with her father. She is a member of the Congregational church. John Perry, whose natal day was the 17th of September, 1871, married Eva Gordon, a daughter of Harry and Mary Gordon, and is a resident of Victoria. Of this marriage there have been born five children, Gordon Wilder, Ralph Perry, Fred Richard, Helen Janet and Jean Almina. The Victoria cemetery, where so many members of the Clark family are buried, originally belonged to the farm now owned by our subject, but was deeded away, for the purpose it is now used, before he bought the place.

In matters of faith Mr. Clark is a Methodist, as was also his wife, while his political views accord with the principles of the republican party. Although he has for many years had extensive business interests, that claimed the greater part of his attention, Mr. Clark never neglects his civic duties. He takes an active and helpful interest in the political affairs of the township, and served for twelve years as school trustee and director and for three terms as township supervisor. In the administration of his official duties he manifested the same sagacity and discretion as characterizes his transactions in business life, his service being marked by rare efficiency. Mr. Clark possesses not only unusual business acumen but great versatility, as anything that he has undertaken has been so capably directed, that it has proven a success from every point of view, and the methods used in its achievement have at all times been above question. He has the rare faculty of recognizing opportunities ignored by the man of less foresight, that he ably directs to his own advantage, and to this can be attributed his unusual success. In addition to his valuable realty holdings he is a stockholder and director of the State Bank of Victoria, and a stockholder of the Oneida State Bank of Oneida, and of the State Bank of Altona, while he is also a director and vice president of the latter institution. Through the entire period of his business career, Mr. Clark has at all times given evidence of possessing the qualities that would have won him recognition as a man of unusual mental powers and judicious discernment in any vocation he might have elected to follow. All of his transactions evidence the clear judgment, careful regard for details, keen discrimination and above all else the determination of purpose that characterize the successful man and give him the power wherewith he dominates conditions.

JOHN C. OBERG.

John C. Oberg, a well known railroad man of Galesburg, where he has resided for over forty years, was born in Sweden, on October 19, 1849. His parents were John and Christine (Hanson) Oberg, who were born, reared and married in Sweden. The father, as is customary in that country, served in the army during his early manhood and subsequently worked as a laborer, never having learned a trade. In 1855 with his wife and family he emigrated to the United States, first locating at Altona. There he worked as a laborer for a few months, but in 1856 he removed his family to Wataga, where he and the mother passed away. They were members of the Swedish Lutheran church, and his political allegiance was accorded to the republican party. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Oberg, of whom our subject is the eldest, the others in order of birth are as follows: Christine, who is deceased; Annie and Andrew, twins, the former a resident of Lake Forest, Illinois, and the latter deceased; Mary, who is also living in Lake Forest; and Oliver, Louise and Carrie, residents of Wataga.

As he was only a child of four years, when he accompanied his parents on their emigration to the United States, John C. Oberg acquired his education in the common schools of Wataga, where he was reared to manhood. On the 14th of February, 1871, he came to Galesburg and obtained employment as a brakeman on a freight train. He was an efficient and reliable employe, and two and a half years later was promoted to the position of conductor. Ten years later, in 1893, he was again promoted, this time being assigned a passenger train. He is now on the Galesburg & Quincy division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, on which he has been detailed for some time. He has two million, five hundred thousand miles to his credit, and during the forty years of his service with this company has never had an accident of more than a minor nature.

On September 24, 1879, Mr. Oberg was united in marriage to Miss Mathilda Jacobson, a daughter of John and Anna Jacobson, of Galesburg. Mrs. Oberg was also a native of Sweden, her birth having occurred on May 6, 1849, while she passed away in Galesburg in 1905. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Oberg numbered five children, of whom three died in infancy; the others are Lilly L. and Sophia A., both of whom are at home.

Mr. Oberg is a member of the Swedish Lutheran church, with which his wife was also affiliated, and fraternally he belongs to the Order of Railway Conductors, being identified with Galesburg Division, No. 83, in which he has held the various offices. He is independent in his political views, giving his support to such men and measures, he deems most lkely to subserve the best interests of all of the people. Mr. Oberg's life has not been distinguished by any unusual events, but has been passed in the unobtrusive manner that characterizes the thrifty and industrious citizen, who discharges his duties to his family and society at large to the best of his ability.

JOHN HJERPE.

John Hjerpe, identified with the building interests of Galesburg for twenty-eight years, during the greater portion of which period he has been engaged in contracting, is one of the leading representatives of his line of business in the city. One of Sweden's enterprising sons, his birth occurred in Wermland, on December 5, 1862, and there his parents, Carl and Martha (Haney) Hjerpe, were also born and reared. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hjerpe, as follows: Carl, who is a resident of New Britain, Connecticut; Tilda, the widow of John Anderson, of Upsala, Sweden; Ullrika, the wife of John Anderson, of Kewanee, Illinois; Eric G., who is a minister, now a resident of Chicago; John, our subject; and two who died in infancy. Carl Hjerpe during the entire period of his active life followed the blacksmith's trade in his native town and there he died in 1892, at the age of about ninety years. The mother survived for three years thereafter, her death occurring after she had passed the seventy-third anniversary of her birth. In matters of religious faith both were Lutherans.

Reared in the land of his birth, after completing his schooling, John Hjerpe was apprenticed to the mason's trade. He was a thoughtful and ambitious youth and it was early brought to his realization that conditions prevalent in his own country, practically precluded any possibility of a rapid rise and the prosperity to which he aspired, which decided him to try his fortune in the new world. In 1883 he took passage for the United States, proceeding directly to Galesburg and here he has ever since lived. During the early years of his residence he worked under the direction and supervision of others, thoroughly mastering his trade and being a mechanic of more than average ability, who creditably performed every duty assigned him, he soon established a reputation that made it possible for him to work independently. After about seven years in the service of other contractors, he decided to found a business of his own, having established a reputation for excellent workmanship and trustworthiness; that he felt assured of his success. Thoroughness and reliability have been the principal factors in the upbuilding of Mr. Hjerpe's business and he is now numbered among the foremost contractors in the city. He is conscientious in the execution of his work, feeling that whatever is worthy of his attention is deserving of his best efforts and this guiding principle has attained for him enviable prosperity. During the long period of his connection with the building interests of Galesburg he has been awarded the contracts for some of the principal business buildings and private dwellings, and in every instance his work has been performed in a manner to bring him recognition as an efficient craftsman and capable business man.

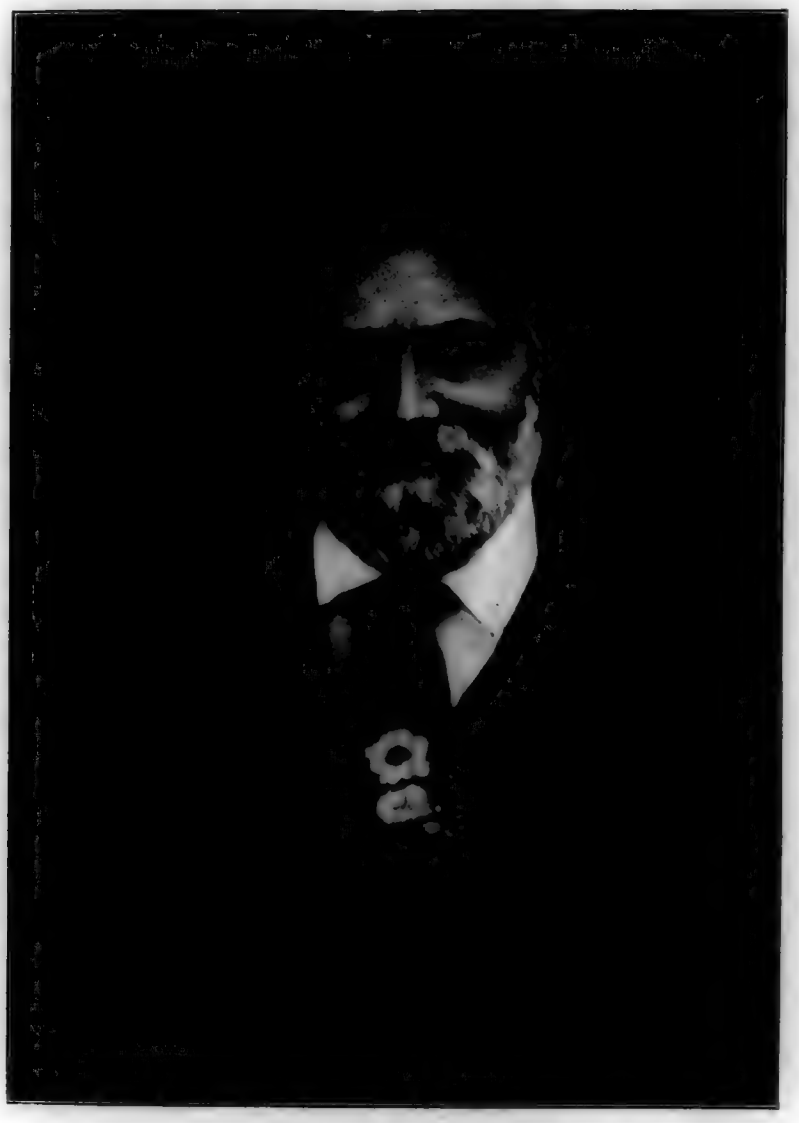
On the 3d of July, 1886, Mr. Hjerpe was married to Miss Hanna Peterson, who was born in this city, on July 13, 1867. She is a daughter of Gustavus and Johanna (Johnson) Peterson, both natives of Sweden, whence they emigrated to the United States in 1852. Upon their arrival in this country they came directly to Illinois, first locating in Princeton, where they resided for a year. At the end of that time they removed to Galesburg, which was thereafter their home. Gustavus Peterson was identified with various activities until age compelled his retirement, having been janitor of Knox College for fourteen years and sexton of the cemetery for fifteen, while for ten years he worked as a gardener. He passed away in 1907, at the age of eighty-four years and the mother was eighty-three at the time of her death, in 1906. They were members of the Swedish Evangelical Mission, regularly attending its various services. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Peterson numbered eight, five of whom lived to attain maturity, as follows: Caroline, the wife of the Rev. George Wiberg; Josephine, who married E. G. Hjerpe; Joseph; Joshua, who died in 1905; and Hannah, now Mrs. John Hjerpe, whose paternal grandparents were Peter and Charlotte (Stonewall) Sangren, and to them were born three children: Gustavus, the father of Mrs. Hjerpe; Aaron; and Sander. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Johnson, Mrs. Hjerpe's maternal grandparents, had but one child, Johanna, who became the wife of Gustavus Peterson. Mr. and Mrs. John Hjerpe have had nine children: Harold, who is now attending high school; Leslie, Eric and Stanley, who are at home; Carl, who died at the age of fifteen; Edna, whose death occurred when she was thirteen; and three who died in infancy.

The family attend the Swedish Evangelical Mission, in which the parents hold membership, Mr. Hjerpe having been one of the trustees of this organization for twenty-one years. His political indorsement he has always accorded the republican party since granted the full rights of citizenship, but he does not approve of their attitude toward the liquor traffic, his views in that regard conforming strictly to those of the prohibition party. Mr. Hjerpe has many friends in Galesburg, as has his wife, who is a woman of culture and refinement and graciously presides over their pleasant home, the hospitality of which is freely extended to their large circle of friends.

CHARLES H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Charles H. Chamberlain is a prominent factor in industrial circles as treasurer of the Purington Paving Brick Company, one of the most important productive enterprises of Galesburg and the most extensive establishment of its kind in the United States. His birth occurred in Pratts Hollow, Madison county,

New York, on the 12th of September, 1851, his parents being Orason and Lucinda C. (Lewis) Chamberlain. The father was born at that place on the 21st of February, 1819, while the mother's birth occurred in Morrisville, Madison county, New York, on the 15th of May, 1823. Orason Chamberlain, who was one of the proprietors of a woolen mill at Pratts Hollow, New York, removed to Dubuque, Iowa, in 1858 and was there engaged in the commission business throughout the remainder of his life, his demise occurring on the 5th of August, 1865. He gave his political allegiance to the republican party and was a valued member of the Universalist church, acting as one of its trustees. It was at Morrisville, New York, that he wedded Miss Lucinda C. Lewis, who still survives him and makes her home with our subject. They became the parents of three children, as follows: Annette and Dwight L., both of whom are deceased; and Charles H., of this review.



The last named obtained his early education in the schools of Dubuque, Iowa, and later continued his studies in the high school at Englewood, Illinois. After putting aside his text-books he entered the First National Bank of Chicago as a messenger boy, winning gradual promotion as he demonstrated his worth and ability until he was given charge of the country books. In 1886 he left that institution and went to Kansas for the benefit of his health, riding the range for six years. On the expiration of that period, in 1892, he came to Galesburg, Illinois, as secretary of the Purington Paving Brick Company, which position he held for some time. He is now serving as treasurer of this important concern and his efforts have contributed in no small degree to its continued growth and success. He is likewise a stockholder in the Farmers & Mechanics Bank and has long held a leading place among the representative business men and citizens of Galesburg.

On the 11th of May, 1876, Mr. Chamberlain was united in marriage to Miss Helena Gorton, a daughter of Truman and Elizabeth (Searle) Gorton, of Rock Island, Illinois. Unto them were born three children, as follows: Lewis Gorton, who is deceased; Ethel, the wife of Gail Porter, of East Orange, New Jersey; and Ruth Helen, at home.

Mr. Chamberlain gives his political allegiance to the republican party and has served as alderman of the third ward for four years. His religious faith is that of the Universalist church and his official position therein is that of chairman of the board of trustees. He also belongs to Englewood Council of the National Union and is a valued member of the Galesburg Club. Mr. Chamberlain is a thoroughgoing business man, improving his opportunities for the attainment of financial success, and his diligence has been the source of his prosperity.

JOHN C. M. REDMON.

For almost a quarter of a century John C. M. Redmon has continued his residence upon the farm which is yet his home, and during that period his close application and well directed efforts along agricultural lines have brought to him a competence which now ranks him among the successful residents of Cedar township. JOHN C. M. REDMON.

For almost a quarter of a century John C. M. Redmon has continued his residence upon the farm which is yet his home, and during that period his close application and well directed efforts along agricultural lines have brought to him a competence which now ranks him among the successful residents of Cedar township. He has long since passed the Psalmist's allotted span of three score years and ten, for his birth occurred on the 9th of April, 1832, the place of his nativity being Adair county, Kentucky. His parents, Thomas Jefferson and Harriett M. (Booher) Redmon, were also natives of that county and there the father followed farming for a number of years. His death occurred in the Blue Grass state, while the mother's death occurred suddenly at Belle Plaine, Kansas. In their family were eleven sons and three daughters but only three of this number survive.

In the schools of Adair county, Kentucky, John C. M. Redmon acquired his education, while his practical training came to him through the assistance which he gave to his father in the operation of the home farm. He remained with his parents until the outbreak of the Civil war, when, putting aside all personal interests, he enlisted from Mount Vernon, Kentucky, on the 31st of July, 1861, becoming a soldier in Company I, Third Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, for three years' service. At the expiration of this term he reenlisted at Loudon, Tennessee, on the 1st of January, 1864, and his second term continued until a severe wound caused his retirement from the army. He participated in many important battles and was four times wounded; in the head at the battle of Chickamauga, Georgia, in October, 1863; and in the leg during the battle fought near Big Shanty, Georgia, on the 18th of June, 1864, when he also received a breast wound. The fourth wound, which was received in battle in June, 1864, caused his withdrawal from the ranks and he was mustered out at Jeffersonville, Indiana, on the 8th of September, 1865.

After the close of a most honorable and creditable military service Mr. Redmon went to Gosport, Indiana, to which place his parents had removed in 1865, and later he accompanied them to Kansas. For twenty-two years he continued to make his home in the Sunflower state and then, in 1887, he came to Knox county, Illinois, where he has since remained, his residence here covering a period of almost a quarter of a century. Throughout this entire period the farm upon which he now lives, located on section 33, Cedar township, has remained the scene of his activities, and under his capable management has become one of the valuable properties of the region. His attention has ever been given to agricultural pursuits and his close application thereto and his comprehensive knowledge concerning the best methods of plowing, planting and harvesting, have been salient qualities in the acquirement of a success which is today both substantial and creditable.

Mr. Redmon was married, on the 14th of February, 1886, to Miss Minerva Ellison, who was born in Knox county, October 3, 1842, a daughter of Thomas and Nancy Ellison. Her parents, the father a native of Kentucky and the mother of Indiana, came to Knox county at a very early day, at which time they settled upon the place which is now the home of their daughter, Mrs. Redmon, and which has long been known as the old Ellison family homestead. Mr. and Mrs. Ellison both passed away in Abingdon, where the former was familiarly known as Captain Ellison. Their family consisted of ten children. A brother of Mrs. Redmon, James Milton Ellison, now resides in Colorado, while a sister, Mrs. Mary Jane Andrews, makes her home in Helena, Montana.

In religious faith Mr. Redmon is a Seventh Day Adventist, while his wife belongs to the Methodist church and is also identified with the Ladies Circle of the Grand Army of the Republic. He maintains pleasant relations with his old army comrades through his membership with Post No. 58, G. A. R., of Abingdon, while in politics he is a republican. Although numbered among the older residents of Cedar township he is still active in the world's work and takes a deep and public-spirited interest in all matters relative to the upbuilding and progress of the locality. His life has been one of continuous activity in which his industry and perseverance have won their just reward in material success, while upright principles and worthy purposes have won the regard and esteem that crown honorable old age.

FREDERICK R. HAZLETT.

Frederick Russell Hazlett, secretary and treasurer of The Lake W. Sanborn Agency of Galesburg, makes his home at No. 827 North Cedar street. He was born in Freeport, Illinois, May 17, 1878, and is a representative of old pioneer families of this state.

His grandfather, Dr. Thomas Jefferson Hazlett, was a native of Pennsylvania, and became a physician, devoting his life to the practice of medicine and surgery, when he was called to his final rest in Freeport when he had but passed middle life. He married Cornelia Russell, who at the time was preceptress of Mt. Morris Seminary, this state. She long survived him, her final resting place being Freeport, Illinois. They had a family of four children of whom the following are still living: Russell Jefferson, Frederick Buckley and Fannie.

Of these, Frederick B. Hazlett, father of Frederick R. Hazlett, was born in Iowa, moving to Freeport later, where he was reared and educated, becoming an electrician immediately after leaving school. About 1881 he moved to Galesburg as manager for the Bell Telephone Company. Shortly after this he became interested in the electrical business and secured the first franchise rights granted in the city to operate an electric light and power plant. In 1876 he married Clara L. Pollard, a native of Coventry, England, and a daughter of George and Sarah (Taylor) Pollard, who were likewise natives of Coventry, where the father learned and followed the watch-maker's trade. They came to America just prior to the Civil war, settling in Brooklyn. After the outbreak of hostilities Mr. Pollard enlisted for active duty at the front, serving between two and three years during which time he participated in the hotly contested battle of Bull Run. After the war he located at Grand Crossing, Illinois, and subsequently went to Elgin, where he died when well advanced in years. His wife lived to be eighty-nine years of age and passed away in Galesburg. Their only child was the mother of our subject. As before mentioned she became the wife of Frederick B. Hazlett, two sons being born to them, Frederick R. and George T. Both parents are members of the Baptist church and are well known socially, their many good qualities of heart and mind endearing them to a large circle of friends.

Frederick R. Hazlett has lived in Galesburg from the time he was four years of age and passing through the consecutive grades of the public schools was at length graduated from the high school in the spring of 1897. He then became fireman and later engineer for the Galesburg Electric Light and Power Company, having become familiar with this work during vacation months of previous years. In this capacity he continued until the 1st of October, 1898, when he began working in the office of Lake W. Sanborn, thus entering into active connection with the insurance business. He thoroughly acquainted himself with every phase of the business during the time that he remained in the office as an employe. On the first day of January, 1906, he was admitted to a partnership in the business under the firm name of The Lake W. Sanborn Agency. They conduct the largest general insurance business in this part of the state and their success has its root in close application, fairness to both their clients and the companies they represent, and a thorough understanding of the work which claims their attention.

Mr. Hazlett is pleasantly situated in his home life. He was married, October 22, 1902, to Miss Zora Aldrich, a daughter of Percy and Emma (Pierce) Aldrich, who were natives of Illinois. Her father, however, after spending five years in California, moved to Chariton, Iowa, where he died in early age, and her mother's death occurred in Galesburg in 1900, when she was thirty-eight years of age. They had six children, Zora, Ralph R., Elmer W., Lloyd L., and two who died in infancy. The only daughter became the wife of Mr. Hazlett and is now the mother of two interesting children, Janet P. and Doris A.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hazlett hold membership in the First Baptist church, in which he served for a number of years as church treasurer and later trustee. He exercises his right of franchise in support of men and measures as he thinks best although he has always been identified with the republican party, and fraternally he is an Elk. He is likewise prominent socially and for several years has been secretary of the Galesburg Club and vice president of the Soangtaha Country Club, which at once gives evidence of his standing among his fellowmen. Conspicuous to the eye of the writer as he sat down by Mr. Hazlett's desk for a little talk, was two group pictures of his wife and children and a motto by Elbert Hubbard:

"Live Every Day So That You Can Look Any Damn Man In The Eye
And Tell Him To Go To Hell."

His record needs little comment for he has practically spent his entire life in Galesburg and the high mark he has made is indicated by the fact that many of the comrades of his youth remain as the friends of his youth.

MICHAEL MOUNT.

Michael Mount, who is the oldest conductor in point of years of continuous service now running out of Galesburg, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, was born in Jefferson county, Tennessee, in the vicinity of Knoxville, on January 22, 1841. He is a son of William T. and Alzaria (Cates) Mount, the father a native of Virginia, his birth occurring in 1799, and the mother born and reared in Jefferson county, Tennessee, where they were married. In his early youth William T. Mount left his native state and went to Tennessee, settling in Jefferson county, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1857. The mother survived him for many years, her death occurring in the county where she had passed her entire life in 1896. They were both members of the Baptist church, and his political support the father accorded to the whig party. He was a public-spirited man and took much interest in local politics, always assuming his share of the governmental responsibilities and for some years served as justice of the peace. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mount, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of three, numbered nine, as follows: Margaret, the widow of Joseph Bailey, of Jefferson county, Tennessee; John, who is deceased; Humphrey, a soldier in the Confederate army who died at Vicksburg in 1863; Martha and Nancy, both of whom are deceased; Michael, our subject; Mattie, the widow of Joseph Miles, of Knoxville, Tennessee; and William and James, who are deceased.

Having been reared on his father's farm, in the acquirement of his education Michael Mount first attended the district schools of the vicinity and later the college at New Market, Tennessee. He remained at home assisting his father and brothers in the cultivation of the fields until 1861. In the latter year he enlisted as a private in the Confederate army, going to the front as a member of Company A, First Tennessee Light Artillery. He participated in some of the most sharply contested battles of the war, being present at Shiloh, Corinth, Columbus and the siege of Vicksburg, and was mustered out in 1863 with the rank of corporal. After the close of his period of enlistment he returned home, remaining there until December, 1863, when he came to Illinois, locating at Quincy. Soon thereafter he obtained employment on a farm in that vicinity, where he worked until the 1st of August, 1864, when he came to Galesburg, and entered the service of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company as brakeman on a freight train. In 1869 he was promoted to the position of conductor, and on the 1st of March, 1884, was assigned passenger duty. During the first four years of his connection in this capacity, he was on the Galesburg and Peoria division, and the succeeding two years he ran from here to Chicago. He was next transferred to the Galesburg and Quincy division, where he was retained for ten years and at the end of that time he was detailed on the Peoria line, his present run.

Fowler, Illinois, was the scene of the marriage of Mr. Mount and Miss Annie Virginia Mitchell, the event being celebrated on the 28th of April, 1868. Mrs. Mount was born at Fowler, on the 21st of December, 1851, and is a daughter of Wylie J. and Nancy (Ballard) Mitchell. The father was born at Wheeling, West Virginia, on the 13th of January, 1805, and the mother at Lynchburg, Virginia, on January 28, 1814. Wylie J. Mitchell came to Iowa during the pioneer days, locating at Burlington when it contained but fourteen houses. There for many years he conducted a hotel and among his guests were the first governor and the Indian chief, Black Hawk. Later he removed to Missouri, but subsequently located on a farm in the vicinity of Fowler, and there he passed away on October 3, 1870. He was survived for more than thirty years by his widow, whose death occurred on May 1, 1902. In politics he was a republican, but he never held any office save that of school director.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell had seven children, the youngest of whom is Mrs. Mount. The others are as follows: Thomas B., who is deceased; Mary Margaret and Sarah Jane, twins, who are also deceased; James W., who died on the 28th of March, 1904; Susan E., who is deceased; and Nancy, the wife of John Watson, of Aberdeen, Washington. The parents were both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and for many years the father was one of the official stewards. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mount. Charles H., who is an engineer on the "Q" running out of Galesburg, is married and has one daughter, Annie Adelia. Alzaria Virginia married E. J. Ross of Chicago, and they have one daughter, Virginia Helen. Rolla, who is also a resident of Chicago, is married and has three daughters: Alzaria Catherine, Ruth Roberta and Mary Ann. James, who is the youngest, has passed away.

Fraternally Mr. Mount is a worthy exemplar of the Masonic order, being a member of the blue lodge and the commandery of Galesburg. In his political views he is independent giving his support to such men and measures as he deems best adapted to serve the highest interests of the municipality. Having been a resident of Galesburg for over forty-seven years, Mr. Mount is widely known in the community, where he has many friends, who accord him the respect his many fine qualities justly merit.

GEORGE SMITH GATES.

Dr. George Smith Gates, who for the past five years has been engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery in Galesburg, was born in Morristown, Lamoille county, Vermont, on the 15th of July, 1839, a son of George W. and Betsey (Smith) Gates. The father was also a native of Morristown, where his birth occurred on the 11th of October, 1810, and the mother was born in Elmore, Vermont, on September 22, 1814, and there passed her girlhood. They were married at Elmore in October, 1837, and began their domestic life in the vicinity of Morristown, where the father engaged in farming until his death, on the 26th of January, 1890. The mother passed away on May 26, 1901. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Gates consisted of four children of whom our subject is the eldest, while the others, in order of birth, were as follows: Elizabeth M., who is deceased; one who died in infancy; and Emma Mary, the wife of E. W. Smith of Wellsriver, Vermont. The parents were Methodists, although the father was superintendent of the Congregational Sunday school for twenty-five years. He was a supporter of the republican party and took an active interest in all matters of a political nature and for a number of years discharged the duties of justice of the peace.

In the acquirement of his education Dr. Gates first attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home, subsequently becoming a student of the People's Academy of Morrisville, Vermont. After laying aside his school books he engaged in teaching for nine terms, the last three years in Ontario township, Knox county, where he located in 1866. Having grown up on a farm, he received a thorough training in the practical methods of agriculture. When he came to this county he settled upon a farm, devoting his energies to its operation until 1894. During that period he was also studying veterinary surgery with a view of adopting it for a vocation, and in 1894 was awarded his degree from the Ontario Veterinary College at Toronto, Canada. Immediately thereafter he removed to Blandinsville, McDonough county, this state, where he established and maintained an office until 1906, when he came to Galesburg. Dr. Gates has met with success in his profession, his long experience in raising stock proving of invaluable assistance to him in his practice.

On the 9th of March, 1864, Dr. Gates was united in marriage to Miss Helen Louise West, who was born in Waterbury, Vermont, on April 13, 1835. She was a daughter of J. P. and Louise West, both natives of Orange county, Vermont, where the father passed away. The mother subsequently came to La Crosse, Wisconsin, and there spent her latter days. They were both members of the Universalist church. In politics he was a republican and at one time occupied the position as justice of the peace. Four children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Gates. Ernest William, who is married and lives at Morrisville, Vermont, has four children: Harold Cortez, Madeline Hattie, Raymond Smith and Catherine. Carroll Levi, who lives at Costello, New Mexico, is also married and has two children, Erroll and Helen. Lulu Anna, the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gates, passed away. Harry Washington, who resides in Galesburg, is married and has one daughter, Florence. On the 2d of October, 1883, the family was called upon to mourn the loss of the wife and mother. Dr. Gates married, on the 28th of September, 1884, Mrs. Allie Walter, a daughter of Jesse and Jerusha (Stire) Everitt, of Prairie City, Illinois. Mrs. Gates is a native of New Jersey, her birth having occurred on September 28, 1843, and two children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Gates: Marion Ethel, who is living at La Junta, Colorado; and Vernon Fitch, who will graduate from Knox College with the class of 1914.

Dr. Gates is a deacon in the East Main Street Congregational church, in which Mrs. Gates also holds membership, and in his political views he is a republican. When residing in Vermont in 1862, Dr. Gates was a member of the state militia, being sergeant in Company I, Second Regiment, which was organized to protect the northern border of the United States from Canadian raiders. Forty-five years have elapsed since he first became a resident of Knox county, and during that time he has been an interested observer of its marvelous development as pioneer conditions have passed with the advent of a newer and higher civilization.

JOHN R. YOUNG.

One of the representative agriculturists of Knox county is John R. Young, whose enterprise and progress is manifested through the attractive appearance of his highly cultivated and improved farm, located on section 32 of Persifer township. Foresight and sagacity have always characterized Mr. Young, who has so intelligently directed his activities as to become one of the extensive landowners of the county, his holdings now aggregating six hundred acres.

JOHN R. YOUNG.

One of the representative agriculturists of Knox county is John R. Young, whose enterprise and progress is manifested through the attractive appearance of his highly cultivated and improved farm, located on section 32 of Persifer township. Foresight and sagacity have always characterized Mr. Young, who has so intelligently directed his activities as to become one of the extensive landowners of the county, his holdings now aggregating six hundred acres.

JOHN R. YOUNG

His birth occurred on the old family homestead on section 31, Persifer township, on the 23d of May, 1852, his parents being Robert and Mary F. (Johnston) Young. Robert Young was a native of Warren county, Ohio, and there he was also reared and educated, receiving his agricultural training on his father's farm. In his early manhood he left his native state and came to Illinois, engaging in farming in this county during the remainder of his active life. He subsequently settled in Persifer township, acquiring the title to three hundred and twenty acres of land on section 31, that upon his death was equally divided among his children. He was an extensive stockman and met with lucrative returns from both this and his agricultural pursuits, becoming one of the substantial citizens of the community. He was one of the prominent settlers of the pioneer period, his efforts having contributed much toward promoting the development of this section of the county. Although he withdrew from the active work of the fields during his later days, he continued to make his home on the farm and there passed away at the venerable age of eighty-one years. He was buried in the cemetery at Knoxville, as was also the mother, who was seventy-five when she died. She was a native of New Jersey and a daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Johnston, who came to Illinois during the pioneer period settling in Knoxville, where they both passed away. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Young, four of whom are residents of this county, as follows: Edward J., who lives in Galesburg; Hannah E., the wife of E. M. Collins, of Knoxville; John R., our subject; and Robert L., who is a resident of Knox township. In matters of faith the parents were Methodists and politically the father was a republican, but never held any office save that of school director, the duties of which he discharged efficiently for several years.

Persifer township has always been the home of John R. Young, who completed his education at Hedding College. He subsequently returned to the farm and has ever since diligently applied himself to agricultural pursuits. In the direction of his activities he has used as much discretion and has as carefully adhered to a definite system of operations as he would have followed in any industrial pursuit, and to this fact unquestionably can be attributed much of his success. Mr. Young is a practical man, at the same time he is progressive in his ideas, and is always ready and willing to adopt a new method if it appeals to him as being practicable. In the cultivation of his fields he has closely followed the most highly approved methods of the modern agriculturists, and his efforts have been well rewarded by abundant harvests. He has six hundred acres of land, four hundred and ninety-one of which is embraced in his homestead and is tilled under his personal supervision. His farm is fully equipped with all modern appliances and conveniences that will reduce the labor or expedite the work, while his large commodious barns and outbuildings provide ample shelter for all the stock and farming machinery and implements. He has thoroughly tiled his land wherever necessary, having eight miles of tiling on one quarter section, and the soil is carefully watched and studied being supplied with such fertilizer as is deemed essential to promote its productivity. One hundred and ten acres of his land, located on section 13, of Knox township, is used exclusively for pasturage. Here he also has a sawmill that was called into requisition when he was clearing the timber away preparatory to placing the land under cultivation. During the long period of his ownership Mr. Young has erected some very fine buildings on his farm, which are kept in good repair. From time to time he has also installed various modern conveniences and improvements, consistent with the spirit of progress he has at all times manifested in his undertakings. His fields are well fenced and under high cultivation, the grounds about his residence are neat and attractive in appearance and everything about the place evidences the close supervision and careful regard for details that are indicative of capable and efficient management.

Mr. Young has been married twice. His first union was with Miss Samantha Lotts, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Lotts, and they became the parents of four children: Earl L., who married Pearl Adams, and is now living at home; John R., Jr., who married Marie Wolf, a daughter of John Wolf, of Haw Creek, residing on one of his father's farms; Merrill, who married Marie McClure; and Trella, the wife of Robert J. Tarpy, who is living on section 32, Persifer township. The mother of these children passed away at the age of thirty-seven years and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Knoxville. In 1891, Mr. Young married Miss Mary England, a daughter of George and Susan England, and they have two children, Leon D. and Margie, both of whom are still at home.

In matters of faith Mr. Young has no strongly pronounced views and has never identified himself with any organization. He is in hearty sympathy with all church and Christian work, however, and liberally contributes toward the maintenance of the various denominations and has generously assisted in erecting a number of edifices for religious purposes in this vicinity. His fraternal relations are confined to his membership in the Modern Woodmen of America, his affiliation being with the camp at Gilson. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles of the republican party and casts his ballot in support of their candidates. He has assumed his share of the governmental responsibilities in the township and has efficiently served in various capacities. For twenty years in succession he discharged the duties of supervisor, while for three he served as road commissioner and as assessor for one, and he was likewise school director for a time. He is interested in various local enterprises, and is now president of the Knox County Farmers' Mutual Fire & Lightning Insurance Company, having been identified with this office for six years, while for twelve he was a director. He also owns stock in the Gilson Farmers' Telephone Company and is one of the directors of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank at Galesburg. Mr. Young is one of the estimable citizens of his community, where he has passed his entire life and numbers among his many friends the comrades of his boyhood, whose regard is a high tribute to his character, as it covers a period of more than fifty years of close acquaintanceship.

WILLIAM HENRY WILLCOX.

William Henry Willcox is a retired farmer now living at No. 940 North Prairie street in Galesburg. He was born in Moriah, Essex county, New York, January 9, 1836, his parents being Henry and Mary K. (Meacham) Willcox, the former a native of Bridport, Vermont, and the latter of Poultney, Vermont. The Willcox family comes of Saxon origin and was seated at Bury St. Edmunds, in the county of Suffolk, England, before the Norman conquest. James Willcox, the grandfather of our subject, was born at Bridport, Vermont, and was a son of Giles Willcox, of Killingsworth, Connecticut. He joined a band of immigrants from Connecticut towns for the "New Hampshire grants" and bought a tract of land on the Vermont shore of Lake Champlain, in Bridport township. On the memorable morning of May 10, 1775, he acted as one of the guides to Colonel Ethan Allen, who was bent upon the capture of Fort Ticonderoga. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, participating in the movements of the Green Mountain boys in that district. The maternal grandfather of William H. Willcox was William Meacham, who was born at North Adams, Massachusetts, September 20, 1771. He married Keziah Howe, whose birth occurred at Poultney, Vermont, May 25, 1775. They were married August 14, 1796, and both passed away in the state of New York when well advanced in years. Their children were William H., Laura M., Martha J., Jemimah C., Mary K. and Lorain E.

Henry Willcox, father of W. H. Willcox, was reared upon a farm and in Moriah, New York, wedded Mary K. Meacham. He afterward worked in a woolen mill on Lake Champlain until he decided to come to the west and with his wife and family made his way to Knox county in October, 1836. He then located on the present site of Galesburg, just north of what is now Henderson street, owning a ten-acre lot there and purchasing a farm of eighty acres just west of the town. He afterward removed to his farm and improved it, also extending its boundaries until it comprised one hundred and twenty-seven acres. Upon that place he reared his family, but in 1866 again took up his abode in Galesburg, where he died in 1872 at the age of seventy-five years. His wife, who was born in 1803, lacked but ten days of being eighty-five years of age when she passed away in 1888. They were both charter members of the Congregational church, in which Mr. Willcox served as an elder. In their family were two sons and two daughters: Erastus, who acts as librarian in Peoria; Mary Helen, who gave her hand in marriage to William T. Bartle and passed away when about twenty years of age; William H., of this review; and Clarissa Adeline, the deceased wife of Edwin R. Willcox, a cousin.

William Henry Willcox was reared upon a farm adjoining Galesburg and is one of three of the original colony who are still living in this city, the others being Mrs. Charles Hinckley and Mrs. Henry Sanderson, whose husband was the first mayor of Galesburg. Mr. Willcox spent his youth in the usual manner of farm lads and attended the first school in Galesburg, its site being on what is now the public square. He was afterward a student in Knox Academy and when he had completed his education he purchased his father's farm of one hundred and twenty acres, to which he added seven acres. There he continued to engage in general farming until the spring of 1879, when he removed to Trego county, Kansas, where he operated a ranch for eleven and a half years. At that time he returned to Illinois and engaged in farming in the northwestern part of Peoria county for another eleven years. He next removed to Wyoming, Stark county, where he lived for six years and in 1907 he returned to Galesburg, where he has since made his home, now enjoying a well earned rest, made possible through the success which he won while he followed farming.

On the 3d of October, 1866, Mr. Willcox was married to Miss Eliza P. Kellogg, who was born August 3, 1838, and died March 6, 1905. She was originally a member of the Presbyterian church but afterward joined the Congregational church of Galesburg with her husband. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Willcox were born five children. Elizabeth, the eldest, is the wife of Dr. Alvin F. Sherrill, of Atlanta, Georgia, who is dean of the theological seminary there. Edward K., who is a farmer of Wyoming, Stark county, Illinois, married Ella Jane Austin and they have four children: Dorothy A., Lawrence A., Marion E. and Charles F. John H., who follows farming near Billings, Montana, married Hattie Jaques and has three children: Marjorie I., William J. and Lois E. Caroline is the fourth member of the family. Maurice M., who is the youngest, is a graduate of the state university and now follows the profession of civil engineering in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He married Eve I. Dills and they have three sons: Henry K., Philip M. and John T.

In his political views William H. Willcox has always been a republican, having attained his majority soon after the party was organized. He is entitled to wear the Grand Army button, for on the 5th of August, 1862, he enlisted as a member of Company A, Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in as duty sergeant and was mustered out July 10, 1865, as second lieutenant. Among the battles in which he participated were those that occurred in the vicinity of Vicksburg leading to the capture of that city. Mr. Willcox was made a prisoner of war at Sabine Crossroads, April 18, 1864, and was sent to Camp Ford near Tyler, Texas, where he was held until the close of hostilities. After the war he followed farming successfully for a number of years but eventually retired to enjoy a rest which he has truly earned and richly deserves. He has ever commanded the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens and has a very wide and favorable acquaintance in Knox county.

N. H. GOODSPEED.

N. H. Goodspeed, a well known agriculturist and stockman of Victoria township, owns one hundred and seventy acres of land on section 15, that he devotes to general farming. He was born in Athens county, Ohio, on the 14th of May, 1849, but the Goodspeed family originally came from Massachusetts. His grandfather, Nathan Goodspeed, came to the Buckeye state in his early manhood and engaged in farming. There he was subsequently married and passed the remainder of his life. The father of our subject, Daniel H. Goodspeed, was born and reared in Ohio and there he later married Miss Martha Wingett who was a native of the same state. They spent the early years of their domestic life in the vicinity where they had always resided, but they later disposed of their interests there and, in 1855, came to Illinois. Upon their arrival in the state they located on the farm where their son, N. H., now lives and there the mother passed away in 1856 and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Victoria. The father survived her for many years, his death occurring in Victoria, in 1891, at the age of seventy years. They always attended the Congregational church and his political support Mr. Goodspeed gave to the republican party. He was a public-spirited man and always took much interest in township affairs, serving for several years as road commissioner. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Goodspeed numbered six, all of whom were born in Ohio. They are as follows: Elizabeth, the wife of J. B. Cochran, of Lynn township; Georgiana, who married G. W. Short, residing in Lynn township; John Oliver, who makes his home with his brother, N. H.; he, whose name stands at the head of this sketch; Eunice, the widow of Orlando Short, of Galva, Illinois; and Eleanor, who is deceased.

N. H. Goodspeed was only a lad of six years when he came to Victoria township with his parents and he has since passed practically his entire life on the farm where he is now residing. His early years were not unlike those of other lads reared in the country during the pioneer period. He attended the district school until he had mastered the common branches, during which time he also assisted with the work about the farm. He subsequently gave his entire attention to agricultural pursuits and after attaining his manhood took over the management of the homestead, to the further cultivation and improvement of which he has ever since devoted his energies. He engages in general farming but makes a specialty of raising horses, cattle and hogs, and has met with success in his undertakings. His farm is well improved and under high cultivation and is fully equipped with all modern conveniences and appliances, deemed essential to the successful pursuits of agriculture.

Mr. Goodspeed married Miss Ruth Young, a native of Knox county and a daughter of John Young, and to them was born one son, Fred N., who is now living in California. He married Emma Strom, who is deceased, and they had three children: Gladys, Wayne Stodard and Vance, who are living with Mr. and Mrs. Goodspeed.

The political allegiance of Mr. Goodspeed is given to the republican party, but he has never held any township office. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has held all of the chairs in the Victoria lodge; he also belongs to the Masonic order, being affiliated with the lodge at Victoria. In addition to his fine farm and other interests, Mr. Goodspeed is a stockholder in the Victoria Mutual Telephone Company. He has applied himself intelligently and industriously to the development of his undertakings and his efforts have been rewarded correspondingly, his prosperity being recognized by his friends as the well merited dividend from his long years of toil and self-denial.

PROFESSOR ISAAC AUGUSTUS PARKER.

Professor Isaac Augustus Parker, emeritus professor of Greek of Lombard College, ranked throughout the period of his active connection with educational interests as one of the foremost educators of Illinois. He is now enjoying a well merited rest at the age of eighty-six years. His has largely been the ideal age that grows stronger and better mentally and physically as the years go by and gives out of the rich stores of its wisdom and experience for the benefit of others. He was born in South Woodstock, Vermont, December 31, 1825, a son of Isaac and Lucia (Wood) Parker, who were also natives of Woodstock. Their family numbered but two children, the elder being a daughter, Elvira, who became the wife of Loyal M. Wood and died in South Woodstock at an advanced age. Professor Parker is a descendant of James Parker, who came from England and finally settled at Groton, Massachusetts. The paternal grandfather was Eleazer Parker, who lived in Mansfield, Connecticut, whence he removed to Vermont, settling in South Woodstock. He was a farmer by occupation and a soldier of the Revolutionary war, responding to the Lexington alarm, at which time he left the plow and gave valued aid to the country in her struggle for independence. He wedded Mary Royce and they reared a large family, including: Eleazer; Isaac; Elizabeth, who married Charles McKenzie; Ruth, who became the wife of William Prior; Mary, who gave her hand in marriage to Humphrey Rood; Lydia, who married David Aiken and lived in Chautauqua county, New York; Lavina, who first became the wife of William Benton and subsequently married Platt Benedict, who was the founder of Norwalk, Ohio; Sarah, who married Elias Smith; and Lucy, who gave her hand in marriage to Oliver Kendall. Eleazer and Mary (Royce) Parker, the parents of this family, lived to the ages of seventy-three and eighty-one years respectively. In tracing the ancestry of Professor Parker in the maternal line it is found that he had four ancestors who were passengers on the Mayflower, namely: John Tilley and his daughter, Elizabeth Tilley; John Howland; and George Soule. The Wood family originated in England but Henry Wood, the first of the ancestors in that line, came from Holland, as did his wife, who bore the maiden name of Abigail Jenney.

The maternal grandfather of Professor Parker was Joseph Wood, a native of Middleboro, Massachusetts, who made farming his life work. He lived for some time at South Woodstock and his death occurred at that place. He served in several campaigns during the Revolutionary war. He married Mrs. William Gray, a widow, who bore the maiden name of Bethiah Palmer. His death occurred when he was sixty-five years of age, while his wife lived to be more than eighty years of age. Their children were Joseph, Jr., Benjamin Palmer, Samuel, Ira, Ora, Erastus and Lucia. The last named became the wife of Isaac Parker and the mother of Professor Parker of this review. Isaac Parker was reared to farm life and also learned the trades of a shoemaker and tanner, in early life but afterward withdrew from those trades and devoted the greater part of his days to general farming. He held the office of selectman and was also justice of the peace. He likewise served as captain of a company of the state militia and was in command of the company that escorted General Lafayette into Woodstock when he made his visit to America more than a quarter of a century after the Revolutionary war. Both he and his wife were members of the Universalist church. He died in South Woodstock when about eighty-six years of age and his wife survived him for a time, passing away at the age of eighty-seven.

Professor Parker was reared in South Woodstock, Vermont, and attended Dartmouth College, from which he was graduated in 1853. He received the degree of Master of Arts from Dartmouth College in 1855 and the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy from Buchtel College in 1892. He took up the profession of teaching and for five years was principal of the Orleans Institute at Glover, Vermont. On the expiration of that period he came to Galesburg as professor of ancient languages in Lombard University and such was his ability as an instructor that his services were retained by the college until 1908, when he resigned because of the weight of years. He contributed much to the success of Lombard, his instruction being an important element in the upbuilding of the school.

On the 18th of February, 1856, Professor Parker was married to Miss Sarah A. Labaree, a daughter of William and Parthena (Whitmore) Labaree. Mrs. Parker was a great-great-granddaughter of Peter Labaree, who was taken captive by the Indians at Charlestown, New Hampshire, and sent to Canada, where he was afterward released. The Rev. Benjamin Labaree, for many years president of Middlebury College, was a cousin of her father, William Labaree. The latter was born in New Hampshire and devoted his life to general agricultural pursuits. He married Parthena Whitmore and their children were John Wesley; Ralph; William H.; Charles K.; Benjamin Franklin; Sarah Ann; Harriet; Adeline; and Louisa, who became the wife of Ira Thompson and died many years ago. Of these, Sarah Ann became the wife of Professor Parker. She was born in Weathersfield, Vermont, in 1827, and died in Galesburg, in 1889, when sixty-two years of age. She held membership in the Universalist church and was a lady of many admirable characteristics and qualities. By her marriage she became the mother of two children but the daughter, Izah Tenney, died in Banning, California, in 1891. She had been a teacher in the public schools of Galesburg and also in Lombard College. The son, William Augustus, a civil engineer by profession, is now chief engineer of the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railway and has his office in St. Joseph, Missouri.

Professor Parker's life record is largely a familiar one to the residents of Galesburg, for he has so long made his home in their midst. Well descended and well bred, his tastes are innately those of refinement and culture and his influence has always been given on the side of progress and advancement. He has stood for the highest ideals in educational work and while instructing pupils in the "dead" languages he has also kept before them the living issues of the day in his efforts to prepare those under his instruction for the practical and responsible duties of life. His influence, exerted consciously or unconsciously, has ever been a force for good in the lives of those with whom he has come in contact.

WILLIAM S. WILLIAMSON, M. D.

Dr. William S. Williamson, a well known and successful representative of the medical profession in Knox county, has continuously practiced at Galesburg for more than two decades. His birth occurred in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on the 21st of August, 1848, his parents being Hiram and Lydia (Pierce) Williamson. The father was born in Virginia, on the 12th of May, 1800, while the mother's birth occurred in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, on the 4th of May, 1810. The paternal grandparents of our subject, Hiram and Martha (McClellan) Williamson, were planters of Virginia and were representatives of old families of that state. Hiram Williamson, Jr., the father of Dr. Williamson, was engaged in business as a lumber contractor and also owned large timber tracts in western Pennsylvania. In 1856 he came west and took up his abode in Henry county, Illinois, there devoting his attention to general agricultural pursuits with excellent success. The last few years of his life were spent in honorable retirement at Orion, Henry county, Illinois, where his demise occurred on the 18th of July, 1884. He gave his political allegiance to the republican party and while living in the east served as justice of the peace and also as a member of the school board. In early manhood he was a member of the Society of Friends but after locating in the west affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal church, acting therein as class leader and also as a member of the board of stewards. It was on the 4th of May, 1828, in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, that he had wedded Miss Lydia Pierce, who passed away in May, 1900. Unto them were born ten children, as follows: Jacob, who was killed in the battle of Vicksburg while a member of the Union army, serving in Company D, Thirteenth Illinois Infantry; Eliza Jane, who is also deceased; Hiram F., living at Central City, Nebraska; Sarah and Joseph, both of whom have passed away; Lydia, the wife of Smith F. Purdy, of Abingdon, Illinois; James, deceased; William S., of this review; F. Nettie, who gave her hand in marriage to Samuel McGee and resides in Aurora, Nebraska; and Sevena C., the wife of Aaron Elder, residing in Indiana county, Pennsylvania.

William S. Williamson obtained his early education in the public schools of Henry county, Illinois, later attended Prairie Home Academy and subsequently continued his studies in Grinnell College of Iowa. He next read medicine under the direction of Dr. John N. McKelvey, of Orion, Illinois, and afterward entered the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated with the class of 1875. Locating for the practice of medicine at Rio, Knox county, Illinois, he there remained for eight years and then removed to Aurora, Nebraska, where he followed his profession for six years. On the expiration of that period he entered the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, completing the full course in 1889. In that year he opened an office at Galesburg, Illinois, and this city has since remained the scene of his professional labors, his success in the administration of remedial agencies and the restoration of health insuring him a constantly growing and highly remunerative patronage.

There is also a military chapter in the life history of Dr. Williamson, for at the time of the Civil war he enlisted as a member of Company B, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, remaining with that command as a private for three years.

On the 29th of April, 1875, Dr. Williamson was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Burns Cook, who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on the 4th of August, 1860, her parents being Alexander and Mary (Burns) Cook, of Mercer county, Illinois. The father was a native of the Isle of Arran, off the coast of Scotland, while the mother was born in the Scotch highlands. They were married in Glasgow, Scotland, and emigrated to the United States in 1862, locating in Lynn, Henry county, Illinois, where Alexander Cook followed farming. His last days were spent in honorable retirement at Swedona, Illinois, where both he and his wife passed away. In politics he was a republican, while his religious faith was that of the Presbyterian church, in which he served as a deacon, elder and trustee. Unto Dr. and Mrs. Williamson were born four children, namely: Winfield Howard, who is a resident of Desmet, Idaho; Jean Burns, the wife of Dr. John C. Murchison; Nellie, deceased; and Bessie, who is at home.

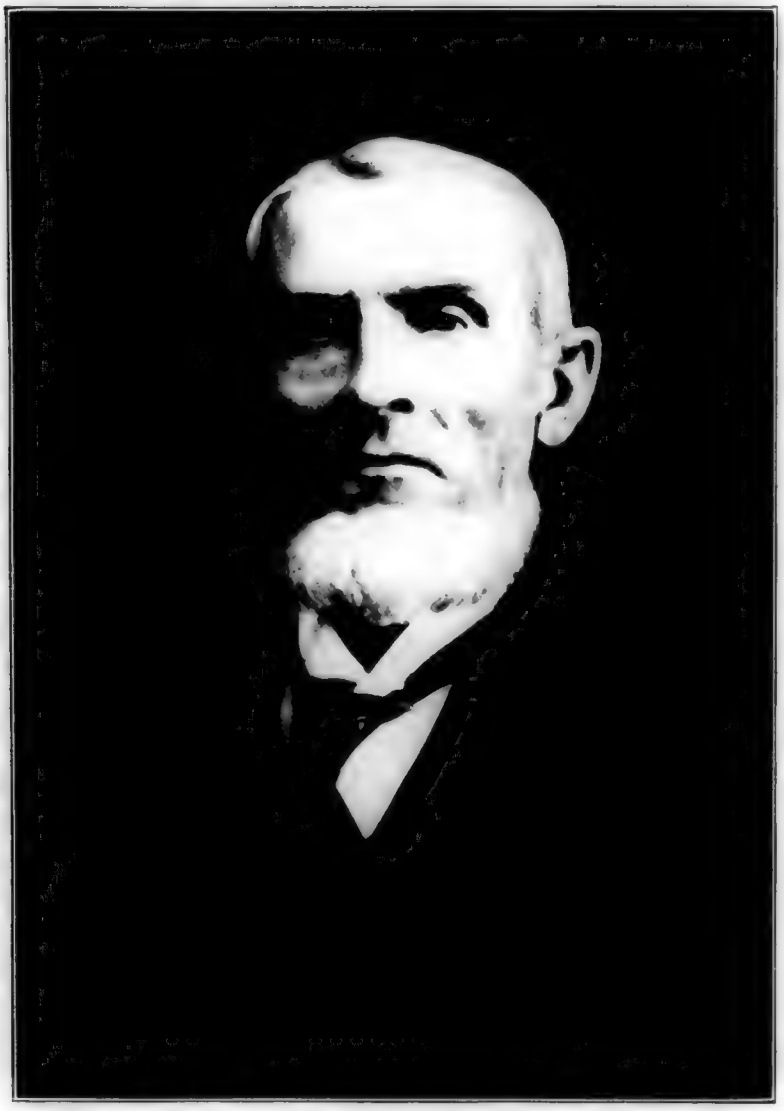
At the polls Dr. Williamson supports the men and measures of the republican party, believing firmly in its principles. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen and the Red Men. Both he and his wife belong to the Central Congregational church and take an active and helpful part in its work. Genial in disposition, unobtrusive and unassuming, he is patient under adverse criticism and in his expressions concerning brother practitioners is friendly and indulgent.

DAVID B. EDWARDS.

David B. Edwards, who for fifteen years has been a conductor on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, his run being from Galesburg to Quincy, has throughout his entire life been connected with railway service and his efficiency and faithfulness are indicated in the fact that he has always remained with the one road. He was born in Henderson county, Illinois, three miles south of Kirkwood, on the 1st of May, 1862, a grandson of John Edwards, who was of Welsh birth and lineage and came to the United States at the time of the Revolutionary war with the British army but deserted from its ranks and joined the colonial forces, his sympathy being with the troops who were struggling for independence. He located in Belmont county, Ohio, where his remaining days were passed.



The parents of David B. Edwards were Thomas R. and Susan (Cook) Edwards, both of whom were natives of Belmont county, Ohio, the father having been born on the 29th of November, 1820, and the mother on the 21st of August, 1827. Both were educated there and their marriage was celebrated in their native county on the 25th of February, 1854. The father was a blacksmith by trade and in the fall of 1860 came to Illinois, driving across the country to Henderson county, where he secured a tract of land and engaged in farming. Year after year he devoted his attention to the cultivation of the fields until his death which occurred June 5, 1895. His widow survived him for eleven years and passed away October 27, 1906. They were both consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which they were actively and helpfully interested, Mr. Edwards serving as one of the church trustees. In politics he was a republican and served as township trustee, as road commissioner and as school director, faithfully discharging his duties and also giving active and helpful support to every measure and movement intended for the public good. Unto him and his wife were born six children: John Walter, a railway conductor on the Rock Island Railroad, now living at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Orloff D., a farmer of Sumner county, Kansas; Stephen C., who also follows farming in Sumner county; David B.; Charles H., living on the old homestead in Henderson county; and Emma F., a twin sister of Charles, and now the wife of John W. Gordon, of Hooker, Oklahoma.

David B. Edwards has spent his entire life in Illinois and is indebted to its public-school system for the educational privileges he enjoyed. In starting out in life on his own account he secured a position as brakeman on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, serving in that capacity until promoted to the position of conductor on the 2d of February, 1896. He has since served in that capacity, his run being from Galesburg to Quincy, and his loyalty, capability and faithfulness are indicated in his long retention in the position.

On the 15th of July, 1885, Mr. Edwards was united in marriage to Miss Augusta Ervin, who was born August 23, 1866, at Statesville, North Carolina, a daughter of Claude P. and Jane (Morrison) Ervin, of Biggsville, Illinois. Her father was born June 16, 1843, in Iredell county, North Carolina, and enlisted for service in the Confederate army under Colonel Vance, serving as a private in the cavalry for three years and six months. He removed with his family to Biggsville during the early girlhood of Mrs. Edwards, who was there educated. By her marriage she has become the mother of two children: Walter Earl, who was born in Biggsville, October 4, 1886, and died August 27, 1887; and Gertrude May, who was born in Biggsville, February 17, 1888, and is living with her parents. It was in 1885 that Mr. Edwards removed to Galesburg and in 1907 he erected the residence which he and his family now occupy. He still holds membership in the Odd Fellows lodge at Biggsville and belongs to the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Lodge No. 24, at Galesburg. His political indorsement is given to the republican party but he has no desire or aspiration for public office and its rewards. His wife is a member of the Baptist church and during the twenty-six years of their residence in the city they have made many friends.

ALBERT W. TAPPER.

Albert W. Tapper, a successful and representative agriculturist of Ontario township, was born in Osco, Henry county, Illinois, on the 5th of December, 1871, his parents being Erick G. and Christina (Carlson) Tapper, who were natives of Tjarstad, Estergetlan and Hoena, Sweden, respectively. The father was born on November 13, 1831, and at the age of twenty-six years came to the United States to seek his fortune in the agricultural district of the Middle West, heretofore having spent his time in military training and agricultural pursuits. He settled first at New Sweden, Iowa, where he remained until 1863, when he removed to Andover, Illinois, and located upon a farm near Osco. At this place he became the owner of two hundred acres of valuable land, which he successfully cultivated until 1889, when he removed to Ontario township, Knox county, settling upon the farm, on which his son, A. W. Tapper, now resides. This farm, which consisted of two hundred and seventy-one and a half acres, was his home until his death, on the 23d of July, 1902, at the age of seventy years. In politics he was a stanch and enthusiastic republican and he held membership in the Swedish Lutheran church at Andover, Illinois. In 1867 he was married to Christina Carlson, whose birth occurred on the 1st of January, 1840. She left her native land for the United States in 1854 and resided with an aunt near Orion, Illinois, until her marriage. She is now residing at Woodhull, Illinois.

Albert W. Tapper spent his early years at home, assisting his father and attending the common schools in the acquirement of an education. At twenty-one years of age he began attending Brown's Business College at Galesburg during the winter months, although he still spent much time working on the farm. He began his independent career in the spring of 1897, when he went to Monmouth and engaged in the laundry business, which he conducted during the following four or five years. After this, for a similar length of time, he was in the employ of the Kingman Plow Company at Peoria, before again engaging in agricultural pursuits, at first for three years, on an eighty acre tract owned by Joe Cox, Sr., and later, in the spring of 1908, on the homestead where his mother needed his assistance. He has the entire farm under cultivation and is carrying on general farming most profitably in addition to feeding cattle and hogs. In the few years in which he has been thus engaged, he has given his attention almost exclusively to his farm and has shown his ability to equip it and operate it scientifically and profitably. Among the later improvements which he has added is the silo, which has a capacity of one hundred and twenty tons.

In September, 1898, Mr. Tapper was married to Miss Millie Samuelson, a daughter of Olaf and Christina Samuelson, both of whom were natives of Sweden and are now deceased. Mrs. Tapper was born March 15, 1871, in Woodhull and spent the greater part of her childhood in that town, where she was prominent socially and in the Lutheran church. Her death occurred on October 21, 1907, when she was thirty-six years and seven months of age. To Mr. and Mrs. Tapper two children were born, namely: Elsie Marie, who is thirteen years of age and who is residing with her father and attending school; and Ruby Emelia, whose death occurred on the 11th of March, 1909.

In politics Mr. Tapper is a republican and takes an active interest in public affairs, having served for the last few years as district clerk of Ontario Township Centennial School District No. 22. He holds stock in the Woodhull and Oneida grain elevators and is also a stockholder in the Woodhull State Bank. His fraternal affiliations are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Woodhull and the Modern Woodmen of America, of that place, associations which indicate much of the nature of his interests and the rules which govern his life.

WILLIAM ALBERT GEBHART.

William Albert Gebhart has been engaged in teaming in Galesburg for forty years and during half of that time has conducted a wholesale and retail hay and straw business. He is a native of Knox county, where he was born on a farm in Henderson township, on the 27th of August, 1855. The father, Allen Gebhart, a son of Kentucky, where he was reared, engaged in agricultural pursuits after concluding his schooling. At Pleasant Hill church, Taylor county, that state, on the 12th of February, 1849, he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza

Feather, also a native of the Blue Grass state, in which they continued to reside until 1850, when they came to Illinois, settling on a farm in Henderson township, this county. Mr. Gebhart devoted his energies to the improvement and cultivation of this place until 1869, when with his wife and family he removed to Galesburg. Here he followed the occupations of lathing and plastering during the remainder of his active life, passing away in 1889, at the age of sixty-three years. The mother is still living and is now in her eightieth year, having been born in Taylor county, Kentucky, on February 20, 1832. Mr. Gebhart was a veteran of the Mexican war, in which he fought as a member of one of the first regiments that left Louisville. In politics he was a stanch republican. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Gebhart numbered eight children, as follows: Mary and John, both of whom are deceased; Henry, who was killed in a railroad accident; William Albert, of this review; David, who is a resident of McDermott, Idaho; Edward, deceased; Lulu, the wife of Henry Hunt, of Kearney, Nebraska; and Richard, who is a resident of Ogden, Iowa. The paternal grandparents were Thomas and Nellie (Robbins) Gebhart, natives of Virginia and of Campbellsville, Taylor county, Kentucky, respectively. They were among the early settlers of Knox county, passing away in Henderson township at a ripe old age. He was a blacksmith by trade and continued to follow this occupation until age compelled his retirement from regular work. They had three daughters and four sons: Rachel; Jane; Sarah; John; Allen, the father of William Albert Gebhart; Thomas and William. The family is of German extraction, the great-grandfather of William Albert Gebhart having emigrated to the colonies when he was a lad of fourteen years, prior to the Revolution. He grew to manhood in this country and gave his services to the land of his adoption in its struggle for independence. In the maternal line, William Albert Gebhart is descended from old colonial southern families. His grandparents, John and Polly (Harp) Feather, removed from Niles, North Carolina, to Kentucky, locating in Taylor county, where they died at the ages of ninety-four and eighty-three years respectively. They were the parents of ten children, the eldest of whom, Eliza, was the mother of our subject, the others being: Catherine, who died when young; Elvira; Albert; John; Reuben; William; Mary; Louisa; and Rial.

The education of William Albert Gebhart began in the district school, in the vicinity of his father's farm, until he was ten years of age, and was completed in the public schools of Galesburg. In his sixteenth year he laid aside his textbooks and began earning his own living. The first work that offered happened to be teaming, and now for forty years he has continued to be identified with this business. About twenty years ago he began dealing in hay and straw, and as this venture proved to be remunerative he has ever since followed it in connection with his teaming business. Mr. Gebhart is a practical man, enterprising and industrious, and has met with good success in his undertakings, owing to his close application, unceasing effort and good judgment.

On the 4th of March, 1883, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Feather, a daughter of Albert and Diema (Wilson) Feather, and a native of Kentucky, her birth having occurred in Taylor county, on the 25th of February, 1862. Her parents were also natives of the Blue Grass state, whence they moved to Illinois in 1883, locating in Knox county. They are now residents of Galesburg. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Feather: Mary, now Mrs. Gebhart; Ermine; Emmett, who is deceased; Olive; John; and Timothy. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Gebhart were John and Polly (Harp) Feather, and in the maternal line she is descended from Robert and Nellie (Colvin) Wilson. Mr. and Mrs. Gebhart are the parents of five children: Leroy, who died in infancy; Charles, who was eleven years of age at the time of his death; Harry, who graduated from the high school and Knox College and is now studying medicine at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor; Erminie, a graduate of the high school and Brown's Business College, who is now employed as stenographer in the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank in this city; and Bessie, who died when she was eleven years of age.

His political franchise Mr. Gebhart exercises in support of the men and measures of the democratic party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and both he and Mrs. Gebhart hold membership in the Baptist church, and number among its congregation many close friends. Mr. Gebhart has always led a rather unobtrusive life, but he is a man of tireless energy, clear judgment and foresight and has quietly advanced his interests during the long period of his business career, until he is now numbered among the substantial citizens of the community.

JOHN B. McAULEY.

John B. McAuley, a well known civil engineer and contractor of Galesburg, who has twice been city engineer, was born here, on the 18th of November, 1863. His parents are Thomas and Margaret (Mulqueney) McAuley, natives of Ireland, the father's birth having occurred in County Antrim, on the 2d of February, 1832, and that of the mother in County Clare. When a young man Thomas McAuley emigrated to the United States, locating in Galesburg in 1854. Here he entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad in the capacity of foreman of track construction. He subsequently went to Iowa, settling on a farm in Lee county, to the further development of which he devoted his energies until 1884. In the latter year he disposed of his property and returned to Galesburg, again entering the service of the "Q." He continued in that employ as assistant foreman of the yards until 1904, when he withdrew from active work and is now living retired at No. 649 South Academy street. The mother is also living. They are both communicants of the Roman Catholic church and belong to the parish of St. Patrick. Ever since granted the right of franchise Mr. McAuley has given his support to the democratic party and although he never aspired to public office, has always taken an active interest in all political affairs. To Mr. and Mrs. McAuley there have been born six children, the eldest of whom is our subject. The others are as follows: Thomas Francis, who is living in Chicago; Mary, the wife of W. G. Mathews; Margaret, who is at home; Charles H., of Galesburg; and Grace, who is also at home. The parents were married in Galesburg.

The education of John B. McAuley was obtained in the public school and also a private school conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Hennessey. Upon attaining his majority in 1884 he entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. He was first assigned duty on the tracks and in the switch yard, his first promotion being to the civil engineer department, and in October, 1884, he was appointed assistant to F. J. Allen, division engineer, in the capacity of chain and rodman in the engineer department. Subsequently he was placed in charge of the division engineer's office, remaining in this position until March, 1891, when he resigned to assume the responsibilities of city engineer. He was appointed to this office by Mayor Forrest F. Cooke, his term expiring in 1893, and in May of that year he went to Canton, this state, where he was engaged until the following May as city engineer for that city. Upon his return to Galesburg he established an office and took contracts for construction work of various kinds, principally brick pavements, sewers, waterworks and also in both concrete and brick masonry. In 1901 he was again appointed city engineer by Mayor William O. R. Bradley, but upon the expiration of his term of office he once more gave his undivided attention to his private interests. Mr. McAuley has laid, or has had direct charge of construction, as engineer, of the greater portion of the pavement in Galesburg and has contracted for and laid all of the better class of pavement such as that to be found on Mary street, Chamber street, E. Losey street, Seminary street and Prairie street. He has also built the brick and steel bridges and the reinforced concrete bridge over Cedar Fork creek. His building operations and concrete work have been of a most important character and indicate his position as a prominent representative of industrial activity in Galesburg. In 1895 he completed and published a new map of the city and he also has received at different times contracts on the city waterworks plant. Mr. McAuley has become quite well known in this portion of the state through his contracts on pavements, sewers, waterworks, railroads and bridges, and in addition to the work already mentioned he paved a number of streets and alleys in Kewanee, Illinois. He is a practical man and does his work thoroughly and efficiently, giving his close personal supervision to every contract assigned him.

On the 17th of November, 1897, Mr. McAuley was married to Miss Elizabeth Frances Connolly, a daughter of Terence and Ellen Connolly of this city. Mrs. McAuley was born May 28, 1867, and departed this life at her home at No. 649 South Academy street, on the 2d of September, 1901. She was a consistent member of St. Patrick's Catholic church to which Mr. McAuley also belongs. To them were born twin sons, John Thomas and Robert Francis, whose birth occurred on the 3d of July, 1900. Mr. McAuley belongs to the Galesburg Club and the Elks Club and has most cordial relations with many of the members of those organizations. In his political views he is a republican and while he has firm faith in the party, he has never sought nor desired office save the one which he held and which was in the strict path of his profession. His support of progressive municipal affairs, however has been a factor in general progress and improvement. The steps in his orderly progression are easily discernable. Since starting out in life in a humble capacity he has made continuous advancement, wisely utilizing his time, talents and opportunities and correctly judging of life's contacts and experiences. Early in his business career he recognized the fact that there is no royal road to wealth, but that advancement and success must depend upon the worth of an individual's work to his fellowmen. He has always held to high standards and whether in the execution of public or private contracts has ever given adequate return for value received. Moreover he has cultivated skill and efficiency which have won for him a leading place among the prominent representatives of his profession in this part of Illinois.

WALTER D. DELONG.

Walter D. DeLong, who has been conducting a transfer and storage business in Galesburg for the past nine years, was born on a farm at Center Point, three and a half miles northeast of this city, on the 29th of July, 1865. His parents were Marshall and Mary (Harding) DeLong, the father a native of Vermont and the mother of the state of New York. Three children were born to them as follows: Walter D., our subject; Mary, the wife of C. R. Neeley of Sparta township; and Harriet, who married Addison Hasty, of Seattle, Washington. At the age of ten years, Marshall DeLong accompanied his parents on their removal from Vermont to Illinois, their destination being Knox county. The family arrived late in the fall of 1836 and spent their first winter in old Henderson, but in the spring they located on a farm in Sparta township. There Marshall DeLong completed his education and was reared to manhood. Always having had his energies directed along agricultural lines, when old enough to choose a vocation, naturally he adopted the one in which he felt he was most likely to succeed. He subsequently purchased a farm at Center Point that he operated until 1886, when he was appointed superintendent of the county poor farm. He continued to discharge the duties of this office until his death on the 29th of January, 1892, at the age of sixty-six years. The mother survived for five years thereafter, passing away at the same age. Mr. DeLong always took an active interest in all public affairs, and was for many years postmaster at Center Point, and he also efficiently served as justice of the peace and was at one time a member of the board of supervisors. All matters of an agricultural nature interested him and he was one of the enthusiastic members of the county agricultural board for several years, of which he was president. The paternal grandparents were Julius and Juliana (Sanford) DeLong, also natives of Vermont, who died on the old homestead in Sparta township, at an advanced age. They had one son and two daughters: Marshall, Mary and Harriet. The maternal grandparents were also pioneers of Knox county, having located on a farm in the vicinity of Cherry Grove, near Abingdon, in the early days. She passed away in middle life, but the grandfather, James Harding, was ninety-nine at the time of his death. Six children were born to them: the mother of our subject; Ann; Roderick, who was a captain in the Civil war; Lucinda and Nett.

The boyhood and youth of Walter D. DeLong were passed on his father's farm in Sparta township, where the family had then resided for nearly forty years. In the acquirement of his early education he attended the district school, but he later supplemented this by a business course in one of the commercial colleges. He subsequently returned to the home place in the operation of which he assisted until his father became superintendent of the poor farm in 1886, when he took over the management of the homestead. He continued to operate the entire farm until after the death of his father in 1892, when he inherited one hundred and one and a half acres, that he cultivated together with some land he rented from the other heirs. In 1902, Mr. DeLong disposed of his property and came to Galesburg and embarked in the business he is still conducting. He was first associated with Ralph Belden, but for the past six years he has been in partnership with E. B. Ogden.

On the 5th of June, 1889, Mr. DeLong was united in marriage with Miss Genevieve Ferris, who passed away on January 12, 1902. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo D. (Carpenter) Ferris, the former of whom was a native of the state of Ohio. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. DeLong, as follows: Earl, Harold, Clarice and Lorenzo. The mother was a most estimable Christian woman and held membership in the Congregational church. On the 27th of April, 1904, Mr. DeLong married Mrs. Margaret Wilson, whose maiden name was Riley, the widow of Elliott Wilson, by whom she had four children: William; James, who died at the age of fifteen years; Elliott; and Kenneth.

Mr. DeLong is a member of the Congregational church, and he is also affiliated with the Galesburg Club. He was a member of the executive board of Knox county agricultural association for thirteen years, and its treasurer for one year. His political support he gives to the republican party, but he has never held any office save that of school director while he was residing in Sparta township. He is one of the capable business men of Galesburg, where he has conducted his transactions in a highly creditable manner and is in every way regarded as a worthy representative of one of Knox county's estimable pioneer families.

C. W. ROE.

C. W. Roe successfully operates a finely equipped farm of three hundred and forty-two acres on sections 16 and 17 in Indian Point township, Knox county, nor far distant from his birthplace, section 20 of this township. The date of his birth was March 1, 1867. He is the son of T. H. and Lucinda (Stephenson) Roe. His early education C. W. Roe received in the Hunt district schools after which he attended Hedding College and the Dixon Normal school at Dixon, Illinois. When twenty-four years old he left home and began farming for himself on section 16, where he bought one hundred and seventy acres of land. This remained his home until January of the present year, when he removed to the farm on which he is now residing. The home is handsome and well constructed and thoroughly modern in all its appointments and the farm buildings also are substantial and equipped with every needed device for efficient farming and stock-raising, since Mr. Roe is extensively engaged in both of these occupations.

Mrs. C. W. Roe, who was formerly Miss Eva May Shaw, was married to Mr. Roe, February 22, 1900. She was born in Cedar township, Knox county, a daughter of Philip and Selecta (Morse) Shaw. Her parents, who are both dead, were among the New England settlers of Knox county, her father having

he took over the management of the homestead. He continued to operate the entire farm until after the death of his father in 1892, when he inherited one hundred and one and a half acres, that he cultivated together with some land he rented from the other heirs. In 1902, Mr. DeLong disposed of his property and came to Galesburg and embarked in the business he is still conducting. He was first associated with Ralph Belden, but for the past six years he has been in partnership with E. B. Ogden.

On the 5th of June, 1889, Mr. DeLong was united in marriage with Miss Genevieve Ferris, who passed away on January 12, 1902. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo D. (Carpenter) Ferris, the former of whom was a native of the state of Ohio. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. DeLong, as follows: Earl, Harold, Clarice and Lorenzo. The mother was a most estimable Christian woman and held membership in the Congregational church. On the 27th of April, 1904, Mr. DeLong married Mrs. Margaret Wilson, whose maiden name was Riley, the widow of Elliott Wilson, by whom she had four children: William; James, who died at the age of fifteen years; Elliott; and Kenneth.

Mr. DeLong is a member of the Congregational church, and he is also affiliated with the Galesburg Club. He was a member of the executive board of Knox county agricultural association for thirteen years, and its treasurer for one year. His political support he gives to the republican party, but he has never held any office save that of school director while he was residing in Sparta township. He is one of the capable business men of Galesburg, where he has conducted his transactions in a highly creditable manner and is in every way regarded as a worthy representative of one of Knox county's estimable pioneer families.

C. W. ROE.

C. W. Roe successfully operates a finely equipped farm of three hundred and forty-two acres on sections 16 and 17 in Indian Point township, Knox county, nor far distant from his birthplace, section 20 of this township. The date of his birth was March 1, 1867. He is the son of T. H. and Lucinda (Stephenson) Roe. His early education C. W. Roe received in the Hunt district schools after which he attended Hedding College and the Dixon Normal school at Dixon, Illinois. When twenty-four years old he left home and began farming for himself on section 16, where he bought one hundred and seventy acres of land. This remained his home until January of the present year, when he removed to the farm on which he is now residing. The home is handsome and well constructed and thoroughly modern in all its appointments and the farm buildings also are substantial and equipped with every needed device for efficient farming and stock-raising, since Mr. Roe is extensively engaged in both of these occupations.

Mrs. C. W. Roe, who was formerly Miss Eva May Shaw, was married to Mr. Roe, February 22, 1900. She was born in Cedar township, Knox county, a daughter of Philip and Selecta (Morse) Shaw. Her parents, who are both dead, were among the New England settlers of Knox county, her father having been a native of Maine and her mother a native of Massachusetts. They were married in the east and later settled in Indian Point township, where Mr. Shaw followed agricultural pursuits until his death on March 20, 1905. His wife's death occurred seventeen years earlier, on February 27, 1888.

To Mr. and Mrs. Roe were born four children, as follows: Lucile V., born December 11, 1901; Mildred S., born May 11, 1902; Marjorie, born February 26, 1905; and Delwyn Truman, born July 13, 1911. Mr. Roe votes the republican ticket but has never been an aspirant for office. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Abingdon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Roe are loyal supporters of the Congregational church and possess a large circle of friends in Abingdon and the neighboring communities.

ANDREW F. McCORNACK.

While living retired in Galesburg, Andrew F. McCornack is still interested in agricultural pursuits as the owner of three hundred and twenty-five acres of valuable land in Knox county, from which he derives a substantial annual income. While an active factor in the world's work he engaged in general farming and his diligence and intelligently directed industry were manifest in the excellent results that attended his labors, bringing him the handsome competence that now enables him to live retired. He was born in Knox county, August 14, 1839, and is, therefore, one of its oldest residents in years of continuous connection with this part of the state. His parents were Samuel and Jeannette (Tait) McCornack, who were natives of Scotland and were three months in making the trip from that country to Illinois, spending two months on the sea and the remainder of the time in crossing the country, journeying by canal and by wagon. The father was from Kirkcudbrightshire and it was in the year 1839 that he brought his family to the new world. He was a son of John McCornack, who also came to Knox county with his son and passed away here a short time afterward. He made his home with his son Andrew and died at a very advanced age. His wife, Mrs. McCornack, has long since passed away. The maternal grandfather of our subject was a lifelong resident of Scotland and following his death, his widow came to the new world, spending her last days in Knox county, her remains being interred in the John Knox cemetery. She had a small family, including Mrs. McQuie, Jeannette and William. In the family of John McCornack, the paternal grandfather, were the following children: Samuel, Robert, Andrew, John, William, James, Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, and Helen.

After crossing the Atlantic and making the long journey overland to Illinois, at a period when there were no railroads in this state, Samuel McCornack settled in Persifer township, where he took up the occupation of farming, purchasing thirty acres of land. Subsequently he removed to Copley township, establishing his home near Oneida, in 1852, and there he died when seventy-two years of age. His wife survived him for two or three years and was eighty-four years of age at the time of her demise. Both were Presbyterians in religious faith and he became a charter member of the John Knox church, in which he long served as elder, taking an active and helpful part in promoting the church work. He also held various township offices and for many years filled the position of supervisor. In his family were four children, William, Margaret, James L. and Andrew F.

The last named was reared in Persifer township, amid the wild scenes and environments of pioneer life, for Knox county was then a frontier district, in which comparatively little settlement had been made. He, therefore, became a factor in the early progress and improvement here and until his fifteenth year spent his time upon his father's farm, attending the district schools and also pursuing his education for a short period in Monmouth College. He then resumed the occupation of farming, which he has followed throughout his entire life and in which he is still engaged although now seventy-two years of age. He continued to assist in the cultivation of the old place until his marriage, when he established his home on one hundred and sixty acres of land in Copley township. This he improved and cultivated year after year, making his home upon that farm until 1895, when he removed to Galesburg, to occupy the present fine residence which he had erected the previous year. From here he has since supervised his agricultural interests and is now the owner of three hundred and twenty-five acres of rich and valuable land, which returns to him a gratifying annual income.

On the 24th of May, 1876, Andrew F. McCornack was united in marriage to Miss Ella B. Brown, who was born in Greene county, Ohio, November 26, 1845, a daughter of Robert and Jean (Carruthers) Brown. Her paternal grandfather was David Brown, who was married in Scotland, November 20, 1812, to Euphemia Fletcher. He was then twenty years of age, having been born in Berwickshire, Scotland, October 6, 1792, while his wife was born in Selkirkshire, June 1, 1788. Their children were Agnes, Robert, Walter and Magdalene. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. McCornack was John Carruthers, who wedded Mary Bell. They lived in Chillicothe, Ohio, coming there from Scotland with their children, and later were residents of Greene county, Ohio. They died when well advanced in years. Their family included Thomas, Sarah, Jean, William, James, Mary and Robert.

The parents of Mrs. McCornack were natives of Scotland and the father was only four years of age when brought by his parents to the United States, while the mother came in her teens. They were reared in Chillicothe, Ohio, and were married there, and their last days were passed in Greene county, the father dying in 1885, when seventy-four years of age, and the mother passing away in 1849. They had six children, of whom three reached maturity: John C., who is now living in Jamestown, Ohio; Thomas, of Coshocton, Ohio; and Ella, now Mrs. McCornack. Following the death of the mother the father afterward married again, his second wife being Margaret McCornack. They had a family of six children, of whom two reached adult age; Euphemia A., the wife of Warren Garrett, of Santa Cruz, California; and Andrew M. Brown, of Los Angeles.

To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew F. McCornack have been born two sons: Walter Roy, who is a graduate of the school of Technology in Boston, where he now follows the architect's profession; and Clyde, who is a civil engineer for the Phoenix Bridge Company of Phoenixville, Pennsylvania. The elder son married Lillian Amsden, and they have one son, Donald Amsden McCornack. The younger son wedded Mabel Robinson.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McCornack are members of the Presbyterian church, in which he is serving as an elder. His entire life has been passed in harmony with his professions, and principles of integrity and honor have shaped his career and made him one of the representative citizens of this county. It would be difficult to find one who has more intimate knowledge of its history, for he has lived to witness the many changes which have been wrought and which have brought the county from a wild condition to its present state of development and prosperity. Those who know him—and he has a wide acquaintance throughout this section of the state—entertain for him the highest regard because his life has been well spent in devotion to duty of both a public and private character.

GEORGE H. GRAHAM.

George H. Graham, a railway conductor living in Galesburg, was born at Savannah, Georgia, July 1, 1867, and is a son of Elisha J. and Marietta (Enochs) Graham. The father was born in Lexington, Kentucky, and the mother's birth also occurred in the Blue Grass state, the natal year being 1837. Elisha Graham learned the trades of coopering and carpentering in early life and about 1866 removed to Savannah, Georgia, becoming owner of a plantation in that locality, which he conducted for three years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Henderson, Kentucky, where he followed the carpenter's trade for a number of years. In 1899 he became a resident of Peoria, Illinois, where he again engaged in carpentering, being thus identified with building operations up to the time of his death, which occurred in March, 1894. His widow still survives him and is now a resident of Chicago. She holds membership in the Southern Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Graham is also a member. His political views accord with the principles of the democratic party. This couple was married in Lexington, Kentucky, and unto them were born six children of whom George H. is the eldest. The others are: Carrie, Lucretia and Minnie, all now deceased; Jennie, who is living with her mother; and Thomas, who has also passed away.

George H. Graham was educated in the schools of Evansville, Indiana, and began learning dentistry with Dr. Morris of that place, with whom he continued for a year. Finding the practice of the profession not congenial, he accepted the position on the Peoria, Lincoln & Decatur Railway as a brakeman, serving in that capacity for a year. He then entered the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company as brakeman and after two years was promoted to the position of conductor, in which capacity he has since served, now making the run between Galesburg and Quincy.

On the 23d of March, 1892, Mr. Graham was united in marriage to Miss Della Briggs, a daughter of Joshua and Mallay (Flowerree) Briggs, of Hannibal, Missouri. Mrs. Graham was born in Center, Missouri, September 27, 1872, was educated in the Louisiana (Mo.) Seminary and died on the 24th of March, 1911, leaving a son, Le Roy, who was born at Hannibal, Missouri, August 1, 1894, and survived his mother for only seven days, passing away on the 31st of March, 1911. Mr. Graham belongs to the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and to the Order of Railway Conductors. His political allegiance is given to the democratic party and he is a member of the Southern Methodist Episcopal church. Practically all of his business experience has been in the line of railroading and that he is capable and trustworthy is indicated in the fact that he has long been retained in the service of the company which he now represents. Perhaps no corporate interest demands greater faithfulness and loyalty on the part of its employes than do the railroads, knowing that they must safeguard the interests and lives of their patrons and long continuation in railway service is therefore incontrovertible proof of efficiency and loyalty on the part of an employe.

FRANK B. MOTT.

Frank B. Mott, one of the well known members of the state labor commission, who has been in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company for twenty-eight years, was born in Galva, Henry county, this state, on the 24th of September, 1861. His parents were William Henry and Jane Elizabeth (Hill) Mott, both natives of Dutchess county, New York, the father's birth having occurred at Poughkeepsie, on the 15th of March, 1836, and that of the mother at Lafayette, September 18, 1836. William H. Mott, who was a blacksmith, came west in 1853, locating at Wethersfield, Illinois. He remained there for a few months then returned to Dutchess county, where he and Miss Hill were married on the 20th of January, 1854. Very soon thereafter he and his bride came to Illinois settling at Galva. There he established a shop and followed his trade during the remainder of his active life. When the call came for troops during the early days of the war he enlisted as a member of the band of the Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, remaining at the front until the close of hostilities. After receiving his discharge, he returned to Galva and there resided until his death on April 10, 1904. The mother is still living and now makes her home in Brooklyn, New York, where her three youngest sons reside. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Mott numbered five, as follows: William Irving, who was born on March 24, 1860, and died on the 9th of May, 1890; Frank B., our subject; Oscar H., who was born on the 3d of December, 1863; Walter H., whose birth occurred on June 6, 1867; and Valentine E., whose natal day was the 17th of June, 1871. In matters of religious faith the father was a Baptist and the mother a Congregationalist, while fraternally he was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Masonic order. He was a stanch republican in his political views, and one time served as deputy sheriff of Henry county. In the paternal line the Motts trace their family back to the early colonial days. William Henry Mott was a son of Henry, who was born in Dutchess county, New York, on February 8, 1812, and married Margaret Denton. His father was William Mott, whose natal day was the 4th of December, 1787, and he in turn was descended from William Mott, who was born July 4, 1753, and married Letitia Lasee, whose birth occurred on the 25th of May, 1755.

It was in the public schools of Galva, this state, that Frank B. Mott received his education, his student days being terminated at the age of thirteen years. He began to work out as a farm hand, but later gave up this vocation and went to work in a drug store, in Galva, where he learned the trade. On the 17th

On the 28th of November, 1888, Mr. Mott was married to Miss Dora Morgan, a daughter of Joseph and Harriet (Dunn) Morgan, of Gladstone, Illinois. The parents are both natives of Kentucky, the father's birth having occurred in Bracken county, that state, in the vicinity of Louisville. Mr. and Mrs. Mott have one daughter, Vera M., who was born at Gladstone, Illinois, October 8, 1889.

Fraternally, Mr. Mott is affiliated with the Brotherhood of Rail Trainmen, being a charter member of Galesburg Division, No. 24, in which he has held all of the offices. He also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Galesburg Lodge, No. 894, and the Modern Woodmen of America, Galesburg Camp No. 667; and Mrs. Mott is a member of the Advent church. His political support is given to the republicans, and he is a member of the board of supervisors. All matters affecting the welfare of the working classes engage the interest of Mr. Mott, who is a member of the Illinois State Labor Commission, and as such devotes much time and attention to those vital questions pertaining to the conditions that surround the laborer and involve society generally.

AARON GORDON HUMPHREY, M. D.

In the long years of his residence in Galesburg Dr. Aaron G. Humphrey has engaged in the practice of medicine and has also become well known in connection with his activities along horticultural lines. He resides at No. 325 Division street, in the midst of a twenty-acre fruit farm, on which he has made his home since 1890. He was born in Lancaster county, Ohio, about fourteen miles north of Columbus, July 19, 1832. His parents, Aaron Gordon and Betsey (Starr) Humphrey, were natives of Connecticut and the former when a lad of about six years accompanied his parents on their removal from the Charter Oak state to Ohio and grew to manhood in the vicinity of Columbus. There he was married and engaged in farming. He also became a local minister of the Methodist church and during the greater part of his life divided his time between agricultural pursuits and the preaching of the gospel. In 1840 he removed westward to Iowa, settling in Cedar county upon a farm two miles south of Tipton. That district was then comparatively new and unsettled and, while taking an active part in its agricultural development, he also contributed to its moral progress through his teachings as a minister of the Methodist church. Later, however, careful study led him to embrace the doctrines of the Universalist church and he was ordained as a minister of that faith in Iowa City, Iowa, preaching his own ordination sermon. He became well known as a representative of that denomination in eastern Iowa, preaching the gospel as he interpreted it to the time of his death, which occurred when he was seventy-seven years of age. His wife passed away when about sixty-five years of age. Politically he was a radical whig and several times served as chairman of the conventions of his party. He also delivered many public addresses in support of the principles which he advocated and was a recognized party leader in his adopted state. Unto him and his wife were born ten children, four sons and six daughters, Lurinda, Philo D., Chester C., Aaron G., Lucinda, John W., Sophronia, Laura, Emily and Eliza.

Of this family Dr. Humphrey, the fourth in order of birth, was a young lad when he accompanied his parents on their removal to Iowa, where he continued his education as a pupil in the Congregationalist school at Davenport and afterward in the Baptist Seminary of Mount Carroll, Illinois. He also engaged in teaching for about three terms in Iowa. With his first wife he went to New York city, where both studied medicine and surgery in the Hygio-therapeutic College, from which both were graduated. They afterward opened a health institution at Lancaster, Ohio, where they practiced for several years, and then came to Galesburg, opening a similar institution in this city in the northern part of the town. About fifty years ago Dr. Humphrey removed to the Lombard fruit farm in the southeastern part of Galesburg and in connection with the conduct of his health institute also engaged extensively in horticultural pursuits, conducting his fruit farm until 1890, when he removed to his present residence—a comfortable, two-story frame dwelling, standing in the midst of a twenty-acre tract of land devoted to the raising of vegetables and fruits. Here he conducted his health institute for about ten years but since that time has practically lived retired, giving his attention only to the raising of fine fruits and fine poultry, which work he carries on through the aid of an assistant. He has ever been a close student of the scientific methods of fruit-raising and is a life member of the State Horticultural Society. His broad reading and study and his practical experience have made his opinions largely an authority upon the production of various kinds of fruit in this section. In the course of years he accumulated an extensive library on horticulture, which he has now given to two colleges.

More than a half century ago Dr. Humphrey lost his first wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah R. Randall and was a daughter of Richard Randall. On the 16th of February, 1868, he married Lovina Swartzendruver, a daughter of Christian and Catharine (Berges) Swartzendruver. Mrs. Humphrey was born in Wayne county, Ohio, October 11, 1844. Her maiden name indicates her German ancestry. Her paternal grandparents were Vincent and Mary (Brennemann) Swartzendruver, who spent their entire lives in Germany. Her maternal grandparents were Christian and Christina (Gingerich) Berges. The parents of Mrs. Humphrey were natives of Waldeck, Germany, and in early life came to the new world. In 1861 they removed to Davis county, Iowa, where her father died at the age of eighty-three years, while her mother reached the advanced age of eighty-eight. They were the parents of ten children, all of whom lived to adult age, namely, Susan, John, Elizabeth, Fanny, Mary, Daniel, Solomon, Rebecca, Christian and Lovina. As previously stated, the last named became the wife of Dr. Humphrey in 1868 and they have one son, Albert S., who is teaching the art of expression and public speaking in the Westport high school of Kansas City, Missouri. He is a graduate of the Columbia School of Oratory, now the Columbia College of Expression of Chicago, and for seven years was at the head of the department of expression in Knox College at Galesburg. Dr. and Mrs. Humphrey attend the Universalist church and for many years he has been affiliated with the Odd Fellows society and is a past grand of Galesburg lodge. His political allegiance has been given the republican party since its organization and in former years he was somewhat active politically, serving as alderman of the city, also as a member of the board of health for a number of years and as city physician for some time. In past years he has been a frequent contributor to the press, writing numerous articles for medical journals, free-thought magazines and agricultural papers, as well as for the local press. His articles have always shown originality, careful investigation of the subject discussed, and a breadth of vision that has awakened the interest and attention of many readers.

CHARLES M. HAWKINSON.

Charles M. Hawkinson, who has been a resident of Galesburg for twenty-one years during which time he has been identified with the building interests, first in the capacity of a carpenter, later as a contractor and now as the owner and operator of a planing mill, was born in Kronoberg (laen), Sweden, on the 24th of April, 1872. He is a son of Hoken and Bertha (Anderson) Nelson, also natives of Sweden, whence they emigrated to the United States in 1887. Upon his arrival in this country Hoken Nelson, who is also a carpenter, came directly to Galesburg, and very soon thereafter obtained work in the lumber yard of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. He continued in their employ for twenty years, but is now living retired in Galesburg. The mother passed away in March, 1911, at the age of seventy-one years. She was an earnest member of the Swedish Lutheran church, with which the father is also affiliated. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, three of whom are still living as follows: Charles M., John A. and Jennie. The paternal grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. Nels Tjell, both of whom passed their entire lives in Sweden, his death occurring at the age of eighty-three years and hers at eighty-two. Five children were born to them, among them: Hoken, the father of our subject; Carl and Jans.

Having remained a resident of his native land until he had attained the age of eighteen years, Charles M. Hawkinson obtained his education in the common schools, which he attended until he was fifteen. He then laid aside his text-books and began his apprenticeship as a carpenter, continuing to serve at this trade until he took passage for America in 1890. Upon his arrival in this country he came directly to Galesburg to join his parents and here he has ever since resided. When he first came here he obtained employment at his trade and for some years thereafter worked under the supervision and direction of others. He is a skilled mechanic, however, efficient and capable and as he applied himself painstakingly and conscientiously to any task assigned him, soon established a reputation for trustworthiness and reliability as well as good workmanship, that is a most valuable asset to any craftsman. Thus he was subsequently able to begin working independently and for six years successfully engaged in contracting. In 1910 he decided to extend his activities along another line and established a planing mill that he has now been operating for more than a year. Although he has been identified with this industry for but a brief period, it has been of sufficient length for him to make some estimate of the probable development of the undertaking, and judging by present indications he has every reason for feeling most encouraged and hopeful regarding the future of his business. Mr. Hawkinson has the advantage of knowing the local conditions from first hand, and he also enjoys a wide and favorable acquaintance among workmen, which has been of inestimable assistance to him in the upbuilding of his factory. At the present time it requires the services of from two to five employes to fill the orders and his trade is constantly increasing in a most gratifying manner.

On the 24th of September, 1902, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Hawkinson and Miss Ellen M. Nelson, who was also born in Sweden, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Erickson. At the age of twelve years Mrs. Hawkinson emigrated to the United States, locating in Galesburg, where she was joined four years later by her parents and the other members of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson, who are still residents of this city, are the parents of six children, as follows: Amanda, who is deceased; Sophie; Carl Oscar; Hannah; Swan; and Ellen M., now Mrs. Hawkinson. Two daughters and one son have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hawkinson: Alice Sophie, Carl Wilfred and Marion Irene.

In matters of faith both Mr. and Mrs. Hawkinson are Lutherans and hold membership in the Swedish church of this city, and in politics he is a Republican. He has never sought official honors, preferring to concentrate his energies upon the development of his own undertakings, in which he is meeting with a goodly measure of success. Mr. Hawkinson possesses the perseverance and determination and also the capability to attain prosperity and is so intelligently directing his present industry that it gives every assurance of becoming one of the well established and flourishing enterprises of the city.

DAVID WILLARD BRADSHAW.

On the long list of Galesburg's honored dead appear the names of a number who rendered valiant service to their country in the darkest hour of its history,—men who faced the enemy's fire under conditions which tried the stoutest hearts. Among this number was David Willard Bradshaw, and through his valor and loyalty he rose from the ranks to become captain of his company. He afterward lived for many years in Galesburg, where he was known as a worthy and respected citizen. He was born in Montgomery county, Kentucky, December 26, 1836. His education was acquired in the schools of his native state and when seventeen years of age he became a resident of Farmington, Illinois, where he learned the carriage-maker's trade. In 1855 he removed to Abingdon, Knox county, settling upon a farm, and to the cultivation of the fields he devoted his energies until after the outbreak of the Civil war, when his patriotic spirit was aroused and on the 10th of August, 1861, he enlisted, joining the boys in blue of Company D, Seventh Illinois Cavalry. He left Knoxville on the 2d of September for Camp Butler and was soon promoted to the rank of first sergeant and in the spring of 1862 became a lieutenant of his company. Further promotion followed and in the spring of 1863 he was chosen captain, with which rank he served until honorably discharged on the 17th of November, 1865. His own bravery and loyalty inspired and encouraged men who served under him and made his military record a most creditable and worthy one.

When the war was over, Mr. Bradshaw returned to Knox county and his fellow townsmen, appreciative of his worth and ability, and feeling that a loyal soldier would also make a loyal officer in private life, elected him sheriff in 1866. He removed to Knoxville, where he resided until his term of office expired and then came to Galesburg, where he engaged in the livery business. In this connection he secured a liberal patronage, because of his earnest effort to please his customers and his straightforward dealing. The years brought him success as the reward of his industry and close application to business and with a comfortable competence he retired, spending his remaining days in the enjoyment of well earned rest.

On the 29th of May, 1868, Mr. Bradshaw was united in marriage to Miss Ella Cooley, a daughter of Zelotes and Julia Ann (Hanks) Cooley of Knoxville, Illinois. Her father was born in East Windsor, Connecticut, November 10, 1808, and was a son of Aaron and Chloe (Bidwell) Cooley, of whose four children he was the eldest. In 1816 the family removed to Glastonbury, Connecticut, and Zelotes afterward learned the carpenter's trade in Hartford that state. Later he engaged in carpentering in Westfield, Massachusetts, but eventually abandoned industrial pursuits to enter commercial circles and established a grocery store in Poughkeepsie, New York. There he resided until September, 1837, when he left the east and came to the middle west, settling in Carthage, Illinois, where he formed a partnership with Alva Wheeler and again took up carpentering and contracting. They built the courthouse at Carthage, Illinois, and in 1839 came to Knoxville, erecting the courthouse of Knox county. Mr. Cooley continued in the contracting business until 1846, when, by the board of county commissioners, he was appointed treasurer of the county, which office he filled until the following year, when he was elected county clerk thus serving until December, 1852. He retired from office as he had entered it, with the confidence and good-will of all concerned. In the meantime he had taken up the study of law, which profession he practiced until his death. He became a resident of Galesburg in 1890 and needed no introduction to the people of this city because of his long previous residence in the adjoining village of Knoxville. In his political views he was a democrat, somewhat active in the work of the party, and in its councils his opinions carried weight. After seven years of residence in Galesburg, he passed away in 1897, having for a long period survived his wife, who died in 1868. They had been married, in December, 1833, and their family included Mrs. Bradshaw, who was born in Knoxville, March 14, 1844. Her education was acquired in St. Mary's Academy of that place and in 1868 she gave her hand in marriage to David W. Bradshaw. To them were born four children: Nellie, who was born in Galesburg and is now deceased; Cooley R., living in this city; Vera Margaret, who is now the wife of Presson Waverly Thomson, of Los Angeles, California; and Fred, deceased.

Mr. Bradshaw always maintained pleasant relations with his old army comrades through his membership in the Grand Army post. He belonged also to the Masonic fraternity, which found in him an exemplary representative, loyal to its teachings, concerning mutual helpfulness and brotherly kindness. In his political views he was a republican but cared nothing for the honors or emoluments of office. He was always loyal in matters of citizenship, manifesting the same faithfulness to his country that he displayed when he followed the old flag on southern battlefields. He died February 12, 1893, when in the fifty-seventh year of his life, and the community lost a worthy and representative citizen, who throughout the long period of his residence here had enjoyed the friendship and high regard of those with whom he had been associated.

W. H. MONTGOMERY.

W. H. Montgomery, who is engaged in the operation of a fine farm of eighty acres on section 13, Persifer township, has the distinction of having served for thirty years as a school director in his district. He was born in Knox township, this county, on the 13th of December, 1849, and is a son of Zadok and Sarah (Church) Montgomery. His father, who was left an orphan in his early boyhood, was a native of Indiana, whence he came in 1837, at the age of twelve years, to Knox county with his brother. Here he completed his education in one of the subscription schools, subsequently turning his attention to agricultural pursuits. Immediately after his marriage he located on eighty acres of land in Knox township, that he had previously purchased, and there he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He met with excellent success in both undertakings and ultimately became the owner of four fine farms in Iowa. In his political views Mr. Montgomery was originally a republican, but in his later years he preferred the policy of the populist party. He passed away at the age of seventy-five years and was laid to rest in Van Gilder cemetery in Knox township. The mother was a native of West Virginia and a daughter of Cyrus and Margaret Church, who were also born in West Virginia. They came to Knox county during the pioneer days and located on a farm in Knox township, where they spent their last days. Mrs. Montgomery was sixty-six at the time of her death and she is buried in the family lot in Van Gilder cemetery. She was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church, with which she had long been affiliated. Her grandfather in the maternal line, John Williams, was a veteran of the Revolution, while her grandfather, Church, participated in the war of 1812. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Zadock Montgomery there were born three sons and seven daughters, nine of whom are now living. In order of birth they are as follows: Margaret, the wife of James Coburn of Iowa; W. H., our subject; David and John, twins, the former a resident of East Galesburg, and the latter formerly of Galesburg, now deceased; Martha, now Mrs. Moser, of Dahinda; Sabina, the wife of Henry Wyman, of Oneida, Illinois; Mary, who married Walter Beaver, of Kansas; Jennie, the wife of George Gilbert, of Oklahoma; Clara, who married Allen Ramble, of the state of Washington; and Letta, now Mrs. Daniel Doan, of Iowa.

MR. AND MRS. W. H. MONTGOMERY

As he was the eldest boy in a large family, where the income was limited, W. H. Montgomery's schooling was confined to a few terms in the districts of Knox and Persifer townships, his text-books early being laid aside in order that he might assist in the support of the other children. Agricultural pursuits have always engaged his attention, and soon after his marriage he settled in Bureau county, Illinois, but later removed to Persifer township, where he has now resided for many years. He purchased the farm he now owns from his brother, David L. Montgomery. He has made extensive improvements in the place during the period of his ownership, having erected all of the buildings now standing, in addition to which he has effected many minor changes. His fields have always been devoted to the raising of such cereals as were best adapted to the soil and climate in connection with which he also raises stock.

For his wife Mr. Montgomery chose Miss Dora E. Dawson, who was born in this township and is a daughter of James and Margaret Dawson, both of whom are now deceased. Of this marriage there have been born two children: Stella May, who died at the age of three months; and James Isaac, who was nine years at the time of his death.

In all national elections Mr. Montgomery votes the straight democratic ticket but locally he gives his support to the man he deems best qualified to meet the requirements of the office, regardless of party affiliation. He has always taken an active and helpful interest in governmental affairs in his township, and is now serving his second term as supervisor, having been elected on the people's ticket. He has also served for four years as justice of the peace, was the township assessor for two terms, road commissioner for one and served on the school-board, the cause of education ever having found in him an ardent supporter.

WILLIAM BURDETTE MOORE.

William Burdette Moore is classed with the enterprising business men of Altona where he is engaged in dealing in harness and saddlery. He was born in the town, December 10, 1867, and comes of English ancestry. His father, William Moore, was born in England, July 4, 1833, and was only a child when he came with his parents to America, the family locating in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, where the grandfather and his wife spent their entire lives. Their son, William Moore, took up the trade of harness making and when a young man came to Altona, arriving in this county in 1857. He then abandoned his trade and engaged in farming for several years but afterward returned to the harness-making business. On the 25th of May, 1861, only a few weeks after the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted for service as a private, joining Company D, Seventeenth Illinois Infantry, at Altona for a period of three years. Later he reenlisted as principal musician of the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment, on the 28th of January, 1865. He had been ruptured during the period of his first enlistment so that at his second enrollment in the service he was assigned to less arduous duty as drum major. Following the war he returned home and engaged in the harness business in Altona up to the time of his death, which occurred May 13, 1907. He was a prominent Mason and was a citizen whose military service was indicative of the loyalty which he always displayed to his adopted country and her welfare. He married Mrs. John Bemis, who is now living at the age of seventy-nine years. She was married twice, her first husband having been John Bemis, who died, leaving one son, J. L. Bemis, who is now in the mail service and resides in Galesburg. Unto Mrs. Moore's second marriage there were born three children: William Burdette; Abbie, the wife of C. E. Linney; and Daisy, the wife of W. Alexander, master mechanic with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

After acquiring a public-school education William B. Moore assisted his father in the harness business until 1888, when he left Illinois for Concordia, Kansas, where he engaged in clerking in a dry-goods store for two years. He afterward spent four years in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, devoting two years of that time to service as bill clerk for the North Western Railway Company. He afterward became fireman on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad and later returned to Altona and joined his father as a partner in the harness-making business. This association was maintained until 1900, when Mr. Moore purchased his father's interest, the latter retiring at that time. William B. Moore still continues his harness and saddlery establishment and enjoys a good trade. He has worked up a satisfactory business as the owner of an extensive apiary and is one of the prominent representatives of bee culture in this part of the state. That he is regarded as authority upon the subject and is prominent in this field of activity is indicated by the fact that he is now first vice president of the Illinois State Bee Keepers Association.

Mr. Moore was united in marriage to Miss Mary O. Bigger, who was born August 17, 1870, in southern Illinois, a daughter of Robert and Angeline (Cutright) Bigger. Her father is a Civil war veteran and is now at the Soldiers' Home, in Quincy, Illinois. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Moore have been born five children, Donald Chase, Faith Angeline, Harriet Inez, Hazel Mary and Abbie Bell.

Mr. Moore is a member of the Methodist church, in the work of which he is actively interested, serving at the present time as one of the church trustees. He also belongs to the Masonic lodge and the Maccabees at Altona and is a prominent and influential worker in the ranks of the republican party. Since 1904 he has served as village clerk and his worth, fidelity and capability in office was indicated by the fact that he has served in this position for seven years. He has a wide acquaintance in this part of the county and is accounted one of the leading and representative citizens because of his business activity and progress and his devotion to the political and religious principles in which he believes.

HEBER GILLIS.

Heber Gillis, who for more than half a century has been a resident of Knox county, is now living retired on his farm, which is situated in Rio township. He was born in Argyle, Washington county, New York, September 8, 1837, his parents being Dr. George and Mary (Shepard) Gillis, the father a native of Argyle, born November 6, 1798, and the mother of Clinton county, born in September, 1809. The family originally came from Scotland, the grandfather, Alexander Gillis, being a native of that country, who was allotted by the British government a tract of land in New York, where he settled in a community of people of his own religious faith. Dr. Gillis was reared in his native state and received his professional education in the New York City Medical College, after which he practiced in his native state until 1858. In that year he removed to Illinois, settling near the village of Rio, in Rio township, where he intended to live retired but his calls were so numerous that he continued in practice until his death, which occurred March 1, 1871. He had thus been in active practice over forty-five years. The mother, Mary (Shepard) Gillis, belonged to a family that originally came from Connecticut. Her father, who was a merchant, was killed in the war of 1812. After his death she and her mother resided with an uncle, who was a prominent lawyer in his time. He was also an extensive slave owner but later became an abolitionist. His son was the founder of Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio.

Heber Gillis, who was reared in his native state, began his education in an academy there, later attended Union College and subsequently began farming. In 1856 he came to Knox county, where he purchased his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres and has resided on the same ever since. He engaged in general farming and also raised quite extensively thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs. He has been very successful in his farming interests and is now living retired.

In October, 1872, Mr. Gillis was married to Miss Medora Milton, who was a daughter of George and Mary A. Milton, of Ontario township. The father was a farmer by occupation and came from Indiana to Knox county, Illinois, in the early '30s, settling in Ontario township. His daughter, a sister of Mrs. Gillis, was the first white child born in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Gillis have become the parents of three children: Nellie; James; and Myra, who is now the wife of Dr. Arthur E. Gammage, of Chicago.

Mr. Gillis is a republican in politics and has taken an active interest in local party work. He has now resided in Rio township on his present farm for over fifty-five years and has been an interested witness to the growth and development of this section of the country. He has here, both in the business and social world, a host of friends to whom his life record is well known and who regard him as a man of genuine worth and sterling integrity.

ANDREW BORLAND ANDERSON.

Closely associated with the financial interests of Knox county is the name of Andrew Borland Anderson, senior member of the firm A. B. Anderson & Son, of Oneida. Of Scotch ancestry he was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, September 10, 1832. His father, James Anderson, a son of John Anderson, was a blacksmith by trade, following this occupation all his life in his native country. In 1860 he came to America and made his home with his son in Knox county. He died here in 1865. Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Mary Borland and they were the parents of nine children.

Andrew Borland Anderson was educated in Scotland in the common schools and in a private institution. He was trained at the forge and became a blacksmith but did not work at this occupation long before he resolved to go to America and seek larger opportunities for making his fortune and wider fields for his activities. In 1850 he landed on this side of the Atlantic and settled in Paris, Ontario, Canada. In the spring of 1853 he crossed the border and found his way to Illinois, locating in Victoria, Knox county, where he followed his trade for a few years. In 1857 he purchased a building in Oneida and twenty years later engaged in the banking business here in partnership with Frank Murdoch. Good judgment in financial matters and in investments as well as a liberal business policy soon proved Mr. Anderson and his partner efficient business managers, who were successful in building up a banking institution that is a great credit to Oneida. In 1908 Mr. Murdoch died and thereupon Mr. Anderson's son John, who had been a bookkeeper up to this time, was taken into the company and the firm style became A. B. Anderson & Son. Besides this chief business interest Mr. Anderson owns six hundred acres of land in Knox county and other holdings in various counties, and he is a stockholder in the Galesburg National Bank. He is an enterprising man and despite his advanced years is energetic and keen in business transactions.

The marriage of Mr. Anderson and Miss Mary McQuie occurred in December, 1860. Three children were born of this union: William H., who lives on his father's farm, is married and has six children; John H., who is married and is in partnership with his father in the bank; and Mary Ella, the wife of Dr. Stewart of Oneida, who lives with her father and has one boy.

In his political views Mr. Anderson is a democrat, believing in the principles of that party and voting for its men and supporting its measures. He served in the office of treasurer of the township for twenty years. Fraternally he is connected with the Odd Fellows of Oneida and with the local lodge of the Masonic order, in which he has held all the offices. Those who know Mr. Anderson—and his acquaintance is a wide one, extending beyond the confines of Knox county—esteem him for his lofty sense of honor and his unfailing integrity.

JOHN R. PARKINSON.

John R. Parkinson, cashier of the Bank of Wataga, is one of the enterprising young men of Sparta township, of which he is a native, his birth having here occurred on June 19, 1893. He is the only child born of the union of Samuel R. and Elizabeth (Campbell) Parkinson, prominent in Knox county and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

Reared amid the environments of a good home, in the acquirement of an education John R. Parkinson was sent to the public school at the usual age, remaining a student there until he completed his course at sixteen. From his earliest boyhood principles of thrift and industry were inculated in his youthful mind, and while yet a young lad he began preparations for a useful business career by assisting his father, who in addition to his various other interests was engaged in the general mercantile business. After completing his education he entered the bank as clerk and general bookkeeper, in which capacity he served with such efficiency that he is now cashier. He is an industrious, enterprising young man, whose abilities and opportunities should enable him to become one of the foremost business men of this section of the county.

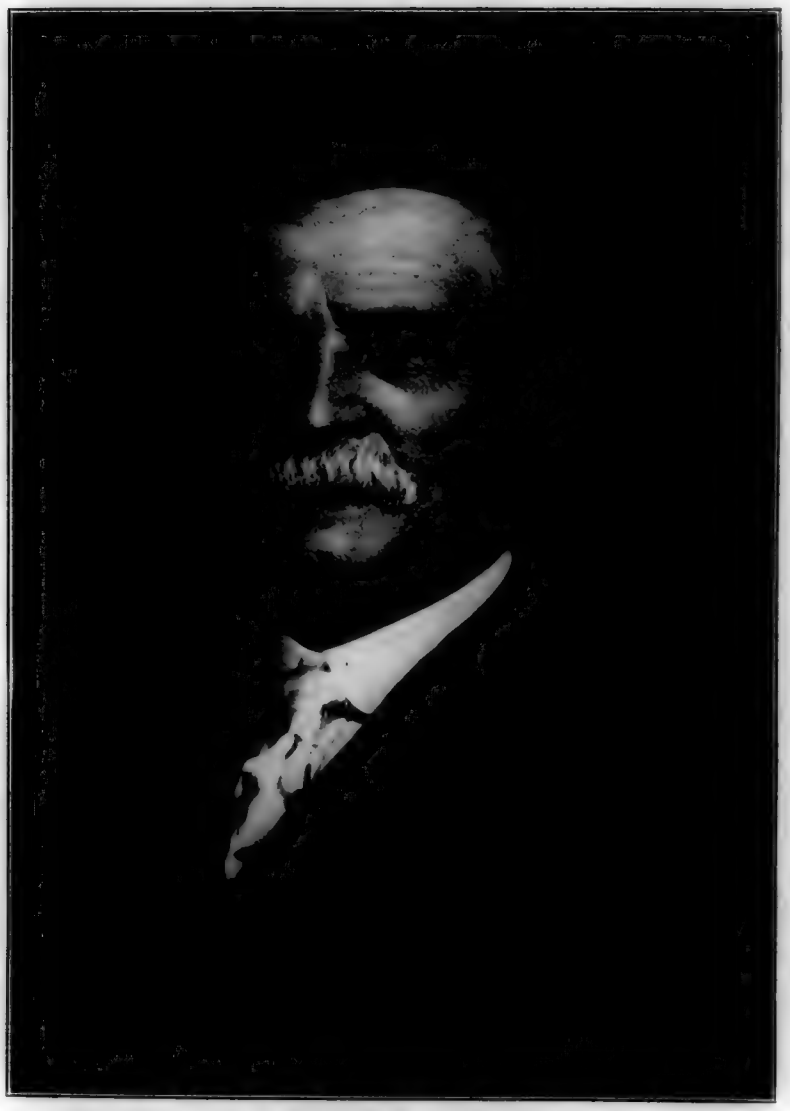
Mr. Parkinson lives at home. He is not yet old enough to cast a ballot, while his church connection is that of the Roman Catholic. He represents the third generation of his family in this township, in the upbuilding of which they have been important factors.

CARL WARNER MERRILL.

Carl Warner Merrill, manager of the Terry Lumber Company was born in La Porte, Indiana, on the 9th of October, 1865, the youngest child of Joseph H. and Nancy J. (Wadsworth) Merrill. They were both natives of the state of New York, the father's birth having occurred at Lebanon Springs, Columbia county, February 17, 1828, and that of the mother in Randolph, Cattaraugus county, on the 24th of August, 1832. Joseph H. Merrill, who was a son of John Merrill, a native of Connecticut, and the fourth child in a family of ten, was reared in the town of his birth, where he received a meager education, after which he apprenticed himself to the carpenter's trade under an uncle for three years for the sum of one hundred dollars. He completed his period of service in 1844 and immediately thereafter went to La Porte, Indiana, entering the employment of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, with whom he remained for six years. Later he engaged in contracting in connection with which he also conducted a meat market for a time, continuing to reside in La Porte until 1868. On the 26th of March of that year he located in Wataga, where he resumed his contracting, this business engaging his attention until 1900. During that time he became associated with W. H. Wood in the lumber business, of which enterprise he subsequently became the sole owner. In 1880 he purchased and removed to the present location of C. L. Tomkins, where he continued to be engaged in the lumber business until 1905, when he sold his interests to Terry & Lewis, now W. E. Terry & Company, living retired until his death on the 24th of March, 1910. Joseph Merrill was twice married, his first union having been with Miss Rena J. Wadsworth, who died in 1851. She was a daughter of Samuel Fenn Wadsworth, while her mother prior to her marriage was a Miss Wheeler. For his second wife Mr. Merrill chose his sister-in-law, Miss Nancy J. Wadsworth, who passed away on the 12th of October, 1906. Three children were born of this union: Leroy, who is deceased; Cora, of Wataga; and Carl Warner, our subject. Fraternally Mr. Merrill was a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Wataga Lodge, No. 291, A. F. & A. M. and the Order of the Eastern Star. He was also affiliated with the Odd Fellows, holding membership in Wataga Lodge, No. 598, I. O. O. F. and the Rebekah Lodge. Both he and his wife were united with the Baptist church, and politically he was a republican. He always took an active interest in all municipal affairs and served for eight years as president of the village board.



Wataga has been the home of Carl Warner Merrill since he was a child of three years. At the usual age he entered the public schools, where he mastered the common branches, until seventeen years of age. For three years thereafter he worked as a laborer, during which time he also assisted his father about the lumberyard. In 1892 he engaged in painting and paper hanging, following this vocation continuously for eleven years. Mr. Merrill assumed the management of the Terry Lumber Company in October, 1906, and has ever since been identified with this position.

On the 15th of June, 1892, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Merrill and Miss Alice E. Milroy, whose birth occurred on the 10th of January, 1868. Mrs. Merrill is a daughter of John E. and Rachel (Waffle) Milroy, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of the United States and of English descent. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Merrill has been born one child who died in infancy.

His allegiance in matters politic Mr. Merrill gives to the republican party and has always been a prominent factor in the government of the municipality, having long been a member of the board of aldermen, while for thirteen years he was village clerk. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic order, holding membership in Wataga Lodge, No. 291, A. F. & A. M.; and Oneida Chapter, No. 173, R. A. M. He also belongs to the Woodmen of America, being affiliated with Wataga Camp, No. 3229, and the Odd Fellows, his local connection being with Wataga Lodge, No. 598. Mr. Merrill is widely known in and about Wataga, where he has many friends, the majority of whom were the comrades of his boyhood, their loyalty being a tribute to his character.

ALBERT HERMAN ALLEN.

Albert Herman Allen is now living retired, save that he is financially interested in some business projects, a life of well directed energy and thrift having brought him to his present substantial position, which renders further active labor unnecessary as a means of support and comfort. He is one of Galesburg's native sons, his birth having here occurred, June 9, 1841. His parents, Sheldon William and Fidelia (Leach) Allen, were both natives of Oneida county, New York, and the former was a young man when he removed westward to Knox county, Illinois, making the journey across the country with a team and wagon, accompanied by his wife and their one child, James S. Allen, who was then a year and a half old. At length they arrived in Log City, Knox county, in June, 1837, and there resided until 1838, when they came to Galesburg, the father erecting a house at the corner of Mulberry street and Allen avenue, which residence is still the property of his son Albert. The father was a farmer by occupation and also followed the butchering business but retired several years prior to his death. In all of his business affairs he was very successful, never allowing difficulties or obstacles to bar his path if they could be overcome by honorable and persistent effort. He donated to the city the land which is now called Allen avenue. He was the owner of twenty acres between Main and South streets and also of forty acres at the corner of Main and Farnum streets. He platted this land into city lots, calling it the S. W. Allen addition, and through the sale of real estate added materially to his income. He was always a stanch republican in politics but never aspired to office, preferring to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs, which ultimately brought him a gratifying return. Both he and his wife were members of the old First church and their influence was a substantial factor in the moral development and progress of the community. They were married in Oneida county, New York, in 1834, and became the parents of eleven children: James Sherman, now living in Galesburg; Sheldon Oberlin, who died in 1901, leaving a widow, who resides at No. 1416 North Broad street; Albert Herman; Henry Alonzo, who is living in Summerville, Tennessee; Norman T., of Galesburg; Chester Ephraim, who makes his home at the corner of Mulberry and Pearl streets; Mary Fidelia, the deceased wife of John H. Wyckoff, of Canton, Illinois; John Stebbins, a practicing physician of Keithsburg, Illinois; Frank S., a resident of Los Angeles, California; Lida, the wife of Adam Kiefner, of Aspen, Colorado; and Fred S., who is living in St. Augustine, Florida.

When he had mastered the branches of learning taught in the public schools of Galesburg, Albert H. Allen continued his education in Madison University, at Hamilton, New York. He worked upon his father's farm until 1867 and then engaged in the butchering and live-stock business for twenty years, meeting with success in that undertaking whereby he was enabled at length to live retired. He was diligent and determined and carried forward to completion whatever he undertook. In his trade transactions he was always thoroughly reliable yet watchful of the details of his business, while sound judgment was brought to bear in the management of his affairs and ultimately won for him a handsome competence. He is still a stockholder in the Galesburg Telephone Company, the First National Bank and also in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad.

Mr. Allen has been married twice. On the 1st of April, 1861, he wedded Miss Mary Agnes Leach, a daughter of Daniel and Agnes (Baird) Leach, of Marine City, Michigan. The children of that marriage are: Rose Agnes, who first became the wife of Felix M. Katar, her second marriage being with Captain J. R. Basiger, of Auburndale, Florida; Jennie Leach, at home; and Daniel Ephraim, of Galesburg. The wife and mother passed away, January 19, 1876, and on the 26th of December, 1899, Mr. Allen was married to Miss Lillian Goddard, a daughter of George C. and Agnes (Friend) Goddard, of Larned, Kansas. Her father was born in New York city, February 7, 1824, and his wife's birth occurred in Washington county, Maryland, July 27, 1829. He came to Illinois in the early '40s, settling in Fulton county, where he followed farming, but in 1863 he removed to Canton, Illinois, in order to better educate his children. In 1884 he removed to Larned, Kansas, where he carried on general agricultural pursuits for ten years and then retired, still making his home in Larned. He is a stanch advocate of republican principles and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, his religious belief having been the guiding factor in his life. His wife, who died February 12, 1906, was also a member of that church. Their daughter, Mrs. Allen, was born January 25, 1861, near Canton. Mr. Allen also has several grandchildren, namely: Lillian Leah Katar, born January 15, 1894; Violet Josephine Allen, born April 25, 1896; Glenn Hubert Allen, born May 10, 1898; and Herman Meeks Allen, born March 20, 1903.

Throughout the entire period of his residence in Galesburg and this part of the state Mr. Allen has been deeply interested in public projects and those movements which have direct bearing upon the welfare and progress of the community. He has always voted with the republican party yet has never been an aspirant for public office. For three years he was a member of the Galesburg Fire Department and served as its chief. He attends the First Methodist Episcopal church and at all times has been interested in those projects which have contributed to the material, intellectual, social and moral welfare of the community. His life record proves that success is not a matter of genius, as held by some, but is rather the outcome of clear judgment, experience and indefatigable energy, for those qualities have been salient factors in the success which has crowned his labors, enabling him now to live retired in the enjoyment of comforts won by his former toil.

ANDREW OLIVER LINDSTRUM.

Andrew Oliver Lindstrum needs no introduction to the citizens of Galesburg, for he is well known in its business circles as a prominent representative of insurance and commercial interests, being at the head of the Lindstrum Insurance Agency, secretary of the Provident Savings Association and president of the Lindstrum-West Drug Company. His record as an enterprising, progressive and reliable business man is a credit to Illinois, his native state. He was born, twenty-six miles northeast of Galesburg, at Bishop Hill, May 29, 1873, and is a son of Erick and Breta (Oleson) Lindstrum. The father was born in Westmanland, Sweden, December 24, 1822, and the mother's birth occurred in Helsingland, Sweden, August 5, 1827. Both were members of the Bishop Hill Colony. The former came to the United States in 1850, and was a farmer by occupation. After the dissolution of the colony he engaged in tilling the soil until his death, which occurred at Bishop Hill, March 8, 1889. His wife had passed away on the 27th of December, 1887. They were both members of the Methodist Episcopal church and took active and helpful part in its work. Mr. Lindstrum serving on the board of trustees and as treasurer of the board. His political views were in harmony with the principles of the republican party and he capably filled a number of township offices. His wife had come to the United States in 1845, and at Bishop Hill the parents of our subject were married. Unto them were born five children: Caroline, Eric, Charlotte, Albert and Andrew, of this review.

The last named pursued his early education in the schools of his native town and afterward entered Knox College, completing the scientific course with the class of 1895. He then went to Geneseo, Illinois, and in company with James H. Andrews established a daily paper, which they conducted for about a year. Mr. Lindstrum then sold his interest to his partner and aided in organizing the Kewanee Daily Courier, which he published for a year. He next went to Chicago and worked on the Chicago Post for a few months. On the 17th of October, 1897, he came to Galesburg and began working on the Evening Mail in the business department, with which he was connected for three years. He filled the office of deputy county clerk under Frank Adams for two years and then became publisher of the Evening Mail, continuing at the head of that paper from 1903 until the 1st of November, 1907, when he purchased the Holmes & Chase Insurance Agency, which he still carries on in the Holmes building. In this connection he represents the Continental, Fidelity-Phenix, Fire Association, Franklin, Hamburg-Bremen, Liverpool & London Globe, North British & Mercantile, Philadelphia Underwriters, Royal, Springfield, Svea, The Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation, Fidelity & Deposit Company, Standard Live-Stock Insurance Company, and Bankers Like of Lincoln, Nebraska. On the 1st of January, 1910, Mr. Lindstrum organized the Provident Savings Association and was elected its secretary, in which position he still continues. His agency is one of the largest in this part of the state and he also has voice in the management of other business projects. Today he is a stockholder of the Lindstrum-West Drug Company, and other Galesburg institutions.

On the 3d of October, 1898, Mr. Lindstrum was united in marriage to Miss Sybil Winifred Chaiser, a daughter of John P. and Betsy (Linbbeck) Chaiser, of Bishop Hill, who received her schooling in Knox College, graduating in 1898. Her father was born in Balinge Parish, in Upland, Sweden, January 1, 1844, and on coming to America in 1850 joined the Bishop Hill Colony. In early life he followed the cooper's trade for some time but afterward engaged in the grain and lumber business and also acted as agent for the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad Company for a number of years. In 1888, with a handsome competence acquired from his labors, he retired from active life. His political allegiance is given to the prohibition party. Mrs. Chaiser was born in Gefleborg, Sweden, May 24, 1848, and came to America in 1849. They were married February 5, 1870, and became parents of three daughters: Alice E., S. Winifred and Juna C.

To Mr. and Mrs. Lindstrum has been born a son, Herbert James, whose birth occurred at Galesburg, June 3, 1906. In his political views Mr. Lindstrum has always been a republican since age conferred upon him the right of franchise and while he has not sought nor held political office he has been especially interested in the welfare and progress of the city and has cooperated in many movements for the general good. From 1907 until 1910 he was a member and secretary of the library board. Mr. and Mrs. Lindstrum are both members of the Central Congregational church. His business record has been characterized as honorable and upright and he deserves classification with the leading business men of the city.

THOMAS JUNK.

Thomas Junk, a retired farmer and stock-raiser and at one time an artisan in the carpenter trade, resides in Henderson village, Knox county, Illinois. He is a native of Union Town, Fayette county, Pennsylvania. The date of his birth is March 27, 1833. As noted in his brother's sketch, he is of German origin on his father's side, his grandfather having been born in Germany. His mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Lincoln, was a second cousin of Abraham Lincoln. His father was born in Pennsylvania to which state his people had come after a short residence in New Jersey where they had settled on coming to this country. He followed the pursuit of farming in Pennsylvania all his life, passing away in 1877, when he was seventy-six years of age. He was a stanch democrat in politics and in his religious predilections was a Presbyterian.

Thomas Junk was educated in the district schools of his native locality. When old enough to handle a plow he began to farm, first as hired help and then for himself. In 1856 when twenty-three years of age he came west, locating in Knox county where he learned the carpenter trade, following this calling for some years. Then, wishing to engage in farming, he gave up the trade in which he had been trained and bought a farm of eighty acres in Knox county. This he operated with much success, raising abundant crops, hogs and cattle. Some years ago he retired and removed to a residence in Henderson village.

Thomas Junk's marriage to Miss Maria Kilgore took place November 10, 1859. She was a daughter of David Kilgore, for years an agriculturist in Franklin county, spending his winter months teaching school, but who left Pennsylvania and became one of the famous "forty-niners" in the days of the California gold boom. There were seven children born of this union. Jessie Louise, the wife of John Nisley, a farmer in Nebraska, is the mother of five children. Some of these are married and have children of their own, thus giving Thomas Junk the distinction of being a great-grandfather. Frances is living at home. James E. is married and operates a farm in Stuart, Iowa. W. S. is living in Knox county on the farm where he was born. He is married and the father of four children. Minnie is the wife of Jasper Strode, a farmer in Knox county. She is the mother of five children. Edith is the wife of Charles Sears, connected with mercantile interests in Loveland, Colorado. She is the mother of two children. David died at the age of twenty-three.

Although keenly interested in the political welfare of his community and of the state and nation, Mr. Junk has never been bound by party ties. He votes for the man who in his judgment is best fitted to discharge the duties of the office for which he is a candidate. He has served as trustee of his township and as school director. In religious allegiance he and his wife subscribe to the faith of the Reorganized church of Latter Day Saints. Mr. Junk is living a comfortable, care-free life in the village of Henderson, is in good health, and from all indications seems to possess the grace of providence granting him the enjoyment of many added years.

JOHN BOWEN VIVION, M. D.

Dr. John Bowen Vivion was a distinguished physician, honored by the profession throughout the state. Study and close application constantly promoted his ability and gave him prominent place in the ranks of the medical fraternity in Illinois. He was born in Clark county, Kentucky, October 23, 1810, a son of Henry and Mildred (Ryan) Vivion, both of whom were natives of Virginia, being reared upon farms in the vicinity of Alexandria, that state. JOHN BOWEN VIVION, M. D.

Dr. John Bowen Vivion was a distinguished physician, honored by the profession throughout the state. Study and close application constantly promoted his ability and gave him prominent place in the ranks of the medical fraternity in Illinois. He was born in Clark county, Kentucky, October 23, 1810, a son of Henry and Mildred (Ryan) Vivion, both of whom were natives of Virginia, being reared upon farms in the vicinity of Alexandria, that state. They removed westward to Clark county, Kentucky, when it was almost an unbroken wilderness and took helpful part in its reclamation and development. Both were firm believers in the Christian religion and held membership in the Baptist church until that denomination divided upon the question of missions, after which they joined the Christian church. Henry Vivion devoted his life to general agricultural pursuits and was recognized both as a good farmer and good citizen. He at one time owned about fifteen slaves, their labor being used in the development and cultivation of his fields. He was ever a most charitable and benevolent man, giving freely of his means to aid the poor, and in 1822, when a scarcity of corn caused great suffering among them, he refused to sell at the advanced price which was being asked, saying that what he could spare he would give to those who needed. About 1810 the family removed from Clark to Warren county, Kentucky, there remaining for six years, at the end of which time they went to Howard county, Missouri, where they resided until the father's death when he was seventy-nine years of age. The mother then made her home in Clinton county, Missouri, with her son James, and reached the advanced age of ninety-five years.

Dr. Vivion received limited educational opportunities, yet when the chance offered attended the district schools near his father's homestead until eighteen years of age and afterward engaged in teaching school for two or three years. However, he had decided to make the practice of medicine his life work and during his leisure hours he studied medicine, reading alone. When twenty-two years of age, at Huntsville, Missouri, he began reading under the direction of Drs. Head and Rutherford, with whom he studied for one and a half years. He then went to Winchester, Kentucky, where he spent a year and a half under the preceptorship of Drs. Frasier and Vivion. He next attended lectures in the medical department of Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, and on the 1st of May, 1836, began practice in Dover, Missouri, thereafter following his profession for more than sixty-five years. For thirty-five years he practiced in accordance with the tenets and principles of the allopathic school, but in 1866 became an advocate and practitioner of homeopathy, winning a diploma in Hahnemann College. In 1851 he removed from Dover to Waverly, Missouri, and two years later purchased a farm about two miles from Dover, on which he resided for seven years, practicing all that time. In 1860 he sold this property and went to College Mound, Missouri, while in 1865 he became a resident of Ursa, Illinois. Three years later, or in 1868, he came to Galesburg, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred on July 1, 1902. His work in his profession was most serviceable and throughout the period of his practice his skill and ability increased because of his wide reading and study, and his broad experience. His standing among his professional brethren is indicated by the fact that he was honored with the presidency of the State Medical Association, but resigned in favor of a younger man.

On the 26th of September, 1836, Dr. Vivion was united in marriage to Miss Maria Jane Atkinson, and for a half century they traveled life's journey together but were separated through the death of the wife, on the 25th of August, 1887. In their family were eight children of whom four reached adult age, namely: Sarah Ann, the wife of Thomas Gorham; Robert, who was a Union soldier in the Civil war and died from hardships undergone in the field; John G., deceased; and Edward L. On the 16th of May, 1888, Dr. Vivion was again married, his second union being with Lucy Neely, a daughter of James Neely, who came to Galesburg after the arrival of "the colony" from the state of New York. For ten years he resided at Log City and then removed to Center Point, where he followed farming until his death. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Sabrina Arnold, was also from the Empire state. His brother, Abram Neely, came to Knox county at a very early day and owned a mill upon the present site of the Santa Fe depot and also a great deal of land on what is now Broad street.

Dr. Vivion gave his early political allegiance to the whig party and following its dissolution he joined the democratic party in 1856 and remained thereafter one of its strong supporters. He filled a number of local positions, serving as health commissioner of Galesburg for several years, as city health officer for two years and as city physician for five years. He was also prominent in church work and in 1843 was elected an elder of the Christian church, which position he filled throughout the remainder of his days. Church services were held in his office in Galesburg and the Lord's Supper was administered there until 1871, when his denomination built a church in this city. He afterward filled the pulpit much of the time until 1890, when a regular minister was secured. His life was ever characterized by high and honorable principles, his course conforming to his religious professions. He was always kind and generous to the poor and was a loyal, devoted friend. His entire life was characterized by progress, whether in the field of his profession, in public service or in church relationships, and certainly the world is better for his having lived.

GEORGE LOUIS NEWBERG.

George Louis Newberg, the present mayor of Wataga, has always devoted his energies to general farming and stock-raising, in both of which occupations he has met with a goodly degree of success. He is one of Knox county's native sons, his birth having ocurred in Copley township, on the 7th of January, 1862, the pioneer period, being members of the Bishop Hill Colony. By trade Mr. Newberg was a charcoal and lime burner, which occupation he followed in connection with his farming in Copley township. He was very successful, being a thrifty, hard-working man and at the time of his demise was one of the leading men of the community. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Newberg there were born five children, four of whom are living, our subject being the second in order of birth, while the others are as follows: Mathilda, the wife of William Hedstrum, of Copley township; Johanna, the wife of Harvey Larson, of California; and Christiana, who married Samuel Sambo, also of California. The father passed away at the venerable age of eighty-four years, on the 5th of May, 1899, but the mother had only reached an age of forty at the time of her demise on the 25th of January, 1875.

The district schools in the vicinity of his home provided George Louis Newberg such educational advantages as he enjoyed, his student days being terminated at the age of sixteen. During the succeeding five years he gave his undivided attention to the operation of the home farm under the supervision of his father. At the expiration of that period he left the parental roof to make his own way in the world, first engaging in farming in Copley township, but later he removed to Oneida, where he remained until 1905, when he became a citizen of Wataga. In connection with general farming, Mr. Newberg made a specialty of raising and shipping stock, activities proving to be very remunerative under his capable management. He has always been an energetic man, who considers that anything worthy of engaging his efforts, is deserving of the best of them and has so directed his endeavors.

For his wife and helpmate Mr. Newberg chose Miss Anna C. England, who was born in Persifer township, this county, in May, 1864. Mrs. Newberg is a daughter of George England, who was born in Pennsylvania, in 1826, a son of William England. He was reared to manhood in his native state and there he later married Miss Susie Webb, who was also born in the Keystone state. Their domestic life was begun in Pennsylvania, but they removed to Illinois in 1856, locating in Knox county. Mr. England was one of those who responded to his nation's call during the Civil war and enlisting in Company A, Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in 1864 went to the front, being mustered out on the 15th of March, 1865. He passed away in 1911, at the age of eighty-five years, but the mother is still living in her seventy-second year. To Mr. and Mrs. Newberg have been born five children: Ivan, a farmer of Wataga, aged twenty-two years, who married Ethel Edwards; Mary, a young woman of twenty; John, who is eighteen; Nathan, now fourteen; and James, who is eight. Martha, a niece, is a little maid of four years and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Newberg.

The family attend the Methodist Episcopal church of Wataga, in which the parents hold membership, and Mr. Newberg is also an Odd Fellow and a Mason, being identified with the lodges of Wataga; he is a member of Oneida Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America and Lodge No. 671, of the Mystic Workers of the World. His political support is given to the men and measures of the republican party and he takes a deep interest in all municipal affairs. He served as school director for several terms and in 1910 was elected mayor of Wataga, the responsibilities of which office he is discharging in a manner highly pleasing to the community and most creditably to himself.

CHARLES BROWN.

Charles Brown is manager and superintendent of the Farmers' Elevator Company, of Wataga, where he has resided for the past fourteen years. He is a native of Sweden, having been born in Halland, on April 7, 1856, a son of Nels Johnson and Johanna (Johnson) Brown. Both parents spent their entire lives in the old country, the father, who was born in 1810, devoting his energies to farming until his demise, which occurred in 1892. Three children, born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, are living, as follows: Charles, our subject; Hetta, who is living at home; and August, who is operating the home farm.

Charles Brown was reared and educated in his native land to the age of fourteen years when he went to Denmark, where he worked for two years at the jewelry trade. In 1877 he emigrated to the United States, locating in Chicago, where for twelve years he followed the barber's trade. At the expiration of that period he came to Wataga and bought out a barber shop that he operated until 1903, then withdrew to become manager and superintendent of the Farmers' Elevator Company. During the succeeding six years he has been successfully identified with this enterprise, the business of which has developed in a most gratifying manner during the period of his connection with it.

For his wife and helpmate Mr. Brown chose Miss Maggie S. Campbell, who was born in 1873, a daughter of William H. and Mary Ann Campbell, now residents of Wataga, but natives of Ireland, whence they emigrated to the United States in 1867.

Mr. Brown votes the republican ticket but he has never been an office seeker. He is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and a charter member of the Mystic Workers of the World, Wataga Lodge, No. 671. Although he has always led a somewhat unobtrusive life, never having actively participated in the public affairs of the municipality, Mr. Brown can always be depended upon to indorse every movement that is at all likely to promote the interests of the community.

FRANK O. RYLANDER.

Many of Sweden's native sons have sought the broader opportunities of the new world, bringing with them the unremitting energy and perseverance characteristic of that nation, and in the great majority of cases they have attained success in the management of varied business affairs. Such is the record of Frank O. Rylander, who was born in Smaland, Sweden, on the 23d of October, 1864, a son of Johanas and Clara (Johnson) Johnson. The parents were both born in Sweden and there spent their entire lives, the father engaging in farming as a life occupation. Both are now deceased, the father's death occurring in 1899, while the mother died in 1903. They were consistent members of the Swedish Lutheran church.

In the common schools of his native land Frank O. Rylander acquired a good education and after laying aside his text-books he assisted in the work of the farm for a while. Later he spent two years in Stockholm, working at the cooper's trade, and then, on the 15th of May, 1887, he came to the United States, attracted by the business opportunities which he heard were here offered. He made his way direct to Illinois, locating in Oneida, Knox county. From there he went to Davenport, Iowa, where he was employed as a carpenter until September, 1887, when he began working out by the month. He was thus engaged for several years and in 1893 took up agricultural pursuits in Ontario township, Knox county, Illinois. Meeting with success in this venture he was able in 1907 to purchase a farm upon which he might engage in farming independently and he now owns a fine tract of one hundred and sixty acres on section 21, Ontario township. Here his time is fully occupied with the various phases of agriculture and in addition to the cultivation of the fields he makes a specialty of feeding hogs, in both of which lines he is meeting with well merited success.

It was on the 29th of March, 1893, that Mr. Rylander was married to Miss Anna C. Halstead, a daughter of John P. and Christiana (Carlson) Halstead, both of whom were of Swedish descent. The father, a farmer by occupation, was killed by a train at Oneida, his death occurring on the 29th of April, 1899. His widow still survives and makes her home in Woodhull, Henry county, Illinois. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Rylander are seven children, namely, George E., Clara A., Ottis R., Mildred L., Frances M., Robert L. and Everett Lester, all of whom are yet at home. In the various relations which go to make up the public life of the community Mr. Rylander is deeply interested and he is recognized as one of the representative citizens of Ontario township. He holds membership in the Ontario Congregational church and fraternally belongs to Oneida Camp, No. 555, M. W. A., at Oneida, and to the Mystic Workers. A review of the political question of the country led him to give his support to the republican party and since becoming an American citizen he has never faltered in his allegiance to the principles of that organization. He has never sought nor desired public office, however, the only position which he has ever filled being that of school director, as which he has served for nine years. He has never regretted the step which he took when he sought a home in the United States, for here he has found good opportunities for business advancement and in their utilization has won a substantial degree of prosperty. Illinois, also, has found in him a valued citizen for he has ever manifested admirable traits of character and exhibited a public-spirited devotion to the best interests of his adopted land.

DAVID P. NILES.

A well known retired farmer of Sparta township is David P. Niles, who is the oldest pioneer in point of years of continuous residence now living in this district. He was born in Hillsdale, Columbia county, New York, on October 20, 1824, and is a son of Sill and Louisa (Olmstead) Niles. The mother passed away in 1852, but the father survived until 1871, his demise occurring at the age of seventy-six years. The paternal grandfather, Thomas Niles, who was a veteran of the Revolution, was a blacksmith by trade, in connection with which he also engaged in farming. He was a native of Connecticut as was Steven Olmstead, the maternal grandfather. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Sill Niles numbered eight, those beside our subject being as follows: Eliza, the wife of Charles D. Loomis, of Columbia county, New York; George F., who is deceased; Charles H., deceased, who also was a resident of Columbia county; Helen C., now Mrs. Kane, of Columbia county; Martha, the widow of H. Ten Broeck, of Columbia county; and two who died early in life.

In his early boyhood David P. Niles attended the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm in the acquirement of an education, subsequently giving his undivided attention to agricultural pursuits until 1856. He then decided to remove to the west and three years later became a resident of Wataga, making his home with a family by the name of Smith. He purchased the old Wataga mill that he successfully operated for seven years, when he bought three hundred acres of land and engaged in farming. Agriculture at that period involved much more drudgery than at the present, many tasks, that then required days to do by hand, now being performed by the aid of modern machinery in a few hours. Despite the hard work and discouragements he encountered, Mr. Niles persisted in his undertakings and eventually became one of the largest landowners in the county. In connection with the operation of his fields he made a specialty of raising and feeding stock, both proving to be most lucrative under his capable direction. During the long years of his efficient management of his affairs, he so intelligently concentrated and directed his efforts that he acquired a competence that enabled him to retire, and he is now renting his property and enjoying the ease and comfort awarded the well spent years of his early life.

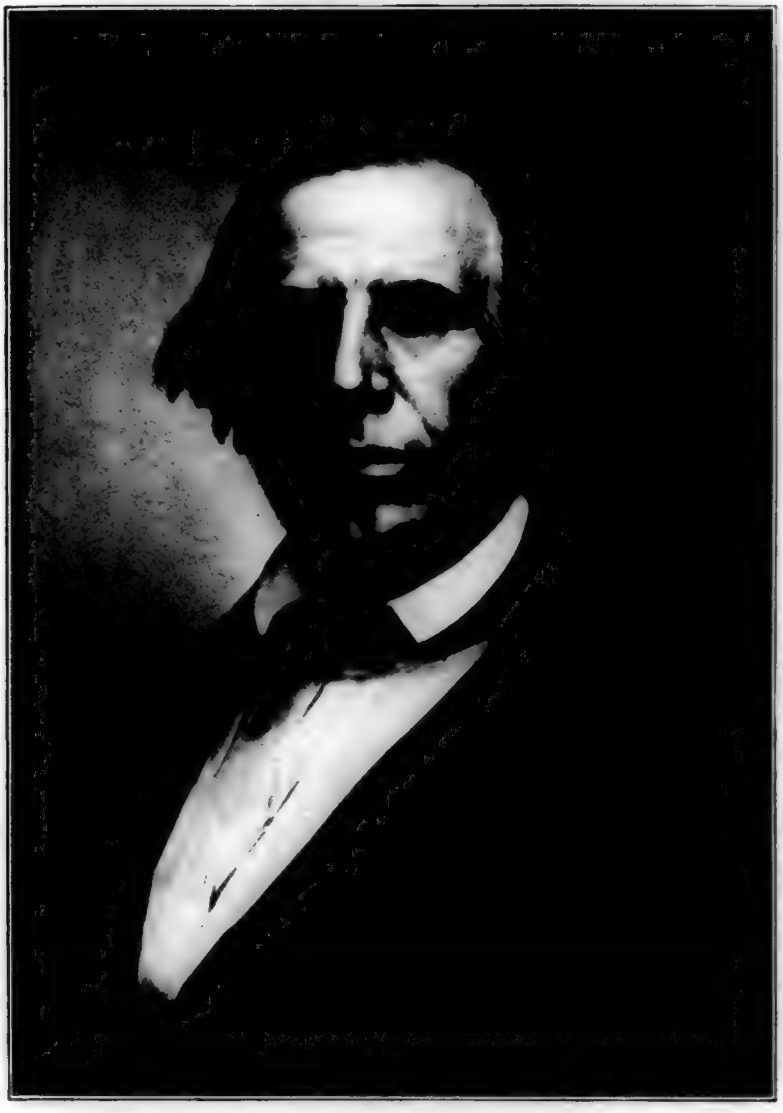
For his wife Mr. Niles chose Miss Helen C. Johnson, who was born in Sweden in 1849. Of this union there was born one child, who is now deceased.

During his early years Mr. Niles was a whig but when this party merged into the republican he gave his support to the men and measures of the latter body. Although he never prominently participated in the political activities of his township he served as road commissioner, the duties of which office he discharged in a highly creditable manner. Mr. Niles has now passed the eighty-seventh milestone on life's journey, but despite his many years his eyesight is remarkably good and his faculties as acute as those of a man years his junior. He is still able to look after his own business affairs and takes a lively interest in all public questions. During his long period of residence here he has been the interested observer of the development of the country as it kept pace with the progress of civilization, and many are the interesting reminiscences he relates of the pioneer days.



JAMES CHAMPION McMURTRY, M. D.

Dr. James Champion McMurtry, a former citizen of Knox county and, until his death, devoting himself unselfishly to the service of others in the practice of his profession, was born in Crawford county, Indiana, February 3, 1829. His parents were William and Ruth (Champion) McMurtry, both natives of Kentucky. He was a descendant of ancestors distinguished in the service of their country for generations. The great grandfather of Dr. McMurtry, whose name was John McMurtry, was a Revolutionary war hero, killed in the battle of Cowpens. The father, William McMurtry, was a ranger in the Black Hawk war.

On November 1, 1829, the year in which Dr. McMurtry was born, his father removed his family to Knox county, Illinois. Before this they had resided in Indiana, where William McMurtry was active in politics besides carrying on agricultural pursuits. He served as lieutenant governor under Governor French, of Illinois. He was state senator of Illinois for many years. Mr. McMurtry, descended of French Huguenot origin, was a man of superior mental qualities possessing an excellent education, and made many friends through his genial manner and magnetic personality. He was an intimate friend of Stephen A. Douglas and occupied a prominent position in the democratic party in Illinois when the political battle was growing in intensity before the final triumph of President Lincoln and the newborn republican party. Dr. McMurtry's father was a captain in the Sixty-seventh Regular Militia of Illinois and a colonel of the One Hundred and Second Volunteer Infantry of Illinois. In 1846, he was made a member of the Henderson Lodge, F. & A. M.

Unlike most youths of his time Dr. McMurtry had every educational advantage that could prepare him adequately for the profession of his choice. He began with a common-school education, supplementing this by a course at Knox College and at Union College in Schenectady, New York. After this liberal education he narrowed down the field of his studies and devoted himself to medicine as his specialty. For this purpose he entered Rush Medical College of Chicago, from which he received his degree. He then returned to his home county, where he established a practice for himself in which he continued till death terminated his activities. He was one of the leading practitioners in this section of the country, noted for his kindness in the treatment of his patients and for his generous acts of charity towards those who were less able to meet the heavy financial tax which illness entails. He was a splendid athlete devoted to indoor exercises and outdoor sports, and was modern in his mode of living and his views of life.

The marriage of Dr. James McMurtry and Miss Caroline Nelson, of Warren county, Illinois, occurred June 9, 1855. Her parents were Andrew and Susan (Hawley) Nelson. Mr. Nelson was a merchant, coming originally from Amherst, Massachusetts. On July 3, 1843, he settled in Henderson, Knox county, where he engaged in business.

Five children were born to Dr. and Mrs. McMurtry. James W. is an attorney at law in Elk City, Oklahoma. He is the father of seven children. Franklin H. died in infancy. Susan H. lives on the home farm in Henderson township. She is a graduate of Knox College, of the class of 1886. Caroline is the wife of H. B. Conyers, a jeweler in Urbana, Ohio, and is the mother of one child. She is also a graduate of Knox College, of the class of 1886. Mary is at home supervising the place and managing the estate. She, too, was graduated from Knox College, in 1886.

Dr. McMurtry died March 29, 1903. He was well-to-do, owning at the time of his death a very fine farm of three hundred and thirty acres of land, devoted to general farming. Fraternally he was connected with a number of organizations in which he took an active part. He was a member of Hiram Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., of Henderson, and was worshipful master for twenty-two years. In 1855, he became a member of Horeb Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M., at Knoxville, Illinois. He held the office of grand pursuivant in the grand lodge of Illinois, in 1855, and grand marshal of the grand lodge of Illinois, from 1880 till 1884. He was elected to all the offices in the Grand Chapter, R. A. M., of Illinois. He was chosen high priest in 1877 and for a number of years was grand representative of Georgia in the Grand Chapter of Illinois. Since 1862 he was a member of the Galesburg Commandery, No. 8, K. T.

In politics Dr. McMurtry was a republican. He voted for Lincoln for his second term, although he was up to that time a loyal democrat. He was a man of political influence and a strong party leader. He was the founder of the Union League of Henderson township and served as the first president of that organization. Large-minded in his convictions and of a powerful personality, he possessed in a marked degree many of the characteristics which distinguished his father before him, clear-sighted vision, the faculty of foreseeing the consequences of a situation or of an action long before those consequences occurred. Among the many residents of Knox county who knew Dr. McMurtry intimately he possessed the friendship of a large number of people and the warm regard of all.

WILLIAM S. CAMERON.

William S. Cameron, who has been a resident of Galesburg for more than a quarter of a century, is a prominent factor in industrial circles as the president of the Frost Manufacturing Company, to which office he was elected in 1900. His birth occurred near Elgin, Scotland, on the 17th of January, 1864, his parents being Robert and Elspit (McBeth) Cameron, who were likewise natives of that country. The paternal grandfather, Alexander Cameron, was also born in Scotland and became a mason contractor. Unto him and his wife were born the following children: William, John, Peter, Robert, Jane and Annie. William McBeth, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was likewise a mason contractor and passed away near Elgin, Scotland, when seventy-eight years of age. His wife, Mrs. Ann (Proctor) McBeth, was seventy-six years old when called to her final rest. Their children were as follows: James, William, Robert, Jane, Annie, Elspit and Helen.

Robert Cameron, the father of William S. Cameron, grew to manhood in the vicinity of Elgin, Scotland, and largely devoted his life to general agricultural pursuits throughout his active business career. He lived retired for a number of years prior to his demise, which occurred at Rothes, on the 10th of July, 1911, when he had reached the age of eighty-four years. His wife passed away in 1871, when only twenty-seven years of age. Both were faithful members of the Established church. Unto them were born five children, namely: William S., of this review; James, who is a resident of Elgin, Scotland; Ann, who died in infancy; Alexander, who died when a young man of twenty-one years; and Nellie, living at Elgin, Scotland.

William S. Cameron obtained his education in the schools of St. Andrews, Lhanbryd and Elgin and remained in his native land until nineteen years of age. After putting aside his text-books he served an apprenticeship in the general contracting business. In 1884, wishing to test the truth of the many favorable reports which he had heard concerning the opportunities and advantages of the new world, he crossed the Atlantic to the United States and settled in Galesburg, Illinois, where he has remained almost continuously since. He was first employed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company for two years and then entered the service of the Frost Manufacturing Company, taking charge of the pattern department. In 1900 he was chosen president of the concern and has remained its chief executive officer to the present time. The Frost Manufacturing Company was established in 1851 and has manufactured principally engines, boilers and dry pans. Its products are sold in all parts of the United States and a number of foreign countries. Three hundred people are employed in the plant, which consists of the following departments: machine shop, boiler shop, forge shop, foundry, pattern shop and flange shop. As the head of this extensive and important industry Mr. Cameron has displayed splendid executive ability and keen discernment. Intricate business problems he comprehends with rare quickness and the solution which he proposes almost invariably proves to be the correct one.

On the 27th of September, 1888, Mr. Cameron was married to Miss Margaret S. Davidson, a native of Alves, Scotland, and a daughter of Peter McL. and Margaret (Bremner) Davidson, who were likewise born in that country. Emigrating to the United States, they settled in Galesburg, where Mrs. Davidson passed away in 1909 at the age of fifty-eight years. Peter Davidson, a contractor and builder, still survives. He was the father of six daughters, namely: Margaret, Isabel, Elsie, Grace, Delia and Genevieve. Samuel and Elsie (McConachie) Davidson, the paternal grandparents of Mrs. Cameron, had eight children: James, Samuel, William, John, Peter, George, Elsie and Jessie. The maternal grandparents of Mrs. Cameron had the following children: Alexander, James, David, Margaret and Annie. Unto our subject and his wife were born three children: Robert LeRoy, born on April 13, 1890, who died at the age of six years; Margaret Mae, born on March 27, 1892, a graduate of the Galesburg high school, who is now attending St. Mary's school at Knoxville, Illinois; and William Ray, born on December 22, 1897, a public school student.

Fraternally Mr. Cameron is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and he is also a member of the Galesburg and Soangetaha Clubs. His wife is a devoted member of the Presbyterian church. They are prominent in the social circles of Galesburg and their own home is a favorite resort with many friends. Coming to the new world in early manhood, Mr. Cameron utilized his opportunities to the best advantage and now enjoys an enviable reputation as one of the most prosperous and esteemed citizens of his community.

GEORGE L. STEPHENSON.

George L. Stephenson, a representative of the mercantile interests of Knox county, has a flourishing store at Oneida and has been a prominent factor in the political and social life of this community with which he has been identified since 1865. Born in Kirkbright, Scotland, October 20, 1838, he is a son of George and Isabella (McMillan) Stephenson, who left their home in Scotland, in 1850, for a new one in America. Mr. Stephenson was a farmer and came to Illinois on account of the excellent agricultural opportunities, settling in Copley township where he bought at the outset forty acres of land. Later he increased his holdings by buying eighty acres more and spent the remainder of his life in the cultivation of this land, death terminating his labors in 1884. He was twice married, George L. Stephenson being a son of his first wife, who died in 1862. His second wife is also deceased.

George L. Stephenson was the sixth of a family of eight children of whom one died in infancy. He received the usual education available in a country school and when able to support himself took up agriculture until 1863. He then came to Oneida village, engaging in the grocery business for two years, which position he gave up for clerking, remaining, however, only for a short time in this vocation, when he went into another department of the mercantile business with C. F. Matteson, who was conducting a clothing and men's furnishings establishment. Three or four years later he saw his chance of opening a profitable business on his own account and became the owner of a general store carrying dry goods, clothing, men's furnishings and the usual stock in trade, and he has been properously engaged in this enterprise ever since. He has also ably acted in the capacity of auctioneer for over forty years.

On October 26, 1866, Mr. Stephenson was united in marriage, in Copley township, to Miss Grace L. Stewart, a native of Scotland, her father being engaged in the furniture business in Glasgow. Five children were born of this union: Frank S., a farmer in Walnut Grove township, who is married and has five children, three boys and two girls; Milton J., who is married and employed as a railroad man in Chicago and has had a high-school education; Grace, the wife of David N. Olson, an undertaker and embalmer, who lives in Evanston, Illinois; Jessie, who lives at home and takes care of her mother; and Harry H., a graduate of Knox College, who died August 15, 1907.

Mr. and Mrs. George L. Stephenson are members of the Presbyterian church of Oneida. In his political sympathies Mr. Stephenson votes with the republicans and, his townspeople recognizing in him a citizen well qualified to hold public office, have called him to serve again and again. He was mayor of the village for ten years, and acted on the council for a number of years, while he filled the position of town supervisor for seventeen years, during ten of which he presided as chairman. He is active in the Masonic order, being a member of the Oneida Lodge, F. & A. M., and was a member of the Galesburg Chapter, but withdrew from there and helped organize the Oneida chapter. He is an ardent worker in the Galesburg Commandery, and is associated with the Medinah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Chicago. Mr. Stephenson is a man of strong personality and has a gift for making friends, in whose affections he holds a high place and by whom he is regarded as a man of absolute integrity.

ALBERT L. SQUIRES.

For more than forty years Albert L. Squires has been associated with agricultural interests in Knox county. He was born in Trumbull county, Ohio, February 25, 1845, his parents being Ira and Caroline (Stewart) Squires. Passing his boyhood in his native land, he was scarcely out of school, when he was fired with enthusiasm at the outbreak of the Civil war and enlisted in Ashtabula county, Ohio, with Company I, Twenty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Corps, Second Division, serving under General

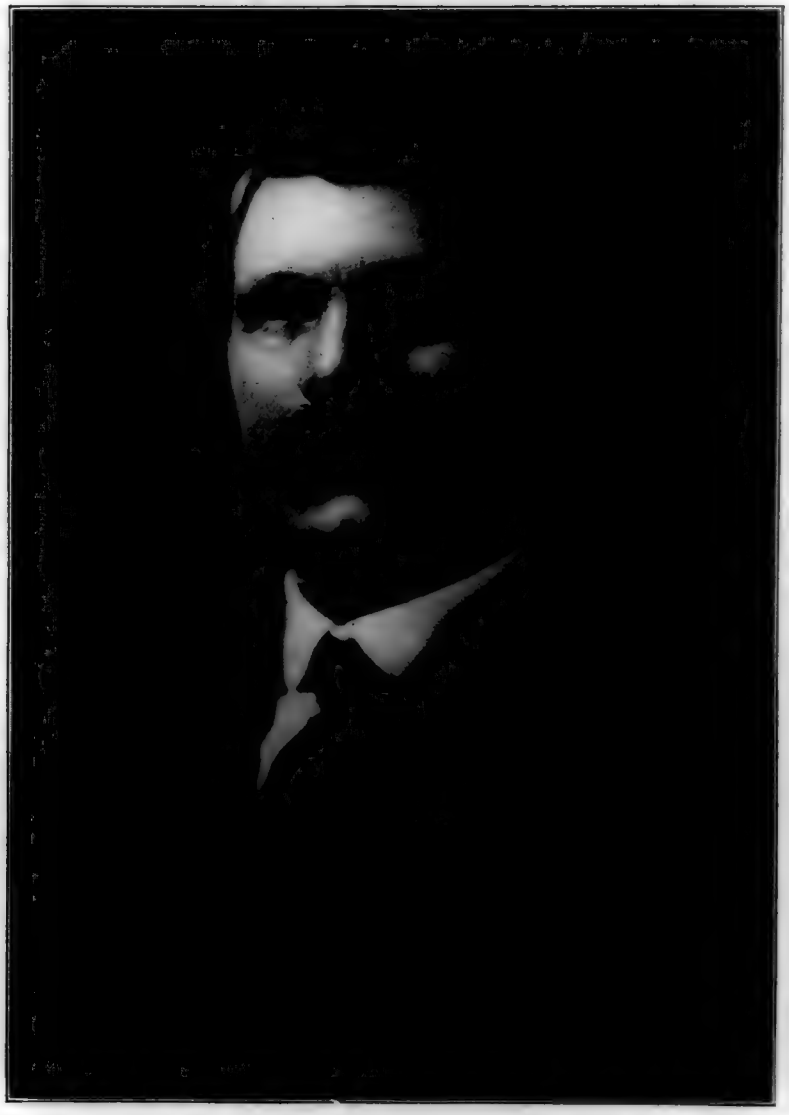
Hooker, for three years. His company, of which James J. Smith was the captain, fought with General Meade in the battle of Gettysburg. He was honorably discharged in 1865, at the close of the war, and returned to his home in Ohio, assisting with the work of the fields for several years. In 1868 he came to Knox county, Illinois, to visit his sister, Mrs. Alexander Gehring. Being pleased with the agricultural prospects in Knox county, he remained here and engaged in farming, which he has pursued ever since.

In 1865 Mr. Squires was united in marriage to Miss Jane Howland, a daughter of Fred Howland, originally from Connecticut, but later a resident of Ohio. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Squires. Mary Luella, residing in Cherry Valley, Ohio, is the wife of David Robinson, a farmer, and has eight children. Kate, a resident of Niles, Ohio, is the wife of George Champlain, a carpenter, and has seven children. The wife of Mr. Squires passed away in 1908, at the age of sixty-seven years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Wataga, Illinois. Fraternally he is associated with Lodge No. 589, I. O. O. F., of Wataga, and J. D. Shields Post, No. 45, G. A. R., of Galesburg. Ever faithful in the performance of his duties, he has found much enjoyment in his work and in the pleasant home of his sister, Mrs. Gehring, he passes his life quietly and with contentment of spirit.

JOHN MAGNUS APPLEGREN.

John Magnus Applegren, who has long been successfully identified with the commercial activities of Wataga, was born in Alfta, Gefleborg Laen, Sweden, on October 10, 1848. His father, Johann Frederick Applegren, was born on the 10th of August, 1826, was one of the prominent and well known men in his province. All his life he was connected with the operation of a tannery on his ancestral estate, where he was living when he passed away at the age of eighty-five years. He organized in his native town an insurance company of which he was secretary for forty-five years, and upon his retirement was presented by the members of the company and the policyholders with a loving cup valued at one thousand dollars. He was a member of the Lutheran church and a representative of the government for his province. He was married three times, his first union being with Miss Elizabeth Lunn, a daughter of J. Lunn, an officer in the Swedish army. She passed away in 1851, leaving two children: John Magnus, our subject; and Peter Fred Applegren. For his second wife Mr. Applegren chose Miss Karen Johnson, who died in 1858. Of this union there was born one son, Andrew Gustave, a wholesale merchant in Sweden. Mr. Applegren's next marriage was with Miss Anna Elizabeth Sorling, and unto them were born four children: Anna, Johanna, Breta and Maria, all of whom are residents of Sweden. The paternal grandparents of our subject were Johann Magnus and Margaret Applegren. The former, who was a native of Falun, Sweden, passed away in 1854 at the age of fifty-five years, but his wife, whose birth occurred in 1797, lived until 1887. He was the founder of the large tannery on his estate, which is still owned and operated by the family.

The school days of John Magnus Applegren, who was reared at home, were terminated at the age of fifteen years when he was sent out by his father to buy and trade leather and hides. Later he assisted in the general store maintained and conducted for the benefit of the employes of their factory, serving in this capacity until he was nineteen when he took passage for America. Upon his arrival in this country he made his way inland to Wataga, and here engaged in farming until 1874, when he entered the store of H. P. Woods. He remained there for ten years and then went to work in the railway carshops, but after following this for two years returned to his former employment. After being identified with this business for another decade he made a trip to Sweden and upon his return together with a Mr. Sundberg bought a mercantile establishment in Wataga. This connection continued until 1902, when Mr. Applegren bought his partner's interest and took his son into the business.



In 1874 was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Applegren to Miss Mary Peterson, who was born on the 15th of April, 1853, a daughter of Jonas and Christina (Hedman) Peterson, the father one of the pioneer settlers of Knox county, where for many years he engaged in farming. Both parents are now deceased, the mother having passed away in 1904. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Applegren there has been born one son, Fred, whose birth occurred on May 2, 1875. He is unmarried and has been associated in business with his father for nine years. He belongs to the Masonic order, being a member of Wataga Lodge, No. 291, A. F. & A. M., of which he was secretary in 1910, and he is also affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America Camp, No. 3229, Wataga, and served several years as clerk of the local order.

Mr. Applegren gives his political support to the men and measures of the democratic party, the policy of which he fully endorses, but he has never been an office seeker, always having preferred to concentrate his energies upon the development of his personal interests, in which he has met with a goodly degree of success.

AMES A. BARLOW.

Ames A. Barlow has become well known in real-estate circles in Galesburg, handling both city and farm property. His intellect early grasped the eternal truth that industry wins, and industry became the beacon light of his life. It has prompted him to become thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the business in which he engages and to have a knowledge of all the property that is upon the market and the valuation thereof. Because he has done this he has been enabled to negotiate many important realty transfers and now has a large and gratifying clientage.

Mr. Barlow is a native of Lafayette, Stark county, Illinois, born February 25, 1857, although he has lived in Knox county ever since he was three years old. His parents were Gideon A. and Martha B. (Peterson) Barlow. The father was born in Sullivan county, New York, July 18, 1833, while the mother's birth occurred in Sweden, October 8, 1837. The former was a son of Nathan Barlow, who was likewise born in the Empire state and was a farmer by occupa-
